COMMENTARY,

EXPOSITION

The XII. Minor Prophets.

Wherein the Text is explained, some Controversies are discussed, sundry Cases of Conscience are cleared, and many remarkable matters hinted, that had by former Interpreters been pretermitted, Hereunto is added, a Treatise called, The Righteous Mans Recompence, Or, A true Christian characterized and encouraged, out of Malachi Chap. 3. Vers. 16, 17, 18.

In all which diverse other Texts of Scripture, which occasionally occur, are fully opened: and the whole so intermixed with pertinent Histories, as will yeeld both pleasure and profit, to the judicious Reader.

The Preface to the Reader.

Truly Light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sunne; O but much more pleasant for the eye of faith to see the Sun of righteousness: that light of life. Blessed, may we say, are our eyes which see this Sun shine so gloriously from the Gospel; and though through glasses, yet such as are, and will be kept from breaking by that presence of Christ promised his Ministers of the Gospel to the end of the World, whom he calls, the light of the world. Happy art thou, O England, where it hath been day-light these hundred years, and God-forbid that wee should expose our selves to that the condemnation; in loving darknesse rather then light. If we shorten this our day, certainly it will be our death. An evil generation therefore is that, whose hellish principles prompt them utterly to extinguish all our burning and shining Lamps, by draining out all their oil; and so are those children of the night, whose hellish practises attempt the blowing out of these lights that do discover their deeds of darknesse, and because they cannot (no more then becken the Sunne from the skie) their breath is spent in cursing them as freely, and fiercely, as the Ethiopians do the Sun for scorching them. If this continue, sad are our fears, lest our Sun be not far from setting; and we take up that lamentation with Jeremy, Wo unto us for the day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out.

Neither are the Symptomes of this onely in the professed disavowing of the Ministry, by men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, and who have put away a good conscience; but also in the dark lives of many of those who seem to affect Gospel-light, and yet walk not honestly as in the day: rejoyce in the light, yet walk not as children of the light. Nay amongst the best, are not notions prosecuted more then practise? and our light like the Moon's without heat? yea, and whereas the Father of lights hath set up his Candlestick amongst us, that we might do his work; we rather do our own, making our selves, and not him our end. The good Lord in mercy make all his to face about towards himself; & so face one another, as the Cherubims over the Mercy-seat.

Reader, our advice to thee is, to do thy duty, though many others neglect theirs: Bless God there are so many windows to let in light unto thee, & pray that they may be yet clearer, to give in dayly new light (thou knowest we speake not in a fanaticke fanatick Dialect) we mean, fresh, and fuller discoveries of Gospel-mysteries; whereunto thou wilt finde this Authour hath made no small contribution, by these his Annotations upon the small Prophets, from before which few have drawn the curtain so far as he; open therefore the Casement in reading, and much light may be let into thy mind to understand things that have been hid from thine eyes, or seen but dimly.

We need not commend the Authour, all his works speak him to be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, an Interpreter one among a thousand: we may say of him, as Cyprian to Cald. Adeo exercitatus & in Scripturis peritus, ut cautè omnia, & consultò gerat. Origen speaking of the Prophets, calls them Bees, and their Tropheies honey-combes, this Expositor God hath made skilfull both in hiving and expressing.

This friend of the Spoule, presents her here with more new borders of gold, enameld and set out with spangles of silver, wrought upon a precious part of holy Writ, which he hath beautified with variety of humane Learning. And lest thy heart should rise against this expression; give us leave to tell thee, that though many in these last, and worst, and wofull dayes; scoffe at the learned Languages, and Arts and Sciences, as the Fox in the Greek Epigram, disparag'd the fair and ripe grapes, because they were out of his reach; yet there is a necessity of them, for the right dividing the word of truth which is evinced by a man approved; who between derogating from the al-sufficiency of Scripture (which is sacriledge, and blasphemy) on the one side, and detracting from the worth of University Learning (which is an Anabaptistical frenzy) on the other side; layes down the truth in the middle, in this Aphorisme: Scripture is of it self abundantly sufficient for us, but we are not sufficient for it, without the help of Arts and Liberall Sciences: we cannot sufficiently conceive or declare the works of God without naturall Philosophy, nor Law of God without morall, nor his Attributes without Metaphysicks, nor the dimensions of the Ark, and Temple without the Mathematicks, nor the songs of Sion without Musick and Poetry: wee cannot Interpret the text without Grammer, analize it without Logick, presse and apply it without Rhetorick. These it hath seemed good to the holy Ghost to use in the Penning of Scriptures, to shew their usefulness in their opening; and who can understand, or expound Propheies already fulfilled, and to be accomplish't, without insight into prophane History. knowledge in the Tongues, he deserves to have his tongue cut out that dares but mutter a word against it: dulcius ex ipso fonte.

There are indeed divers Cautions, and Directions, given by the ancient holy Fathers, in the use of humane Learning, which this learned, godly Writer hath exactly observed: For he hath purg'd and cleans'd it, cut off the bond-womans hair, pared her nayles, and washed her with Sope; his chief care being not τεχνολογείν, but θεολογείν; as it is not only ἑρδοτομείν, but also ἑρδοποδείν. In him (to use the words of that divine Poet) doctrine and life, colours and light combine and mingle. He doth moreover subject and make humane Learning subservient to Divine. And finally useth it moderately, without affectation; and modestly without ostentation.

If we should now work an Embleme of this giver in his gift, brought unto the Spouse of Christ, as that reverend, learned, pious Doctor did upon his four Preachers, and apply all his images and motto's to this Author, they that know him, and have heard him, and seen his constant conversation, would (we presume) justifie our judgement: but we forbear; onely taking leave (before we take leave of thee) to super-adde thus much to our thoughts of this Book: That though in his former Commentaries he hath done excellently, yet this excelleth them all; as in other things, so in this especially, that the Text is expounded more largely, and large satisfaction given to the Reader in the sense of the word; which well becommeth a work of this nature. So that here is not onely work for the studies of young Divines, but the gravest may ask counsell of this Élibu, who is so full of matter, the Spirit of God within him constraining him thus to lay out himself for the good of the Church. Private men also if they please to take the pains, here may find what will very much both profit and delight. Let us request a concurrence of thine, with ours, and the prayers of many, for this Reverend and worthy Author, that hee may live long, and long a burning and shining light, and bee enabled (by the influence of Divine beams) before his eyes be closed, to open the rest of holy Scripture; which we hope is his purpose, and are sure is the earnest desire, and expectation of his fellow-brethren: And that his path may bee as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

Christian Reader,

THough an Attestation from me to this work, is but to light a candle to the Sun, the Authour being so well known, and approved of in the Church of Christ by his former labours: yet out of my respect to the Authour, and desire of thy profit, I thought fit to tell thee, that besides the golden Eloquence, sweet Similitudes, and fitly applied Histories, which thou shalt find interwoven thorow all this Work, thou shalt meet with more for Exposition and opening of the difficult Texts in this, then in most of his former Commentaries: And there is no Verse thorow all these twelve Prophets, upon which he hath not said something. And that which may make this Work more desirable is, that there is very little in English, written upon this portion of Scripture: Besides the Authour is now grown Aged, and so better experienced in this kind of writing then formerly. In the latter part of this Book, thou shalt meet with a Treatise, called The Righteous mans Recompence, upon Mal. 3. 16. &c. which therefore is fitly annexed to the former. The subject is most Divine, Comfortable, and Necessary, full of practicall Divinity, and matter of daily use for every Christian. The manner of handling it, exceeding delightfull, concerning which I may say with the Poet,

I presume that I shall need to adde no more, but to request thee, to joyne thy prayers with mine to the God of heaven, that he would prolong the Authors life, that he may go over the rest of the Bible, as he hath already begun, and to subscribe my self <sup>A</sup> THE Word of the Lord] Not cunningly devised fables, or humane testimonies, that can make but a humane faith; but the word of the everliving God, the Scripture that cannot be broken, John 10. 35. the very heart and soul of God, as Gregory calls it.

That came unto Hosea] The Lord is said to come to Laban, Abimelech, Balaam, &c. But he never concredited his word to any such profane wretches, as he did to the holy Prophets which have been since the world began; of whom it is said, as here, The Word of the Lord came to Hosea. His name signifieth a Saviour: a fit name for a Minister, whose work it is to save himself and them that bear him. To save them if he can, Obad. 21. to deliver their souls from going into the pit, Job 33. 24. to pull them, if possible, out of the fire, Jude 23. to give them the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sin: to give it I say, not by infusion (for that he cannot do) but by instruction; and that he must endeavour to do, as this Prophet did: then whom few Ministers ever ran so long a race without cessation, or ceſpitation, so constantly, so courageously, so unweariably. For he continued prophesying sixty five years at least, saith Paresu; seventy, saith Occolampadius; it is very probable fourscore years, saith Mr Burroughes. The Hebrews say ninety years, quibus multa dixit quae non scripsit, wherein he uttered much more than he wrote. This we may easily believe: for we have but the short Notes or heads of his Sermons, and larger Discourses, which he seems also to have set down for the use of the Church in his extream old age, whereof they carry a smack in the shortness of his speech, applied, as much as might be, to the measure of his breath. Hence Hierom fitly calleth him, commaticum, & quasi per sententias loquentem, concise and sententious. Amputatas loquitur sententias & Verba ante expectatum cadentia, as one saith of Salust; Multo est verbis quam sensu, restricior atque concisior, as another saith of Livy; He speaketh much in few; and seems to have more sentences then sayings. The offer you read him, the more you may get by him: & nunquam tamen dimittat te sine siti; and yet the more you get, the more you covet. Obscure he is (as delivering things briefly) and such as will not be easily acquainted with you, but upon further suit: Hence that Epiphonema in the perclose of his prophesie, Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent and he shall know them? But this must waken and not weaken our more diligent search, not being content with the first oar that offereth it self to our view, but digging deeper and deeper, till we become owner of the whole treasure, which will sufficiently pay for the pains. Wherefore search the Scripture, follow on to know the Lord; get all the dimensions of knowledge, which (now in the great abundance of the means we have) doth even bow down to us, as trees do that are laden with fruit, so that a child may gather from them.

the son of Beeri] That is, of a well that hath pure and clear water in it, and that never faileth; living water, as the Scripture calleth it, and not mixt with mud. Ministers should be the children of Beeri, of a well digged by the direction of the law-giver, Numb. 21. 17. whence people should draw waters with joy, the pure waters of life, the unadulterated milk of Gods word; not troubled, brackish, and sowerish doctrines, such as the Popish Clergy (called therefore the Sea, Rev. 12. 12.) do set abroach, which rather brings barrenesse to their hearers, and gnaws their entrails, then quench their thirst, or cause fruit. These and all false teachers, make Gods flock drink that which they have fouled with their feet, Ezek. 34. 19. yea, impoisoned with their hands: as the malicious Jews once cast bags of poison into many wells here, to do mischief, and were therefore banished the Countrey. False doctrine is like a filthy pond, wherein fish die soon, and frogs live long: it is like the dead Sea, or the great falling-star, called Wormwood, which made the third part of the waters become wormwood, so that many men died of the waters because they were made bitter by that son of perdition, who was himself the gall of bitterness, and bond of perdition. Who this Beeri was, it appears not in Scripture. It seems he was a man famous in those dayes among the Israelites (and is here named honoris gratia, for honour sake to the Prophet) as Alexander and Rufus the sons of Simon the Cyrenian, were men famously known in the Church of the New Testament: and are therefore but named only by S. Mark ch. 15. 21. The Jews have a tradition, that whensoever a Prophets father is named, that father was likewise a Prophet as well as the son. And Beeri might be binominis, and have some other name of more note: like as Pethuel the father of the Prophet Joel, is thought by some to have been Samuel, and to have been called Pethuel, that is a persuader of God, because what he asked of God, he obtained.

in the dayes of Uziah, Jotham, Abaz, &c.] A young Prophet he must needs be (especially if he prophesied fourscore years: See the the note above.) Haply he began as early as did Samuel, Jeremy, Timothy, Origer, or Cornelius Mus: of whom Sixtus Senensis testifieth, that he was an admirable preacher at twelve years old. Uziah, Jotham, Abaz, Hezekiah] The Throne of Judah had some enterchanges of good Princes: Israel none at all. The same justice therefore that made Israel a scourge to Judah, made Assyria a scorpion to Israel; as is here set forth under the type of Hosea's two last children Lo-rubamah, and Lo-ammi; whereof in their place. Mean-while, this Prophet went through variety of conditions under so many several Kings reigns (as did likewise Athanasius and Latimer) Jeroboams, (especially) the second of that name, and here only named, when six other Kings of Israel (in whose time Hosea prophesied) are not once mentioned, but lie wrapt up in the sheet of shame, because wicked idolaters, such as God took no delight in, and hath therefore written them in the earth. And in the dayes of Jeroboam the son of Joash] Not the son of Nebat, that ringleader of the ten Tribes revolt from the house of Dauid; but another little better, and yet very prosperous and victorious, 2 King. 14. 25, 28. He reigned also fourty one years, and did great exploits: yet is Hosea sent to contest with him, to declaim against his sin and wickednesse, and to proclaim heavy judgements against him and his people. This the Prophet did for for a long while together with all fidelity and fortitude; when the King was triumphing over his enemies, and the people were not only drunk, but even mad again, by reason of their extraordinary prosperity, as Calvin expresseth it. Now that so young a Prophet should so sharply contend with so fierce a people, in the ruffe of their pride and jollity: that he should so rouse and repple up these drunkards of Ephraim with their crown of pride, Esay 28. 1. this shews him to have been of an heroical spirit. Jonah his contemporary flinched when sent against Nineveh. Micah the Morasthite (another of Hosea's contemporaries) prophesied in the dayes of Hezekiah King of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Zion shall be ploughed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house, the high places of a forest. Yet did not Hezekiah King of Judah, and all Judah put him at all to death, &c. Jer. 26. 18, 19. He and Hosea, though they prevailed little with the people they preached to, yet they were better dealt with then the Prophet Esay (their contemporary too) of whom Hieron tells us, out of the Rabbines, that he was sawn asunder, because he said he had seen the Lord: and secondly, because he called the great ones of Judah, Princes of Sodom, and rulers of Gomorrhah, Isaiah 1. 10.

Hieron. in Isa. 1.

Verse 2. The beginning of the word of the Lord by Hosea]. Heb. In Hosea: to note, that the Lord was both in his mind and mouth, in his spirit and speech. God spake in him, before he spake out to the people. His prophesie must therefore needs be divine and deep. That's the best discourse that's digged out of a mans own breast, that comes a corde ad cor, from the heart to the heart: And blessed are the people (saith one) that have such Ministers, that shall speak nothing to them but what hath been first spoken by God in them: saying with David and Paul, We believe, therefore have we spoken: we also believe, and therefore speak: we have experimented what we deliver: we believe and are sure, that God is in us of a truth, and that we preach cum gratia & privilegio. The beginning.] Hence some gather, that Hosea was the first Prophet: Hoseas videtur tempore & majestate aliis prior, saith O Ecolampadius. Certain it is he began before Esay (because he prophesied in the dayes of Jeroboam, who was before Uzziah) whether before Amos or no, is not so certain. Eusebius tells us there was no Greek History extant before Hosea's time. Well therefore might that ancient priest of Egypt say to Solon, You Grecians are all boyes and babies in matters of Antiquity: neither is there one old man amongst you. Samuel is counted the first Prophet, Acts 3. 24. but Hosea was the first of those that lived in these Kings dayes, and likely held out longest (see the Note on Verse 1.) as did father Latimer, preaching twice every sabbath day, though of a very great age: and rising to his study winter and summer at two of the clock in the morning. Others read the words thus, At the beginning when the Lord spake by Hosea, he said to Hosea himself, Go take unto thee, &c. An uncouth precept, and a rough beginning for a young preacher, whose youth might be despised, and whose sharpnesse might be disgusted. But truth must be spoken, however it be taken: and a preacher should take the same liberty to cry down sin, that men take to commit sin, Esay 58. 1. Hieron was called fulmen Ecclesiasticum, the Church thunder-bolt: And our Mr Perkins applied the word so close to the consciences of his hearers, that he was able to make their hearts fall down, and their hairs almost to stand upright. But in old age he was more milde, and delighted much to preach mercy; as did also our Prophet Hosea, whose prophesie is comminatory in the fore-part, consolatory in the latter part. And the Lord said to Hosea]. This is now the third time inculcated for more authority sake, which the people so rubb'd and menaced would be apt enough to question. He therefore shews them his commission, and that he hath good ground for what he saith; that they may have no cause to cavil, but reply as that good Dutch Divine did (if God would give them a heart so to do) Veniat, veniat, verbum Domini, & submittemus ei, sexcenta si nobis essent colla: Let the word of the Lord come, yea, let it come, and we will submit there unto, though we had six hundred lives to lose for so doing.

Go take unto thee a wife of whoredoms]. An arrant whore, a stinking strumpet, Calvin. scortum obsolecitur, a known and trite harlot; such as were Thais, Lais, Phryne, &c. yea, and such a one as, after marriage with a former husband at least, went astray after other sweet-hearts; for so the application of the figure to the subject, Chap. 2.

requireth it to be understood: Whereby it appears (saith Diodate) that all this was done in a vision. Others infer as much from that phrase in this verse, The beginning of the word of the Lord in Hosea, that is, (saith Polanus) appearing and speaking to him by an inward vision, as it were in an extasie. Besides, in the third chapter, and three first verses, the Prophet is bidden to marry another harlot, to buy her for his own use, and to keep her at his house for a time. Now scimus hoc non fuisse completum, saith Calvin; we know that this was never really done. It follows therefore that this figure was only proposed to the people, that they might perceive in the looking-glasse of this allegory; first, their duty toward God, second, their disloyalty, thirdly, their penalty for the same. It is not an historical narration, but a Prophetic vision. Children of fornication, a bastardly brood: such as this evil and adulterous generation is; sons of the rebellious whorish woman, children of transgression, a seed of falsehood, Esay 57. 4. The Hebrews call such children brambles, such as Abimelech was, who grew in the hedge-row of an harlot: they call them also Mamzer, as ye would say, a strange blot: And Shtaruki, or silent, because when others are praising their parents, such must hold their peace, and hold down their heads with shame enough, because by-blows.

Petrus, Satyr. for the land hath committed great whoredoms] Fornicando fornicata est, i. e. frequentissime & fadissime, most frequently and most filthily: See Ezek. 23. throughout. Aholah, (that is, Israel) plaid the harlot when she was mine, verse 5. In her youth they lay with her, verse 8. so that she might say with that impudent strumpet Quartilla in Petronius, that she could never remember her self a virgin: Yea, she grew old in her adulteries, verse 43. opened her feet to every passenger, and multiplied her whoredoms, Ezek. 16. 25. Meretrices scilicet hoc est meretricissima. Such a common prostitutum is the whore of Rome. whom her followers call piam matrem, qua gremium claudat nemini. Joan of Naples was a saint to her. Idolatry is spiritual whoredome in many respects. It defiles the soul, Gods bridal-bed. It breaks the marriage-knot, and discovenants. It enrageth God, who in this case will take no ransom. It subjecteth men to Gods deepest displeasure: It besots them and unmans them: they that make idols are like unto them, so are all they that trust in them.

Manuan. Lastly, idolatry is seldom without adultery, in a proper sense; as appears in the old Heathens, at their feasts of Priapus, Lupercalia, &c. the Canaanites had filled the Land from one end to another with their uncleanness, Ezra 9. 11. and in the Papists at this day, who reckon fornication a venial sin, have their Stews allowed them; yea, among the very Indians, who abhor their most loathsome living: And for Rome it self — tota est jam Roma lupanar, it is become a great brothel-house, and her stench is come up to heaven, as Matthew Paris (one of her sons) long since said. Departing from the Lord] In whom all amiables and admirables are concentrated. This did exceedingly aggravate the unkindness.

John 6. 60.

Verse 3. So he went] He said not, This is a hard saying, who can hear it? Dura mihi precipit, & pœne terret. He doth not reason but run, dispute but dispatch. God must be obeyed, though we see no sense for it. And took Gomer] which signifieth both consummation and consumption, to shew that she was consummata meretrix, a compleat whore, had all the tricks of a whore; and brings her paramours to final consumption, utter extermination.

the daughter of Diblaim] Not quasi de Belaim, a place so called, as Hago dreameth: though there was a wilderness of this name, whereto some think the Prophet here alludeth, to shew the Churches wretched beginning in its own nature: as Cant. 3: 6. Ezek. 16. 7. But Diblaim is by some taken for Gomers father: by more, for her mother, which is also held to be an harlot, according to that Ezek. 16. 44. As is the mother, so is the daughter. Diblaim signifieth bunches of dried figs, that were the delicacies of those times. Gluttony is the gallery that lechery walketh thorough. Sine Cerere & Libero friget Venus. Concupiscence (as Plato saith) hath the lowest places, and is alligata ventri, as one would tie an horse or an asse to the manger. Jeremy not unfitly compareth sensualists to fed horses, neighing after their neighbours wives: Saturity breeds security, which is the sure fore-runner of destruction. Est ergo hic gnome, saith à Lapide. i. e. Here we have then an elegant sentence, Gomer is the daughter of Diblaim, that is, rottenness of sensuality:

sensuality: for as the worm that grows in the fruit, devoureth it; so doth grief, the pleasure of sin. This Observation we have from the Cabbalists.

Verse 4. Call his name Jezreel ] For the honourable name of Israel is too good, for this people; call them therefore Jezreel, a people devoted to dispersion, and such as I will scatter into the four windes of heaven, as the seeds-man scattereth his seed. Thus Jeconiah is called Coniah, (for a judgement upon him) Bethel, Beth-aven, Har, Hammischa, the mount Oliver, or of Unction, Har hammaschith, the mount of corruption, 2 King. 23. 13. And this is not unusuall amongst men; so when they would disgrace a man, to clip or play upon his name: as when they spitefully called Athanasius Sathanasius, Cyprian Coprian, (as if all his excellent works were but dung) Calvine, Cain, &c. This people, saith God here, are more like Ahab then Jacob. Call them therefore Jezreel (Ahabs Court) that is, a den of thieves and murderers, where innocent Naboth cannot be master of the vineyard that he was born to. Micah (who prophesied also much about these times) hath a saying much to the same purpose, Chap. 2. ver. 7. O thou that art named, the house of Jacob, is the spirit of the Lord straitned? are these his doings? q. d. Ye that boast of Jacob to be your father, do you tread in his steps? are ye of his spirit, of his practise? was there such vile prophanenesse found in him, as is openly found in you? David describeth the generation of such as seek God, as seek his face, and then subjoyneth, This is Jacob, these are Israelites indeed, these are Jews inwardly: and all others are degenerate plants, and are the worse for their outward priviledges: sith tribulation and anguish shall be upon every soul of man that doth evil, but of the Jew first, and then also of the Gentile, Rom. 2. 9.

for yet a little while ] And yet this little was a long while, through Gods gracious forbearance. As bad as this people were, they should not perish without warning; yea, though the Lord foreknew they would make no good use of it. Φιλει δ Θεος αρεσπουαυειν, saith the Heathen Historian: God loves to foresignifie, and premonish. But there is nothing more dangerous and dismall, then these still revenges; as when God suddenly brake out in wrath upon Nadab and Abihu, upon Nebuchadnezzar, Herod, Pharaoh at the Red-Sea, when he would not beware. It is a just both desert and presage of ruine, not to be warned. See this in Nineveh, spared at first, but after a little while revolting, soundly paid for the new and old faults, Nahum. 3. 19. Nun consurget iterum afflictio, saith the same Prophet, chap. 1. 9. Affliction shall not rise up the second time: God will not make two doings of it: but when he begins, he will also make an end, 1 Sam. 3. 12. that is, as sure as he begins, so sure will he make an end: and though it may be some time ere he begin, yet a little while (for he is slow to wrath, and of great kindnesse) yet assuredly he will avenge the blood of Jezreel, ] i. e. the executions done by Iehu upon the house of Ahab, as so many murders: see 1 King. 16. 7. This God did not presently, but that's nothing. Nullum tempus occurrit Regi, nedum Deo. He is slow, but sure, Et tarditatem supplicij gravitate compensat, as the Heathen could say, the longer he holds, the harder he strikes: and visits Iehu's house for by-past sins, that they made little reckoning of. Sin may sleep a long time, like a sleeping debt, not called for of many yeers: As Saul's sin in slaying the Gibeonites, not punished till fourty yeers after: as Ioabs killing of Abner, slept all Dauids dayes: as Amalec perished, for their ill usage of Israel, many hundred yeers after. It is ill angring the Ancient of dayes. He that saith, Vengeance is mine, I will repay it, takes his own time for the doing of it: and who shall prescribe to him? It is dangerous offending him whose displeasure is everlasting. Vapours, that ascend invisibly, come down again in stormes and showers. A sinner of an hundred yeers shall be accursed, and made to possesse the sins of his youth. It is not the last sand that exhausts the hour-glasse, nor the last stroak that fells the Oak. Iehu's house is visited, and his progeny extinguished in the fourth generation, for Iehu's offences. Gods work must be done truly, that there be no halting, and totally, that there be no halving. But Iehu, as he had not that true heart spoken of by the Apostle, Hebr. 10. 22. but was double minded, Iames 1. 8. & 4. 8. (like that mad Neapolitan that said, he had two hearts, one for God, and another for him that would:) so he fulfilled not after God, or he followed not God fully, as Caleb did, Numb. 14. 24. he did not all Gods wills as David, Acts 13. he served him not with a perfect fect heart, as Asa, 2 Chron. 15. 17. He reformed the State, but not the Church; or if he did something toward it, yet he was not thorow in it. He had a dispenfatory conscience: for though he rooted out Baals-worship, yet the golden Calves must continue; piety must give place to policy. It was a just complaint of Chennitijs, Principes regionem potius quam religionem quarunt: pauperes panem potius quam Christum. All men seek their own, but not the things of Iesus Christ, Phil. 2. 21. And yet piety hath ever proved to be the best policie: and the very Philosopher in his Politicks gives this golden Rule. αρετων δελ δειον εμυλεις. First take care of Divine things. Iehu seemed at first to be as zealous a Reformer, as Iehosaphat: but though his fleece was fair, his liver was rotten. In parabola ovīs capras suas quarebat; he was like the Eagle which soareth aloft, not for any love of heaven: her eye is, all the while, upon the prey; which by this means she spies sooner, and seizeth upon better. He seems to have been of Machiavels minde, viz. that vertue it self should not be sought after, but onely the appearance: because the credit is a help, the u'e a cumber. Finally, of Iehu it may he said, as Marcellinus saith of Iulian, that by his hypocrisie and double-dealing, Obnubilabat glorie multiplices cursus, he stained his many praise-worthy practises. Or as Camden saith of King Henry the eight; Fuerunt quidem in eo rege, &c. There were in that King great vertues, and so lesse vices mingled, or rather jumbled together. Or lastly, as Folietus Galeazzo reporteth of Sfortia Duke of Millain, that he was a very monster, made up, and compact of vertue and vice. See more verse 5. And I will cause to cease the Kingdom. This fell out after 76 years; which God counts and calls here, but a little while: A thousand years with him are but as one day. What is our life but a spot of time betwixt two eternities? It is even a vapour, saith S. Iames, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us, (and a door now opened) of entering into Gods rest, any of us should seem to come short, or to come lag, and late, as did Eſau, the foolish virgins, those that come a day after the fair, an hour after the feast; Agree with your adversary quickly, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel, Currat pœnitentia, ne præcurrat sententia: Repent a day before death, (and that may be this day, before the next) make Gods judgements present in conceit, ere they come in the event, prevision is the likeliest way of prevention, the surest means of mitigation: whereas coming on the sudden, they finde weak mindes secure, make them miserable, leave them desperate.

Verse 5. I will break the bowe of Israel] though it may seem to have a back of steel, and though it be drawn by Iehu himself, with his full strength, as once against Iehoram, to the piercing of his heart, 2 King. 9. 24. He means, God will blast all the power of their Ammunition, defeat their likeliest projects, and practises, and make the strongest sinew in the arm of flesh to crack. He breaketh the bowe, and cutteth the spear in sunder, &c. Psal. 46. 9. He rendreth the weapons vain, or successfull, Isai. 54. 17. Ierem. 50. 9. as he did when the Rats and Mice were sent into Sennacheribs Army in great abundance, to gnaw and devour their quivers, bowe-strings, belts, bridles, shields, (as Herodotus relates) to shew that the shields of the earth belong to the Lord, that the Militia of the World is his, that he orders the Ammunition, Ier. 50. 25. And the like was done by this Lord of Hosts, or Armies, when the winde and weather fought for Theodosius, in that famous battle against the tyrant Maximus, celebrated by Claudian: As also when the Spanish Armado was defeated and discomfited by the English in 88. That was very remarkable and for our purpose apposite, which fell out in the battle between Edward the third of England, and Philip of France. Philip enraged with a defeat, resolves presently to revenge it; and hardly had patience to stay in Abbeville one day, while the Bridge to passe over his Army was repaying. And with this precipitation and fury, into the field he marcheth, elevated with an assured hope of triumphant Victory. But it fell out otherwise; for there fell at the instant of the Battle a piercing shower of rain, which dissolved their strings, and made their bowes unusefull. In the valley of Iezreel] A city neer to Maximinianopolis, saith Hierom. Of the valley wherein this City was scituate, see Iosh. 17. 16. Iudg. 6. 33. It was in the tribe of Manasseh, and bordered upon Issachar, Iosh. 19. 18. It was ten miles long, and two miles over; being called also, the plain of Galilee, and was fit for a fight, for a pitch battle. Here it was, saith Adrichomius, that Gideon fought the Midianites Judg. 6. 7. Saul the Philistines. 1 Sam. 31. Ahab the Syrians 1 King. 20. And here Zachary (the last of Jehu's line) was slain, and with him the kingdom of Israel received such a wound, that it could never rise again. Monarchies have their times and their turns, their rise and their ruine. Junius renders it Propter Vallem Jericho, I will break the bow of Israel, because of the wall of Jezreel: that is, saith he, because of the slaughter of Ababs house there made by Jehu 2 King. 10. Jehu's Tent in that execution was rewarded as an Act of Justice, quoad substantiam operis, and yet punished as an Act of policy quoad modum for the perverse end, Finibus non officijs a vitijs discernuntur virtutes saith Augustine. By the ends and not by the works done, are vertues distinguished from vices. Two things make a good Christian, and declare him so, good Actions and good Aimes. And although a good aime doth not make a bad Action good (as in Uzza) yet a bad aime makes a good action bad, as here in Jehu. There may be then, we see, malum opus in bona materia, a work materially good, which yet may never prove so formally and eventually: sc. when there is a fail either quoad fontem, or quoad finem. A thing which I see in the night may shine: and that shining proceed from nothing but rottenness. Blazing comets (though but comets) as long as they keep aloft, shine bright. But when they begin to decline from their pitch, they fall to the earth, and infect the Air. So when illuminates forsake the Lord, and minde onely earthly things, being all for self, they lose their light, and go out in a snuffe. Jehu's golden calves made an end of him and his, though he made an end of Ababs house and Baals worship. His rooting out of Ababs race was but to settle the crown better upon his own head. Like unto him was our Richard the third, who well knowing (saith the Historian) it was no pollicy to play the villaine by half-deal is resolved to leave never a rub to lie in the way, that might hinder the true running of his bowle. Like unto him also (saith Master Calvin upon this text) was our king Henry the eighth, who cast off some degree of Popery, so farre as would serve his own turn: but there were the six Articles in force (that whip with six cords, as that Martyr called it) for which many suffered at that time. And whereas (like Sylla) he commanded others, under great penalties, to be no Papists, himself was either Papist or Athiest, jearing at some for their old Mumpsimus, and at others for their new Sumpsimus, as he profanely called the Reformation: hanging Papists on the one side of the hedge, for denying his Supremacy, and burning Protestants on the other side thereof, for denying Transubstantiation, &c. And hence it may be thought, is that dreadfull and dismall ruine that is now (in these our dayes, and in the fourth generation or succession) befall the royall family. The house of Jehu saith the worse for Jehu. Offa king of East-Saxons lived in the time of Charles the great, and was a potent Prince. But the many injuries he did, and the murder he committed in his house upon Eithelbert king of East-Angles, coming to him under a publike faith, and a suitor to his daughter, were justly revenged upon his posterity, which, after him, declining, in the end lost all. But to return to Jehu: we shall find 2 Kin. 10. 30. that God said, that because Jehu had shed the blood of Ahab in Jezreel, that he would reward him for it: and that his children to the fourth generation should sit upon the throne of Israel, and govern that Kingdom. And yet, for miscarriage in the manner, justly plagueth his posterity. As Xerxes crowned his Steerfman in the morning, and yet hanged him in the afternoon of the same day. And as Marescal de Thermas the French Generall, first Knighted a French souldier in Scotland who first mounted a besieged Fort (by that means taken) and then hanged him within an hour after, for doing it without order. See more of this in the Note upon the former verse.

Verse 6. And she conceived againe ] To shew, in a continued allegory, the weak and wofull estate of the ten tribes, when the Assyrian took from them all the land of Gilead and Galilee, together with all the land of Nephtali, and carried them captive, subduing in a manner five tribes of Israel: to wit those without Jordan (who as they had first their inheritance given them, so they were now first carried captives) and the tribes of Zabulon and Nephtali who were seated in the land of Galilee, And this was the first captivity of Israel: see 2 Kings 15. 29, Esay. 9. 1. And bare a daughter. This age is compared to a daughter, because from that time forward, after the bow of Israel was so broken, as Verse 5. they should be no more able to defend themselves, than if they were a common-wealth of women:

men. Their spirits should be to be cowed out and emasculated, their backs to be bowed down with unsupportable burdens and bondages, that there was scarcely place left of a worse condition, nor hope of a better. Like them were those we read of Esay 51. 23. that yielded to such as would but say to them, Bow down that we may go over you. Or as those in Nahum, 3. 13. Their men shall be as women Ἀνδρες ὡς γυναῖκες Ἀχχίοι, timorous and cowardly, like Issachar's Affe Gen : 49. 15. [whole lot fell in Galilee, Iosb : 19. 18.] or those fugitives of Ephraim Iudg. 12. 4. that therefore bare a brand of dishonour, because they would not rather die bravely, then live basely: Of such it may be said as of Harts and Stags, they have great horns and strength, but do nothing with them, quia deest animus, because their spirits are imbed: as the Israelites in Egypt were of old by Pharaoh, and as the Grecians are at this day by the Turk. call her name Loruhamah,] When God once calls a people or a person by this name, we may well write upon their dores (if any place be yet left for prayer, any good to be done by it) Lord have mercy upon them: their condition is deplorable, if not desperate. Vade frater in Cellam et dic, Misereere mei, Deus, Brother go into thy Cell and say, Lord have mercy upon me, said Cranzins to Luther, when he began to declaim against the Pope, for he looked upon him as an undone man, and yet he was not. But those are doubly undone, to whom God shall say as here to Israel, I will no more have mercy] Heb : I will add no more to show mercy: but my so oft abused mercy shall turn into fury. That it is not so yet with this sinful nation, that we are not yet a Loruhamah, an Acheldama, that we are not already as Sodom, and like unto Gomorrhah, even a place of nettles and salt pits, a perpetuall desolation, as another prophet hath it, we may well cry out, O the depth, the fathomlesse depth of Gods dear love to England. Certain it is that we have hitherto subsisted by a miracle of his mercy, and by a prop of his extraordinary patience. Certain it is that God hath not dealt with England according to his ordinary rule, but according to his prerogative royall, England (if one may so speak with reverence) is a paradox to the Bible. God grant that being lifted up to heaven with Capernaum in the abundance of blessings be not brought down to hell by the abuse of them; that God set not that sad impression of Loruhamah (worse then any black Theta) upon her, and make her know the worth of his undervalued favours by the want of them: why should it be said of us as once, Anglica gens est optima flens, et pessima ridens? why should we provoke the Lord so long till he shall resolve upon an evill, an onely evill, i. e. without mixture of mercy; till the decree bring forth, Zeph. 2. 2. and God pronounceth that fatal sentence against us that he did once against the old world, Fiat iustitia, ruat mundus, Let justice be done though the world be thereby undone. "Of all Gods Attributes he can least abide an abuse in his mercy, Gods, "mercy is precious (saith one) and he will not let it run out to wast; he will not "be prodigall of it: There is a time wherein God will say, now I have done, I "have even done with this people, mercy hath had her turn &c. I will not alwayes serve them for a sinning-stock, but will take another course with them: I will take my own and be gone: and woe be unto them when I depart from them. When the sun is eclipsed, all creatures fade and flag here below, Thou hiddest thy face, Lord, and I was troubled, Psal. 30. 7. David could not live but in the light of Gods countenance: he begs for mercy every where, as for life, never did poor prisoner at the bar beg harder for a psalm of mercy then he doth, Psal. 51. 1. and other where. Neither would common mercies content him, he must have such as are proper and peculiar to Gods own people, even the sure mercies of David. Oh make sure of mercy, what ever you go without. And the rather because there are a race of Loruhamahs, a sort of such amongst men as are excluded from mercy. God is not mercifull to any wicked transgressours Psal. 59. 5. that go on in their trespasses Psal. 68. 21. that allow them and mallow in them. That last letter in Gods name had need to be well remembered Exod. 32. 7. He will by no means clear the guilty. And that terrible text should never be forgotten by those that are obstinate in an evill course, and blese themselves when God curseth them, Deut. 29. 19. 20. See the note there. Gods mercy goes oft-times in Scripture bounded by his truth: and as the same fire hath burning heat and cheerfull light, so hath God

God plagues for the obstinate, and mercy for the penitent. Surely as he is pater miserationum the father of mercies: so he is Deus ultionum the God of vengeance: as he hath ubera, so he hath verbera, treasures of punishments for those especially that kick at his bowels, that despise his long-sufferance, that argue from love to liberty, which is the Devils logick. Cavete a Melampygo.

But I will utterly take them away.] Tollendo tollam. So Calvin renders it: and further tells us that some render it Comburem, I will burn them: and indeed war is fitly compared to fire that cruel element, and to extream famine Isaia. 9. 19. 20. The vulgar latine translate it Obliviscendo obliviscar, I will utterly forget them: and that's punishment enough: as when one carried himself insolently toward the State of Rome, a grave Senator gave this counsel, Let us forget him and he will soon remember himself. Woe be to those to whom Christ shall say, Verily I know you not, I have utterly forgot you. Mercer rendreth it, Levabo, id est, projiciam, I will lift them up, that I may throw them down againe with the greater poise. The Seventy hath I will set my self against them in battell array. Now the Lord is a man of war Exod. 15. 4. yea he is the Lord and Victor of wars, as the Chaldee there paraphraseth. But what meant the Chaldee here to render this text by Parcam eis, Sparing I will spare them: is not this point-blank against Lerubamah? How much better Tremellius, ut nullo pacto condonem istis, that I should any way forgive them. Have I not pardoned them enough already? may I not well by this time be weary of repenting? I will even break off my patience, and forbear to punish no longer, I have long time holden my peace, I have been still and refrained my self: now will I cry like a travelling woman (who bites in her paine as long as she is able) I will destroy and devour at once: I will, I will. The ten tribes never returned out of captivity, unless it were some few of them that came up with the other two tribes out of Babylon, Ezr. 2. by the appointment of Cyrus: and some others that fled home when Nineveh (where they were held captive) was destroyed: But for the generality of them, whether they abide in China or Tartary, or West-Indies, I cannot tell you. Pareus rendreth it, Nam tolerando toleravi eos, for I have a long while born with their evil manners. And surely Subito tollitur, qui Ang. din toleratur, as an Ancient saith, Gods patience will not alwayes hold &c. Isa. 42. 14.

Verf. 7. But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah.] The Ark and the mercy seate were never separated. Judah had not utterly cast off God, as Israel had: but worshipped God in the Temple, (how corruptly soever) therefore they shall have mercy because they kept the right way of worship. See the Churches plea for mercy to this purpose Jer. 14. 9. Again, Judah was now in a very great straight having been lately beaten and plundered by Israel 2. King. 4. 12. therefore they shall have mercy. God heard Hagar's affliction and relieved her. I have seen, I have seen, the sufferings of my people in Egypt, saith God, and am come to ease them. Because they have called thee an outcast, saying, This is Zion whom no man looketh after, therefore I will restore health unto thee, and I will heale thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord Jer. 30. 17. He will repent for his people when he seeth their power is gone, Deut. 32. 36. when there is dignus vindice nodus, an extremity fit for divine power to interpose. He knowes that mercy is never so seasonable and sweet, as when misery weighs down, and nothing but mercy turns the scale: therefore Judah shall have mercy, when Israel shall have none. True it is, that Judah was not at this time much better then Israel, Aholibah then Aholah: they were scarce free from Sodomy and many such like foul abominations. But what of that? if God come with a non obstante as Psal 106. 8. Neverthelesse he saved them for his names sake &c. who shall gainstand him: If he will shew mercy for his names sake, what people is there so wicked whom he may not save? See Esay 57. 17. Ezek. 20. 8. 14. 22. 44. Add hereunto that Israel and Syria were confederate against Judah, & thought to have made but a breakfast of them, Isay. 7. 5. &c. but God here promiseth Judah mercy: and lets them know to their comfort, that there is more mercy for them in heaven, then there can be misery in earth, or malice in hell against them. True it is, that even after this gracious promise made to Judah, it went very hard with them, See 2. Chron. 28. 6. there 120000. of them were slain in one battle and 200000. of them carried captive: yea, and all this by these Israelites here rejected from that mercy that Judah is promised; besides abundance Ecclesia hares Crucis faith Luther, The Church as she is heire of the promises, so is she of the Crofs: and the promises are alwayes to be understood with condition of the crofs. The palsy-man in the Gospel healed by our Saviour heard, Son be of good cheere, thy sins are forgiven thee, and yet he was not presently free'd of his disease, till after a dispute held with the Pharises (which must needs take up some time) and the case cleared, Jesus said, Arise take up thy bed and walk, and so shew thy self a sound man. But to go on: Judah shall be saved, and not Israel, that envied Judah, and maliciously sought their ruine. David looketh upon it as a sweet mercy, that God had spread him a table in the presence, and maugre the malice of his enemies. And the children of the kingdome (so the Jewes are called) shall gnash their teeth, and be even ready to eat their nailes: at the reception of the Gentiles. This was it that put the men of Nazareth into an anger, and our Saviour into a danger, Luk. 4. 25. 26. By the Lord their God that i, by the Lord Christ by Messiah their Prince, by the word of the Lord their God, with the Chaldee here, that word essentiall John. 1. 1. that true Zaphnath Paaneach (tho it is Saviour of the world, as Hierome interprets it) whereof Joseph was but a type. God raised up for these unworthy Jewes, and even thrust him upon them, whether they would or no, Isay. 7. 13. 14. that all might appear to be of free grace. Well might God say, I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, matchlesse mercy indeed: mercy that rejoiced against judgment. Mans perverseness breaketh not off the course of Gods goodness; Judah shall be saved by the Lord their God who is Alius from his Father, but not Alud, a distinct person, nota distinct thing. This Angel of Gods presence saved them, in his love, and in his pity he redeemed them &c. Isay. 63. 9. even the Angel that had redeemed their father Jacob from all evill Gen. 48. 16. and that soon after this prophesie, destroyed so many thousands in Senacheribs army, Not by bow nor by battle &c. but by his own bare hand immediatly and miraculously 2. King. 19. where we may see that when Senacherib (after the example of his father Salmanser, who had captivated the ten tribes) came up against Judah, having already devoured Jerusalem in his hopes, and thinking to cut them off at a blow, as if they had all had but one neck, they were saved by Jehovah their God: the Virgin daughter of Zion knew well the worth and valour of Christ her champion, and that made her so confident Esay. 37. 22. She knew whom she had trusted, not with her outward condition onely, but with her inward and everlasting, with her precious soul, saying with David I am thine, save me: for I have sought thy precepts. Psal. 119. 94. I will not trust in my bow, neither shall mine arme save me: but thy right hand and thine arme, and the light of thy countenance: for thou hast a favour unto me. See the Note on Zach. 4. 6. and on 14. 3. 5. That's an excellent passage Psal. 21. 13. Be thou exalted O Lord in thine own strength: so will we sing and praise thy power.

Verf. 9. Now when she had weaned Lo-rubamah] That is, after that the patience of God had waited and long looked for their conversion; but all in vane, he resolved upon their utter rejection. And first he sent for his love tokens back againe: he weanes them and takes them off from those breasts of consolation, the holy Ordinances, deprived them of those dugs (better then wine, Cant. 1. 4.) that they had despised, carried them far away from that good land that abounded with milk and hony: the men of the East should be sent in upon them to eat their fruit and drink their milk, Ezek. 25. 4. This nation (saith a Divine) is sick of a spirituall plurisie: we begin to surfet on the bread of life, the unadulterated milk of Gods word, and to spill it. Now when God seeth his mercies lying under table, 'tis just with him to call to the enemy to take away. Say not here with those in the Gospel threatened with this judgment, God forbid. Think it not a thing impossible, that England should be thus visited. The Sea is not so calme in summer, but it may be troubled with a storme: the mountain so firme, but may be moved with an earthquake. We have seen as fair Suns as ours fall from the midst of heaven, for our instance, Lege historiam, ne fias historia. Surely except we repent and reforme a little better then we have done yet; a removall of our Candlestick

Candlestick, a totall eclipse of our Sun, may be as certainly foreseen and foretold, as if visions and letters were sent us from heaven, as once to the seven Churches of Asia, who sinned away their light, &c. And bare a sonne, ] Not a daughter as before, but a sonne, because under Hosea, the last King of Israel, that Kingdom began a little to lift up the head, and to stand it out against the Assyrian. But this was but extremus visus regni, the last sprunting of that dying State. For soon after, Samaria the chief City was close besieged: and although it held out three whole yeers, with a Masculine resolution, yet at length it was sacked, and all the people of the land carried captive, young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, &c. as it is said of their confederates the Egyptians, Esay 20. 4. and as it shall be done at length to that purple whore of Rome, who shall be stript naked, broild and eaten, Revel. 17. 16. A cold sweat stands already upon her limbs: and, for a presage of her future ruine, it is observed, that Rome, since it became Papall, was never besieged by any, but it was taken; As for their late Masculine attempts and atchievements (if any) it is but as here in the Kingdom of Israel, a lightning before death, as the blaze of a candle a little afore it goes out, the bulging of a wall that's ready to come down, or as it was said of Carthage, a little afore it was taken, Morientium bestiarum violentiores esse morsus, dying beasts bite cruelly.

Verse 9. Call his name Loammī ] Nomen extremum & deploratum, saith Pareus, the last and most lamentable name of all, containing a most heavy, but spiritual, and therefore lesse sensible punishment, viz. an utter abjection and abdication from the covenant, from grace, from God, from life eternall. For ye are not my people ] But, being totally cashiered, and discovenanted; Are ye not as the children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel, saith the Lord? Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt, and the Philistims from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir? q. d. True it is, I have brought you up out of Egypt (and therein you greatly glory) but have I not done as much as all this, for those profane Nations here mentioned? with and amongst whom, henceforward I shall reckon you, for you are no people of mine, but discarded, and dispeopled? Till the Covenant made with Abraham, all Nations were suffered to walk in their own wayes, as fishes passe at liberty thorow the pathis of the Seas, Psal. 8. 8. One person was no more respected then another. But as soon as it was said, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed after thee, the Church became as fish cast into a Pond for peculiar use: and was divided from other Nations, no otherwise then light was from darknesse in the first creation, or then Goshen was from Egypt, in that wonderfull separation. But here God seems to rescind his own act, to cast off the people of his purchase, and utterly to disown them; as once before he also did, when he fathered them upon Moses, saying, Thy people, which thou hast brought out of Egypt, &c. Exod. 32. 7. But this (we must know) is no other then mutatio rei non Dei, effectus non affectus, facti non consilij, not a change of Gods will, but onely of his works. For hath God indeed cast away his people? God forbid. God hath not cast away his people, whom he foreknew. Thus saith the Lord God, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, for all that they have done, saith the Lord. And albeit (by an angry Apopopesis) he say here, I will not be your God, (The word God, is not in the Original, ab irato omittitur, saith Mercer) yet to shew that he is Bagnal Chemah, One that can rule his wrath, as Neb. 1. 2. he subjoyneth here, verse 10.

Verse 10. Yet the number of the children of Israel ] i. e. of the Israel of God, those Jews inwardly the Circumcision indeed, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoyce in Christ Jesus, putting no confidence in the flesh, Phil. 3. 3. but saying each for himself as that good Father did, Horreo quicquid de meo est, ut sim meus; All my care is to be found in Christ (sc. when sought for by the justice of God) not having mine own righteousnesse which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousnesse which is of God by faith. Lo, to such Israelites indeed, and of such it is here promised (the Lord in Judgement remembering Mercy) that they shall be the sand of the sea which cannot be measured nor numbered; This was first promised to Abraham; and afterwards confirmed with an oath, Gen. 22. 16. It began to be fulfilled; when, by the preaching of the Apostles, so many of both Jews and Gentiles came in and were converted to the faith of the true Messiah, as S. Paul expoundeth this text, Rom. 9. 24, 25. and he had the mind of Christ. It shall have its full accomplishment, when the fulnesse of the Gentiles shall come in, and all Israel shall be saved, Rom. 11. 26. Then the Church shall be as the stone that smote the Image, it shall become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth. Though the beginning of it be small, yet the later end of it shall greatly increase, Job 8. 7. for all the earth shall be filled with the glory of Christ: he shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, Psal. 72. 8, 11, 17. Great is the paucity of Gods people for present: but let us, by the help of this promise, get above that stumbling block. Cosmographers tell us, that if we divide all the known world into thirty parts, the Heathens part is as nineteen of this thirty: the Mahometans as six, the Christians as five only: And of those five, more then the one half is held by idolatrous Papists. But let not this discourage us; it will be otherwise one day, for the Scripture cannot be broken. And although God may seem utterly to have abandoned his ancient people the Jews (the ten Tribes especially) yet they, as well as the rest, shall be vouchsafed this honour to be called to the participation of Christ, Ezek. 37. 16, 19. Jer. 3. 12, 13, &c. Esay 11. 12, 13. Obad. 20. Zach. 10. 6. Rom. 11. 26. If God after so dreadful a threatening come in with his non-obstante (as he doth likewise Psal. 106. 8. and elsewhere) and say, yet the number of the children of Israel shall be, &c. who shall gainsay him? Their interpretation is too narrow, that understand this text of the increase of this people in all their dispersions, until the time of their conversion. And that of Rabbi Ezra is pretty though not proper; that as the sand keeps the waves of the sea from breaking in and drowning the world: so doth Israel preserve man-kind from perishing by the waves of Gods wrath. It should have been considered by him and the rest of those refractory Rabbines, that at that general conversion of the Jews (here plainly foretold) there shall be some stubborn spirits that will not even then stoop to Christ; but will be filled with envy, as those cankered Pharisees their fore-fathers were (Acts 13. 44, 45.) to see almost the whole City come together to hear Christ; Yea, they will be ready to say, as John 12. 19. perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the whole world follows him. Now against these spiritual spirits, the wrath of God shall be revealed from heaven, Rev. 21. 8. Dan. 12. 2. Esay. 65. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17.

and it shall come to passe, that in the place where it was said unto them] As if God did now even repent, and would make them a full amends: make them glad according to the time, and in that very place when and where they had seen evil. Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in Jerusalem, Zech. 12. 6. The Jews (it is thought) shall dwell in their own Countrey, Jer. 3. 18. & 23. 8. Ezek. 37. 11, 12. Amos 9. 14, 15. and God have a very glorious Church in the Land of Canaan. But that's not all; The Gentiles, who shall be made a spiritual Israel, though in time past they were not a people, yet now are they the people of God; and which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy, 1 Pet. 2. 10. yea, such a signal mercy as S. John cannot look on without an Ecce admirantis; Behold, saith he, what manner of Love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: 1 John 3. 1. Yes, the sons of the living God] who as he lives, so he gives us all things richly to enjoy; and is therefore to be trusted, 1 Tim. 6. 17. And that we should not only be Gods people, but his sons (reconciled, but adopted) and not only be so, but be called so, have the name and the note, the credit and the comfort. Well might the Apostle say, that the grace of God herein had abounded, even to an overflow, 1 Tim. 1. 14. Well may Oecolampadius say as he doth upon this very Text, Vide ut major gratia quam peccatum, Behold, how as sin abounded, grace superabounded. Well might Leo say, Omnia dona excedit hoc donum, &c. This is a gift of God, that exceedeth all gifts, that man should call God Father, and God call a man his sonne; this is a greater dignity then to be called an Angel, Archangel, Cherubim, Seraphim, &c. See more of this in my Righteous mans Recompense. part. 2. doct. 5. Calvin upon this verse noteth, that there is an emphasis in these words, It was said, and It shall be said, The latter sheweth, that till the Lord speak peace to his people, and say to their souls that he is their salvation, they cannot have the comfortable assurance of their Adoption, and acceptation into his fa-

God heweth men by his Prophets, and slayeth them by the words of his mouth, Hosea 6. 5. Elisba hath his sword, as well as Jehu and Hazael, 1 Kings 19. 17. Ezekiel besiegeth Jerusalem, and overthroweth it. Jeremy is set over nations and kingdoms to root out and pull down, &c. Verse 11. Then shall the children of Judah, and the children of Israel be gathered together] i. e. they shall unite into one body, and one religion, and shall all make one entire Kingdome, Ezek. 37. 22, 24. Christ once lifted up, shall draw all things to himself: and wherever this carcase is, there will the spiritual Eagles be also. Caiaphas, like another Balaam, prophesied that Jesus should die for that Nation: And not for that Nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad. This is the gathering together here mentioned: Christ shall be one amongst his people, and his name one, Zech. 14. 9. (See the Note there) they shall serve the Lord with one shoulder: It seems to be a Metaphor taken from Oxen that are yoked together, and that set their shoulders joynly to the work. Surely, the more the Gospel prevaleth, the more peace there will be. They shall be gathered together in that day: So when Christ shall be preached, and obedience yielded to his government, Esay 9. 7. then shall there be a blessed harmony of hearts: then shall they flie in flocks to the ordinances, as the doves to their windows: then shall they come to the Lords house upon horses, and in charrets, and in litters, Esay 66. 20.

and appoint themselves one head] The Lord Christ, called David their King, chap. 3. 5. A multitude gathered under this one Head, and united to him is a Church. This head is indeed appointed, and set up over the Church by God, Psal. 2. 6. Eph. 1. 22. But the Saints are said to appoint Christ their head, and indeed, to set the Crown upon his head, as Cant. 3. 11. when they chuse him and embrace him for their Sovereign, when with highest estimations, most vigorous affections, and utmost endeavours of unfained obedience, they set him up in their hearts, and serve him in their lives; giving him the preheminance, and holding all in Capite in Christ: yea, holding of the head, as the Apostles expression is, Col. 2. 19. not of Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas. That Popish Buzzard was utterly out, who said that he had found in the Dictionaries, that Cephas signifieth an Head, and that therefore Peter was head of the Church. For neither doth Cephas signifie an Head, but a Stone or Rock: nor, if it did, would that prove, what he alledgeth it for. Judah and Israel shall appoint to themselves one head, not more then one. The Church is not bellua multorum capitum: neither is there any need of a ministerial head of the Church: Indeed there is a contradiction in the very mention of it (as one well observeth) a Ministerial Head; it is absurd to speak it.

and they shall come up out of the land] i. e. They shall be gathered into the heavenly Jerusalem, saith Oecolampadius; They shall come up from their miserable life, saith Luther: from their earthly affections, saith Hierom. Rather, from Chaldea, or where ever they lie captivated and dispersed, to Jerusalem; there to joyn in the same way of worship (as once the twelve Tribes did before the schism under Jeroboam) with the Christian Church, and so go on the way to the kingdom of heaven.

for great is the day of Jezreel] i. e. of Christ (saith Hierom) who is Gods seed, and shall see his seed; and so prolong his dayes by a succession of Saints, Esay 53. 10. for whom God also will do great things in that day of his power, Psal. 100. 3. when there shall be a marvellous increase of his Church, which he shall sow with the seed of men and of beasts, revealing his arm (another etymologie of the word Jezreel) for the ingathering of his Elect. ## CHAP. II.

Verse 1. Say unto your brethren Ammi] Besides the publike preaching of this gracious promise, chap. 1. 10. There it shall be said unto them &c. charge is here given that this be the subject of their more private discourse also: and that they that fear the Lord speak often one to another, we that were not a people, are now a people: we that had not obtained mercy, have now obtained mercy.

Mercer. Jubet per Prophetam ne hac vox in ecclesia taceatur. God commands by the prophet that these sweet words Ammi Rubamah, be tossed and talked of at every friendly meeting; I will not leave you fatherlesse: In me the fatherlesse findeth mercy: I will never leave thee, I will not, not, not forsake thee: so many Notes, not, not, not.

Heb. 13. 5. there are in the Originall for more assurance, God would have such precious passages as these, to be rehearsed (even in the places of drawing water Judg. 5. 11. where the maids met to fetch water, or do other ordinary chares) for mutuall encouragement, and for the praise of his name. O the matchles mercy of our God! O the never-enough adored depth of his free grace! who would not fear thee O King of Nations! who would not be telling of thy goodnesse in the morning, and of thy faithfulness every night? Read that triumphant Psal. 145. per totum; and be you ever chaunting out, (as they of old at their daily employments) aliquid Davidicum; so building up one another with Psalms and hymns and spirituall songs. Think but on these two words in the text, and you cannot want matter. Is it nothing to be in covenant with God, and to be under mercy? O blessed are the people that have the Lord for their God, saith David. But I obtained mercy saith Paul. 1 Tim. 1. 16. and that was his μεγαλυνμα his confident boasting, where ever he came, being a constant preacher of Gods free grace: (as was likewise Austin, which makes him hardly censured by the Semipelagian papists and Arminians as an enemy to nature, because so high a friend to grace.) Neither is he forgetfull to tell his Ephesians and others to whom he writeth, that they were once dead in sins and trespasses, but now, quickened together with Christ &c. They were forreiners, but now fellow-citizens with the Saints: they were darknesse, but now light in the Lord, and should therefore walk as children of light, and talk of his praises, who had drawn them out of dreadfull darknesse, into marvelous light. Come, saith David, and I will tell you what God hath done for my soul. The Lord hath done great things for us, saith the Church, whereat we are glad. He which is mighty hath done to me great things: and holy is his name, saith the blessed Virgin. Say ye unto your brethren Ammi, and to your sisters Rubamah. Say it, say it, to brethren and to sisters, upon every opportunity, and with the utmost importunity, that it may take impression upon their spirits, and not be as a seale set upon the water, nor as raine falling upon a rock that leaves no signe behind it. The Grecians being delivered out of servitude by Flamininus the Roman General, rang out Soter, Soter, that is Saviour, Saviour, with such a courage, that the very birds of the ayre, astonished thereat, fell to the earth. The people of Israel gave such a loud shout at the return of the Ark, that the earth rang againe. A drowning man being pulled out of the water by Alphonfus King of Arragon, and rescued from so great a death, cryed out (as soon as he came again to himself) by way of thankfulness Arragon, Arragon. let us cry as loud Ammi, Rubamah, ki- therto God hath helped us, who were lately (with those Israelites in the wilderness) talking of our graves. Say therefore with the Psalmist, Because thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, my feet from falling, I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living &c.

Verse 2. Plead with your mother, plead] Here of right begins the second chapter (the former verse being not so fitly separated from the former chapter) and it is nothing else but a commentary upon the first, as Pareus well noteth. For the Prophet here proceedeth in accusing the people of disloyalty and ingratitude: whereupon he denounceth a divorce and punishment: and then foretelleth their repentance and return into favour with God under the kingdom of the Messiah. Now the end wherefore both the accusation and the promise is here reiterated, is not to much to confirm what had been before affirmed as to set forth the means whereby this this off-cast people was to be at length reduced unto the Church: viz. Partly by externall meanes (as sharp Sermons and sore afflictions) and partly by the internall grace of the Spirit of God, and good affiance of his love sealed up to them, by sundry spirituall and temporall favours conferred upon them; as so many love-tokens. Come we now to the words of this verse; where Oecolampadius begins the chapter: Plead with your mother, plead ] It is verbum forense, saith Mercer. An expression borrowed from pleaders at the bar. q.d. Be in good earnest with her, rebuke her roundly and openly, according to the nature of her offence: that she may be found in the faith, and ashamed of her perfidiousness. What though she be your mother, and in that respect to be honoured by you, yet she is a perverse rebellious woman, as Saul once said of his son Jonathans mother (how truly I enquire not: malice little regards truth, so it may gall or kill) and therefore to be barely and boldly told her own. Besides, we cannot better shew our respect to Parents, then by seeking their souls health: and by dealing fairly but freely with them therein. Not as Walter Muges (sometimes Arch-deacon of Oxford) did by his mother Church of Rome: For relating the grosse simony of the Pope in confirming the election of Reginald ballard son of Jocelin Bishop of Sarum into the sea of Bath, he thus concludes his narration, Sit tamen Domina materq; nostra Roma baculus in aqua fractus: & absit credere quæ vidimus: yet let our Lady, and mother Rome be as a stick put into the water, which seems to be broken, but is not so: and far be it from us, to beleave our own eyes against her. Was this charity? or stupidity rather? Charity may be ingenuous, but not servile and blockish. It is not love but hatred (if Moses may judge) to suffer sin in a dearest friend to passe uncontroulled. Good Asha deposed his own mother for her idolatry: and our Edward the sixth would not be drawn by any perswasion of friends or fear of enemies, to indulge his sister, the Lady Mary, to have Masse said in her house. The truth is, those Ammi's and Rubamah's that have found mercy from God, they have their hearts so fired up thereby with a holy zeal for him, that they cannot endure to see him dishonoured, but must appear and plead for him against any in the world. Again, as any one is more assured of his own salvation by Christ, the more he thirsteth after the salvation of others; as we see evidently in Saint Paul that vessel of mercy. I am perswaded, saith He, or I am sure, that neither life nor death, &c. shall ever separate me from Gods love in Christ. And what followes in the very next word; but this, I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the holy Ghost; That I have great heaviness and continuall sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ, for my brethren my kinsmen according to the flesh, who are Israelites, &c. And how effectually and convincingly he pleadeth with them to draw them to Christ and hold them close to him, that golden Epistle to the Hebrewes will well witness to the worlds end.

fifth, the like might be said of Aeneas Sylvius Canon of Trent; afterwards Pope Pius the second) and for a price too, is notoriously known to the Christian world. Stratagem nunc est Pontificum ditare multos ut pij esse desinant, saith a good Author. It is one of the Popes Stratagems to enrich men that he may oblige them to himself: and bring them into his own vassallage. In divers towns of Germany (as at Ausburgh, &c.) there was a known allowance by the year for such Lutherans as would become Papists. Thus this whore of Rome imitateth Her in the text: of whom it is elsewhere complained, Ezek. 16. 33. They give gifts to all whores (and so buy repentance at too dear a rate) but thou givest thy gifts to all thy lovers, and hirest them that they may come unto thee on every side for thy whoredom: Yea thou hast plaid the harlot with them, and yet couldst not be satisfied, vers. 28. It was but time therefore that God should cast her off, as now no wife of his but an adulteresse of the Devil, as she shewed her self notably in the Trent-Conventicle: where with a whores forehead that refused to be ashamed she not onely established by a Law their abominable Idolatry, but also set forth that Heathenish decree, whereby she equalleth (at least) the Apocrypha to the holy Canon, the Vulgar puddle to the Hebrew and Greek fountains, unwritten verities and traditions to the sacred Scriptures: and further addeth, that the holy Ghost himself is not to be hearkened unto, speak he never so plainly and expressly, nisi accedat meretricis purpurata effrons interpretatio, unlesse she may have the interpreting of his meaning, according to her way. O monituous impudency, deserving a divorce: True it is that God hateth putting away, Mal. 2. 16. and Isa. 50. 1. he tells these Jewes, that he had not given their mother a bill of divorcement, ut solent morosi et crudeles mariti as cruell and froward husbands use to do, for every light offence. But what he had done this way, he was meereyly compell'd to it; as not able to wink any longer at their flagitious practises: Hear his own words. Thus saith the Lord, where is the bill of your mothers divorcement whom I have put away? or which of my creditours is to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities you sold your selves; and for your transgressions is your mother put away. And yet not so far put away neither, but that if she repent, she may be received again: and that's no small mercy. See Jer. 3. 1. They say, If a man put away his wife, and she go from him and become another mans, shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted? but thou hast plaid the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the Lord. Lo, God is above Law; and his mercy is matchless: he will do that for his people that none else in like case would ever be drawn to do, Mic. 7. 10. Who is a God like unto thee? saith the Prophet, by way of admiration. David never came near his concubines more after that Abisalom had gone in to them, and Achitophel judged that act would be such an injury, as David would never put up: and therefore gave that pernicious counsell. But Gods thoughts are not as mans thoughts, neither are our ways his ways, &c. Of mercy, and multiplied-pardons. But as the heavens are higher then the earth, so are his ways higher then our ways, and his thoughts then our thoughts. We are not to mature things according to our own modell; and to have as low thoughts of God and his goodness as those Miscreants once had of his power, when they demanded, Can God prepare a table for us in the wilderness? Can he give us water out of the Rock? Surely a Finite creature cannot beleeve the infinite attributes of God throughly, without supernaturall grace: which therefore must be implored, and every of us excited not to cast away our confidence which hath so great recompense, so great encouragement: but to say to our mother, and each to other, put away your whoredoms. &c. Cast away all your transgressions, &c. Ye have done all this wickednesse (saith Samuel to the revolted People of his time) but what of that? yet turn not aside from following the Lord: for that were to adde rebellion to sin, as Herod to all his other hateful practises added that of beheading the Baptist. Do not therefore turn aside from following the Lord, but go home again to him, and he will speak peace. For the Lord will not forsake his people for his great Names sake: sith it hath pleased the Lord once to make you his people. He chose you for his love: and now loves you for his choice; yea he cries after you, as once, Return you backsliding children, and I will heal your backsliding. O that you would reciprocate and say, Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the Lord our God. Jer. 3. 22.

Let her therefore put away her whoredoms out of her sight ] Not out of my sight, (as

(as à Lapide readeth it, neither according to the Original, nor yet his own vulgar Translation) but out of her sight, or from her face, and her adulteries from between her breasts. Sed quid hoc sibi vult? saith Calvin here. But what may be the meaning of this. It surely seemeth harsh to say, that women play the whores, either with their faces, or with their breasts: And yet it is not unknown to the Learned what Archifilans the Philosopher said to a young wanton, that cast lustfull looks, and lascivious glances upon others; Nil interest quibus membris cinadifitus, posterioribus an prioribus: You may be naughty packs more wayes then one And Plutarch tells of a certain Oratour, that said of an impudent fellow; Quod in oculis haberet non rogēs sed nepes, that he had in his eyes not Pupils, but Punks. And S. Peter saith of the Sectaries of his time, that they had eyes full of the adulteresse, (so runs the Originall) and that could not cease to sinne, 2 Pet. 2. 14. It is evident enough (saith Calvin) that the Prophet in this Text alludeth to the manner of harlots, painting their faces, decking, or laying out their breasts to allure lovers. Filthy dressing and naked breasts, (saith another Divine) this is whoredom between the breasts. A third calleth naked breasts and wrists, abhorred filth. Hierom saith, If a man or woman adorn, or carry themselves so, as to provoke others to lust after them, though no evil follow upon it, yet the parties shall suffer eternal damnation; because they offered poyson to others, though none would drink it. In Scripture, women taxed for this, were notorious wicked persons, and usually whores: as Tamar, Jezebel, those Damozels, Esay 3. Dives, Luke 16. Lupa Romana, Rev. 1. 73. Our Henry the sixth, when a Mask of women were presented unto him, whereof some of them shewed their naked breasts, he left the presence, crying, Fie, fie, Ladies, in sooth ye are to blame, to bare those parts to the eyes of man, that nature appointed modestly to conceal. Frederick the Emperour, seeing some countrey wenches, neer Florence, in dancing to shew their naked legs, Eamus, said he, meretricum hic ludus est non virginum, Let us go hence, for this is not maids play, but whores rather. That Yonker in the Proverbs, was met by a woman with the attire of an harlot, and subtil of heart, or trussed up about the breasts, with her upper parts naked, like a bedlam. So Levi Ben Gersom, she met him with her naked breasts, yea with something else naked, which modesty forbids to name, as some construe that Text, Prov. 7. 10. So she caught him and kissed him, verse. 13, with strange impudency: and no question but having caught him, her lust grew more flagrant: as by unclean touches of the face and breasts, men are more enkindled. Hence that of our Saviour in expounding the seventh Commandement, Matth. 5. 30. If thy right hand offend thee, i.e. by dalliance; and wanton touches, cut it off, &c. Hippocrates observeth, that there are vena & via ab utero ad mamillas, veins and passages that go from the beily to the breasts; and that's the reason that he gives of the temptation to lust, that is in the breasts. Keep thy self pure, saith saint Paul to his sonne Timothy. And again, The younger women exhort with purity, or chastity. It is not safe to pry into the beauty of young women. Ut vidi ut perij, &c. The eyes are those windows of wickednesse, and loop-holes of lust. Let her therefore put away her whoredoms out of her sight. And let not the strange woman take thee with her eye-lids, saith Solomon. For prevention hereof, in Chrysostoms time, the women were disjoyned from the men in the Church, by a wooden wall. And Tertullian saith to the Christian women, Judicabunt vos Arabia femina Ethnice, &c. The Heathen women of Arabia shall judge you: for they do not onely cover their faces but their heads too; and rather then they will have any part appear naked, they will let the light but into one eye. In Barbary, they say, it is death for any man to see one of the Xeriffes concubines; and for them too, if when they see a man (though but thorow a casement) that do not suddenly screek out. Millions of people have died of the wound in the eye. Aholah and Abolibah, that is, Israel and Judah, no sooner saw the Assyrians, (those desirable young men) though but portrayed upon the wall, but they doted upon those Paramours, and received them into the bed of love, Ezek. 23. 16, 17. Et divaricavit tibias suas, Ezek. 16. 25. and multiplied their whoredoms. The very sight of the Altar at Damascus, set Abaz agog to have one of the same fashion, 2 King. 16. And Jeroboam, coming out of Egypt, where the Ox was worshipped, brought home two Calves with him; and set them up at Dan and Bethel. The Nicodemites and Familists hold it no sin, to be present at Idoll-service, and alledge a Text for it out of Apocryphall

 Mr. Borroughs. Barns. But a good Interpreter well observeth, that, that which is intended specially here, in these words, Let her put away her whoredoms out of her sight, and her adulteries, &c. is, that they should not be content meely with change of their hearts, to say, Well, we will acknowledge the Lord to be the true God, and our hearts shall wholly trust in him; but for these externall things, what great matter is in them?
 Oh no, they must abstain from all appearance of evil, from the badges of Idolatry, &c. Thus he. Those badges, or ensignes of Idolatry they usually carried between their breasts, (saith another Authour) to testifie that the Idoll had their hearts; whereas Christ should have been there, Cant. 1. 13. Who to shew his dear love to his Church, appeared to John girt about the paps with a golden girdle, Rev. 1. 13.
 See the Note there, Cor sedes amoris. The heart is the seat of the affections. Hence God calleth for it; My sonne give me thine heart: and the devil strives for it, Luk. 22. 3. A.T. 5. 3. Once he strove about a dead mans body, Jude ver. 9. but his designe therein, was to have set up an idoll for himself in the hearts of the living.
 His eldest son and successour the Pope, useth the same policie. It was a watchword in Gregory the thirteenths time, in Queen Elizabeths dayes, My son, give me
thy heart: Dissemble, go to Church, be a Papist in heart, and then do what ye will: Take the Oath of Allegiance, Supremacy, any thing that shall be put to you, I will absolve you. Do but carry a Crucifix between your breasts (that's the place where they wear such mawmets) and kisse it when you have sworn (as Lewes the eleventh of France used to do) and it shall suffice. An oath upon the conscience of a Popish Idolater is like a collar upon a Monkeys neck; that he will slip on for his Masters pleasure, and slip off again for his own. Pascenius scoffes King James for the invention of the Oath of Allegiance. Equivocation the Jesuites have invented, or revived rather, ad consolationem afflictorum Catholicorum, for the comfort of afflicted Catholikes, as Garnet and Blackwell professe. So impudent is Idolatry, such frontlesse whoredoms appear in their very faces, they openly prostitute themselves; Imo volunt extare signa fœditatis suæ, saith Calvin, here they hang out their filthy superstitions in the sight of the Sun, as Sodom: they set them upon the cliffe of the rock, as Jerusalem, Ezek. 24. 7, 8. ut similes sint publicis scortis, like common whores that sollicit lovers, and send to them, as she,
Ezek. 22. It was a sad complaint God made Chap. 7. 1. of this Prophecie. When
I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, then it broke forth as the leprosie in their foreheads: Their fornications were not onely covert; but overt. Their whoredomes in the face, were their worshipping the two golden Calves and Baalim (saith Pareus) their adulteries between their breasts, were their trust in Idols, in the arm of flesh, in confederacies, &c. when they would seem neverthelesse to trust in God alone: As now the Papists professe to do, and have thereto coyned diverse nice distinctions of worship, per se, & per accidens, proprie, & improprie, and a hundred the like evasions. But there is no hiding of their Asses ears by these subtilties. Doctor Reynolds in his Books de Idolatria Romana hath (among others) proved them rank Idolaters. Wesson writes, that his head ached in reading that Book; but they all yeeld it unanswerable: and yet they repent not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brasse, and stones, and of wood, which neither can see. nor hear, nor walk, Revel. 9. 20. But, as those that make them, are like unto them, so are all those that trust in them, stockish, and stupid; given up to the efficacy of error, to beleieve a lie, yea and that against common sense, Isaiah 44. 17. which is no small stumbling-block, to both Jews and Mahometans.

Verse 3. Lest I strip her naked.] Dens ideo minatur ut non puniat. God therefore threatneth, that he may not proceed to punish. Here he doth not so much direct as threaten, as conditionally terrifie, from the pernicious effect, or sad issue of their adulteries, a full and finall desolation, after an utter deprivation of Gods gifts and graces, shadowed under a fourfold Metaphor. 1. Of stripping her of all her borrowed beauty, those jewels, and that comeliness that he had put upon her.
 2. Of reducing her to her first forlorn condition wherein he found her, Ezek. 16. viz. in her blood, in her blood, in her blood, as it is there said and set out for greater

of cruel enemies) or, as in the wilderness (so some read it, by understanding the participle in) that is, as in the wilderness of Arabia, where they were put to great straits when they came out of Egypt. The very first handsel God gave them there, was bitterness and thirst. It was by Marah that they came to Elim, &c. 4. Of afflicting and punishing her with the most miserable and unsufferable kinde of death; I will slay her with thirst, which is worse then to be slain with hunger. All which is foretold, with some hope nevertheless of grace and forgiveness, if she return and seek the Lord; as by the word lest is secretly given to understand: Lest I strip her naked,] As a jealous husband snatcheth away with indignation the clothes and ornaments that he had bestowed upon his adulterous wife. The Lord threatneth the wanton women of Zion, to make naked their secret parts, Esay 3:17. so that their shame should be seen, Esay 47:3. even all their nakedness, Ezek. 16:37. to discover their skirts upon their face, as Nahum. 3:5. Thus the great whore of Babylon is threatned with nakedness, Revel. 17:16. And this we see already performed upon her in part, as Mr. Philpot barely told Chadsey in that vehement expression of his, Afore God, you are bare-breast in all your religion: he uttereth it somewhat more grossely. There was a base custome in Rome, that when any woman was taken in adultery, they compelled her (for a punishment) openly and beastly to play the harlot: ringing a bell whiles the deed was doing, that all the neighbours might be made aware. This the good Emperour Theodosius took away, and made better Lawes for the punishment of adultery. God, when he threatneth to strip the Jewish Synagogue naked, meaneth (saith Mercer) that he will take away ornamenta regni & sacerdotii those ornaments of the Kingdome, and of the Priesthood, leave them as, 2 Chron. 15:3. without the true God, and without a teaching Priest, and without Law, sine lege, sine rege, sine fide, as the Brasilians are said to be. The children of Israel (saith our Prophet, Chap. 3:4. where he interprets this Text) shall abide many dayes without a King, and without Princes, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an Ephod, and without Teraphim: that is, without any forme of civil Government, and without any exercise of true (yea or of false) religion. What a comfort was it to good David, in his banishment, and after the slaughter of the Priests by Saul (even fourscore and five persons, that did wear a linnen Ephod, 1 Sam. 22:18.) that Abiathar the son of Abimelech, came down to him to Keilah, with an Ephod in his hand, and that thereby he could enquire of God what to do, as he did, 1 Sam. 30:7? And what a grief and misery to Saul, that God had forsaken him in those visible pledges of his favour, and would not be found of him? Hence he lay all open and naked to his enemies; who now might do what they would to him, and none to hinder them. This also was the case and condition of the people, when Aaron (by making the golden Calf at their command) had made the people naked unto their shame amongst their enemies, Exod. 32:25. that is, destitute of Gods powerfull protection, and deprived of their former priviledges. A people, or a person may sin away their happinesse; and forfeit the favours they formerly enjoyed. An hypocrite may lose his gifts, and common graces; as that idle and evil servant did his talent; his light may be put out in obscure darknesse. See Ezech. 43:11, 17. with the Note.

and set her as in the day that she was born,] Not onely nudam tanquam ex matre, Naked as ever she was born, (The Albigenses in France, those old Protestants, were turned out stark-naked, both men and women, at the taking of Carcasson, by the command of the Popish Bishop: and so were thousands of good Christians by the bloody Rebels in Ireland now alate) but as she was born of the Amorite, and Hittite; her navel was not cut, her birth-blot was not washed in water, nay shee was cast out into the open field, and no eye pitied her. (as the Princeesse did Moses, and as the shepherdesse did Romulus and Remus) See all this and more, most elegantly set out, Ezek. 16. together with what high honour, and sumptuous ornaments God did put upon her, verse 11, 12. What this people were in the day of their nativity, Ioshuah telleth them in part, Chap. 24:2. Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor, and served other gods: And I took your father Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, as a brand out of that fire, &c. and gave him Isaac. - Isaac Jacob, who, together with his children, went down into Egypt, where they fell to the worshipping of Idols, Ezek. 16. 26. And although they were there, held under miserable servitude, yet they continued exceeding wicked and abominable. The fire of their afflictions seemed to harden their hearts, as much as the fire of the furnace did the bricks they made. Hence, as they hardened their hearts, God hardened his hand, and had hastened their destruction, had it not been that he had feared the wrath of the enemy: lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and lest they should say, our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this. The Psalmist was sensible of all this & therefore saith, *Our fathers understood not thy wonders in Egypt, they remembered not the multitude of thy mercies, but provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea. Nevertheless he saved them for his Names sake &c. And what was it else, but the respect to his own great Name, and the remembrance of his holy covenant that moved the Lord to premonish this perverse people of their present danger: and not to suffer his whole wrath to arise against them, and to rush in upon them without a Ne forte, lest I set her as in the day &c. The esopha thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God with intreaties of peace. lest your house be left unto you desolate. Luc. 21. least wrath be sent upon you, and that without remedy. And make her as a wilderness] after that I have brought her out of a wilderness, and set her in a land that floweth with milk and honey. God can quickly curse our blessings, and destroy us after that he hath done us good. See this excellency set forth Isay 5. 5. and Jer. 17. 5. 6. Psal. 107. 34. Zech. 7. 14. with the Note there, and take heed lest living in Gods good land, but not by Gods good lawes, we forfeit all into his hand, and he take the forfeiture. For he had rather that wild beasts should devour the good of a land, yea, that Satyres and devils should dance there: then that wicked and stubborn sinners should enjoy it. If Philip of Spain could say he had rather have no subjects, then Lutheran subjects: And if the Councell of Tholouse (out of a like blind zeale for propagating Popery) did decree that the very house should be pulled down in qua fuerit inventus hereticus wherein an heretick (as they then called Gods true servants) was found: How much more shall the King of heaven, the righteous judge, root out and pluck up a rabble of rebels that refuse to be ruled by him. Idolatry is a Land-desolating sin, and brings in the devouring sword Judg. 5. 8.*

And slay them with thirst*] Surgit hic oratio, surgit afflictio; To be flaine with thirst is a grievous judgment. Lysimachus parted with his kingdom, for a draught of water in a dry land: and made himself of a great King a miserable Captive to the King of Getes; Darius flying from his enemies, was glad to drink of a dirty puddle, that had carrion lying in it: professing that it was the sweetest draught that ever he drank in his life. Dives would have given all that ever he was worth for a drop of cold water. The members, infected for want of due moisture, seek to the veines for relief, the veines to the liver, the liver to the Entrails, the Entrails to the ventricles, the ventricles to the orifice. But these being not able to impart what they cannot receive, One he cries, Father Abraham. But hospitable Abraham hath it not to him: fire and brimstone, storme and tempest, is now the portion of his cup, extreame thirst is a piece of Hells pains, and one of the greatest of earths miseries. A dear servant of God in Queen Marias dayes, (kept and pined in prison) would faine have drunk his own water: but for want of nourishment could make none. Inward refreshing he had, even those divine consolations of the martyrs: he drank of the river of Gods pleasures, Psal. 26. 8. which cast him into a sweet sleep: at which time one clad all in white seemed to stand before him and to say, Samuel, Samuel, be of good cheer, for after this day thou shalt never be hungry or thirstie more: for soon after this he was buried: and from that time till he should suffer, he felt neither hunger nor thirst (as himself declared) though he were kept by the cruel B. of Norwich with 2. or 3. morsels of bread every day, and the spoonfulls onely of water. Mercer expounds this text of spirituall life, the same that was foretold by Amos. Ideo; subdit vers. 4. saith Occolampadius, and therefore God addeth in the next verse, that he will not have mercy upon her children, but will kill them with death; hurl them to hell as he threatneth to do Jesabels children, Rev. 2. 23. Oh when the poor soul shall be in a wilderness in a dry and thirsty land, scorched ed and parched with the sense of sin and feare of wrath ; when the terrours of God * fall thick upon it, even the invenomed arrowes of the Almighty : Besides the buffetings of Satan, that haile shot, hell-shot of fiery darts, Eph. 6. so called for the dolour and distemper they work, (in allusion to the poisoned darts used in war by the Scythians and other nations, the venomous heat whereof is like a fire in the flesh) when conscience I say shall by this means lie burning and boyling, what would it not gieve for a cup of consolation, yea for any consolation in Christ as the Apostle hath it, for any Beer-labai-roi, to fill the bottle at, yea for any En-haccore, any cleft in a jaw-bone to revive a thirsty Sampson, that must else be slaine with thirst. David never so desired after the water of the well of Beshlehem, as he did after God in a dry and thirsty land, where no water was, Psal. 63. 1. As the hunted Hart (the Hind saith the Septuagint) panteth after the water-brooke, so panteth or brayeth my soul after thee. My soul thirsteth for God &c. Oh, when shall I come and appear before God. The tears have been my meat &c. Hunters say the Hart sheds tears (or something like) when hotly pursued, and cannot escape. He is a beast thirsty by nature, and whose thirst is much increased when he is hunted, The female especially, in whom the passions are stronger then in males. Christ (that Aicleth Shachar, that is, the morning-Hart or stagge, as he seemeth to be stiled Psal. 22. 1. in the title, felt his soul heave to the death in his bitter agony ; and tasted to deep of that dreadfull cup, that in a cold winter night he swat great clods of blood, which, through cloths and all, fell down to the ground. And when this lamb of God was even a roasting in the fire of his fathers wrath, he cryed out, I thirst. At which time men gave him cold comfort, even vineger to drink : but God his Father most sweetly supported him : so that he might better say then David, In the multitude of my perplexed thoughts within me, thy comforts have refreshed my soul. But what shall those poore creatures do that are strangers to the promises, and have no water of the well of life to relieve them, when Gods wrath is as a fire in their bones, and falleth upon their flesh like molten-lead or running-bell-mettle. Then they that have suckt in sin as an Ox sucks in water, shall suck the gall of asps and venom of vipers, and have none to pitty them. Francis Spira felt this spirituall thirst &c.

Verse 4. And I will not have mercy upon her children ] Lo here another, And to those foure afore ; and more dreadfull then the rest : Like as that in the 16. of Jeremy vers. 13. where I will not shew you favour, was worse to them then their captivity in a strange countrey. Say that God do cast off his people, yet if he say, they shall be as if I had not cast them off, and will hear them Zech. 10. 6. the affliction is nothing so great, as when he sends an evill, an onely evill without mixture of mercy, as here. Oh, this pure wrath, this judgment without mercy must needs be very heavy : when it is once grown to hatred, there is little hope. Hos. 9. 15. All their wickednesse is in Gilgal, for there I hated them. God is not of himself μισοειδωμενος a hater of mankind, but the contrary, Titus 3. 4. But such is the venomous nature of sin, and so contrary it is to Gods both holy nature and just law, that he cannot but hate it in whomsoever he finds it : yet with this difference, that he pitties it rather in his Saints, & hates it in his enemies : as we hate poyson in a toad, but we pitty it in a man : because in the one it is their nature, in the other, their disease. And as revenge is the next effect of hatred, wicked men may expect no better dealing from God, then a man would afford to his stubborn enemy. Pharaoh had plague upon plague : neither did the Lord leave him, till he had dasht the breath out of his body : so true is that of the Psalmist, With the froward thou wilt wrestle, and that of Solomon, The back slider in heart shall be filled with his own wayes. He hath made a match with mischief, he shall have his belly-full of it. He would needs have his own way, and had it, (for I would have purged him, but he would not be purged ) Now I will have my way another while : for thou shalt not be purged from thy filthinesse any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee, Ezek. 24. 13. So our Saviour to those refractory Jewes in the Gospell. I would have gathered thee as the hen gathereth her chickens, I would but thou wouldst not : therefore they shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee. And I will not have mercy upon her children ] Lo, God is so incensed by a generall defection, that he will make havock and destroy even the mother with the children,

( which was Jacobs great fear, Gen. 32. 11. ) yea he will dash the mother in pieces upon the children as Shalman did at Betharbel Hof. 10. 14 he will put young and old into the same bag together, as fowlers deal by birds, which yet was forbidden by a law, Deut. 22. 6. his eyes shall not spare children, as Isai. 13. 19. And why? For they are the children of whoredoms ] They are mali ex malis, as Hierom interprets it: they love and live in the adulteries of their mother: they take after her, as the birth usually followeth the belly, and as in a Syllogisme, the conclusion followes the weaker proposition. Those Jewes in the Gospel boldly boasted to our Saviour that they were not the children of fornication, for they had Abraham to their father Job. 6. 33. nay, God to their father vers. 41. But he as boldly telleth them, that they are a bastardly brood, yea a serpentine seed; and that they were of their father the devil, vers. 44. And in another place, as Serpents, saith He, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell. If mercy interpose not, as the cold grave must one day hold your bodies, so hot hell your souls. But I will have no mercy upon her children: for they are the children of fornications ] i.e. they are not onely misbegotten and illegitimate, ( which though no fault of theirs, yet is their reproach, as hath been said in the Notes on the former chapter ) but they are children of fornications in an active sense too; they have learned of their mother to fornicate: they are as good at resisting the holy Ghost, as ever their Fathers were, Act. 7. 51. they fill up the measure of their fathers sins, that wrath may come upon them to the utmost. Children as they derive from their parents a cursed birth-blot which comes by propagation; so they are very apt to fall into their vices by imitation: and then they rue both their own and their parents iniquities.

Verse 5. For their mother hath plaid the harlot ] Being a wife of whoredoms chap. 1. 2. ( see the Note there, ) therefore I will not have mercy upon her children, but will root out all her increase, Job. 31. 12. Either she shall commit whoredom, and not increase, Hof. 4. 10. Or if she do, it is for mischief: she shall bring forth children to the murderer: or at least, she shall bequeath them a fearful legacy of sin and punishment, worse then that leprosie that Gebezi left to his posterity, or that Joab left to his, 2 Sam. 3. 29. lameness and gonorrhoea, &c. It is a dangerous thing to keep up the succession of a sin in the world, and to propagate guilt from one generation to another: it is a great provocation. When the wickednesse of such is ripe in the field ( and they have filled up the measure of their fathers sins ) God will not let it shed to grow again: but cuts it up by a just and seasonable vengeance. Let parents therefore break off their sins and get into Gods favour: if for nothing else, yet for their poor childrens sake: labouring to mend that by Education which they have marred by propagation and evil example. And let children of wicked parents ( as they tender their own eternall good ) take Gods counsell, Ezek 20. vers. 18. 30. Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations? Oh, walk ye not after the statutes of your fathers: neither observe their judgements, nor defile your selves with their idols. True it is, men are wonderful apt to dote upon their fathers doings, and are hardly drawn off from their vain conversation by received tradition from their ancestors 1 Pet. 1. 18. A bove majori discit arare minor. Prescription is held Authoritie sufficient. Me ex ea opinione quam à majoribus accepi de cultu deorum nullius unquam movebit oratio, saith Tully, No man shall ever dissuade me from that way of divice worship that my forefathers lived and died in. It is reported of a certain Monarch of Morocco, that having read Saint Pauls Epistles he liked them so well, that he professed that were he then to chuse his Religion, he would, before any other, embrace Christianity. But every one ought, said he, to die in his own Religion: and the leaving of the faith wherein he was born was the onely thing that he disliked in that Apostle. Thus He. Sed toto erravit calo, Antiquity must have no more Authority then what it can maintain, ἡ ποὺ ἀρχαία ἐστὶν Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστός, Mine Antiquity ( said Ignatius ) is Christ Jesus, who said not to the young man, Do as thy forefathers, but Follow thou me. She that conceived them hath done shamefully ] She hath utterly shamed her self and all her friends; husband, children, all. The woman is or should be the glory of the man. Solomons good hufwife was she, Prov. 31. 28. 29. Her children rise up and call her blessed: her husband also, and he praiseth her, saying, Many daughters have done virtuously: but thou excellest them all. Alphonfus King of Arragon was once resolved solved never to commend his wife, lest he should be accounted immodest, or uxorious : but afterwards he changed his mind, and was so taken with his wives virtues and constancy, that he resolved to praise her quocumq; in trivio, cuiq; obvio, sine modo, et modestia in all places and companies, &c. So did Budaw, Pareus, and others. But a wicked wife, (an harlot especially) puts her husband to the blush and is a great heart-break, as Livia was to Augustus (Eudemus was both her Physician and her Stallion) his children also proved start naught: which made him wish that either he had lived a Batchelour, or died childlesse. Righteousness exalteth a nation : but sin is a shame to any people. It is the snuff that dimmeth their candlestick, the leaven that sowreth their Passeeover, the reproach that rendreth them a proverb, and a by-word, an astonishment and an hissing, a taunt and a talk to other countries. Such was Israels Apostasie & Idolatry, their subjecting Religion to carnal policy in setting up the two calves, and Baalim: when Ephraim spake there was trembling, and then he exalted himself in Israel : but when he offended in Baal, he died Hof. 13. 1. Whilst he kept close to God, who but Ephraim. None durst quack, but all quaked at the name of Ephraim: he was on high, and much honoured. But when he declined to Idolatry, he became contemptible : and every paltry adversary cast dirt in his face, and crowed over him. So true is that of Solomon, The wife shall inherit glory : but shame shall be the promotion of fools : What a victorious Prince was Henry the fourth of France, till he (for politike respects) turned Papist ? Till then he was Bonus Orbi : but after that, Orbus Boni, as the wits of the time played upon his name Borbonius, by way of Anagram. Once he was (before his revolt) perswaded by Du-Plessy to do publike penance for having abused the daughter of a certain Gentleman in Rochel, by whom he had a son. Hereunto he was drawn with some difficulty, being read, to fight a battle: and this was no disgrace to him: But when, by compliance at least, he became an Idolater for lucre of a crown, and love of life, he became a vile person, as Antiochus is called, Dan. 11. 21. and was worthily lashed with rods by the Pope, in the person of his Embassadors ; and butchered by the instigation of those Jesuites whom he basely recalled into France, whence they had been banished, and admitted them into his bosom ; making Father Cotton his Confessour et sic probrose gessit, et rem confusione dignam admisit, as here. He both shamed and undid himself. For she hath said, I will go after my lovers ] Amasios meos, My sweet-hearts, those that have drawn away my heart from my husband. But if that persecutour could say to the Martyr. What (a devil) made thee to meddle with the Scriptures ? how much better might it be said to the Synagogue, (and so to all Apostates) What (a devill) meant you to go a whoring from such an husband (who is torus, torus desiderabilis, altogether lovely, even the chief of ten thousand,) after dumb idols and false Prophets who are their brokers (proxeneta et proci) and spokesmen ? Athenaus brings in Plato bewailing himself and his own condition, that he was taken so much with a filthy whore. Adultery is filthinesse in the abstract : so is also idolatry : and therefore idols are called by a word that signifieth the very excrements that come out of a man ; a tearm too good for those dunghill-deities, those abominable idolatries, as Saint Peter expresseth it. Mention is made in histories of a certain heathen people that punish adultery with death : and with such a death as is suitable to the sin. For they thrust the adulterers or adulteresses head into the paunch of a beast, where lieth all the filth and garbage of it, there to be stifled to death. Sodom and Gomorrha had fire from heaven for their burning lust : and stinking brimstone for their stinking brutishnesse. They are also thrown out (as St. Jude phraseth it) for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternall fire. And in the like pickle are the Beast, and the false Prophet (those Arch-idolaters) for these both are cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone Rev. 19. 20. And worthily, sith they declared their sins as Sodom, they hid it not : And as this hufwife in the text : who said I will go after my lovers ] she did, of wickedness forethought, upon deliberation, industria, ex consilio, wilfully and of purpose, impudently and without all shame of sin, say, I will go after. This was shameles indeed: They should rather have gone after her, then she after them. Moses fitly compareth a whore to a salt-bitch that is followed after by all the dogs in a town. And am I dogs-head, said Abner to Ishboiseth, 2 Sam. 3. 8. that is, Am I so given to lust & lasciviousnes as dogs are that run after every salt-bitch? But this harlot verified that saying in Ezekiel. The contrary is in thee from other women men in thy whoredoms : whereas none followed thee to commit whoredoms, thou followest them ; and gloriest in thy so doing, as Lots daughters did in their detestable incest, naming their children Moab, that is, a birth by my father ; and Benammi, that is, begotten by one of my near kindred. These all might have held their tongues with shame enough. But such kinde of sinners are singularly impudent, Jer. 3. 3. infatuated, Hof. 4. 11. and past feeling, Ephes. 4. 19. And so are Idolaters wickedly wilfull, and irreclaimable for most part. See Jer. 44. 16, 17. & 2. 10. Esay 44. 19, 20. This should make us lift up many an humble, joyfull, and thankfull heart to God: well content if we may have offam et aquam, bread and water, and the gospel : and vowing with Jacob, that if God will give us bread to eat, and raiment to put on, then shall he be our God, and we will honour him with the best of our substance. As for other gods, whether Pagan, or Papagan, say we as that Heathen did, Contemno minutulos istos deos modo Jovem mihi propitium habeam, I care not for these petty-deities : I trust in the living God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy : All things, I say, both ad esum, et ad usum, for back and belly, ( besides better things ) which is all that carnall people care for. There be many ( too many ) that say ( and can skill of no other language ) Who will shew us any good ? who will give us bread, water, wooll, oil, &c ? they look no higher, know no heaven but plenty, hell but penury, God but their belly, whereunto they offer sacrifice with Poliphemus, and care for no more, quam ut ventri bene sit ut lateri, then that their bellies may be filled, their backs fitted. Let them have but plenty of victuals, and the Queen of heaven shall be their good Lady, Jer. 44. 17. Base spirits look onely after low things : gain and credit carry them any way. They work for their peny a day ; and are like little children, which will not say their prayers unlesse they may be promised their breakfast : Whereas a true worshipper of God soareth aloft, hath his feet at least, where other mens heads are, trades for higher commodities, cannot be put off with mean matters. When great gifts were sent to Luther, he refused them with this brave speech, Valde protestatus sum me nolle sic satiari : I deeply protested, that I would not be put off by God with these low things. The Papists offered to make him a Cardinall, if he would be quiet. He replied, No, not if I might be Pope. They sent Vergerius, the Popes Nuncio, to tempt him with preferment, and to tell him of Eneas Sylvius, who following his own opinions, with much slavery and labour, could get no further preferment then to be Canon of Trent, but being changed to the better, became Bishop, Cardinall, and finally, Pope Pius 2. The same Vergerius also minded him of Bessarion of Nice, who of a poor Collier of Trapezond, became a great renowned Cardinall, and wanted not much of being Pope. But what said Luther to all this ? Contemptus est a me Romanus et favor, et furor, I care neither for the favour nor fury of Rome. The Bramble thought it a brave businesse to raigne over the trees : not so the vine and fig-tree. We read of Pope Silvester, that he gave his soul to the devil for seven yeers enjoyment of the Popedome ; which Luther spurn'd at. One good cast of Gods loving countenance, was more to David then a confluence of all outward comforts and contentments. Thou hast put gladnesse in mine heart, saith he, more then in the time that their corn, and their wine increased, Psal. 4. 7. Their corn, and their wine he calleth it ; because it is their portion, ( poor souls ) and they are too too well apaid of it. Wealth upon any tearms is welcome to them, and those are their lovers that will keep them to it, yea though it be the devil himself: whose language also here they seem to have learned when they say, my corne and my water &c. All's their own if you will beleve them: like as the devill sayd to our Saviour, Luk. 4. 6. All this wealth is mine and to whomsoever I will, I give it. But God is the true proprietary, the owner of all: and it is his alone to say Cui volo, do illa. Dan. 4. 22. The devill is God of this world: but tis but titular onely, as a king at chesse: or at best, by usurpation onely as Abalom was a king: and as the Pope is Lord of all the kingdomes of the world, both for temporals and spirituals; to dispose of them at his pleasure. When he makes Cardinals, he useth these big-swoln words, estote confratres nostri, et principes mundi, Be you brethren to us, and princes of the world. And by such high honours, bishopricks, and benefices, he prevaieth with very many to be wholly at his devotion. One of his poore beneficiaries ingenuously confessed, that he and those of his rank preached the gospel for nothing else, nisi ut nos pascat & vestiat then to get a poore living by it. Let Saints say, Non est mortale quod opto, we breath after better things: we have the moon under our feet and are above corn, wooll, flax &c. The devill shall not stop our mouths with these palterments. Balaam may run and ride after the wages of wickednesse, and get a sword in his guts. Abab may make a match with mischief, and sell himself to do wickedly: Judas hunt after lying vanities, and hastened to his own place. But Moses was of another spirit, and refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter Heb. 11. 24. And those Worthies in the same chapter that were tempted with offers of profit and preferment, could not be won over, but resisted the devill, and he fled from them. The world was crucified to Saint Paul, and he to the world. He was of too generous a spirit: he was no malleable matter: all was but dung and dogs-meat in his account Philip. 3. 8. D. Taylor martyr was promised not onely his pardon, but great promotion; yea a Bishoprick: but he would none of it: Another D. Taylour Bishop of Lincoln, was violently thrust out of the Parliament-house in his robes, in Q. Maries raigne, and deprived. So was Hirmanius Archbishop of Colen for certain reformations, done by the ayd and advice of Martin Bucer. I dare say, (said B. Bonner to Mr. Hawkes martyr) that Cranmer would recant if he might have his living: so judging others by himself. But Latimer and Shaxton parted with their Bishopricks in King Henry the eight's time, rather then to submit to the six Articles. And John Knox refused a Bishoprick offered him by King Edward the sixth, as having aliquid commune cum Antichristo: so did Miles Coverdale in Q. Elisabeths raigne; chusing rather to continue a poore Schoolmaster. Pliny saith of Cato, that he took as much glory in those dignities and honours that he denyed, as he did in those that he enjoyed. He was wont also to say that he had rather men should question why he had no statue or monuments erected to him, then why he had: Certainly it is so with the Saints: and upon better grounds.

Verse 6. Therefore behold, I will hedg up thy way with thorns i. e. with difficulties and distresses; So God had fenced up Jobs way that he could not pass, Chap. 19. 8. he had thrown the crofs in his way, to stop him in his career. And so he had hedged the church about, that she could not get out. Lam. 3. 7. he had enclosed her wayes with hewen stone, and made her paths crooked. Vers. 9. A great mercy if well considered, though grievous to the flesh, that loveth not to be coop'd or kept within compasse. Man is fitly compared to a wild-asse colt used to the wildernesse, snuffing up the wind at her pleasure, rude and unruly, untamed, and untractable, To be kept by hedges and fences within a pasture, seemes to such no small punishment: neither count they any thing liberty but licentiousnesse: or a merry life, unlesse they may have the devil their play-fellow: But the devil plaies at no small games: capite blanditur, ventre oblectat, candâ ligat: he playes at swoop-stake, he lyes in wait for the precious life, as that harlot. Prov. 6. 26. nothing less will content him. In great wisdom therefore, and no less mercy to mens souls, doth God restrain, and bound them by afflictions, that they may not run wild as they would: nor feed upon the devils commons which would fat them indeed, but for the slaughter. This made Job prize affliction as a speciall favour, Job. 7. 18. Jerem prayeth, Corre et me O Lord, Chap 10. and Luther to like purpose, Feri Domine, feri clementer - Strike Lord, strike, it shall be a mercy. prai'd God alwayes to ſend him ſome ſickeſſe, whereby his body might be tamed, and he the better affectioned to God-ward. It is obſerved by one of our Chronicles, that Affliction ſo held in the Saxon Kings in the Danick wars, as having little out-lets or leiſure for eaſe and luxury, they were made the more pious, juſt, and carefull in their government: otherwiſe it had been impoſſible ſo to have held out
&c. Sure it is, that if God did not hedge us in (as by his hedge of protection Iſ. 5.
5. ſo) by his hedge of affliction as here, no reaſon would rule us, no cords of kindneſſe would containe us within the bounds of obedience. David himſelf before he was afflicted, I went aſtray ſaith He: But God brought him home againe by weeping croſſe. He once ſo leapt over the pale, that he broke his bones, and felt the paine of it to his dying day: he brake Gods hedge, and a Serpent bit him, Eccleſ. 10. 8. his conſcience flew in his face, the guilt whereof is compared by Solomon to the biting of a Serpent and ſting of an Adder. Prov. 23. 32. he roared ment without pittie, miſery without mercy, ſorrow without ſuccour, crying without comfort, miſchief without meaſure, torment without end and paſt imagination. The Prophet Amos likeneth incorrigible perſons to horſes running upon a rock, where firſt they break their hoofs, and then their necks, Amo. 6. 12. Another fitly compareth them to that Jeſuit in Lancashire who followed by one that found his glove with a deſire to reſtore it him, but purſued inwardly by a guilty conſcience, leapes over an hedge, plunges into a marlepit behind it unſeen, and unthought of, where in he was drowned. To prevent their deſerved deſtruction (if it may be)

God telleth them here that he will not only hedg them in, but wall up their way,
And make a wall] macerabo maceriam, I will wall a wall, and immure her: as jealous husbands do their wives whom they miſtruſt: And this God ſpeaks by an Apoſtrophe to others, as ſoathing the thought that ever he ſhould be put to it, I will make a wall that ſhe ſhall not find her paths] q. d. He hamper her and handle her as ſhe was never handled. By a like paſſionate Apoſtrophe Gen. 49. 4. old Jacob, ſpeaking of Rubens inceſt, Thou wenteſt up to thy fathers bed: then deſiledſt thou it:
moved with the odiouſneſſe of the fact, he breaks off his ſpeech to Reuben, and turning him to the reſt, he addeth, He went up to my couch. q. d. Out upon it, I am the worſe to think of it. Maginus tels us, that in Lituania the men are ſuch wittals, that they ſuffer their wives to have their ſtallions whom they call Cennubij adjutores, and prize them far above all their acquaintance. And Balthazar Exne-rus telleth us of a certaine Duke of Oppania, who marrying a Lituanian Lady, and going forth to meet her, when ſhe came firſt to him: he found in her company one of that rank, a luſty young fellow; whom when he underſtood what he was, and wherefore he came, voluit laniandum canibus obicere, he was once in minde to make dogs-meat of him. But underſtanding that it was the cuſtome of that coun-trei, he ſent him home againe without further hurt. The Lord our God is a jealous God: and be the Gods of the Heathen good fellows, ſaith One, yet he will not endure corrivalls: nor ſhare his glory with another. *Why trimmeſt thou thy delighting to be abroad altogether, to see, and to be seen, that she may draw in the silly-simple. See Prov. 7. 11, 12. with the Note. God is able to strike such people with such blindness as he did the wicked Sodomites at Lots door, subito scotomate, saith Junius, such as tormented their eyes, as if they had been prickt with thorns, as the Hebrew word there signifieth, Gen. 19. 11. See Psal. 75. 6. Isai. 29. 19. & 19. 11, 12, 13. The fool knoweth not how to go to the city, Ecclef. 10. 15. they are so blinded and baffled many times in their own wayes. God loves to make fools of them.

Verse 7. And she shall follow after her lovers, ] Follow them hot-foot, pursue them eagerly and earnestly, as the hunter doth his game, or the pursivant, the party to be arrested: So little was she bettered by her former sufferings: Thus the blinde Sodomites continue groping still for the door, as if they were ambitious of destruction, which was now even at next door by. And thus Pharaoh, that sturdy rebell, rageth against God, and menaceth Moses with death, then, when that palpable grosse darknesse was upon him. This was one of those wild bulls in a net that was full of the fury of the Lord, Isa. 51. 20. He was full of it, and yet lay raging against it, adding impatience to his impenitence, and passive disobedience to his active. Another Bull of the same breed was Abaziah, who sent a third Captain after the two former had been consumed with fire from heaven: as if he would despitefully spit in the face of heaven, and wrestle a fall with the Almighty. And a third was that stubborn stigmatick Abaz, who the more he was distressed, the more he trespassed, This is that King Abaz, 2 Chron. 28. 22. These men lost the fruit of their afflictions; which indeed was a great losse, but that they were not sensible of it. Those that belong to God shall have stroke upon stroke, one crosse in the neck of another, till they be kindly humbled, and brought home to their first husband. God will strike a parting-blow, betwixt them and their sweet-hearts; and make them pollute the Idols which they had once perfumed, Esay 30. 22. She shall follow them, but she shall not overtake them, ] Persequetur, sed non assequetur. She shall meet with disappointment, but it shall be in mercy: shee shall be crost with a blessing, chastened by the Lord, that she may not be condemned with the world. She shall seek for favour and succour at her sweet-hearts hands, but all in vain, they shall all forsake her, and shall change their ancient love into mortall hatred, Jer. 2. 36. Ezek. 36. 17. It is the usuall practise of the devil, and his instruments, to bring men into the briers, and there to leave them: to shift as they can: thus the Pharisees dealt by Judas; What is that to us? say they; see thou to that: they left him when they had led him to his bane; like as familiars leave their witches, when they have once brought them into fetters. God dealeth not so with any of his, when he is most angry. But as in very faithfulness he afflicts them, that he may be true to their souls. So when they follow hard after him, as David did, they are sure to overtake him, though perhaps not presently; when they seek him, they are sure to finde him, so they search for him with all their heart, Jer. 29. 13. True it is, that God often by the hand of the enemy, as by a pursivant at Arms, fetcheth in bankrupt tenants, that is, his own untoward and backsliding people, and leaveth them in the pursivants hand, till they take some course to satisfie for their arrears. But that once done, he will soon set them at liberty, and make them glad, according to the dayes wherein he had afflicted them. Let a poor soul but say, as here, I will go and return to my first husband, ] that is to God. I have run away from him, by my sins, I will now return again to him by repentance. Let there be but such language in the hearts of Gods prodigals, and he will soon relent toward them, meet them on the way, Isa. 65. 24. fall upon their necks and kisse them, Luke 15. 20. hee will receive them with all sweetness. Iam ex hoc loco licet colligere qua sit vera resipiscentia, saith Calvin here. By this Text we may gather what true repentance is: Namely, when a sinner not onely confesseth himself guilty, and worthy of punishment, but truly displeaseth himself, and seriously returnes to God. Here we have those two essential parts of true Repentance, sc. Contrition, and conversion; or Humiliation, and Reformation. The former is called in Scripture, Repentance for sin, the latter, Repentance from sin: and the one without the other is to no purpose or profit. for then was it better with me then now, ] It was so: but how came you to conceive or consider of it in this sort? but by disappointments and afflictions? These are to us as Benbadads best counsellours, that sent him with a cord about his neck to the mercifull King of Israel. The Septuagint render the Text thus; For he was good to me then, &re he is now. And what wonder? Is there any thing to be gotten by departing from Christ, by leaving thy first love, by quenching the spirit, and making Apostacie from former degrees of grace, and holinesse? Can any ion of Jesse do for us as Christ can? or do we think to mend our selves by running out of Gods blessing into the worlds warm Sun, as Demas did? O call me not Naomi, said she once, but call me Marah: for I went out full, and am come home empty. So doth a revolted Christian say, when he comes from the act of sinning, when he hath been seeking after his sweet-hearts: he went with his heart full of peace; and his hand full of plenty; and meeting with a bargain of sinning, thought to ecke out his happiness, and make it fuller (as Solomon did) but came home empty: empty of comfort, but laden with crosses. He hath lost his evidences, is excommunicated from the power of the Ordinances, is under the terrour of a wounded spirit, is buffeted by Satan, is out of hope of ever recovering the radiancy of his graces, hath his back-burden of afflictions: so that he is forced to confesse it to be the greatestt madnesse in the world, to buy the sweetest sin at so deer a rate. David found it so, the Shulamite found it so, Cant. 5. 1, 2, &c. No rest she had at home, nor comfort abroad, till she had recovered her first husbands company; for then it was better with her then now; and yet now too, upon her hearty repentance, all becomes as well with her as ever it had been before, Chap. 6. 4, &c. Was it not so likewise with Ephraim, Ier. 31. 19, 20, 21. with the Prodigall, Luke 15. with Peter after his shamefull recidivation. Let this then be to all Gods relapsed people as a valley of Achor, a door of hope, that they may be readmitted. Shall Sarah receive Hagar into favour? Ioseph his brethren? David his Absolom, Philemon his Onesimus? Shall that Non-such Ahab, shew mercy to his profest enemies the Syrians, that had the second time set upon him? And shall not God receive his repenting children? fetch home his banished, yea though they may seem to be as water spilt upon the ground? bring them back into his own bosome, though they have never so far wandred out of the way? He will, he will. Onely he expects that they should say, and do, as the Church of Israel here, and as the Church of Ephesus is advised, Revel. 2. 4. First, Remember whence ye are fallen: sc. not onely from your former feelings and comforts, but also from your former fitnesse for Gods kingdom; that ius aptitudinale (as the Schools call it) that David himself had parted with for a season, and therefore is called plain David so oft together, and not my servant David, as formerly, 2 Sam. 24. 12, &c. Secondly, Repent: Sigh out that of Iob, O that I were as in moneths past, as in the dayes when God preserved me! When his candle shined upon my head, and when by his light I walked thorow darknesse: As I was in the dayes of my youth, when the secret of God was upon my tabernacle: When the Almighty was yet with me, &c. O it was far better then with me, then now. Thus relent, repent, revenge upon your back-slidings; spare for no pains, but be extraordinarily humbled: detest your selves, give God no rest till he return unto his rest, &c. Thirdly, Do your first works, with a redoubted diligence for your former negligence; and tie your selves thereto by solemne Covenant. Begin (though at first but faintly) to pray, read, confer, meditate, cease from sin, shun the occasions, recover by degrees as a weak body doth by good diet, moderate exercise, &c.

Job 29 23, 34

sapis quod scis,
nescies. Terent.*

Verse 8. For she did not know ] i. e. She would not be aknownd or affected, of this she was willingly ignorant, as S. Peter hath it, 2 Epist. 3. Ut liberius peccet Libenter ignorat, as Bernard. Her ignorance was not a meer nescience, or an invincible ignorance, such as she could not help; but it was wilfull, affected, acquired: they not onely desired not the knowledge of Gods wayes, but hated it, spurn'd and scorn'd at it, shutting the windows lest the light should come in: and being blinded by the God of this world, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ should shine unto them, 2 Cor. 4. 4. lest they should see and say that which Nature and Scripture do both teach them, viz. that all their accommodations and comforts come from me alone. Had this their ignorance been meerly negative, yet had they not been wholly excused. The Apostle noteth, that our Saviour laid down down his precious life even for the not-knowings of the people which were such as they could not help, Heb. 9.7. but there ignorance being affected, it was an high degree of ingratitude and impudence, and a very great aggravation of their sin: it made it to be sin with an accent, wickedness with a witness. Israel was herein worse then the Ox and the Ass (that knowes his owner and his masters crib, Isai. 1.3.) they fell below the stirrop of reason, nay of sense. Hence God so stomacketh the matter both there and here. Non semel hoc peccatum carpit, saith Mercer: he cannot satisfie himself in saying how much it troubled him to be thus unkindly, ungratefully, and unreasonably dealt withall: it runneth in his thoughts, his heart is grieved at it, and he must vent himself. And when he hath told his grief, and aggravated his wrong, yet he hath not done with it: but is upon it again and again; still convincing, upbraiding; charging Israel for their foul and inexcusable unfaithfulness and unthankfulness. Eandem sententiam quia sancta et necessaria est, repetit, saith Oecolampadius here; he repeats over the same he had said before, out of the trouble of his spirit: and that they might once lay it to heart and be humbled.

that I gave her corn and wine and oil, &c.] A great deal more then she reckons upon v.5. and yet payes her rent there to a wrong Landlord too. God is well content that we have the benefit, and comfort of his creatures, so he may have the praise: this is all the rent he lookes for; and this he indents with us for Psal. 50.15. the Saints also knowing his mind, promise it him, and bind themselves to it as did Jacob, Gen. 28.20, 21. David Psal. 51.14. For they know that ingratitude forfeits all (as in this text. She would not know, but ile make her know: ut qui ex copia datorem non senserunt, sentiant ex penuria, for she shall fast another while, and go naked, &c.) like as the Merchants non-payment of customs, may prove the utter losse of all his commodities. Hence their first care to see God in all, as Moses often urgeth this people in Deuteronomie to tast the superabundant sweetness of God in the sweetness of the creatures; to look upon all, as swimming towards them in the blood of Christ, as being a piece of his purchase: and this exceedingly sweeteneth all their comforts. God give thee the dew of heaven saith Isaac to his son Jacob Gen. 27.28. Profane Esau likewise, had the like, but not with a God give thee: neither cared he how he had it, so he had it any way: but it is otherwise with the Saints. See but the difference in these two brethren, long after this Gen. 33.9.11. Esau as a mere naturall man contenting himself, (like a bruit beast made and taken to be destroyed) with a naturall use of the creature, cryes out I have enough, my brother: keep that thou hast to thy self. But mark how Jacob delivers himself in another manner. Take I pray thee my blessing that is brought to thee: because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have enough, See a like difference between the rich fools Habes multa. Thou hast much goods laid up for many years, Luke 12.19. and Davids doxology, 1 Chron. 29.13.16. O Lord our God, all this store cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own. And to the same purpose speaks Eliezer, Gen. 24.35. The Lord hath given my master, flocks, herds, silver, gold, &c. and Job, chap. 1.21. The neglect of this observing of God and atcribing all to him is the source of much sin in the world, and the mother of much mischief. Jer. 2.5. God chargeth his people that they were gone far from him and had made his heritage an abomination vers. 7. and why? but because they did not say, Where is the Lord that brought us up out of the Land of Egypt, &c. vers. 6. Were men but sensible of what God doth for them every day and hour, they could not in equity and common ingenuity serve him as they do; He preserveth, and provideth for us all: layes us down and takes us up, gives us all things richly to enjoy, commanding the best of his creatures to cater for us, Hos. 2.21. and to bring us in the best of the best for our subsistence, Psal. 8. Every good gift temporall, and perfect giving spirituall and eternall cometh from the Father of lights, as naturally and as constantly as light doth from the Sun, or water from the Sea. Let us therefore imitate those Lights of heaven and rivers of the earth, do all the good we can with those good things God hath given us, corn, wine, silver, gold, &c. and then reflect back toward, and return all the glory and praise unto the Sun of our righteousness, and Sea of our salvation. The beams of the Moon and Stars return as far back to glorifie the face of the Sun, which gave them their beauty, as they can possibly. Let us (seemably) ever send back to Gods own glorious self, the honour of all his gifts, by a fruitfull improvement of them, and fresh songs of praise.

Jam. 1.17.

Let the streams of Gods daily bounty lead us ( as the water-courfe doth, either upward to the spring, or downward to the main Ocean ) to the source and Fountain whence they flow. Let the returns we make, be from God, of God, to God ; from him, as the Efficient, of him as the Material, and to him as the finall cause : David joyneth these three together, Psal. 86. 4, 5. And Paul Rom. 11. ult. In fine, let us labour to be like the full ears of corn that hang down the head toward the earth, their originall. Or if any be so graciously exalted, so freely favoured above his fellowes, that his stalk is so stiffe that it beareth him up above the rest of his ridge, let him look up to heaven ; not in thoughts of pride, but humble vowes of thankfulness. Be not as horse and mule that drink of the brook, but never think of the spring : or as swine, that haunch up the mast but never look up to the tree : or as the barren earth, that swallowes the seed, but returnes nothing to the sower, &c.

which they have prepared for Baal ] Or, wherewith they have made Baal lavishing gold out of the bag, and weighing silver in the ballance, they hired a gold smith and he made it a God : they fall down, yea they worship. Esay 46. 6. This Baal was a special Idol of the Zidonians : but first of the Chaldees, who called him Bel ; the Car-ginians Bal, whence those compositions Hannibal, Hasdrubal ; as amongst the Babylonians Beltesbazzar Mehetabel, &c. Varro ( though a Heathen ) inveighes much against idols and images : and saith, that they that first brought them increased error, and took away fear. Plutarch saith, it is sacrilege to worship by images, &c. It is thought, they came first from Babylon. For Ninus having made an image of his father Belus ( this Baal in the text ) all that came to see it, were pardoned for all their offences : whence, in time, that image came to be worshipp'd. A great promoter of this kind of Idolatry in Israel was Ahab, in favour of his wife Jezebel, and to ingratiate with her kindred, 1 King. 16. 31. and this was the ruine of his house. This Baal was by the Zidonians called Jupiter Thalassius, or their sea-Jupiter, and is thought to be their chief God. They had their Dij minorum gentium petty gods ( called in scripture the host of heaven, the queen of heaven, and a little further in this chapter Baalim ) the Greeks called them Δαίμονες : which saith Plato, are certain middle-powers or messengers betwixt God and man, to carry up prayers, and bring down blessings, &c. Quam autem hac demonum theologia conveniat cum sanctorum et Angelorum cultu apud pseudochristianos, res ipsa loquitur, saith learned Master Mede. How this doctrine of devils or heathen-deities agreeth with Saint-worship, and Angel-worship amongst the Papists, is easie to be discerned. A great stumbling it is to both Jewes and Turkes, who know it to be contrary to the first commandment : and image-worship, to the second. Whence the Turkes will not endure any images, no not upon their coynes. And Paulus Jovius tells us, when Sultan Solymán had taken Buda in Hungary, he would not enter into the chief Temple of that city, to give praise to Almighty God for the victory, till all the images were first down, and thrust out of the place. We read also of a certain Turkish Embassador, who being demanded why the Turkes did not turn Christians ? he answered, because the Christian Religion is against sense and reason : for they worship those things that are of lesse power then themselves, and the works of their own hands : as these in the text, that made them Baal, yea ( as if God had hired them to be wicked ) they made it of the very gold and silver which he had given them, though for a better purpose. And this was horrible wickedness, hatefull ingratitude. This was to sue God with his own mony, to fight against him with his own weapons, as David did against Goliath, as Jehu did against Jehoram, and as Benhadad did against Ahab with that life that he had lately given him. I read of a monster, who that very night that his Prince pardoned and preferred him, slew him, and reigned in his stead. This was Michael Balbus, and he is and shall be infamous for it to all posterity. Ingratitude is a monster in nature. Lycurgus made no law against it, quod prodigiosa res esset beneficium non rependere. To render good for evil is Divine : good for good is humane : evil for evil is brutish : but evil for good is devilish. And yet alas how ordinary an evil is this amongst us, to abuse, to Gods great dishonour, our health, wealth, wit, prosperity, plenty, peace, friends, means, day, night, corn, wine, silver, gold, all comforts and creatures, our times, our talents, yea the holy Scriptures, the Gospel of grace, and our golden opportunities, the offers of mercy, and motions of the spirit, turning our backs upon those blessed and bleeding embracements, and pursuing fining our lusts (those idols of our hearts) those Baals, that is, Lords and husbands that have us at their beck, and check? But is this faire dealing? Do we thus requite the Lord, foolish and unwise as we are? Holy Ezra, thinks there is so much unthankfulnesse and dis-ingenuity in such an entertainment of mercy, that heaven and earth would be ashamed of it, Ezra. 9. 13. Should we do so? saith He, oh God forbid us any such wickednesse. Others render it, which they have sacrificed; or dedicated to Baal, for idolaters spare for no cost, Dum Deum alienum dotant, as some render that text Psal. 16. 4. whiles they give their goods not to the Saints (as David) that are on the earth, but to another God. They lavish gold out of the bag: as we read of a certain King of this land, who laid out as much as the whole crown revenues came to in a yeare, upon one costly crucifix: and of another, that left by will a very great sum of money for the transporting of his heart, to be buried in the holy land, as they called it. How profuse papists are in decking their mawmets and monuments of idolatry; is better known then that it needeth here to be spoken of. Their Lady of Loretto, that Queen of heaven, as they call her stilo veteris, hath her Churches so stuffed with vowed presents and memories, as they are faine to hang their Cloisters and Churchyards with them.

Verse 9. Therefore will I returne i. e. I will alter my course, change my stand, change the way of mine administrations, deale otherwise with them then yet I have done: they shall bear their iniquities, and know my breach of promise, as Num. 14. 34. they shall know the worth of mine abused mercyes, by the want of them another while. I will go and returne to my place, till they acknowledge their offence and seek my face: in their affliction they will seek me early. Finally, I will cut them short of alimony and hold them to straight allowance; and then I shall be sure to hear them howling upon their beds for corne and wine: as dogs do that are tied up, and cannot come at their meat. And take away my corn, and my wine] those precious fruits of the earth, as S. James calleth them, James. 5. 7. the product of Gods great care, from yeares end to yeares end, Deut. 11. 12. without which the earth could not yield her increase: neither would there be a veine for the silver, a mine for the gold, iron taken out of the earth, or brasse molten out of the stone. Job. 28. 3. All that we have is his, in true account, and he is the great Proprietary, who onely can say (as he in the gospel) May not I do what I will with mine own? And what should he sooner and rather do, then take away meate from his childe that marris it? If fulnesse breed forgetfulnesse, (as the fed hawk forgets his master, and as the full Moon gets furthest off from the Sun) so men, when they have all things at the full, forget God, and wickedly depart from him, what can he do lesse then forget them (that so they may remember themselves) and make fat Ieshurun look with leane cheeks, that they may leave kicking, and learne righteousness? Neither doth God do this, till greatly provoked, till there is a cause for it, Therefore I will returne. He may well say, as that Roman Emperour did, when he was to pronounce sentence of death, Non nisi coactus, I am even compeld to it, there is no other remedy, 2. Chron. 36. 16. As a woman brings not forth but with paine; and as a bee stings not, but provoked: so here, Ille dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox, he afflicteth not willingly, nor grieves the children of men, Lam. 3. 33. It's sin that maketh him returne as here: that puts him out of his road of mercy into wayes of judgment, that putteth thunderbolts into his hand, and maketh him do his work, his strange work, and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Isay. 28. 21. What can a Prince do lesse then disarme a rebel? what can God do lesse, then take away his own and be gone from such an impudent adulteresse, as is here described? should he suffer her with his corn to make cakes to the Queen of heaven, and to poure out his wine for drink-offerings to other gods, that they might provoke him to anger? No: rather then so, he will take away corn in the time thereof, and his wine in the season thereof] He will cut off the meate from their very mouths, Joel. 1. 16. and pull their morfel from between their teeth. Just at harvest, when their corne is to be inned, God will blast it, or otherwise blow upon it, when all their old store is spent, and they reckoned upon a good recruit, they shall be defeated and frustrated. Therefore hath God watched upon the evill, and brought it upon us, saith Daniel, chap. 9. 14. - for their greater mischief. They that are wicked overmuch shall dye before their time, Eccle. 7. 17. Not before Gods time (for stat sua cuique dies, every mans time is set, Job. 7. 1. our bounds are prescribed us, and a pillar pitcht up by him, who beares up the heavens, which we are not to trespasse) but before their own time that they had propounded and promised to themselves as that rich foole, Luk. 12. 19. who talked to himself (as fooles use to do) Vers. 17. saying Soul, thou hast much good laid up for many years. But we know what became of him that very night; his many years were quickly up, his glasse was run, when he thought it had bin but new turned. God shot at him with an arrow suddenly, he fetcht off this bird with a bolt whilest he was gazing at the bow, or pruning himself upon a bough. He chopt into the earth before he was aware: as one that walketh in the snow chops into a pit. He died tempore non suo (as some render that forecited text in Ecclesiastes) not in his own time, but in Gods time; then when it had been better for that foole to have done any thing, then to have died, because (like Elies sons) he died in his sins: and like Jezebels children, he was killed with death. This made Austin say, that he would not for the gaine of a world, be an Atheist for one half hour: because he knew not but that God might, in that time, call him: And then, what is the hope of the hypocrite though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul? He is troubled, when God taketh away his corn in the time thereof, and his wine in the season thereof: he is hungry and hardly bestead, and therefore ready to curse God, and look upward, howling against heaven, as the hungry wolf. But first he should consider, that the corn and wine and wooll and flax that he hath in keeping is not his, but Gods; and that he reserves the propriety of all in his own hand: neither hath any man ought, in reference to him the Monarch of the world, that he can call his own. The rich fool indeed talked much on this manner, Luk. 12. 18. I will pull down [my] barns and build greater, and there will I bestow all [my] fruites, and [my] goods. All was his own belike: God was not in all this mans thoughts; For if he had, he would soon have known what to have done: sc. he would have acknowledged God the Author and owner of all (as Moses mindeth men) he would also have fed the hungry with his corn, and clothed the naked with his wooll and flax, as Tyrrus converted did with her merchandise Isay. 23. 18. he would have said to God as David did, all things come of thee, and of thine own we give thee. Bernard reports of Pope Eugenius, that meeting with a poore but honest Bishop, he secretly gave him certain Jewels wherewith he might present him. If God did not first furnish us out of his treasury; we should have nothing wherewith either to honour him or to help our selves or others; Gods poore, I meane, whom Solomon calleth owners of our goods and maketh us but their stewards, Pro. 3. 27. with-hold not thy goods from the owners thereof. Next, the hunger-bit hypocrite should consider, that there is a worse hunger yet behind: and an heavy account to be given of the corn, wine, wooll, and flax, the creatures that he hath deteyned in unrighteousness, and spent upon his lusts, Jam. 4. 3. If the husband men must be ashamed and howl because the harvest of the field is perished: If the drunkards must wake, weep and waile because the new wine is cut off from their mouths, Joel. 1. 5, 11. How shall they much more howl in hell, ubi nullus unquam cibus est, nulla consolatio, saith Bernard, where there is no manner of meate, no drop of water to be had for love or mony: where they must fast, and find no mercy for ever, where they must hunger and thirst in aeterno Dei as the Schooles speak, as long as God is God. The sufferings of this world to the wicked, is but as the falling of the leaves in comparison of the trees, that will fall upon him hereafter, in that eternity of extremities. If here, In the fulnesse of his sufficiency he shall be in straits, and every hand of the troublesome shall come upon him. When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, and shall raine it upon him while he is eating, as it is threatned Job. 20. 22, 23. what think we, will their portion be in hell? Meane while God will recover his wooll and his flax. He will snatch it away (as the word signifieth) in great displeasure, as a man doth his stolen goods out of the hands of a thief: He will rescue them, as Abraham did Lot and the captives from Chedor-laomer, as David did his wives, goods, and friends from the Amalekitish rovers. The poore creatures, corn, wine, wooll, &c. groan heavily under the abuse of gracelesse persons, Rom. 8. 22. and God heareth them, as he did the

the oppressed Israelites in Egypt, for he is gracious, He hears them I say, and recovers them: He spoiles their possessors of them, as Jacob did Laban of his sheep, as the Israelites did the Egyptians of their Jewels: the same word is used there, as here, and it is a wonderfull significant word saith Mercer, S. Paul, imitateth it, when he saith the creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption. This God doth when he snatcheth away kingdoms from tyrants, wealth from worldlings, strength from roysters, spirituall common gifts from the proud and secure. Zeck. 11. 17. See the note there, when men abuse mercies, they forfeit their right in them: wicked men have not onely a civill title, but a right before God to the things that they possesse; It is their portion, Psal. 17. 14. And what Ananias had was his own while he had it, Act. 5. And God gave Egypt to Nebuchadnezzar as pay for his pains in taking Tyre. True it is, all was forfeited in Adam: but wicked men have yet a right to all they do enjoy in a lawfull way, by divine donation, till the day of execution: As when a traitour hath his life given him, for a time at least, he hath meate and drink also given him to maintain his life for that time. God dealeth not as that cruel Duke D'alva did, who starved some prisoners after that he had given them quarter, saying, Though I promised you your lives, I promised not to finde you meate. That which wicked men are charged with, and shall be accountable for, is, not their right to use the creatures, but their not right, using them: This makes the creature cry in its kinde and long for liberty: even as birds do that thrust a long neck out of a cage (so much the Apostles word importeth Rom. 8. 19.) And God who heareth the cry of the widdow and fatherlesse, and looseth his prisoners Psal. 146. 7. heares and frees the poor creatures groaning under mans abuse &c. Given to cover her nakednesse.] This is the end of garments so called quasi gardmentes: they arme and fence our bodies against the injury of winde and weather, against heate of summer, cold of winter; They also cover our nakednesse and deformity, those parts especially that are by an Antiphrasis called verenda & pudenda (here principally perhaps intended) because they ought never to be laid naked but kept covered pudoris gratia for common honesty sake: that the shame of thy nakednesse do not appeare. Rev. 3. 18. Nature teacheth to cover our nakednesse; Therefore also when a man hath committed a sin, he blusheth: the blood, as it were would cover the sin. But nothing will do that, save onely the righteousness of Christ, the fleece of that immaculate lamb of God, whom therefore we must put on, Rom. 13. 14. in all his offices and efficacies. Our first parents indeed were born with the royall robe of originall righteousness on their back; but the devill soon stript them of it; and therehence they became fore ashamed of their bodily nakednesse (but chiefly of their spirituall) which therefore they sought to hide as they could, their privities especially. Whence some are of opinion that to look upon the nakednesse of another is a sin against nature. The Prophet Habakkuk taxeth it in the Chaldees Chap. 2. 15. and the Hebrewes there say, It was a filthy custome amongst them, common at their feasts. Cloathes are the ensignes of mans sin, and the cover of our shame. To be proud of them, is as for a thief to be proud of his halter: to brag of them, is as for the Lazar to brag of a plaster laid to his filthy fore: the finenesse of such is their filthinesse: their neatnesse, nastinesse, as one speaketh.

Verse 10. And now will I discover her lewdnesse, ] Or her filthinesse, basenesse, foolishnesse, faplesnesse; perhaps the same with her nakednesse, verse 9. See the Note there. How shamelesse the Heathen Idolaters were, the worshippers of Priapus especially (which Ierome and Isidore say, was the same with Baal-peor, and made Maacha the mother of Aza guilty of that villany) with their infamous Nos pudore pulsa, stamus sub Jove coelis apertis, &c. is notoriously known; how they ran about naked in their Lupercalia, Bacchanalia and other beastly solemnities. God threatneth to make her naked here in another manner, to her utter disgrace and ignominy. He had threatned her before with poverty, now with scorn and contempt: these go seldome asunder; but when self-procured, they are very grievous. See Deut. 28. Fornicatours are fools, Ier. 29. 23. Gen. 34. 7. Shechem committed folly in Israel, and is therefore called a lad, or a childe, (ver. 19. Neque distulit puer) for his witlessnesse, as being carried not by right reason, but blind affection. So Amnon was for this as one of the fools in Israel, 2 Sam. 13. 12. a Spiritual fornicatours are all this and more. They hunt after lying vanities, and so forsake their own mercies; being singularly foolish (as the word here used importeth) and miserable by their own election. The indignity and iniquity of their practise, see Ier. 2.9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Satan deals by them as he did by Adam, when he gave him an apple for Paradise; and set him to the tree of Knowledge, that he might not taste the tree of life. And like unto them (saith a Lapide here) is every wicked person, who by Satans perswasion preferreth the creature before the Creatour, earth before heaven, the devil before God, hell before heaven, sin before sanctity, evil before good. These are lewd persons of sordid and servile dispositions, homines ad servitutem parati (as Tiberius said of the Romans) men of an under-spirit, as those, 1 Chron. 4.23. Hedge rogues Mr. Dyke calleth them.

Jonas 2.8.

In the sight of her lovers ] That her, whom they have so desired whiles she was veiled, they may deride when laid open. There can nothing befall a woman more grievous, then to be stript naked, but especially before her sweet-hearts, Lam. 3.8. All that honoured her, despise her, because they have seen her nakednesse: yea she sigheth and turneth backward. It is the paint or the dresse many times, that makes the lewd woman lovely; Think the same of Idolatry: how pompous is it, and theatricall? but God will detect it and make it ridiculous every day more and more. Erasmus was very instrumentall this way, and did prejudice Popery by his witty jeering, as much as Luther did by his stomacking and inveying, saith One. Though it cannot be denied, but that Pruriginosa istorum hominum scabies asperiori friguli fricanda fuerat, the scabby hides of those Popelings called for a sharper curry-comb, as another Learned man phraseth it.

and none shall deliver her out of my hand ] Not her idols, not her confederates. An idol is nothing in the world: and all Nations, set by God, are as a drop of a bucket, or dust of a ballance: they can no more stand before him, then a glasse-bottle can before a cannon-shot. It was bootlesse therefore for this adulteresse to hope for help from her lovers, when God once took her in hand. He would give her, her due, Ipsis spectantibus & stantibus instar stipitum, whiles they look on and stood like so many stocks, not daring to stir for her rescue and relief. See for this, Rev. 18. 10. with the Note.

Verse 11. I will also cause her mirth to cease, ] Idolaters are frolick and jovial, the greatest mirth-mongers, the merry Greeks of the world, set altogether upon the merry pin, they spend their dayes in pleasure, and suddenly turn into hell. Thus it was with these old idolaters. See Amos 6. 4. And thus it is with the Papists at this day. They have a Proverb amongst them; Spiritus Calvinianus est spiritus melancholicus, A Calvinisticall spirit is a melancholy spirit. Turn Protestant once, and you must for ever bid adieu to mirth and jollity, and lead a Monkish melancholy life. In their supplication to King James for a Toleration, they used this as an argument for their Religion above ours, because more suitable and pleasing to mans nature. It is indeed an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion. Sir Walter Rawleigh knew what he said, That were he to chuse a Religion for licentious liberty, lasciviousnesse, and merry-living, he would be a Papist. Hence the whole world is said to wonder after the Beast, which is said to be like unto a Leopard, or Panther: Now the Panther is admired, and followed by most other beasts of the field (and thence hath his name) either for the beauty of his hide, or for the sweetnesse of his smell. So is the Pope for those sensual delights, and swinish pleasures he alloweth his followers. Lupanar utriusque Veneris Roma condidit, saith Agrippa, concerning Pope Sixtus Quintus. But what should I rake in that dung-hill? Such sinfull mirth, as it is base born, so it is of short continuance: God will make it to cease, and to go soon out in a vexing snuffe. For why? There is a snare (or cord) in the sinne of the wicked, sc. to strangle their joy with, but the righteous sing and are merry, Prov. 29. 6. yea they are merry, (or right set in their mindes, as the Apostles word signifies, James 5. 13.) and therefore they sing, yea and shall sing for joy of heart, when wicked men shall crie for sorrow of heart, yea howle again for vexation of spirit, Esay 65. 14. Mean-while their mirth is but the hypocrisie of mirth. It may wet the mouth, but not warm the heart; smooth the brow, but

It is like a little counterfeit complexion; As they repent only in the face, Mat. 6. 16. ſo they rejoyce only in the face, 2 Cor. 1. 5. 12. Indeed they revel rather then rejoyce, & the end of that mirth is heavineſs, Pro. 14. 13. as lightening is attended with thunder, & as comets end in a peſtilent vapour. Satans ſynagogue may ſeem a true Church. The ten revolted Tribes kept alſo diſſeſt ſolemn dayes, partly commanded by the Law, (as new-moons and ſabbaths) and partly inſtituted by Ieroſoam, in honour of their idols, as now among the Papiſts, in pretended honour of the Saints, with feaſting, dancing, ringing, roaring of organs, &c. Theſe ſolemnities therefore, the Lord here firſt utterly diſowneth, calling them, her feaſt-dayes, her ſabbaths, &c. and none of his, becauſe they did laſte gypſum miſcere, mingle lime with milk, as Irenaus ſaith of Plato; Non mea, tua ſunt, as Martial ſaith of his Epigrams, ill read by another. And ſecondly, that he will take them away, (ſc. by carrying themſelves away captive. the ninth, after three years raking together of money for pardons, and other palterments, at last departing, he left not so much money in the whole Kingdome, as he either carried with him, or sent to Rome before him. What will not men part with to purchase heaven? Now they perswaded the poor people (and still they do) that good works (and what so good, as to gratifie the Pope with great summes?) were mercatura regni caelestis, the price to be given for heaven. Idolaters are all Merit-mongers: they will have heaven as a purchase; they lay claim to it, as wages for their work. They say with that wretched Monk; Rēde mihi aeternam vitam quam debes, Give me eternal life which thou owest me, Give me the portion that belongeth to me. God forbid, saith another Papist, that we should enjoy heaven, as of meer alms to us. On the other side, the godly disclaim their own merits, beg hard for mercy, expect a recompence of reward from him, but all of free grace; accounting all that they can do for God, but a little of that much, that is due to him, and that they could well betem him: they do all righteousness but rest in none: they know that Gods kingdom is parum & non paratum; that their reward is the reward of inheritance, and not of acquisition: and that if they could do any thing this way, yet would it be mercy in God to reward every one according to his work, Psal. 61. 12.

and I will make them a Forrest, ] See this more fully set forth, Isai. 5. 5, 6. Such is the hatred God beareth to sinne, that he makes bloody wailes, as it were, upon the backs of the insensible creatures for mans sake. A fruitful land turneth he into barrenesse for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein, Psal. 107. 34. Thus he dealt by Sodom, which was once as Egypt, yea as Eden, but is now a place of nettles and salt-pits: By Iudea, that once Lumen totius orbis, now laid desolate: as Babylon, where Strabo saith their Barley yeelded three hundred-fold increase, and their Palm-tree three hundred and sixty severall sorts of commodities, as bread, honey, wine, vinegar, &c. but what devastation befell it by the Medes, see Esay 13. 19, &c. It were easie to instance in the seven Churches of Aja, the Palatinate, and other parts of Germany, in Ireland, and now Scotland, and what may England look for? Shall we altogether passe unpunished? Shall we still sit safe under our vines and fig-trees, and not be Forrested, and by those wilde beasts of the field devoured? Sure it is, that no beast of the field doth shew it self more raging, or ravenous, then do the wicked, when God suffers, or rather sends them to break into his vineyard: Witnesse those breathing devils the Irish Rebels, more cruel then any Cannibals. Cursed be their wrath; for it was cruel, transcendently so, extending it self both to the living and the dead. Ursi non seviunt in cadavera: but these bears, Psal. 58. 4. bears, Psal. 80. 13. lions, leopards, &c. did rage against dead carcasses, and tore them with their teeth. Histories tell us, that the first founders of Rome were nourished by a Wolf: Certain it is that the off-spring of that people have the hearts of Wolves: being savage and cruel above measure. Their citie was first founded in blood, and so was the Papacy: for the foundation of that See was laid when Phocas slew his liege Lord and Emperour Mauricius, whom he stewed in his own blood. Whence the Poet wittily;

The habit of that harlot is, according to her heart, purple and scarlet; and her diet is the diet of the Cannibals. I saw her drunken with the blood of the Saints. They are wholly bloody, both in their positions, and dispositions, their plots, and practices. The Pope is said to be a Leopard, or Panther, with his feet like a Bear, and his head like a Lion, Revel. 13. 2. See the Note there. And of their S. Dominick (the father of the Dominicans) it is reported, that when his mother was with childe of him, she dreamed, that she brought forth a Wolf, with a fire-brand in his mouth: and he proved accordingly; a brutish man, skilfull to destroy, to devour the man more righteous then himself, by his bloody Inquisitors. I pray that God would deliver his turtle from these savage creatures; that he would cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land, Ezek. 34. 25. that the beasts of the land may no more devour them, vers. 28.

Verge 13. And I will visit upon her the dayes of Baalim, ] That is, I will punish the the sins committed in those dayes wherein they went after those multitudes of Heathenish gods: 30000. of them Hesiod reckons up in his days And Servius upon Virgil telles us, that for fear of offending any of them they used to clothe up their petitions with Dijq; Deaq; omnes. All ye gods & goddesse, &c. Some of the Hebrews by Baalim understand Dominos domuum the Lords of the houses: for the planets are said to have thir houses. Oecolampadius understands it of those Idols which they worshipped under the name of the Stars, called elsewhere the Queen of heaven, or the heavenly constellations. Others by Baal conceive to be meant their chief God: called also by them Baal-samen, or the Lord of Heaven: by Baalim their undergods, medioxima numina inter mortales calicolasq; vestores. This was Plato's Demonogy ( See the Note above upon verse 8. of this chapter ) Saint Paul is thought to have been well read in Plato's writings ( his ἀναζωπυῖν 2 Tim. 1.6. is verbum Platonicum ) and to have alluded to him in that passage, 1 Cor. 8.5,6. Though there be that are called ( Baalim signifieth Lords ) whether in heaven or in earth, as there be gods many and lords many: but to us there is but one God the Father, and one Lord Jesus Christ, that is but one Mediatour betwixt God and Man, the Man Christ Jesus, who indeed in regard of his humane nature is inferiour to the Father, but yet such a Lord by whom are all things, and we by him. The Papists acknowledge but one God, but they have many Baalims, many Lords and Mediatours both of intercession and of Redemption too. But this is an heathenish opinion, as indeed many of theirs are: whence they are called Gentiles, in opposition to the holy City the Church, Rev. 11.2.

wherein she burnt incense to them ] which typified prayer, both in the sweet favour, and ascending property; elationibus fumi with pillars of smoke, Chap. 3.6. This should have been done to God alone. He is the proper object of prayer, as being omnipresent, omniscient and omnipotent: and besides in covenant with his people: He never said to the seed of Jacob, seek ye me in vain. No: he scorns that, and leaves that to the Heathen idols to do, Esa. 45.18.19. Our Rock is not as their rock our enemies themselves being judges. He is not like Baal, that pursuing his enemies could, not hear his friends. Nor like Jupiter of Crete that was carved without ears, and could not be at leisure to attend small matters, no nor greater neither, unless it were at certain times when he was pleased to look down through certain chinkers in heaven, as Lucian faineth. He is not as Diana, who being present at Alexander's birth, could not at the same time preserve her Ephesian temple from the fire. O thou that hearest prayers ( saith David: that's one of his titles of honour. Psal. 65.2.) unto thee shall all flesh come. Whither else should I go? Basil makes prayer a chain tied to Gods ear, and mans mouth. Jamblichus saith, it is copula quâ homines cum Deo conjunguntur, a tie wherewith men are knit unto God. Damasceus saith it is an ascent of the heart to heaven. The Church is said to ascend out of the world by these pillars of incense, Cant. 3.6. And as the Angel that appeared to Manoah by ascending up in the flame of the Altar, is said to do wondrously, Judg. 13.19,20. So do the Saints by their daily devotions coming up ( as Cornelius his prayers and alms did ) for a memoriall before God, Act. 10.4. and being a precious incense, Psal. 141.2. far beyond that of Baal Priests, or Chimney-Chaplines, who were called Chemarims, or Black-ones, ab incensione thuris from their much offering up of incense, with the smoke whereof they were blacked and sooted; as some hold.

Whence Tully compares the Latine tongue to a grave Matrone; the Greek to a sumptuous harlot in all her bravery. This drawes the senses, and is therefore much in use amongst adulterers and Idolaters: as Papists for instance with their excessive gayetie in Gods service; their palles, copes and other massing-vestments of as great price, some of them, as Demetrius king of Macedon his robewas: which none of his successours would were propter invidiosam impendij magnificentiam for the richness thereof. It was therefore excellent counsell that Tertullian gave the young women of his time, and may be usefull to to us all : Vestite vos serico pietatis, byssino sanctitatis, &c. Cloath your selves, saith he with the silk of piety, with the sattin of sanctitie, with the purple of modestie. and she went after her lovers ] This is oft objected to her, as a foul busines indeed : this was the sin that disjoynted Gods soul from her, to the making of her desolate, a land not inhabited Jer. 6. 8. We must take speciall care, that no creature creep into the Bridall-bed betwixt Christ and the soul : or if any do, complain to him be- time and he will play Phineas his part, as Master Bradford phraseth it. And forgot me, saith the Lord ] This is reserved to the last, as the foot and root of all the fore- mentioned evils both of sin and punishment. See the lack of Gods holy fear Rom. 3. 18. There is no fear of God before their eyes. And thence it is, that their throat is a gaping grave, their mouth full of gall and guile, that destruction and misery are in their wayes, &c. 13, 14, 15, 16. &c. Fearlesnes and forgetfulness of God go alwayes together. Jer. 5. 22, 23. those that remember him and his presence, cannot but bear an awfull respect to him. It is a problem in Aristotle, why are men credited more then other creatures. His answer is ὅτι Θεὸς νομίζουσιν ἑμ' αὐτοῖς, because they be- lieve a Deity. Man alone remembreth, and therefore reverenceth God. Those there- fore that so forget him, after long experience especially of his gracious care to pro- tect them and provide for them, as a husband doth for the wife of his bosom, these are strange creatures, and must look to be visited and reminded of him from whom they have so deeply revolted : for of all things God cannot abide to be forgotten. I have seen his wayes, and will heal him. Wayes ? what wayes ? his covetousnesse, frowardnesse, &c.* And it is as if God should say, I see these froward children will lay nothing to heart : frownes will not humble them, blowes will not better them. If I do not save them till they seek me they will never saved : therefore I will heal him, I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners : I will create the fruit of the lips peace to him. O the never- enough adored depth of Gods free grace and superabundant love to his people ! This David well understood, and therefore prayed, pardon my iniquity : for it is great. He knew that God both could and would remit more then he could commit : and that mercy rejoyceth against judgement ; whilest God for his own sake ( though not for ours ) blotteth out the thick cloud as well as the cloud, enormities as infirmities Esay 44. 22. They kisse the Son with a kisse of love and homage, having first been kissed with the kisses of his mouth : whereupon immediately followes, Draw me, we will run after thee, Cant. 1. 1, 4. Elisha could more with a kisse, then his man could with a staffe, in raising the dead child. Indeed as the people at their first setting foot upon the promised land, met with trouble in the valley of Achor by the sin of Achan; so shall the Saints be sure of troubles; but Christ will not leave them comfortless: a door of hope he will open unto them in their deepest distresses. Death shall be unto them not a trap-door to hell (as it is to the wicked) but an inlet into life eternall, where they shall sing the song of Moses, and the song of the Lamb. Rev. 15. 13. Let the Saints therefore rejoyce in hope, be patient in tribulation. Verse 15. I will give her her vineyards from thence ] or. from thenceforth: either from that time, or from that place. God, as out of his melting heartedness toward her he thinks she hath suffered double for all her sins, Esay 40. 1. (though she think she hath suffered less then her sins Ezra 9. 13.) So he is ready, upon her repentance, to make her (strait) a plentifull amends, He destroyed her vineyards and damped her mirth, vers. 11. 12. Now she shall have all again, with advantage: not her corn onely for necessity, but her vineyards also for delight: yea an honest affluence of both. She shall have reall manifestations of his love: and although he take her into the wilderness, yet will he not be unto her a wilderness, or a Land of darkness: wherefore then should his people say, we are Lords, we will come no more unto thee?

Jer. 2. 31. why should they not rather reason thus with the prodigall. I will go to my father: for in his house is bread enough. I will return to my first husband, for then was it better with me then now, I will repent, for the kingdome of heaven is at hand &c. Lo this is the right way of reasoning, sc. from mercy to duty, from deliverance to obedience, Ezra. 9. 14. The love of Christ constraineth us, saith Paul: the grace of the Gospell teacheth us to deny ungodlinesse, and to live godly, &c. the kindnesse of God leadeth to repentance: & if besought by the mercies of God to present our bodies for a sacrifice to God, how can we do otherwise? If God bring vineyards out of wildernesses, comforts out of crosses, meate out of eaters, honey out of the rock, and oyle out of the flinty rock, that is, mercies out of difficulties, they must needs be very hard-hearted, that are not melted and mollified thereby.

Deut. 32. 13.

And the vally of Achor for a doore of hope] The vally was neer unto Jericho, that city of Palmtrees, and was fertile, fat, and full of vines, Isai. 65. 10. thought to be the same with Engeddi which is often mentioned in the Canticles. This vally was a kinde of dore or inlet into the promised land: and here they began first to eate of the fruits of the land, which they had so much longed for, Josh. 5. 10. and now hoped for the enjoyment of the whole; whereof that vally was a pledg, and earnest. Hereby then is covertly promised to Gods people, deliverance by Christ, together with the first-fruits and earnest of the spirit, whereby they shall be brought to an assured hope of the harvest of happinesse, of the whole bargain of Christs benefits, Spes in humanis incerti nomen boni: spes in divinis nomen est certissimi Heb. 11. 1. this is hope unfaileable, as proceeding from faith unfained, which can believe God upon his bare word, and that against sense in things invisible, and against reason in things incredible. It can take a man out of the vally of Achor, that is of trouble (see Josh. 7. 6.) and set him on the everlasting mountains, where as from Pisgah, he may have a full prospect of heaven; the hope where of maketh absent joyes present, wants plentitudes; and beguiles calamity, (as good company doth the way) yea lookes upon it as an inlet to mercy, a promise whereof to apostatizing Israel some make this fat vally of Achor to be dotis nomine, as a dowry: in allusion to the manner of the Jewes in their marriages to give some piece of ground to the spouse as a pledge.

and she shall sing there] As rejoycing in hope, Rom. 12. 12. Et res plena gaudio & spes, as Bernard hath it, They shall shout for joy, they shall also sing. Some think the Prophet here alludeth to that custome of the Jewes to sing in the time of their vintage, See Judg. 9. 27. Esay. 16. 10. Others will have it to be an allusion to their marriage-songs: that being the time of the rejoycing of a mans heart Cant. 3. 11. Viz. at the recovery of his lost rib. The Septuagint render it he shall be humbled: and indeed the word signifieth both to be humbled and to sing. Some are humbled but not humble, low but not lowly: these must look for more load. But they that mourn in a godly manner, are sure to be comforted. God will turn all their sighing into singing; they shall sing aloud upon their beds which they have soaked in teares, and made to swim againe, as David Psal. 6. A reconciled condition is a singing condition, Bernard was so over-joyed at his conversion, that he was almost beside himself. Cyprian telleth his friend Donatus, that his comforts then were inexpressible. Austin saith the like of himself. The Saints cannot but sing at this dore of hope, though they be not yet got in at it. See Psal. 138. 5. they shall sing in the wayes of the Lord, though they be yet but viatores. Gods statues are their songs, even in the house of their pilgrimage; as hoping to sing shortly in the height of Zion, to flow to the bountifullnesse of the Lord, Jer. 31. 22. As in the dayes of her youth, and in the day when she came up &c. Out of a low countrey, but a lower condition; being shiftlesse and succorlesse. Then did God put Timbrels into their hands, and ditties into their mouths. See Exod. 15. And so it is here said, he will do againe in the time of the gospell. Let our Nonsingers here take notice, that singing (and that joyntly with others) is a Gospell-ordinance: and for further proof let them read Mr. Cottons excellent treatise upon this subject.

Verse. 16. And it shall be in that day] A sweet promise of a thorow reformation, much like that Zach. 13. 2. God will turne to his people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord to serve him with one shoulder,
Zeph

Zeph. 3. 9. For which end he formes their speech for them, & tutors them here how to terme him. Iſi they muſt call him, but not Baali, my husband; but not my Lord: Not that there was any hurt in the word my Baal or Lord: but because it had been abused and given to Idols, God would have none of it: or because it was grown among the better sort a name of contempt: like as for the ſame reason the word Burden is rejected, Ier. 23. 36. Or laſtly, leſt the people whileſt they ſpoke of one thing ſhould think of another: and naming Baal ſhould be put in minde of an Idol. This is Hieromes reaſon. Some diſtinguiſh thus betwixt the 2 words, that Iſi is a name of love, Baal of feare, Others obſerve that Iſi ſignifieth an excellent man, and is therefore made choiſe of as every way better then Baal, or Lord. Auguſtus forbade men to call him Lord: and deſired rather that more amiable name of Father of his countrey. It is wiſdome when we call upon God to make choiſe of fit titles, not onely ſuch as he in his word hath warranted, but alſo ſuch as may be ſuitable to our requests, and helpfull to our faith in prayer; ſuch as wherein we may ſee the thing prayed for comming towards us, as it were. This will notably excite devotion. Inſtances of it ſee Pſal. 80. 1. Aſt. 1. 24. and 4. 24. 25. &c. Note there and in the next verſe, that there is no ſmall danger in words and names. What a deale of miſchief hath the word Huguenot done in France, and Puritan here. Anno 1572. Cardinall Allen at Rhemes inſtructed his emiſſary-ſeducers, ſent over hither, to divide the people under the names of Proteſtant and puritan: provoking them thereby to reall and mutuall both hate and contempt. His Rhemists in their anotations on 1 Tim. 20. warn their readers of uſing the words of Hereticks (ſo they call us) though they have no great hurt in them: and hold to their old termes of maſſe, pennance, Prieſt &c. they call us Novatores, but we may call them ſo better. The truth is, we may not teach nova, nor yet novè? Caſtalion cannot be excuſed in his Jana Genius Respublica for Eccleſia and other affected novelties. *Melancthon*s wiſh was, that men would not onely teach the ſame things, but in iſdem verbis, in iſdem ſyllabis in the ſame words, yea in the ſame ſyllables: for he that ſaineth new words brings in new doctrines (it may be thought) as did Arminius. And yet it is not many yeares ſince here amongſt us, that he that would not be an Arminian was held no better then a practiſall Puritan. But let us keep our old words (ſaid thoſe Veteratores) and we ſhall eaſily keep our old faith: The devill doth ſometimes ſpeake the trueth for his own ends. But was Wincheſter well adviſed when he made The Lord, and not to ſay our Lord, to be ſymbolum hereticorum, a note of an heretick. Or Dr. Story, whoſe rule to know an heretick was this, they will ſay The Lord, and we Praife God; and The living God. This was not Novum nomen, but Novum crimen, C. Caſar. Much like that of Pope Paul 2. who pronounced them hereticks that did but name the name Academy either in earneſt or in jeſt: And another Pope made it hereſie to hold that there were any Antipodes.

Those that thus borrow garnish of the Egyptians, may therewith get their botches and boyles. Howsoever, they may feare to have Bellarmine himself (who was no precisian) to rise up in judgment against them and condemn them; who would not have Paul called Divus Paulus, but Beatus: because Divus, and Diva, were the words of the heathens for their gods and goddeses.

She multiplied her whoredomes (saith the Prophet) in calling to remembrance the dayes of her youth wherein she had plaid the harlot in the land of Egypt, Ezek. 23. 21. and verse 8. Not the new sent of meat, but the remembrance of their old flesh-pots moved Israel: they found sweetnesse in a lust twice sod, they had still the broth of those abominable things in their vessels, as the Prophet Esay hath phrased it, Chap. 65. 4. To remember with delight sins past is, to recommit them: and herein the deceitfull heart is with all care to be looked unto, that when we call to mind former evil practises, though with an intent to be humbled for them, we be not insnared, and drawn to commit them afresh by being tickled in the thought of them.

Augustin.

Psal. 119. 91.

Verse 18. And in that day will I make my covenant for them with the beasts &c.] At the first creation all things were subject to man on this condition, that he should be subject to his maker as his master. Rebellis autem facta est quia homo numini, creatura homini. But no sooner did man rebell against God, but the creature began to rebel against him. Look how a Noble-mans servants will draw in defence of their Lord, and souldiers fight for their Generall: so here, God is Lord of hosts. They continue this day according to thine ordinance (and fight in their courses Judg. 5. 20.) for they are all thy servants, ready prest they are to seise a sinner, and to doe execution upon him, as a traytour, and rebel to the highest Majesty: as the sword that Hector gave Ajax turned into his own bowels, when once he began to abuse it to the hurt of hurtlesse creatures. Now here God promisseth to abolish that enmity, to make peace, even pacem omnimodam, peace, peace, as the Prophet Esay hath it, Chap. 26. a multiplied peace, a perfect, sheere, pure peace with God, with themselves, with all creatures: and to restore them in Christ that dominion they once had over the works of his hands, Psal. 8. 6. with Heb. 2. 7. yea power over all nations Rev. 2. 26. with a promise that all shall work together for their good, and they shall be fully freed if not from the smart, yet from the hurt of every creature. Compare Ezek. 34. 25. Job. 5. 23. Esay. 11. 6. 7. where the Prophet seemeth to allude to the carriage of the beasts in Noahs Ark; all bloodiness and rapine laid aside. The Jewes foolishly argue from these texts, that Christ is not yet come, because the Lion yet rageth, the Wolf devoureth, Serpents yet sting and spare not the best. And some interpreters of ours are of opinion, that these promises shall be literally fulfilled at the restitution of all things, which they make to be at the time of the call of the Jewes. But when I find Nebuchadnezzar and other enemies of the Church to be called Lions, Leopards, Wolves &c. as Jerem. 5. 6. and elsewhere, I cannot but think that these might be here meant, in part at least, ponensq; ferocia Poni Corda volente Deo: according to Peters vision Act. 10. and that God will so meeken the spirits of his converts, that they shall not hurt nor destroy in all his holy mountain Esay. 11. 9. The literall sense is very good I grant: but yet it is still to be taken (as all such promises are) 1. with exception of the crosse here. 2. with expectation of the full accomplishment hereafter, in the state of perfection.

And

And I will break the bowe, and the sword, and the battle out of the earth. ] These words seem to be opposed to that threat Chap. 1. 5. I will break the bowe of Israel, &c. And it is as if he should say, After that I have broken their power, and tamed their pride by the enemies forces, then I will punish those enemies, and so take order with them, that they shall not hurt my people by any of their hostilities. Lo, peace is a piece of Gods Covenant; and covenant-mercies are very sweet, when all the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth, Psalm 25. 10. Not mercy onely, but truth too, that comes by vertue of a covenant: Mark, what God saith to Abraham, Gen. 17. 20, 21. I have blessed Ismael; twelve Princes shall he beget: but my Covenant will I establish with Isaac. And in the same Chapter Divines observe, that in ten verses thereof, God repeateth his Covenant which he made with Abraham, thirteen times: to note thus much, that that was the mercy indeed that must satisfie Abraham in all his troubles, sorrows, and afflictions: For the Covenant of Gods peace shall not be removed, no not when the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, Esaie 54. 10. The Lord will give strength to his people; the Lord will blesse his people with peace, Psalm 29. 11.

and will make them to lie down safely. ] Being gathered under my wings, they shall repose themselves upon my power and providence, committing themselves to me in well-doing. All true and solid security, whether inward or outward; all true peace, whether of countrey, or of conscience floweth from Gods favour, Psalm 3. & 4. Hence the Apostle wisheth grace and peace, and the Angels sang, Glory be to God on high, and peace on earth, even the peace of good-will toward men, the good-will of him that dwelt in the bush. The Lord is with me, saith David, I will not fear what man can do unto me. I will sleep and wake, and wake and sleep again; for the Lord sustaineth me. No wonder I slept so soundly and safely (saith King Philip) when Antipater watched me. Abner watched not so well, when David fetcht away Sauls spear and pitcher, and was barely told of it. Ishbosheth was slain while he slept. The Saints go ever under a double guard, the peace of God within them, and the power of God without them, and may therefore in utramque aurem dormire, lie down safely, (See Ier. 23. 6.) call their souls to rest.

Verse 19. And I will betroth thee unto me for ever, ] This, because it could not be easily beleaved, is thrice repeated. We beleeve not (whatever men may dream to the contrary) without much ado, and many conflicts. When faith goes about to lay hold on Christ, the devils raps her on the fingers, and would beat her off. Hence she is faine to take great pains for it, to work hard for her living. The Apostle speaks more then once of the work of faith, 1 Thess. 1. 3. and 2 Epist. 1. 11. And it is no lesse difficult (say Divines) to beleeve the Gospel then to fulfill the Law. No man can come unto the Son, except the Father draw him: the soul naturally hangs back, and had as lief put off its immortality, as put on Christ: The devil also doth his utmost to hinder. The contest was not so great betwixt Michael and him concerning Moses his dead Body, as it is here betwixt the beleever and him concerning Christs living body. And should not God mightily assist, the businesse would never be done. Hence faith is called, the faith of Gods power, Col. 2. 12. the faith of his operation, and what an Almighty power God doth therein put forth, is elegantly described by the Apostle in that sixfold gradation, Ephes. 1. 19. which shews it to be more then a morall swasion. Betroth thee, I will, I will, I will, saith God here: and some think the Sacred Trinity is here (though darkly, according to the manner of those times) brought in betrothing the Church in this trina repetitio. And mark, that he doth not say, I will be reconciled unto thee, and receive thee again after thy foul-playes with me, (for Reconciliationes ferè sunt vulpine amicitiæ inter homines, Men are seldom reconciled heartily) but I will espouse thee, marry thee unto me, and that for ever. I will null the Bill of divorce, love you no lesse then if you had continued true to me, or were now a pure Virgin. Quis hanc Dei bonitatem dignè collaudet? saith Drusius. Who can sufficiently set forth this goodnesse of God? When God once pardoneth sin, he will remember it no more; he will not come with back-reckonings. Discharges in justification are never repeated or called in again. Peccata non redeunt is a true axiom: and it is no lesse true, that peccata non minuunt justificationem. God can pardon sins of all sizes; and assoon disperse the thick cloud, as the cloud, Esaie 44. 22. See the matchlesnesse lessnesse of his mercy to a repenting adulteresse, Jer. 3. 5. Yea to rest in his love, and to joy over her with singing, Zeph. 3. 17. and to do this for ever, (as it is here promised) so that there shall be no more breach of conjugall love and communion for ever betwixt them. Ama amorem illius. Oh love this love of his, saith Bernard, and reciprocate. And as the wife will keep her bed onely for her husband (saith Mr. Bradford Martyr) although in other things she is content to have fellowship with others; as to speak, sit, eat, drink, go, &c. so our consciences (which are Christs wives) must needs keep the bed, that is, Gods sweet promises, alone for our selves and our husband; there to meet together, to embrace, and laugh together, and to be joyfull together: If sin, the law, the devil, or any thing would creep into the bed, and lie there, then complain to thine husband Christ, and forthwith thou shalt see him play Phineas part. And again, if Satan should summon us, saith he, to answer for our sinnes, or debts, in that the wife is no sutable person, but the husband, we may well bid him enter his action against our husband Christ, and he will make him a sufficient answer. Thus Mr. Bradford in a certain letter of his unto a friend.

In righteousness and in judgement, in loving kindnesse, &c.] These are the gems of that ring that Christ bestoweth upon his Spouse, saith Mercer. These are those κερίδια, or love-tokens, that Christ the Bridegroom giveth to his Bride the Church, saith Tarnorius. Here he promiseth to performe to her, and to work in her all those offices and requisites due from married couples in that estate the one to the other. God will both justifie her, by the imputation of Christs righteousness; and sanctifie her by the spirit of judgement, that is of sanctification. (See John 16. 10, 11. Matth. 12. 20. and the Note there.) And because the best have their frailties, and although they be vessels of honour, yet are they but earthen vessels, and have their flaws, their cracks, therefore it is added, I have betrothed thee unto me in loving-kindnesse, and in mercies. q. d. My heart and wayes towards you shall be full of gentlenesse and sweetnesse, without morosity or harshnesse. My loving-kindnesse shall be great, Neh. 9. 17. marvellous great, Psal. 31. 21. Excellent, Psal. 36. 7. Everlasting, Esay 54. 8. Mercifull, Psal. 117. 2. Multitudes of loving-kindnesse, Esay 63. 7. as for my mercies, or bowels of compassion towards you, they are incomprehensible; as having all the dimensions, Ephes. 3. 18. Thy mercy O God, reacheth unto the heavens, there's the height of it: Great is thy mercy towards me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowermost hell, there is the depth of his mercy. The earth is full of thy goodnesse, there is the breadth of it. All the ends of the earth have seen thy salvation, there is the length of it. O pray to see that blessed sight, Ephes. 1. 18. and 3. 18. that beholding as in a glasse, this glory of the Lord, shining bright in his Attributes, you may be transformed into the same image, from glory to glory: and as in water, face answereth to face, as lead answereth the mould, as tally answereth tally, Indenture, indenture, so may we resemble and expresse the Lord our Husband, in righteousness, holinesse, loving-kindnesse, tender mercies, and faithfulness: that as the woman is the image and glory of the man, so may we be of Christ. For our encouragement it must be remembered, that the Covenant that Christ maketh with us, is a double Covenant, to performe his part as well as ours, to make us such as he requireth us to be in all holy conversation and godlinesse: for which end also we have a duplicate of his Law written in our hearts, Jer. 31. 33. a law in our mind, answerable to the law of his mouth, Rom. 7. 23. In a word, he graciously undertaketh for both parts: therefore is the Covenant everlasting, and the fruits of it are sure mercies, compassions that fail not. In fœdere novo nihil potest incidere quo minus sit æternum, quum non sit ei adjecta conditio, saith Mercer upon this Text: that is, In the new Covenant there can nothing fall out whereby it should not be everlasting, sith there is no condition required on our part. That saith, or faithfulness, mentioned in the next verse, God requireth not as a mutual restipulation of our part. (as works were in the old covenant) But here it is rather a declaration of his pleasure what he would have us to do, and whereto he will enable us. It is not a condition to endanger the Covenant; but an assurance, that he will give us strength to keep it.

Verse 20. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness ] Tremellins, Drusius, and Tarnonius render it in fide in faith, and interpret it of de fide vera et salvifica of that true justifying faith whereby we are united to Christ: And for this they urge the next words, as an Exposition of these. And they shall know the Lord: alledging some other texts of Scripture wherein saving knowledge is put for justifying faith, as Esay 53. 11. Jer. 31. 33. Job. 17. 3. The Septuagint also render it ἐμψυχον. Now ἐμψυχον in the New Testament is oft used for saving and growing faith Tit. 1. 1. Col. 2. 1. and 3. 10. which indeed is the bond of the spirituall marriage: and is it self nothing else but a fiduciall assent presupposing knowledge. For man is a rationally creature, faith a prudent thing, comprehending in it self these three acts: 1. knowledge in the understanding. 2. Assent or rather Consent in the Will. 3. Trust or confidence in the heart; certainty of Adherence: if not of Evidence. The Papists fasten faith in the will, as in the adequate subject, that they may the mean while do what they will with the understanding and the heart. To which purpose they exclude all knowledge, & detest Trust in Christs promises, expunging the very name of it every where by their Indices Expurgatorij. A blind belief as the Church beleeves is as much as they require of their misled and muzzled Profelytes. Bellarmino faith that faith may far better be defined by ignorance then by knowledge. But how shall men beleeve on him of whom they have not heard? Let us leave to the Papists, their implicit faith and their blind obedience: and cry after Christ as that poor man did. Lord that mine eyes might be opened, and that I may know the Lord ] yea grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. These things have I written unto you (faith Saint John to those that were no Babyes or Zanyes in faith or knowledge) that beleeve on the name of the Son of God that ye may know that ye have eternall life, and that ye may (yet more) beleeve in the Son of God. David though he had proceeded further in the discovery of Divine truths then those before him, Psal. 119. 99. yet he was still to seek of that which might be known ver. 96. Even as those great discoverers of the new-found lands in America were wont to confesse at their return, that there was still a Plus-ultra more yet to be discovered.

1 John. 5. 13.

Verse 21. And it shall come to passe in that day ] In that time of grace and reconciliation, fitly set forth by the name of a day in regard of 1. Revelation. 2. Adornation. 3. Consolation. 4. Distinction. 5. Speedy Preterition;

I will hear faith the Lord of Hosts; ] that is, I that have the command of both the upper and nether springs and forces, Sun, Moon, Stars, &c. Deut. 4. 9. those storehouses of Gods good treasure which he openeth to our profit Deut. 28. 12. and therefore makes a scatter of riches upon the earth by their influence. I that stop and unstop those bottles of the skie the clouds which there hang and move, though waightie with their own burden: I that make the earth to bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and meat to the eater, Esay 55. 10. &c.

I will hear the heavens ] Heb. I will answer: that is I will so hear as that I will answer: so will not great ones sometimes: or if they do, yet the poor man speaks supplications, but the rich answereth him roughly. Solyman 2 The grand Signior, when many thousands of his poor Christian subjects, to be eased of their heaveie taxations fell down before him, and offered to turn Mahumetans, rejected their conversion, and doubled their taxations. God hath here a great sort of suppliants. (The Poets say, that Lita or Supplications are alwayes about Jupiter) the heaven, the earth, the corn, &c. and he heareth and speedeth them all. Never any humble petitioner went sad out of his presence: Never said he to the house of Israel, Seek ye me in vain. The Heathen-idols may do so, but He scorns it. Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? Surely they cannot, till God have heard and answered them. The genealogie of rain of corn and wine is here resolved into Jehovah: and he promisseth to endow his beloved Spouse with them as part (though the least part) of her joynture. All are yours for you are Christs 1 Cor. 3. 23. In marrying with the heir you have right to All. Here is omnium rerum ubertas ob Deisemen Christum, faith Hier. plenty of all things for Christs sake, who where ever he comes, cometh with a Cornucopia a horn of salvation, besides a largesse of outward comforts. This was very necessary doctrine at all times to be taught in the Church, lest pressed with miseries, men should faint in their minds. Christ knowes we have need of these things also: and therefore not only bids us pray, but promiſeth to give us our daily bread by a concatenation of cauſes, by a ladder of providences which the Heathens called Deſtiny, but the Saints call it the harmony of the world; a gallant deſcription whereof we have Ezr. 1. far different from the Stoikes Fate or the doctrine of Plato and Ariſtotle and other of the worlds wizards concerning the divine providence, which they either denied or imbaſed.

and they ſhall hear the earth ] which being chapt and ſcorcht ſeemeth to ſollicit ſhowers and fattening influences by an elegant Proſopopœia, as if theſe inſenſible creatures underſtood what they did: when men are once in covenant with God, all the creatures will be ſerviceable to them, yea greedy to do them good: they wil even cry for it.

Verſe 22. And the earth ſhall hear ] That is, ſhall bear great ſtore of corn, wine, and oil; new and freſh oil the word ſignifies, newly expreſt, clear and ſhining, ſuch as is called golden oil, Zech. 4. Gods dear children ſhall have the beſt of the beſt, Eſay 55. Even the kidneyes of wheat, or whatſoever dainties the earth can afford them. They ſhall suck honey out of the Rock; or, if it be but water, yet it ſhall be to them as ſweet as hony, becauſe therein they taſte and ſee the Lords goodneſſe, and they have meat to eat that the world wots not of.

and they ſhall hear Jezreel ] that is they ſhall answer the pains and prayers of Gods people, who are here called Jezreel ſtill (though the Septuagint read it Iſrael) not to upbraid them with their former wickedneſs and calamities thereby procured (which yet was the firſt reaſon of that name given them Ch. 1.) but rather to ſet forth the riches of his grace imparted to ſuch a graceleſs people. And withall to ſhew that nothing could hinder them from partaking of thoſe covenant-mercies, and that happy communion with God whereto they were now reſtored. This very name of theirs (once their ſhame ſhould now turn to their glory. Of Jezreel ſcattered by God (which is one ſignification of the name) they ſhould become Jezreel a ſeed of God (which is another) that they might comfort themſelves with the hope of Chriſt the promiſed ſeed, and know that their poſteritie ſhould not ſo degenerate into Gentility, but that many of them ſhould embrace Chriſt and inherit the promiſes, as did Araunah the Jebuſite who became a famous Proſelyte Zach. 9. 7. (ſee the Note there) and as Jether the Iſmaelite, 1 Chron. 7. 17. was for his faith and religion called an Iſraelite 2 Sam. 17. 25. and as Chriſt callieth himſelf ſon of Na-zareth as a title of honour, which was once caſt upon him as a reproach.

Verſe 23. And I will ſow her unto me in the earth ] Not in the air, as once, when they were ſcattered into the four winds of heaven, but in the earth: which the heavens ſhould hear verſe 21. the inhabitants whereof ſhould be multiplied: and become as the ſand of the ſea which cannot be meaſured, nor numbred, Chap. 1. 10. See the Note there, and Jer. 31. 27. Ezek. 36. 37. The Preaching of the Goſpel is a kind of ſowing of ſeed, 1 Pet. 1. 23. and this ſeeding is in the earth that they may be gathered into heaven, where the mower ſhall fill his hand and he that bindeth ſheaves his boſom. And although Gods elect lie here for a time under the clouds, yet at length they ſhall fructifie, and many ſpring from them by whom the name of Chriſt ſhall be ſo propagated. He ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his dayes, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall prosper in his hand Eſay 53. 10.

and I will have mercy upon her ] Her unhappy name Lorubamah ſhall be done away, and the contrary come in place. Lo this is as it were the epilogue of the Sermon, and it is very comfortable. The Sun of righteouſneſs loves not to ſet in a cloud. Gracious is the Lord, and righteous, yea our God is mercifull. Be it that he is once righteous, yet he is both gracious and mercifull for it. Pſal. 116. 5. The Jewes, for their ſeventie years captivity in Babylon, had ſeven ſeventies of yeers (ſet forth by Daniels weeks) granted for the enjoying of their own country. Gods mercie bear the ſame proportion to his puniſhments (when he hath to deal with his elect people) which ſeven a complete number, hath to an unity. This promiſe here made, the Apoſtle teſtifieth Rom. 9. 25. to be begun to be fulfilled in his time by the converſion of ſome Jewes, and calling of ſome Gentiles. The full accompliſhment thereof we daily expect and pray for.

and I will ſay to them ] that is, I will make them ſo: as when he ſaid to Lazarus come forth of the grave, he brought him forth: together with his word there went forth a power.

here; we say thus when we believe and obey. There shall be restored therefore between God and his people, a most sweet harmony, and an intimate conjunction: such as he had before described to be betwixt himself and all the second causes, for his Churches sake; And truly it is never will with us indeed, till the heavens answer the earth, till Christ the Sun of righteousness shine into our hearts, that we melt and comply as here, and as Zach. 13, 9. See the Note.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. Then said the Lord unto me, Go yet, &c. ] This Yet is emphaticall: and it is as if he had said Go over the same subject again in a shorter discourse: and lay before them the same truths, but in more lively colours, that the obstinate may be left without excuse, and the penitent may not be left without comfort. Ierum abi, Go to them once more, and be instant with them or stand over them as Saint Paul saith. 2 Tim. 4. 2. and as Saint Paul doth, in crying down the Jewes conceit of being justified by the works of the law, and in disgracing the sin of fornication so common at Corinth. Chrysostom at Antioch having preached sundry Sermons against swearing, was at length asked when he would preach upon another subject? He answered when you leave swearing, I'll leave preaching against swearing. Austin would have a preacher so long to pursue and press the same point, untill by the gesture and countenance of the hearers he perceive that they understand it, and will practise it. This is to what the word of God upon people (as Moses his phrase is) by going oft over the same thing, as the knife doth the whet-stone. A like type to the former is here first propounded, secondly expounded, that at length it might fasten. A preacher must not desist, though at first he prevail not (as some from this second injunction collect, that this Prophet would have done) but he must turn himself into all shapes and fashions both of speech and of spirit to win people to God, with all long suffering and doctrine, 2 Tim. 4. 2. And this the Lord here teacheth Hosea to do by his own example of patience and tolerance, notably set forth in this ensuing type.

Love a woman beloved of her friend yet an adulteresse ] This was an harder task then to take her chap. 1. 2. in hope she would prove honest. But now that she hath plaid the adulteresse and so deserved to be discarded, yet to love her, yea and that when she is habituated and hardened in her lewd practises (as the Hebrew word signifieth) Durus est hic sermo, who can bear it? If none else can, yet God both can and will, as appeareth by this whole Parable wherein the Prophet is commanded to represent God, as in the former type Chap. 1. and by loving that wife which he had taken before, though she had plaid false with him, to shew what was the love of God toward Israel. She forsaketh me, saith He, who give her all the good she either hath or hopeth for, and followeth after those that put bottles of wine to her mouth, she loves those flagons, &c. Ah sinfull nation, a people laden with iniquity, &c. howbeit I will not relinquish her, but will love her freely as if she had never offended me. O matchless mercy. O concio plena consolationis! O most comfortable Sermon. God so loved the world, the Mundus immundus, that he gave his onely begotten Son, &c. This was a Sic without a Sicut, there being nothing in nature that can possibly parallel it. See Rom. 5. 8. God loveth Apostates, idolaters, adulterers, yet not as such, but as he intendeth and respecteth their conversion to himself: which nothing will sooner effect then the sense of such an undeserved love. I am not ignorant that another sense is set upon these words, as thus; Go yet love a woman not married, as yet but espoused unto thee, who may hereafter be thy wife; but is for her adultery rejected for a long season: so God loved the Israelites as an adulterous spouse: and therefore for a long while neglected, but yet at length to be taken by him to wife, according to Chap. 2. 15. 19.

Beloved of her friend ] sc. of some paramour, as Ier. 3. 1. thou hast played the harlot, with many lovers. These the Greeks called ἐταίρος fellow-friends, the whore was called ἐταίρα: so they flattered their own vices putting gilded names on them, as our blades name drunkenness good-fellowship, harlots she-finders, &c. The Septuagint render it a woman that loveth naughty things or naughty packs. But I like the former interpretation better; and it is agreeable to the Chaldee Paraphrast.

Who look to other gods ] Look and lust, ut vidi! ut perij! the mind lodgeth in the eye, and looketh out at that window of wickednesse. If I beheld the Sunne when it shined, or the Moon walking in brightnesse: And my heart hath been secretly enticed: or my mouth hath kissed my hand, &c. Job alludeth to the practise of those old Idolaters, which was to kisse their Idols, if they could reach them, as 1 King. 19. 18. (Cicero tels of the image of Hercules, cujus mentum osculis adorantium attritum fuit: and the Papists to kisse their pictures, that hard Marble is worn with it, saith Sir Edwin Sands, an eye-witnesse: ) But when they could not come at the Idol to kisse it, they looked up and kissed their hand, in token of homage: and this was called adoration. This looking to other gods, imports a turning toward them. Se Deut. 31. 18, 20. a loving them, a longing after them, and an expectation of some good from them. No wonder therefore that such whorish hankerings and honings were offensive to the jealous and just God: but the unjust knoweth no shame, Zeph. 3. 5. men are forbidden so much as to lift up their eyes to their Idols, Ezek. 23. 27. And shall I lift up mine eyes unto the hills (saith David, as some read that Text) as if from thence came my help? Abfit. Christs Spouse hath a Doves chaste eye: and he would have her like that Persian Lady, who being at Cyrus his Wedding, and asked, how she liked the Bride-groom? Howe saith she, I know not. I saw no body there but my husband.

and love flagons of wine. ] Luxury is the ordinary companion of Idolatry, as Exod. 32. 6. 1 Cor. 10. 7. Revel. 18. 13, 14. O monachi vestri stomachi, &c. At Paris and Lovain, the best wine is called Vinum Theologicum, the Divinity-wine: it is also called, Vinum Cosj, i.e. caloris, odoris, saporis, optimi. Those Clergy-Louists lick up all: those Abby-lubbers are good for nothing but to devour grain, like vermine: those wine-bibbers and flesh-mongers (as Salomon calleth them) are no better then the excrements of humane society, gelulum, belly-gods, and fit servants of those dungy-gods, as idols are called, Hab. 2. 18. with Ezek. 4. 17, 18. And a scavenger whose living is to empty privies, is far to be preferred before such an one, as looking to other gods, and making his gut his god lives but to fill privies. For a flagon of wine, or a meals-meat, any god may soon have the hearts and services of such as have (Poliphenus-like) no supream deity but their belly.

Verse 2. So I bought her to me ] God is to be obeyed, though it go never so much against the heart, and the hair with us. Ἐκ τῆς Θεοῦ. Follow God was a Heathen, but an honest precept. This he that would do, must first deny himself, and say with that Dutch Divine, Veniat, veniat, verbum Dei, &c. Let a word of command come forth from God, and we will submit thereto, though we had six hundred lives to lose, yea though we can see no reason for it. Indeed, in humane governments, where reason is shut out, there tyranny is thrust in. But where God commandeth, there to ask a reason is presumption, to oppose reason, is the rebellion.

I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of silver, ] That is, fifteen shekels, or shillings, or thereabouts: no great price it was that he gave for her, whether for hire or dowry: probably it was in order to marrying her, and in reference to that law, Deut. 21. 11. Israel was once a precious people, Gods peculiar treasure, such as comprehended all his gettings. The Jews have a saying, that those seventy souls, that went down with Jacob into Egypt, were more worth then all the seventy Nations of the earth beside. But now behold, how cheap they are grown; they are valued all of them at fifteen pieces of silver, a goodly price. (Zach. 11. 12. Matt. 27. 9.) If the tongue of the righteous be as choice silver, yet the heart of the wicked is little worth, Prov. 10. 20. There, (as in the Sea) is that Leviathan (the king of all the children of pride) and there are creeping things innumerable, crawling lusts, and lawlesse passions; but for any thing of worth, it is not there to be had. Hence as at the last destruction of Jerusalem, thirty Jews were sold for one penny, so here the whole body of the Nation are bought and sold for a small sum. How weak is thine heart, (how light-cheap) saith the Lord God to this light-huswife, seeing thou dost all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman? God and his people reckon of men by their righteoufnesse: He looked down from heaven to see who sought after God, &c. Psal. 14. 3. As for others, he regards them no more then men do drosse, draffe, chaffe, or such like refuse stufte, Psal. 119. 119. Psal.

Psal. 1. 3. &c. what ever great thoughts they take up of themselves, and how ever the world rate them. Antiochus Epiphanes, that great king of Syria, is called a vile person, Dan. 11. 21. And, the adversary is this wicked Haman, saith Ester: that was his true title, which he perhaps never heard till now.

And an homer of barley, and an half homer of barley. ] God buyes not this people (though for never so little) to starve them, but alloweth them alimony, though not so fine a food: barley and not wheat. See Revel. 6. 5. prisoners pittance, course fare, such as slaves and beasts are fed with; as she had been like horse and mule, Psal. 32. and lest she should wax fat and kick, she is held to strait allowance. Whereby is signified the mean and low condition that the ten Tribes (and afterwards all the Jews) should be in, till Christ came to marry them to himselfe. First, they should be valued but at half the price of a slave. Secondly, they should be courfully fed, as beasts, with barley, or perhaps, not so well as the Jews beasts: for among them, the mouth of the Ox treading out their corn, might not be muzzled. But the Heathens were wont to put an Engin about their servants necks, and it reached down to their hands, that they might not so much as lick of the wheat-meal, when they were sifting it. Now they were scattered among the Heathen, and sold to the Nations for nought, Psal. 44. 11, 12. They that were wont to feed delicately, were desolate in the streets: they that were brought up in scarlet, embraced dunghils, Lam. 4. 5. their flagons of wine were turned into tankards of water, and their bellaria, or junkets (so the Septuagint render it, and not flagons) into brown-bread, horse-bread: that so those whom pride, fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idlenesse had undone, hardship and penury might reduce to duty. God would seem for a time to have forgotten them, that they might at length remember themselves: he loves to chastise mens insolency with indigency, as he did Hagar, Gen. 21. 15. and the Prodigals, Luke 15. who for his twinish life, was brought to swines-meat, and thereby brought home to his father. It is the way of God to humble those he intendeth good unto, to prepare them for mercy by cutting them short of these outward comforts. Though this be here a threatening, yet there is a promise in it, verse 3. that God will take off the smarting plaister, so soon as it hath eaten out the proud flesh. It is in very faithfulness that he afflicteth his people, because he will be true to their souls, and save them. And hence it is that he so diets them, and keeps them short, that he may do them good in the latter end, that he may change their bricks (made in their bondage) into Saphires, and Agates, See Exod. 24. 10. with Isai. 54. 11.

Verse 3. Thou shalt abide for me many dayes, ] Even till the last dayes, verse 5. or last year, as Ezekiel hath it, chap. 38. 8. Thus they have abode, or sat (as a desolate widow, so the Hebrew hath it) 700. years before Christ, and above 1600. years since in a most forlorn condition; crying out in their daily prayers to God, Veniat regnum tuum, bimehrah, bejamenu, Let thy kingdom come speedily, even in our dayes. And again, Edifica templum tuum, adifica, adifica, cito, cito, cito; Lord build, build, build thy Temple quickly, quickly, quickly. But Gods time is not yet come; for they are not yet thoroughly humbled. Were they but ripe, he is ready: when help is seasonable, his fingers itch (saith One) to be doing, as the mothers breast akes, when it is time the childe had suck, Exod. 12. 40, 41. At midnight were the first-born slain, and Israel sent away, because then exactly the 400. or 430. years of their captivity in Egypt were expired. So Dan. 5. 30. In that night was Belshazzar slain: because then exactly the seventy years were ended. God promiseth to take this Church again to wife, but having found her formerly so fickle and faithlesse, he would for a long time trie her, and keep her unmarried as a probationer: he would lay her (as we do filthy garments) a soaking, and a frosting, for many hundred years, to try them, and to purge, and to make white, even to the time of the end, because it is yet for a time appointed, Dan. 11. 35. And to presume to prescribe to him in this case, is to set the Sun by our Dial. As he never fails his in his own time, so he seldom comes at ours. Here then our strength is, to sit still, Esay 30. 7. and not to start up, and say as that impatient Prince did, 2 Kings 6. 30. What should I wait for the Lord any longer? Shall Christ lose his right in his wife, because he takes her not by the day set down in our Calender? Possibly the Calender of heaven hath a post-date to ours. Sure it is, that we are apt to antedate the promises promises in regard of the accomplishment: as those Jer. 8. 20. that looked for help that summer at furthest, but were deceived. See the disease and the remedy put together Hab. 2. 2. 3. and learn to wait. God will surely bring us to it if we belong to him: and thereby inure us both to patience and continence as here.

thou shalt not play the harlot &c.] thou shalt not hasten after another God, and so multiply sorrows upon thy self Psal. 16. 4. as he that hath broke prison gets but more irons to be laid upon him and a stricter watch, Psal. 44. 19. the Church though sore broken in the place of dragons, and covered with the shadow of death, yet she stretched not out her hands to a strange God. She knew that was not the way to get off with comfort. Is it because there is no God in Israel, that thou gaddest to the God of Ekron. 2 King. 1. Should not a people seek unto their God? from the living to the dead? Should they seek to slip out at a back-dore and to help themselves by sorry shifts, or sinister practises. Is that ever like to do well? or will not such be miserable even by their own election, Ion. 2. 8. Wherefore if God defer to help (as he doth usually) hold out faith and patience. Wait upon him who even waits to be gracious, for he is a God of judgement and well knoweth how and when to deale forth his favours: Cito data cito vilescunt, Manna being lightly come by, was as lightly set by. He therefore suspends us, that he may commend his mercies to us: and when he comes with them, be the better welcome. The longer he holds us in request, the more will he do for us at length: and if we abide for him many dayes, we shall be no losers thereby.

for I also will be for thee] He will love those that love him, and honour those that honour him. Yea, if any man love me, saith Christ, my Father will love him, and I will love him, and will manifest my self unto him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. Joh. 14. 21. 23. I will gather them (sc. into my bosome out of all nations) that are sorrowfull for the solemn assembly who are of thee, to whom the reproach of it was a burthen. Behold at that time I will undo all that afflict thee &c. Zeph. 5. 18. 19. 20. God esteems highly of those that abide for him in their banishment, that stay for him till he minde marriage with them, that stick to him in affliction, that resolve to reserve themselves for him, so as if they cannot have comfort in God they will have none elsewhere. The Cherethites and the Pelethites that were with David at Gath, and afterwards stuck to him when Absalom was up, they were ever neare about him, as his guard, and dear to him as his favourites. God is All in all to those that with the Spouse will be his altogether: he will do good to them with his whole heart, that seek him with their whole heart &c.

Jer. 29. 13.

Verse 4. For the children of Israel shall abide many dayes without a king &c.] They shall be as it is said of the Brasileans, Sine rege, sine lege, sine fide, in a wofull confused estate, both for State and Church. This they had brought upon themselves by their Idols set up at Dan and Bethel: that is, in the place of judgement, and in the house of God (so Dan and Bethel signify.) Bethel was become Bethaven, and the place of judicature (called by Solomon the place of the Holy God Eccle. 8. 10.) so corrupted, that people were ready to say as Themistocles once did, that if there were two wayes shew'd him, the one leading to hell and the other to the Tribunal, he would chuse that which went to hell and forsake the other. That corruption caused this confusion. The children of Israel shall be without and without, here are six withouts that they might be sensible of their abuse of mercies, and see bona a tergo formosissima good things fairest behind, their worth best appearing by their want. The Persian law commanded, that at the death, of their kings, there should be πενθήμερον ἀνομιαν a suspension of lawes, a lawlesse liberty, for the space of five dayes: that subjects might know the necessity of government, by being bereft of the benefit of it for a time: and the better prize it when they had it. The like custome they have now in Turkey at the death of the Grand Signor, which is no sooner known, but every man doth what is good in his own eyes, till his successor be sent for, and set upon his throne. Israel hath neither King nor Prince, Ruler nor Civil Magistrate of their own, (the ten tribes I meane: for Judah had both Prince and Priests after the captivity, till the last desolation, since which they have) no forme nor face of Church or common-wealth, no not of a corrupt or depraved Church, meant here by Image and Teraphim, See 2 King. 17. 10. much less of such an one as God had prescribed, meant by sacrifices and Ephod. Prophets conceit was that this people were called Judai because they received ius Dei, their law from Gods mouth. And Josephus calleth their common wealth a Theocratie, or God-government. They received their order both for Church and common-wealth from heaven: which no other people ever did in the same manner; and might truly take up that of the Prophet Esay; The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our law-giver, the Lord is our King, he will save us. But man being in honour is without understanding &c. Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked: then he forsook God which made him, and sacrificed unto devils, not to God, to Gods whom they knew not, to new Gods, that came newly up &c. When Ephraim spake and spake right there was trembling and none durst budge against him: but when he offended in Baal, he died: then every paltry adversary trampled upon him as a dead man, then every scurilous Poet could insult over him and cry, Credat Judaeus Apella Non ego: then every common Turk could by way of execration say, Judaeus sim si falla, and in detestation of a thing: I would I might die a Jew then, a dispersed and despised people they are (none more) under the cope of heaven; partly for their former Idolatry, but principally for their rejecting of Christ crucified: whom they cannot but in their consciences know to be the Shiloh that should come, fith the scepter is so longe since departed from Judah, and a Law-giver from between his feet Gen. 49. 10. That for their sins which are many (say the Talmudists) he yet hides himself in the caverns and secret places of the earth, is συνδυαζόμενος a simple pretence, or rather a subtlety of Satan, to hold them still in blindness, till God unseale their eyes: till when things that are never so clere will not be beleevd.

Then indeed hath Jacob the right fruit of his sufferings, when he makes all the stones of the Alter, as chalk-stones, crumbling them to crattle: when he puls down the groves and images, those Balaams-blocks that lay in his way to God, and now resolves to return,

CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Heare the word of the Lord] This is the beginning of a new Sermon, or judicall act of God against the ten tribes, which are here convented, convinced, sentenced. It begins with an Oyes, like that of St. Paul. Act. 13. 16. Men of Israel and ye that feare God (if any such be in so generall a defection) give audience. Ye have heard Gods mind before parabolically delivered and in types: now heare it in plaine tearmes, that you may see and understand and be converted and I may beale you. Heare and your souls shall live. Heare him that speaketh from heaven, even that excellent speaker, as he is call'd Dan. 10. that Arch-prophet whom ye are bound to heare Deut. 18. 18. Mat. 17. 5. upon paine of death Heb. 12. 25.

the Lord Christ I mean who speaketh with Authority and is mighty in Word and deed. He it was whom Isaiah saw upon his throne, and heard speaking Jeb. 12. 41. And it is a Rule in Divinity, that where the old Testament bringeth in God appearing and speaking to the Patriarches, Prophets and people, it is to be understood of the second person. Hear therefore and give ear, be not proud for the Lord hath spoken it. The Lion hath roared, who will not fear? The Lord God hath spoken, who can but hear and fear, humble and tremble?

ye children of Israel] But oh how altogether unlike your father? Even as unlike, as Jehoachim (that degenerate plant) was to his father Josiah, that plant of renown? His heart melted when he heard the law, 2 Chron. 34. but Jehoiachim cut it with a penknife and cast into the fire Jer. 35. 23. These were Israels children, and named the house of Jacob, as those in Micah chap. 2. 7. but an empty title yeelds but an empty comfort at last. Is the spirit of the Lord straitened? (saith the Prophet there:) were these Jacobs doings? Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? were you Israelites indeed, I should not thus lose my sweet words upon you: but you would incline your ears and come unto me, hear as for life it self: especially since I am sent unto you (as once Abijah was to Jeroboams wife) with heavy tidings, with such a Citation or proceffe from heaven as may well be unto you as Samuels message was to Eli; that made both his ears to tingle; or as the hand writing was to Balthasar, that made his knees knock together.

For the Lord hath a controversie with the inhabitants of the Land] The former title (children of Israel was too good) for them: they had disgraced their fathers family, and were therefore (Reuben-like) fallen from their dignity. They shall henceforth be called the inhabitants of the Land, as the wicked are called Revelation 12. 12. in opposition to the heavens and those that dwell therein, the Burgesses of the new Jerusalem: Abraham had seed of two sorts some were as the dust of the earth Gen. 13. 16. others as the Stars of heaven Gen. 15. 5. And all are not Israel that are of Israel, Rom. 9. 6. Multi sacerdotes et pauci sacerdotes, saith Chrysostome. There are many Miniiters, and yet but few: many in name, but few indeed: workmen that need not be ashamed; Nomen inane, crimen immane. It was cold comfort to Dives in flames, that Abraham called him Son; or to Judas, that Christ called him Friend; or to these rebellious Jewes, that God sometimes called them his people, and had rooted out the cursed Canaanites to make room for them, when as they lived in Gods good Land, but not by Gods good Lawes: for which cause the Lord hath here a controversie with them, a suit at law: and being himself both plaintiffe and Judge, he is sure to cast them; yea to cast them out of that good Land as evils tenants, that should hold no longer: for vers. 3. he threatneth to plead against them non verbis sed verberibus with peevance and with blood as Ezek. 38. 22. to make them say as Isai. 45. 9. Wo to him that striveth with his Maker, that hath him for his adversary at Law; such a one is sure to be undone unless he agree with him quickly, whiles he is yet in the way with him, and before he be brought to the tribunall, For even our God is a consuming fire, Heb. 12. 29. his tribunall also is of fire, Ezek. 1. 27. his pleading with sinners in flames of fire, 2 Thes. 1. 7. the triall of mens works shall be by fire, 1 Cor. 3. 13. the place of punishment a lake of fire fed with a river of brimstone, Isai. 30. 33. O pray therefore and prevent, that God enter not into judgement with us: for if so, no man living shall be justified in his sight. Gods people may have and shall be sure to have the devil an adversary at Law against them, as Saint Peters word signifies 1 Pet. 5. 8. The accuser of the brethren he is called, which accuseth them before God day and night Rev. 12. 10. But him they may resist stedfast in the faith, and recover cost and charges of him, as I may so say: for they have Christ to appear for them in heaven, Heb. 9. 24. as a lawyer for his client. 1 Job. 2. 2. to nonsuit all the devils accusations. The Spirit also (as a Paractus or Advocate) maketh request for them to God in their hearts, and helpeth them, to make Apologies for themselves 2 Cor. 7. 11. Again, if a man sin against another, the judge shall judge him, saith old Eli to his wicked sons: that is, the Umpire may come and take up the controversie and put an end to the quarrell. But if a man have sinned against the Lord, who shall intreat for him? who dare be his dayes-man? no mediation of man can make his peace: no reconciliation can be here hoped for, but by running from God as a Judge, to God as a Father in Christ. Let men there-therefore be wrought upon by the reprehensions of Gods faithfull Ministers, by whom he appealeth and impeacheth them. If they stand out as the old world did against that Preacher of righteousness, by whom he went and preached to those spirits now in prison, (because they would not take up the matter in time, but future and fooled away their own salvation) he will break off his patience and say as Gen. 6. 3. My spirit shall not alwayes strive with these men, for that they also are flesh, &c. and are therefore the worse, because they ought to be better: therefore they shall fare the worse, because they would be no better. I have hewed them by my Prophets, Hos. 6. 5. but can make no good work of them. Like ill timber, they fall to splinters: and like ill stones, they crumble all to crattle: They are therefore fitter for the highway & chimney corner, then for my building. My spirit shall therefore strive no more with these perverse persons, either by preaching, disputing, convincing, &c. in the mouth of my ministers; or in their own minds and consciences by inward checks and motions which they reject, refusing to be reformed, hating to be healed. I will take away my spirit, and silence my Prophets (as he doth verse 4. of this chapter) and resolve upon their utter ruine: sith there is no good to be done upon them, See Vers. 17. of this chapter, with the Note there. Curra ergo pœnitentia, ne præcurrat sententia, &c.

Because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the Land ] Lo here the charge: and knowing the judgement of God you must needs say that those that commit such things are worthy of death. Rom. 1. 32. For if the word spoken by Angels (the law given by Angels in the hand of Moses a Mediatour) were stedfast: and every transgression and disobedience (that is every commission and omission) received a just recompense of reward, Heb. 2. 2. how should these miscreants escape, that had left off to do good: and for evil, they did with both hands earnestly; For the second table of the Law, it is articulated against them, (for matter of omission or defect) that there was neither truth nor mercy in the land: And for the first table, that there was no sound knowledge of God there; and consequently, no care of God, either inward or outward worship: for there can be neither faith, nor repentance, nor due obedience yeelded to an unknown God. A Samaritane service there may be (ye worship ye know not what) but not a rationall service, Rom. 12. 1. such as whereof a man can render a reason. Now God will not have a blind sacrifice, Mal. 1. 8. 1 Chr. 28. 9. It is nothing worth that men are vertuous, unless they joyn to their vertue knowledge. 2 Pet. 1. 5. nor that they offer sacrifice, if they bring the sacrifice of fools, Eccles. 5. 1. Those must needs be abominable and disobedient that are to every good work reprobate, injudicious as the word signifies Tit. 1. 11. and what marvell though men be alienated from the life of God (or a godly life) through the ignorance that is in them? Eph. 4. 18. But let us take the words in order. There is no truth. Here God declareth against them, (as Lawyers do against offenders in courts) and not for trifles, but first for want of truth or trustinesse in word and deed: without which humane society is but funiculus ex arena a rope of sand, or arena sine calce sand without lime, it cannot hold together. It was an old complaint of the Prophets, that Truth was fallen in the streets, and faithfulness failed from among the children of men. When Varus was slain, Augustus grieved excessively; and that because non esset à quo verum audiret, he had none about him that would tell him the truth of things, and deal plainly with him. Multis annis jam transactis, nulla fides est in patris, &c. Jeremy bewailes it in his treacherous country men, that they bent their tongues like their bowes for lies; but they were not valiant for the truth on the earth, Jer. 9. 3. they were mendaciorum loquacissimi (as Tertullian phraseth it) loud and leud liars, and (as Egesippus saith of Pilat) they were viri nequam et parvi facientes mendacium, naughty men, and such as made nothing of a lie. But Gods people are said to be children that will not lie Esay 63. they are φιλαληθείας lovers of truth, which was the title of honour given to Arrianus the Greek historian: when as of all other historians Vopiscus testifieth, that there is none qui non aliquid est mentitus that taketh not the libertie to lie more or lesse. And for slipperinesse in contracts and covenants, nothing is more common amongst men; its counted a peccadello. But the God of truth, the faithfull and true witness, as Christ is called, counteth it not so. See Ezekiel 17. 15. &c. 1 Tim. 4. 2. and 2 Timothy 3. 3. There are that take truth here for justice; according to Zech. 8. 16. and so it suites well with that which followeth. Nor mercy ] These two are set together Mic. 6. 8.

(to do justly, and to love mercy) as the summe of the second Table. Mouth-
 Jam. 2.15.16. mercy there was enough, such as was that in St. James his dayes. But there is not any one that taketh Zion by the hand, Esay 51. 18. that draweth out his soul to the hungry, and dealeth his bread to such, Esay 58. 7, 10. Sodom had fulnesse of bread, but would part with none to strengthen the hands of the poor and needy, Ezek. 16. 49. Therefore she had judgement without mercy, that had shewed no mercy, Esay 23. 18. Whereas Tyrs when once she left heaping, and hoarding, and brought forth her merchandise for them that dwell before the Lord to eat sufficiently, and for durable clothing, is renowned and reckoned among those that came to Christ with their desirable things, as some read that Text, Hag. 2. 7. Colligent omnes suos thesauros (so Calvin readeth it) they shall come with strong affections, with large contributions, as those primitive Saints did, Acts 4. 34. The same Hebrew word Chafid, signifieth both Saint and Mercifull; and it comes of Chesed, the word here rendred mercy, or bounty. The tender mercies of the Almighty shew forth abundantly upon such, leave a compassionate frame upon their hearts, as in the Gaoler, Acts 16. Their thoughts steeped in the mercies they have received, are dyed of the same colour as cloth is in the dye-fat. Col. 3. 12. This Text, after no mercy, fitly addes, nor knowledge of God in the land. ] Heb. And no knowledge of God: or, because there is no knowledge of God in the land. Did men but know God savingly, had they but tasted and seen how good the Lord is, they would not be so hide-bound, and strait-handed to their poor brethren: but ready to distribute, willing to communicate. They are the dark places of the earth, that are full of the habitations of cruelty, Psal. 74. 20. But in the kingdome of Christ they shall not hurt, nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord: why? For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea, Esay 11. 9. St. Paul thanks his ignorance for his persecutions, and blasphemy, 1 Tim. 1. 13. and resolves the sinne of those Kill-Christis into their not knowing of him, 1 Cor. 2. 8. Surely as toads and serpents grow in dark and dirty fellars: So doth all sin and wickednesse in an ignorant and blinde soul. Hence, in this Text, after no knowledge of God in the land, followeth that black bed-roll of abominations in the next verse. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing. &c. As blinde Ale-houses are sinks and sources of all villany: so are blind hearts.

In the land. ] Though it were a land of light, a very Goshen in comparifon of the rest of the world: Though in Judah was God known, and his name great in Israel, Psal. 66. 1. Men may remain grossely ignorant amidst a multitude of means: and in a land of righteousness deal unjustly, and why? they will not behold the Majesty of the Lord, Esay 26. 10. & verse 1. They will not see. They are willingly ignorant, saith St. Peter: Us liberius peccent libenter ignorant, saith Bernard. They bate the light, saith our Saviour; It is unto them as the shadow of death, saith Job. Hence they shut the windowes, lest it should shine upon them: or if it do, they rebel against it, rush against it, as Bats do against torches in the night. That light they have by nature, or otherwise (as a Prophet from God) they detain and imprison in unrighteousnesse, Rom. 1. 18. Their knowledge of God, if any, is onely apprehensivè, and not affectivè, cognoscitiva, non visa directiva, illightning, not transforming into the same image, so as to make them children of light: It is notionall knowledge, not experimentall and practicall. Hence, such outrages in their lives, such errors and enormities: For,

2 Pet. 2. Verse 2. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, ] Heb. To swear, and lie, and kill, and steal, and commit adultery: To do all this is held, licitum & solenne, lawfull, or at least pardonable. It is grown to a common practise: and custome of sinning hath taken away sense of sin.

By swearing, ] Heb. by cursing, or swearing with an execration and cursing, which was commonly added to an Oath, to confirm it the more, Deut. 29. 12, 21. Nehem. 10. 29. And indeed, in every lawfull oath, God is called to witnesse, to blesse us, if we swear right, and to curse us, if otherwise. Such an oath is a speciall part of Gods worship, and is oft put for the whole: as here, false and frivolous oaths are put for the violation of the whole first Table, and set in opposition to the knowledge of God in the Land: like as lying is opposed to truth; and killing, stealing, stealing, whoring, to mercy, or kindnesse: Before, God had complained of their defects, or omissions: here of their commissions and flagitious practises. Swearers (but especially false-swearers) are traytours to the State, as appeareth here, and Ier. 23. 10. they bring a curse, nay a large roul of curses (ten yards long, and five yards broad) upon their hearts, and Zach. 5. 2. and shall one day howl in hell. The same word that is here rendred swearing, signifieth also to howl, Joel 1. 8. Go to now therefore ye swearers, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you, Iames 5. 1, -- 12. Weep here, where there be wiping handkerchiefs in the hand of Christ: better do so, then yell with devils who have borrowed your mouthes, to utter horrid blasphemies. Swearing is of the devil, saith our Saviour, Matth. 5. 37. and it brings men to the devil, saith St. Iames, Chap. 5. 12. They object, that they swear nothing but the truth. But that's not alwayes so. Swearing and lying are here set together, as seldom sundred. The marvel, if he that sweareth commonly, do not forswear frequently: for he sweareth away all his faith and truth. But, say they swear truth: yet that excuseth not. Truth is but one circumstance of an oath, Ier. 4. 2. Men, as they must swear in truth, so in righteounesse, (not rashly, furiously) and in judgement, not in jest. Swear not in jest, lest ye go to hell in earnest. It is the property and duty of a godly man to fear an oath, Eccles. 9. 2. and not to forbear it onely. As on the other side, no surer signe of a profane person, then common and customary swearing. It were well if such were served as Lewis the ninth of France served a citizen of Paris; he seared his lips for swearing, with an hot iron. And when some said, it was too cruel an act; I would to God said he, that with searing mine own lips with an hot iron, I could banish out of the Realm all abuse of oathes. Those that plead, they have gotten a custome to swear, and therefore they must be born with, shall have the like answer from God that the thief had from the Judge. He desired the Judge to spare him, for stealing had been his custome from his youth, and now he could not leave it. The Judge replied, it was also his custome, to give judgement against such malefactours; and therefore he must be condemned.

And lying, ] Fitly linked with swearing. Some gravell or mud ever passeth away with much water; so do some lies with much swearing. How oft do men forget their oathes, and swear again that they have not sworn at all? Should mens excrements come from them as oft, and they not feel it, they would be full sorry, and ashamed thereof. Now swearing and lying file men much worse then any jakes can do, Mark 7. 22. and render them odious to God and good men. Lying is a blushfull evil: Therefore doth the liar deny his lie, as ashamed to be taken with it; and our ruffians revenge it with a stab. God rankes and reckons it with the most monstrous sins; and thrusts it out of heaven, Revel. 21. 8. Aristotle saith, It is in it self evil and wicked, contrary to the order of nature, (which hath given words to expresse mens mindes and meanings) destructive to humane society. Pythagoras was wont to say, that in two things we become like unto God. 1. In telling truth. 2. In bestowing benefits. Now, Mentiri, is contra mentem ire; To lie, is to utter a known untruth with an intention to deceive, or hurt. The Cretians of old were infamous for this: The Friars of late: 'Twas grown to a proverb among our forefathers: A frier, a liar: 'Tis now amongst us, Every liar is, or would be a thief. Hence, lying and stealing go coupled here: but betwixt them both stands killing, as ushered in by the former, and oft occasioned by the later, Pro. 1. 19.

and killing, ] This follows fitly upon the former: for truth hath alwayes a scratcht face. The devil was first a liar, and then a murderere. He cannot so well murder, without he slander first. The credit of the Church must first be taken away, and then she is wounded, Cant. 5. 6. The people here in England, once complained, that Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, that noble Patriot, was twice murdered: first, by detraction, and then by deadly practise. The French have a Proverb; Those that have a minde to kill their neighbours Dog, make the world beleve he was mad first. This is their Proverb, and accordingly was their practise in the Massacre of Paris. A little before which, they gave out, that the Protestants met by night, to plot against the State, and to commit all manner of uncleannesse amongst themselves. This is an old trick of the Devil and his Instruments, first to belie the Church, and to represent her to the world in the ugliest hue; and then

then to persecute her, like as of old they used to put the poor Christians in Bears or Lions skins, and then bait them with dogs. Paulus Fagius reports a story of an Egyptian, who said, that the Christians were a colluvies of moist filthy lecherous people. And for their keeping of the sabbath, he saith, they had a disease upon them, and were therefore faine to rest every seventh day. The Papists accused the Waldenses (those ancient Protestants) for Manichees; and that they affirmed there were two beginnings of things, God and the devill &c: and all because they constantly affirmed that the Emperour had no dependance upon the Pope. They gave them out also for Arrians (and published their Croisado's against them as enemies to Christ) and all because they denied that a crust was transubstantiated into Christ. To make way for the ruine of England by the gun-powder-plot, they gave out beyond sea that the people here looked as black as devils, were grown barbarous, and did eat young children. That we held opinion to worship no God, to serve the times, to prefer profit before right, to pretend the publike cause to our private lusts, to cover hatred with flattery, to confirme tyranny by shedding innocent blood, to keep faith no longer then will serve our own turnes &c. And if the plot had taken effect, they had fathered it upon the Puritans (having proclamations ready framed for the purpose) that under that name, they might have sucked the blood and revelled in the ruines of all such here, as had but the love, or any shew of sound religion. The word here used for killing signifies to kill with a murdering weapon, such as David felt in his bones, Psal. 42. 10. such as Colignius and other the poore Protestants felt in the French Massacre: where the Queen of Navarre was poisoned, the most part of the peerlesse Nobility in France murdered, together with their wives and children; and of the common people an hundred thousand in one yeare, in diverse parts of the realme. What should I speake of the innocent blood of Ireland, for which God hath already and yet still will make diligent inquisition. If the blood of Abel had so many tongues as drops Gen. 4. 10. what then of so many righteous Abels? Surely I have seen yesterday (saith God) the blood of Naboth 1. King. 9. 26. Murder ever bleeds fresh in his eye: to him many yeares, yea that eternity that is past is but yesterday. Neither is he wanting to punish it even in this present world. He avengeth the innocent blood that Manasseh shed, a long while after his death: he would not pardon it, no, though Manasseh repented of it, 2 King. 24. 4. The mountains of Gilboah were accursed, for the blood of Saul and Jonathan spilt upon them. 2 Sam. 1. and what a deale of doe we find in the law made, when a man was murdered Deut. 21. 1, 2. &c. the valley where the expiatory sacrifice was slaine in that case was from thenceforth to be neither eared nor sowed Verse 4. &c. in all to shew, what a precious esteem God hath of mans life: and what controversie with a land for shedding of blood.

and stealing] Those publici latrones especially, publike thieves that sit in purple robes: and by wrong judgement oppress and rob the poor innocents are here intended, as Calvin thinks; See Isa. (23. and 33.) So are all others that either by force or fraud get into their hands their neighbours goods; whether, I say, it be by violence or cunning contrivance, the Lord is the avenger of all such. 1 Thes. 4. 6. So that though haply they lie out of the walk of humane justice, and come not under mans cognizance, yet God will find them out, and send his flying roule of curses after them, Zech. 5. 2. 3. he shall vomit up his sweet morsels, here Job 20. 15. or else disgest in hell what he hath devoured on earth: as his belly hath prepared deceit, Job. 15. 35. so God will take it out of his guts againe: either he shall make restitution of his ill-gotten goods, or for not doing it, he shall one day cough in hell, as Father Latimer phraseth it.

and committing adultery] This is also an hainous crime (saith holy Job) yea it is an iniquity to be punished by the Judges Chap. 31. 11. Heathens have punished it very severely. Of one people we read that they used to put the adulterers or adulteresses head into the panch of a beast where the filth of it lay, and so stifled him. God punished those stinking Edomites with stinking brimstone for their lothsome brutishnesse; and adjudged adultery to death: because society and purity of posterity could not otherwise continue amongst men. We read not in any general commandement of the law, that any should be burnt with fire, but the high-priests daughter for adultery. Lev. 21. 9. yet it seemes it was in use before the law, or else

Judab was much to blame for sentencing his daughter in law Tamar to the fire. Gen. 38. 24. Let us beware of that sin, for which so peculiar a plague was appointed, and by very Heathens executed. See Jer. 29. 22. 23. If men be slack to take vengeance on such, yet God will hold on his controverſie against them and avenge the quarrel of his covenant (for so wedlock is called Prov. 2. 17.) either by his own bare hand, or else by the hands of the adulterers themselves. See an instance of both these even in our times: In the year 1583. in London, two citizens committing adultery together on the Lords day, were struck dead with fire from heaven in the very act of uncleanness: their bodies being left dead in the place half burnt up, sending out a most lothsome savour, for a spectacle of Gods controverſy against adultery and sabbath breaking. This judgment was so famous and remarkable that Laurentius Bayenlink a forrain historian hath thought good to register it to posterity. Mr. Cleaver reports of one that he knew that had committed the act of uncleanness: and in the horrour of conscience he hang'd himself: But before, when he was about to make away himself, he wrote in a paper, and left it in a place to this effect: Indeed, faith he, I acknowledge it to be utterly unlawful for a man to kill himself: but I am bound to act the Magistrates part, because the punishment of this sin is death: This act of his was not to be justified, Viz. to be his own deathsmen: but it shewes what a controverſy God hath with adulterers, and what a deep gash that sin makes in the conscience.

they break out ] like wild horses over hedges: or proud waters over the banks. The Septuagint renders in ἐκχυται They are poured out. And St. Jude hath a like expression, speaking of the Libertines of his time Verse 11. they run greedily, Gr: they were poured out, or poured away as water out of a vessel: they ran headlong, or gave themselves over to work all uncleanness with greediness, to satisfy their lusts, and to oppose with crest and breast whatsoever stands in their way; bearing down all before them. So Sodom and Gomorrhah are (in the seventh verse of the same epistle) said by unbridled licentiousness to give themselves over to fornication, In fornicationem effusa. And when Lot sought to advise them better they set up the bristles at him, with

Thus these Effractores (as the Psalmist somewhere calleth them) these breach-makers, breake Christs bands in sunder, (as Sampson did the seven green withes) and cast away his cords from them. These unruly Belialists get the bit betwixt their teeth, like headstrong horses; and casting their rider, rise up against him. They like men (or rather like wilde beasts) transgress the covenant Hof. 5. 7. resolving to live as they list, to take their swinge in sin: for who, (say they) is Lord over us? Tremellius reads that text, tanquam hominis, they transgress it as if it were the covenant of a man: they make no more of breaking the law, then as if they had to do with dust and ashes like them selves, and not with the great God that can tame them with the turn of his hand, and with the blast of his mouth blow them into hell. Hath he not threatened to walk contrary to those that walk contrary to him, to be as crofs as they for the hearts of them, and to bring upon them seven times more plagues then before, and seven times and seven to that, till he have got the better of them? for is it fit that he should cast down the bucklers first? I trow not. He will be obeyed by these exorbitant, yokelesse, lawlesse persons; either actively, or passively. The law was added because of transgression: and is given, faith, the Apostle, not to the righteous, for they are ἀντίνομος a law to themselves, (as the Thracians boasted) but to the lawlesse and disobedient, who count licentiousness the onely liberty, and the service of God the greatest slavery; who think no venison sweet but that that is stolen, nor any mirth but that which a Salomon would say to, Thou mad foole what do'st thou? Lo, for such rebels and refractaries, for such masterlesse monsters as send messages after the Lord Christ saying, We will not have this man to raigne over us, for these, I say, was the law made, to hamper them and shackle them, as fierce and furious creatures: to tame them and taw them with its foure iron teeth, 1 of Irritation, Rom. 7. 7. 2. ly of Induration, Iſa. 6. 10. 3. ly

So at Athens, when Scylla took the Town, there was ἀνελεῖς σφαγή, a mercilesse slaughter ; the gutters running with blood, &c. And so at Samaria ( which the Prophet may here probably intend ) when there was such killing of Kings ; ( and they fall not alone ) Hosea killed his Predecessour Pekah, as he had done Pekahiah ; Menahem killed Shallum, as Shallum had done Zacharias : so true is that of the Poet,

What got most of the first Cæsars by their adoption, or designation to the Empire, Nisi ut citius interficerentur, but to be killed so much the sooner ? All or most of them, till Constantine, died unnaturall deaths : As afterwards, Phocas the traytour killed the good Emperour Mauritius, stewing him in his own broth. Heraclius slew Phocas, putting him to a shamefull and tormentfull death, &c. Conradinus King of Germany, and Duke of Swevcland was beheaded by Charles King of Naples and Sicily ; and the headf-man presently beheaded by another, ne extaret qui jactaret tam generosum sanguinem à se effusum, ( saith mine Authour ) that there might not be any left to boast, that he had spilt so noble blood. Our Richard the third, that bloody and deceitfull man, is said to have used the instruments of his cruell plots, ( his cut-throats I mean ) as men do their candles ; burn the first out to a snuffe, and then, having lighted another, tread that under-foot. Faux ( that fatall actor of the intended Powder-tragedy ) should have been thus rewarded by his brethren in evil, had the plot taken effect. It is that famous and never to be forgotten fifth of November 1651. wherein I writ these lines : And therefore in way of thankfulness to our ever-gracious Deliverer, I here think good to set down the relation as Mr. John Vicars ( in his Quintessence of cruelty, or Poem of the popish Powder-plot ) hath declared it to the world, as he had it from Mr. Clement Cotton, the Composer of the English Concordance, who also received it from Mr. Pickering of Titmarsh-grove in North-hampton-shire, and it is thus. This Mr. Pickering being in great esteem with King James, had an horse of speciall note, on which he used to hunt with the King : This horse was borrowed of him ( a little before the blow was to be given ) by his brother in law Keyes ( one of the Conspiratours ) and conveyed to London, for a bloody purpose, which thus was plotted : Faux on the day of the fatall blow, was appointed to retire himself to St. Georges-fields, where this said horse was to attend him to make his escape so soon as the Parliament-house was blown up. It was likewise contrived, that the said Mr. Pickering ( noted for a Puritan ) should be that very morning murdered in his bed, and secretly conveyed away : As also that Faux himself should have been murdered in St. Georges-fields, and there so mangled and cut in pieces as that it might not be discovered who he was. Whereupon it was to be bruited abroad, that the Puritans had blown up the Parliament-house : And the better to make the world believe so, there was Mr. Pickering with his horse ready to make an escape, but that God stirred up some, who seeing the hainousnesse of the fact, and he ready to escape by flight, in detestation of so horrible a deed fell upon him, and killed him, and so had hackt him in pieces. And yet to make it to be more apparant to be so indeed, there was his horse found also, which was of speciall speed and swiftnesse, to carry him away : and upon this rumour, a massacre should have gone thorow the whole Kingdome upon the Puritans. But when this plot, thus contrived, was confest by some of the Conspiratours, and Faux in the Tower was made acquainted with it, ( who had been born in hand, to be bountifully rewarded for that his service in the Catholike cause ) when he saw how his ruine was contrived, ved, he also thereupon confessed freely all that he knew touching that horrid and hideous conspiracie, which ( before ) all the torture of the rack could not force him to. The truth of all this, is attested by Mr. William Perkins, an eminent Christian and Citizen of London, who had it from the mouth of Mr. Clement Cotton: which I could not but here infer, as coming to my minde and Pen, on the very day whereon ( 46. years since ) it should have been acted, when my self was but four yeers of age, and it being the utmost that I can remember: but if ever I forget, let my right hand forger her cunning. Remember, O Lord, these children of Edom, &c. Psal. 134. 5. these Romish Edomites,, Esauites, Jesuites, who said, Rase it, Rase it, even to the foundation, O daughter of Babylon, &c. The Rabbines call the Romists, Edomites, ( they interpret the mount of Esau, Obad. ver. 21. to be meant of Rome ) and well they may, for their blood-guiltinesse, for which they are hated of God, Psal. 5. 6. Who cannot but remember, that their sins ( as a cart-rope ) have reached up to heaven, Rev. 18. 5. there having been a concatenation, or a continued series of them, as the Greek there imports, and ( as some here interpret ) blood touching blood, according to Esay 1. 15. Your hands are full of blood. And Chap. 4. 4. The filth of the daughter of Zion, and the blood of Jerusalem. This sence, the Chaldee Paraphrase maketh. The Sepruagint ( with their μυγνουν, minge blood with blood ) seem to understand it of incestuous matches and mixtures forbidden, Levit. 18. 6. and yet avowed by David George and his disciples, and practised in the Court of Spain, by Papall dispensation. 7. 8. ἡκολούθησεν.

Verse 3. Therefore shall the land mourn, ] Here the Lord proceeds to give sentence; and it is dreadfull indeed. Lugebit terra, languebit incola, &c. You will not mourn, therefore your land shall: the ugly face of your sin shall appear in the miserable desolation of your Countrey: There is no truth, mercy, or knowledge of God in your land: which even groans under your burden, the axeltree thereof being ready to break: therefore it shall be eased of you, by my fore, and great, and strong sword, which shall soon make work amongst you, and lay all wast. And as Gods red horse of warre is followed by the black horse of famine, and that black one, by the pale horse of pestilence, Rev. 6. 4; 5, 8. so shall it be here. As by swearing, and lying, &c. you have broke out, so shall my whole wrath break out upon you as a mighty torrent. As blood hath touched blood, so punishment shall follow hard upon sin: for these two are knit together with chains of Adamant, saith the Poet. If thou do evil, sin lies at the door, saith God, Gen. 4. 7. that is, supplicium imminet, idque proximum & presentissimum, saith Junius there: Evil shall hunt the wicked man to destroy him: his sin shall find him out as a blood-hound, and haunt him as an hell-hag. Where iniquity breaks-fast, calamity will be sure to dine; to sup where it dines, and to lodge where it sups. No sooner had man sinned, but the earth was cursed for his sake, Gen. 3. 17, 18. It was never beautifull nor cheerfull since. At this day it lies bed-ridden, and looks to be burnt up shortly with her works, 2 Pet. 3. 10. Here it is brought in as a mother in mourning, bewailing the losse of all her children, and refusing to be comforted. And surely though the land be eased of a very heavy burden, as I have said, when purged by Gods just judgements of her ungratefull and wicked inhabitants: yet because she lies under the dint of Divine displeasure at such a time, therefore is shee rightly said to mourn in this case, and to be in a sad disconsolate condition, ( See Ier. 12. 4. ) she becomes a very Abil, ( that's the word here used, see Iudg. 15. 33. ) a Bochim, an Hadadrimmon, an Iri-land; and being desolate she mourneth unto thee: for the seeth that her convulsions are like to end in a deadly consumption.

And every one that dwellerb therein shall languish, ] Heb. shall wither as a flower, Nahum 1. 4. Or, shall be weakened. Those that now stand upon their tiptoes, and face the very heavens, stouting it out with God, shall then be weak as water, withered as a flower, strengthlesse as a moth-eaten-cloth, Psal. 39. 11. low-spirited, and crest-faln, as the king of Sodom, ( erst man good enough to look four kings in the face, but anon suppliant to Abraham, a forlorn forreiner, Gen. 14. 21. ) Manasseh that sturdy rebell, in trouble basely hides his head among the bushes, 2 Chron. 33. 11. Caligula in time of thunder ran under beds and benches. Affliction will tame, and take down the proudest spirits: they break in adversity that bore their heads on high in prosperity: they speak out of the ground, and whisper out of the dust, Esay 24. 4. that that look to be brought into the dust of death Psal. 22. 15. It is the pestilence that here seemeth to be threatened ( as before sword and famine ) and an universall pestilence too ; reaching not onely to men but to other creatures made for mans uses, which shewes the greatnesse of the wrath : like as when a King not onely executeth the traytour, but also pulleth down his house, confiscateth his goods, and and disinheriteth his children &c. But what have those sheep done ? the beasts, birds, and fishes that they must suffer also ? It is but reason they should, sith first they are part of mens enjoyments : secondly they are many times ( though harmlesse in themselves ) yet instruments of mens sin : and therefore well doth the Chaldee here paraphrase Diminutionem patientur propter hominum peccata they shall suffer for mans sin : who may therefore well say to them, as Judah did to Tamar, Thou art more righteous then I.

and the fowles of the ayre ] which shall catch the contagion, and fall down dead : as those birds do that attempt to fly over the dead sea.

and the fishes of the sea also shall be taken away ] Colligentur, conficiuntur they shall be gathered together as seeking help one of another in a common danger : and yet they shall be destroyed, the very waters being pestilentiall, as they were here in King Edward the thirds dayes ; so that the very foules and fishes had botches upon them. This was a heavier judgement then that which befell the old world : for then the fishes perished not : though the Jew-doctors would perswade us that these also died in the flood : for that the waters thereof were boyling hot.

Verse 4. Yet let no man strive nor reprove another ] let him not lose so much good labour, and spill so many sweet words upon this people : for they are grown uncounsellable, incurable, incorrigible. They have rejected the counsel of God within, or, against themselves Luk. 7. 30. corripuntur sed non corriguntur : it is because the Lord intendeth to destroy them 1 Sam. 2. 25. yea he hath determined it 2 Chron. 25. 16 Hence as dying men lose their hearing and other senses by degrees : so those that are destined to destruction grow stupid and stubborn, and will neither heare good counsel, nor see the things that concern their peace : but spurn at admonition and scorn at reproof.

And therefore God forbids to reprove such, as deplored and desperate ; to cast pearles of good counsel before such dogs, who preferre lothsome carrion before sweet odours ; yea rage at them as Tigers do, and fly in the faces of such as present them : or at best grunt and goe their wayes, as swine ; leave good counsell where they find it, not putting it in practise. Now as dogs and swine were counted unclean creatures, and unfit for sacrifice : so are such for admonition. Let a man be never so able and apt to teach, let him be vir prestans, eximius, insignis, a gallant man ( as the word here used sometimes signifieth ) and one that can do his work never so well, yet the wisdom of his words shall be despised Prov. 23. 9. Let him strive till his heart akes, & disputatos arguere, as St. Jude speaketh, he shall but strive against the stream, and by reprooving a scorner get him a blot, Pro. 9. 7. The Pharisees denied our Saviour, and blew their noses at him Luk. 16. 14. Let them alone therefore faith our Saviour to his disciples, they be blinde leaders of the blind ; ther's no good to be done of them : therefore let him that is filthy be filthy still Rev. 22. 11. and he that is ignorant let him be ignorant, sith he will needs be so, 1 Cor. 14. 38. Let him pine away in his iniquity. Let him pine and perish, go on, despair, dye, and be damned. My spirit shall no longer strive with him, unless it be by furious rebukes Ezek. 5. 15. and by fire Am. 7. 4. Oecolampadius upon this text doubts not to say that the sin of such as reject admonition, is the sin against the holy Ghost : certainly it is worse then all the forementioned swearing, lying, &c. Blind nature could see and say as much. Hesiod faith that there are three sorts of men : the first and best are those that live so well as not to need reproof. The second ( and those not bad ) are such as doe not so well, but can be content to heare of it. Impenitent persons are brats of fathomlesse perdition, they are ripe for ruine, shall fall into remediless misery, and (though never so insolent and angry against those that deale plainly and faithfully with them as in the former verse, yet) they shall never want an Hosea to tell them so to their teeth: that those that will not bend may break, that if they will needs fall they may fall with open eyes, and not have cause to say that they were not fore-warned. And this shall be done to day αὐτίμα that is, very shortly, in this present age (so some interpret it (aut certe clarissima luce, saith Mercer, or else in the open light, and in the view of all men, not in huggermugger. Tremellius thinks it is as much as rebus adhuc integris subito opprimentur, Thou shalt be suddenly surpris'd when thou art in thy flourish, and fearest no changes. This shall be as a dagger at their hearts: and shall fill their consciences with horror and distress.

This is no other then a vaine and capricious fancy saith learned Brierwood &c. Is it not altogether unlikely that the Lord in this threat might allude to that law Deut. 22. 6. Thou shalt not take the damme (Heb. the mother) with the young: But I that am above law, saith God, will cut off dam and young together in the nest, I will utterly cut off the whole nation This was fulfilled 2 King. 17. and our Prophet lived to see it, to his great heart-break. Oh that we could be warned &c. Let holy mother church of Rome (as they call her) look to it, with her doctrine of Infallibility. These Israelites gloried as much of their Mother, and thought (as Dionysius did of his kingdom) that the Church had been tied to their nation with chaines of Adamant: but their mother is here threatned to be cut off: and of the sea of Rome it is long since foretold, Babylon is fallen, is fallen &c. It is a question among Divines whether the Church can faile? It is answered, that the Catholike invisible Church cannot: but any particular and visible Church may, as this of Israel; and that of Rome, which hath long since cast off Christ, and the publike exercise of true religion: and is become ex aurea, argentea, ex argentea ferrea, ex ferrea terrea: superest jam ut in stercus abeat said one of her own sons an Augustine friar Anno. 1414. and many others of their own writers say the same necessario potius quam libenter, as wrested from them by the truth, rather then of any itching humour to disgrace their mother by uncovering her nakednesse.

Doth not wisdom cry in your streets? and knowledge (in the abundance of meanes) bow down to you as trees do that are laden with fruit, so that a child may gather them? How is it then that you (my people) are yet so hard and blockish, as rude and ignorant of me and my will, of your selves and your duties, as the blinde Ethnickes? For some of you have not the knowledg of God: I

Are destroyed, ] Or, silenced, as Matth. 22. 12. The Chaldee rendreth it obtrunuerunt, they are befotted, and so fitted for destruction: for Dem quem destruit dementat. Ignorance is the mother not of devotion, (as Papiſts say) but of destruction: and ignorant persons shall be silent in darknesse, as holy Hanna hath it: they shall lie down in sorrow, as the Prophet Esay: And although they alwayes wander and erre in heart, as not knowing Godswayes, Psal. 95. 10. 11. yet they cannot go so far wide, as to misse of hell; where they are sure to suffer both pain of losse, and pain of sense: for they shall be punished with everlasting destruction, in a flame of fire (there's pain of sense) from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power (there's pain of losse) 2 Thess. 2. 8, 9. Lo here the portion of all ignorant persons: and withall take notice of an usuall and equall proceeding of Gods impartiall justice in punishing such. He delights to punish sin in kind, to pay wicked persons in their own coyn, to overshoot them in their own bowe, to answer them in their own language, as he once did those bold Babel-builders, Gen. 11. Go to, say they: Go to, saith He: Let us build up to heaven, say they: Lets go down, and see that building, saith He: Let us make us a name, say they: Let us confound their language, that they may not so much as know their own names, saith He: Left we be scattered, say they: Let us scatter them abroad the world, saith He. Thus God worded it with them, and confuted their folly from point to point. And the like he will do with ignorant people at that great day. Depart from us, say they now to God, Iob 21. 14. Depart from me ye cursed, will He then say to them. We desire not the knowledge of thy wayes, say they, ibid. therefore I have sworn in my wrath, that thou shalt never enter into my rest, saith He. Ye have loved darknesse better then light, ye shall therefore have your belly-full of it in the bottom of hell: God loves to retaliate, as we may see here, and go no further: Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee: seeing thou hast forgot the Law of thy God, I will also (to cry quittance with thee) forget thy children. Thus by giving ignorant persons their own, he will so silence them, and even button up their mouthes, that they shall stand speechlesse; as being self-condemned.

For lack of knowledge, ] Propter non scientiam, for meer nescience, for such an ignorance as is privative onely, and of pure negation, which doth somewhat excuse a tanto, though not a toto: as in that servant that knew not his masters will, yet did commit things worthy of stripes, and had a few, Luke 12. 48. But Israels ignorance was more then all this, and a great deal worse. For did not Israel know? Rom. 10. 19. and have they not heard? yes verily: (verse 18.) No people under heaven like them for that, Psal. 147. 19. But they rejected knowledge, and affected ignorance: they hated the light, and loved darknesse better. This was the condemnation, the mischief of it, saith our Saviour; who (besides this wilfull ignorance, that mother of mischief, and main suppoert of Satans kingdome) laid down his life for the nesciences, the not-knowings of his people, Heb. 9. 7. and prayed for his persecutors at his death, Father forgive them, they know not what they do.

וְאֵלֶּיךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל

Because thou hast rejected knowledge, ] And that out of an utter hatred of it, (as the Greek word made of the Hebrew signifieth) out of deep disdain, as of a thing below thee, and vile in thine eyes, not worthy of thy pains, or pursuit. Wisdom is the principall thing, (saith Solomon, and he meaneth that wisdom that hath the fear of God for its foundation) therefore get wisdom. It is here called hadagnath, that that knowledge, by an excellency, and with an accent, in opposition to that science, falsely so called, 1 Tim. 6. 20. that knowledge that puffeth up, 1 Cor. 8. 2. as it did Ioseph Scaliger, (that gulf of learning) for whom it had been happy, that he had been ignorant but of this one thing, that he knew so much. It is the acknowledging of the truth which is after godlinesse (as the Apostle describeth it, Tir. 1. 1.) that perfects the best part of a man, that confirmeth, setteth, guideth, discerneth, differenceth him from others, who are no better then bruits (though wise in their own generation, as are the Fox, Serpent, &c.) and maketh his face to shine, Eccles. 8. 1. as Steevens did, who was taught of God, and mighty in the Scriptures. This holy knowledge was highly prized by Agur, Prov. 30. 2. but slighted by those two flubbering Priests the Ions of Eli, sonnes of Belial, they knew not the Lord, 1 Sam. 2. 12. they knew him apprehensively, but not affectively: they professed that they knew God, but in their works they denied him, being abominable, and disobedient, and to every good work reprobate, Tir. 1. 16. He that saith, I know him, (saith S. John, 1 Epist. 2. 4.) and keepeth not his Commandements, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. Many of these Jeroboams Priests were ignorant Asses; like that Bishop of Dunkeld in Scotland, who boasted, yea thanked God, that he never knew what the old and new Testament was; and that he would care to know nothing but his Portnise, and his Pontifical: Or that Idol-Pastour in Germany, who being asked by the Visitours, whether he taught his people the Decalogue? answered, that hee had not the Book so called. Others of them, that knew more of Gods minde, yet neither cared to practise it, nor to teach transgressours, Gods wayes, that sinners might be converted unto him.

I will also reject thee, ] And that with a witnesse; with an unwonted and extraordinary rejection, as the Hebrew word, Vecimaseka, (not found elswhere in the same forme) seemeth to import: God will kick such Ignoramusses out of the Priesthood, cast them out of the hearts of his people, throw them to the dunghill, as unfavourably; yea so reject them, as never to be received again, Ezek. 44. 13. God will shake them out from his house, and from his labour, Neh. 5. 13. (as the Tirshata did those Apostate Priests, Ezra 2. 63.) and lay them by, as broken vessels, of which there is no further use: taking from them even that which they seemed to have, Luke 8. 18. and blasting their gifts. See Zech. 11. ult. with the Note.

Seeing thou hast forgotten the Law of thy God, ] i. e. All that holy learning, which thou, being a Priest, oughtest to have and to hold in firme and fresh remembrance, for the good of the poor people, which, by thy default, is cut off for lack of knowledge, even the knowledge of salvation by the remission of their sins, which thou shouldest have given them, Luke 1. 77. not by infusion, but by instruction, which is the Priests proper office. But thou (alas) hast forgotten that little of my Law, that thou once hadst attained unto; and art grown as very a dolt and dotard, as Theodoros Gaza (once a great scholler, but) in his dotage so ignorant, that he knew not his letters, he could not read. Nay thou art not onely a silly Ass, but a slow-belly: all thy care is for fat sacrifices and benefices, thy wits are in thy belly, and thy guts in thy brain: hence thy forgetfulness of my Law, and of my peoples welfare. The Arabick Translation hath it thus, Inasmuch as thou hast loved this, and the consolation, therefore I will reject and forget thee, &c. Demas forsook Paul, and embraced this present world; yea he became afterwards a Priest in an Idol Temple at Thessalonica, as Dorotheus testifieth. The Vulgar Latin Translation rendereth this Text in the Feminine gender, quia oblita est against all Grammar and good reason: for the Lord here, speaketh to the Priest, and chiefly to the chief Priest, qui certe femina non erat, saith Polanus, who sure was no woman: Unlesse the old interpreter, (like another Balaams-ass) would have this to have been spoken against the Sea of Rome, wherein Pope Joan sometime sat, Anno Dom. 854. Sure it is, that the Arch-priests of Rome are so delighted in the feminine gender, that they had rather attribute the breaking of the serpents head to a woman, the Virgin Mary, then to the Man Christ Iesus: for in their last Edition of the Latine Bible, they print, Gen. 3. 15. Ipsa conteret tibi caput, She shall bruise thine head, &c. Thus Polanus.

I also will forget thy children, ] Thy spiritual children, say some, even that whole whole people who saluted their Priests (as the Papists do their Padres) by the name of Father and observed their institutes. But they do better that understand the text of their naturall children, whom God here threateneth to forget, that is, to put them by the Priests office, as he threatned Eli. 1 Sam. 2. 30. and thrust out Abiathar 1 King. 2. 27. four-score years after. It is a dreadfull thing to be forgotten of God. We take it ill to be forgotten of a friend and to be as a dead man out of mind, Psal. 31. 12. O take heed that God forget not us and our children : that he cast not off the care and keeping of us. He is so liberall a Lord and doth so little forget our labour of love and patience of hope as that he provideth for the posterity of his people, Psal. 69. 36. The seed also of the servants shall inherit it : and they that love his Name shall dwell therein. Who then would not hire himself to such a master : who would not remember Gods Law and teach it others, if but for his poor childrens sake who else will rue for it ?

Vers. 7. As they were increased ] sc. in number, wealth and honour. Their prosperity undid them, they flourished at this time in Court and Country, they waxed fat and kicked. The Priests are here accused of detestable ingratitude, and of unsufferable pride and insolency.

As they were multiplied or magnified, they have sinned against me ] that is, they have abused my gifts to my great dishonour. Like fed hawkes, they have forgot their master. Nay, like yong mules, which when they have sucked, turn up their heels and kick their dam : so did these haughty and haunty Priests. Their hearts were fat as grease, they were inclosed in their own fat, but they delighted not in Gods Law. Cum ipsis opibus lascivire cepit Ecclesia. saith Platina. The Church began to be rich and wanton at once, rich and riotous. They had golden chalices but wooden Priests, Repugnante contra teipsum felicitate tua, as Salvian saith to the Church in his time : thy prosperity is thy bane. What would he have said if he had seen the Pope in his Princely State, thundering from his Capitoll, and heard their big-swoln titles of Padre benedicto, Padre Angelo, Archangelo, Cherubino Seraphino &c. Ammianus Marcellinus a heathen historian inveiged against the Bishops of Rome, even in those purer times, for their pride and luxury. Odi fastum illius ecclesia saith Basil, I hate the haughtinesse of that Western Church. It caused the lamentable separation of the Greek Church from the Latine : the other four Patriarches (not without the like pride and stomach) dividing themselves from the Bishop of Rome, and at their parting using these or the like words. Thy greatnesse we know, thy covetousnesse we cannot satisfie, thy encroaching we can no longer abide : live to thy self. And yet if they could have held them there, and shunned those evils which they blamed in others ( walking humbly with God, and committing themselves to him in well-doing ) they might have flourished to this day. But wrangling away the truth, and contracting rust with long ease and prosperity, God was forced to scour off that their rust with bloody War by the Turks. Of whom these Churches being in fear and danger, fled to carnall combinations : sent and subjected themselves to the Bishop of Rome that they might have his help. But all in vain : for shortly after, they were destroyed, and lost all. God covered them with confusion, and turned their glory into shame. So he hath done the Roman glory in part, and will do more every day.

God will cast dirt in the faces of proud prelates, he will stain the pride of all glory cast upon them with ignominy, reproach Prov. 18. 3. crush their crown with a woe, Esay 28. 1. change their glory (their dignitie and greatnesse wherein they gloried) into shame, not without much bitternesse in the change, as the Hebrew word here used seemeth to import. Miserum enim est, fuisse felicem.

Vers. 8. They eat up the sin of my people ] that is, the sin-offerings, as Exod. 29. 14. This they might lawfully do, Levit. 6. and 10. 17. But they were greedy dogs ; and looked every one to his gain from his quarter, Esay 5. 6. 11. They winked at the peoples sins, and cared not what evils they fell into, so that they would bring in store of fat and good expiatory sacrifices, which made for the Priests advantage. They ate that on earth which they were to digest in hell: they fed upon such diet as bred the worm of conscience, that never dyes. Just so the Papists do at this day: they teach the people, though they sin, yet by giving money for so many Masses to be mumbled over, by a greasie Priest, or by so many indulgences and Dirges purchased of the Popes pardon-mongers, they shall be delivered, etiamsi, per impossibile, matrem Dei vitiaissent. I tremble to English it. Tecelus told them so in Germany; and got huge masses of money for the Popes coffers. The common sort of Papists (for want of better teaching) will say, When we have sinned we must confesse: and when we have confessed, we must sin again, that we may confesse again; and make work for new indulgences and Jubilees. But have these workers of iniquity no knowledge, that eat up Gods people as they eat bread? that drink up the blood of souls, much more worth than the lives, that Dauids men had jeopardied to procure him the water of the well of Bethlehem, which therefore he durst not drink of? This surely is that filthy lucre Ministers should be free from 1 Pet. 5. 2. Let all non-residents look to it, that carry onely forcipes et mulctrum those instruments of a foolish shepherd Zech. 11. 15. (See the Note there) feeding themselves but starving the flock: an heavy account will they one day make to the Arch-shepherd, of this their sacrilegious rapacity.

and they [set their hearts on their iniquity.] Heb. they lift up their souls: that is, they not onely prick up their ears, as Daneus expounds it to listen after sins and sin-offerings, but they greedily desire and earnestly look after such emoluments, such belly timber: being gula mancipia slaves to their guts, and wholly given up to gormandise. See the same expression: and in this sense Jer. 12. 27. Deut. 24. 15. Ezek. 24. 25. and compare the practise of Popish Priests, who make infinite gain of every thing almost, as their ringing of Saints-bells, places of buriall, selling of licenses for marriage and meates, selling of corpses and Sepulchres. All things are saleable and soluble at Rome: and the savour of gaine sweet, though it come out of a stinking stewes, or Jewes counting-house. The Priests had a trick by wires to make their Images here wag their chaps a pace, if some good gift were presented: as if otherwise, to hang the lip in token of discontent.

Vers 9. And there shall be like people like priest] i. e. they shall share alike in punishment, as they have done in sin: neither shall their priesthood protect them, any more then it did Elies two sons, whose white Ephod covered foule sins. A wicked Priest is the worst creature upon earth. Who are devils but they that were once angels of light? and who shall have their portion with the devill and his angels, but those dehonestamenta cleri mala moneta ministri, bad-liv'd ministers: It was grown to a proverb in times of Popery, that the pavement of hell was pitch with souldiers helmets and shavelings-crowns. Letters also were framed and published as sent from hell: wherein the devill gave the Popish clergy no small thanks, for so many millions of soules as by them were daily sent down to him. The Priests might haply hope to be privileged and provided for in a common calamity, for their office-sake; As Chrysostom saith that Aaron (though in the same fault with Miriam Numb. 12. 1: yet) was not smitten with leprosy as she, for the honour of the Priesthood, lest such a foule disease on his person should rebound to the disgrace of his office. But I rather think he escaped by his true and timely repentance; whereby he disarmed Gods indignation, and redeemed his own sorrow and shame. For God is an impartiall judge: neither is there with him respect of persons: Priest and people shall all be carried captive one with another (the priests for the people, according to that of Esay, I am a man of polluted lips: for why? I live among a people of polluted lips and have learned their language: and especially the people for the priests Jer. 23. 10. 14. 15. from the prophets there goes profaneness quite through the land) so they shall fare the worse one for another: they shall all be involved in the same punishment. Onely it shall be more grievous to the priest, by how much higher thoughts he had of himself: looking on the people as his underlings, as they did Joh. 7. 49.

and I will punish them for their wayes] Heb. visit them So Exod. 32. 34. In the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them. God hath his visitation-dayes wherein to visit those visitours the priests; and his articles will be as strict and as criticall (saith one) as ever was the inquisition of Spain, or Lambeth. It was therefore therefore good counsell that a Martyr gave his wife in a letter, Among all other prisoners visit your own soul, and set all to rights there: for else, what will you do when God riseth up? and when he visiteth, what will you answer him? And that which Tertullian gave Scapula a Pagan persecutor; Si nobis non parcis, tibi parce: si non tibi, Carthagini. God will surely make inquisition for our blood: therefore if thou wilt not spare us, yet spare thy self: if not thy self, yet spare thy country, which must be responsible when God comes to visit.

and reward them for their deed] Heb. I will make to return your doings: Hence this is well observed by a good interpreter; Sin passeth away in the act of it with much sweetness: but God will make it return back againe in the guilt of it, with much bitterness.

Verse 10. For they shall eat and not have enough] Onely they shall be filled with their own wayes Prov. 14. 14. but that is but to feed upon the wind with Ephraim Hos. 12. 1. which breedeth nothing but troublesome belching, or a doglike appetite (as they call it) that cannot be satisfied. These greedy dogs the Priests that did eat up the sins of Gods people and thought to have full gorged themselves therewith, they met with that sore plague of unsatisfiability for the present (a man may assoon fill a chest with wind as a soul with wealth; See Eccles. 5. 10. with the note) and for the future they coveted an evill covetousnesse to themselves, for they gat Gods curse along with their evill gotten goods which will bring them to a morsel of bread: they have not onely sucked in the ayre, but pestilentiall ayre, that not onely not fills them, but kills them too. Psal. 127. 3.

2 King. 10. 7.

they shall commit whoredome and shall not increase] The Chaldee renders it, They shall take wives, but shall not beget sons. Sol & homo generant hominem saith the Philosopher: but unless God the first agent concurr, that cannot be neither: Loe, Children are an heritage of the Lord: and the fruit of the womb is his reward, saith David to his son Solomon, who found it true by experience: for by all his wives and concubines (no lesse then a thousand) he had but one son that wee read of and he was none of the wisest: nothing like Edward the sixth whom alone Henry the eighth left (with his two sisters) to succeed him: though he had so many wives and concubines. Wantonnesse is a sin commonly punished with want of posterity: especially when it is accompanied with obstinacy in evill courses, as in Ahab; who, to crosse Gods threat of rooting out him and his posterity, took many wives; and so bestir'd him, that he begat of them seventy sons, but with evill successe: for they were all cut off in one day. Wicked men must not think to carry it against God: and to have their wils al dispetto di Dio, as that prophane Pope said; and as that gracelesse Ahaziah who sent a third captaine, after that the former two had been consumed with fire; as if he would despitfully spit in the face of heaven, and wrestle a fall with the almighty. Let no man expect to prosper in unlawfull practises, to encrease by whoredome, as these profane priests sought to do, that they might be full of children (any how) and leave the rest of their substance to their babes Psal. 17. 14. But fertility is not from the meanes (right or wrong) but from the Authour (many a poore man hath a house-full of children by one wife: whilest Solomon hath but one son by many house-fuls of wives) and Job could tell that whoredome is a fire that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all his increase Chap. 31. 12.

because they have left off to take heed to the Lord] God is not bound to render a reason of his proceedings, yet doth it oft as here, that he may be justified, and every mouth stopped. Their Apostasy is here shew'd to be the cause of their calamity. Time was when they took some heed to God and his wayes: they kept close to him, and observed his commandments to do them, (as the word here importeth) but now they had left off to be wise, and to do good, (Psal. 36. 3.) untill their iniquity was found to be hatefull, and themselves altogether filthy Psal. 53. 3. wicked doers against the covenant Dan. 11. 30. 32. Apostates cannot chuse unto themselves a worse condition *2 Pet. 2. 20. 22. Hath ever any waxed fierce against God and prospered? even of late my people is risen up against me as an enemy Mic. 2. 8. but what will they do in the end thereof?

Verse 11. Whoredome and wine and new wine have taken away the heart] i. e. have have robbed my people of themselves, and laid a beast in their roome. Any lust allowed and wallowed in will eat out the heart of grace; and at length, all grace out of the heart. Hence temporizers grow in time so saplesse, heatelesse and heartlesse to any good: some unmortified lust or other thereis, that as a worme, lieth grubbing at the root, and makes all to wither: that, like a drone in a hive, proves a great waster: that, as a moth in fine cloth, consumes all: or, as the light of the Sun, puts out the light of the fire: so here. But above all others, sensuall sins and fleshly lusts (such as are here instanced whoredome and drunkenness) do war against the soule 1 Pet. 2. 11. do take away the heart: they besot and infatuate a man, they rob him of his reason, and carry away his affections &c. Grace is seated in the power of nature. Now these carnall sins disable nature: and so set it in a greater distance from grace. They make men, that formerly seemed to give light as a candle, to become as a snuff in a socket, drowned in the tallow: or as a quagmire which swallowes up the seed sown upon it, and yields no increase. Who are void of the spirit but such as are sensual? Jude. 18. 19. And who are they that say unto God, depart from us, but those that dance to the timbrel and harp &c. Job. 21. 11. They saw God and did eat and drink Exod. 24. 11. that is, say some, though they had seen God, yet they turned againe to sensuall pleasures: as if it had reference to that eating, and drinking, and rising up to play, upon the dedication of their calf, which was presently after. Aristotle writeth of a parcel of ground in Sicily that sendeth forth such a strong smell of fragrant flowers to all the fields and grounds thereabouts, that no hound can hunt there; the sent is so confounded with the sweet smell of the flowers. Let us see to it that the pleasures of sin take not away all sent (and sense too) of heavenly delights: that the flesh, as a Syren, befoole not wisdomes guests, and get them away from her Prov. 9. 16. as Elian tels of a whore that boasted, that she could easily get all Socrates his Schollers from him, but he could not recover one againe from her. Indeed none that go unto her return againe, saith Solomon Prov. 2. 19. for she gets their hearts from them: as David found, and Solomon complained. David was never his own worthy againe, after he had moyled himself with that beastly sin. And Solomon when he gave himself to wine and women (though his mother had sufficiently warned him Prov. 31. 3. 4.) he quickly took hold of folly Eccles. 2. 3. his sensualities drew out his spirits and dissolved him, & brought him to so low an ebb in grace, that many question his salvation. Bellarmino reckons him among reprobates: but I like not his judgement. Let ministers of all men (this is spoken of the Priests chiefly, as some think) see to it that they fly fleshly lusts: that they exhort the younger women with chastity as St. Paul bids Timothy: and drink, (if any, yet but) a little wine for their healths sake: remembering that the sins of Teachers are teachers of sins; and that their evil practises fly far upon those two dangerous wings of Example and Scandall. Ministers should be no wine-bibbers or Alestakers 1 Tim. 3. 3. ne magis solliciti de mero quam de vero, magis ament mundi delicias quam Christi divitias, lest being lovers of pleasure more then lovers of God, that should befall them that Solomon foretelleth Prov. 23. 33. thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things. A belly filled with wine foameth out filthinesse saith Hierom. Wine is the milk of Venus saith Another. Vina parant animos Veneri saith a third. Whoredome is usually ushered in by drunkenness: Hence they stand so close together in this text.

But I rather think it is meant of Rabdomancy a kind of odd way of divining by rods and staves, as Nebuchadnezzar is brought in doing Ezek. 21. 22. and was common in those Eastern parts: Or else hereby are meant the Southsayers and Magicians rods as Exod. 7. 12. Heb. 11. 21. it is said that Jacob worshipped leaning upon the top of his staff, and thereby lifting up his body to do reverence to God, where the Vulgar text, omitting the preposition, hath committed a manifest error, in saying that Jacob worshipped the top of his rod or staff; as if there had been some picture there engraven: the Hebrew is towards the beds-head. And it is certaine that Jacob worshipped none but God: and bowed himself either towards the beds-head, or leaning upon his staff, to testify his humility, faith and hope, which adoration how far it was from the worshipping of Images (which the papists vrge from this place) who seeth not?

Now if that spirit of error 1 Jon. 4. 6. and of giddinesse Esa. 19. 14. causen men to erre, and carry them with a vehement Impetus to idol-worship (which indeed is devil-worship) what wonder? men that are that way bent know not of what spirit they are: little think that they are acted and agitated by the devill. O pray with David Psal. 143. 10. that that good spirit of God may lead us into all truth and holinesse.

and they are gone a whoring from under their God] i. e. from under the yoke of his obedience: they are gone out of his precincts, and therefore also out of his protection: as a whore that forsaketh her husband, and is therefore worthily cast off.

Verse 13. They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills &c.] as nearer to heaven; and in an apish imitation of the Patriarches, who, before the Tabernacle was set up, sacrificed in high places (as Abraham on mount Moriah &c.) that their bodies being mounted aloft, they might the better lift up their hearts and eyes to heaven, saying as it were to all worldly cares and cogitations as Abraham did to his servants whom he left at the foot of the hill, Abide you here with the Ass. Hierom upon this place hath this Note: Israel saith he, loveth high places, for they have forsaken the high God: and they love the shadow, having left the substance. But what could be more absurd then to think as they did, that God who is omnipresent, was neerer to them on hills and high places, and further off them in vallies. See Esa. 57. 7. Ezek. 6. 13. This they had partly also learned of the heathens; from whom neverthelesse God had shut them up as it were in an Island (so their land is called) that having little commerce with them, they might not learn their manners. But our nature is very catching this way: and doth as easily draw and suck Idolatry to it, as the loadstone doth iron, or Turpentine fire.

under oaks, and Poplars, and Elmes, because the shadow thereof is good] So they proceed from one evil to another; for sin is infinite and when a man is fallen down one round of Hells ladder, he knowes not where he shall stop, or how he shall step back. These Idolaters as they had their high places in imitation of the Patriarchs; so their groves of shady trees consecrated to their Idols; to strike reverence into their hearts, as they conceited, and for the greater solemnity. Sin comes commonly clothed with a shew of reason Exod. 1. 10. Come let us deale wisely say they: yet every oppressor is a fool Prov. 28. 16. It will so blear the understanding, that a man shall think he hath reason to be mad, and that there is some sense in sinning. But especially will-worship hath a shew of wisdom Colos. 2. ult. or the reason of wisdom, as the word there signifieth, the very quintessence of it. Hence the Papists write Rationals, whole volumes of reason for their rites and ceremonies.

ceremonies in Divine service, ( the shadow is good, say these therefore, we get under trees ) And John Hunt, a blasphemous Papist, in his humble Appendix to King James, Chap. 6. was not afraid to say, That the God of the Protestants, is the most uncivil and evil-mannered God of all those, who have borne the name of Gods upon the earth : yea worse then Pan, God of the Clowns, which can endure no ceremonies nor good manners at all. O tongue, worthy to be pulled out, cut in gob-bets, and driven down the throat of this hideous blasphemer : for he could not but know the God of the Protestants ( as he scornfully termeth him ) to be the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Did not Rabshakeh rail after this rate upon good Hezekiah, for taking down the high-places, and Altars of God ( as he called them ) which yet God well approved of ? 2 King. 18. 22. Mr. Boroughs maketh mention of a Lady in Paris, who when she saw the bravery of a Procession to a Saint, shee cried out, Oh how fine is our religion beyond that of the Huguenots : They have a mean and beggerly religion, but ours is full of solemnity and bravery, &c. The Catholikes in their Supplication to King James for a Toleration plead, that their religion is ( inter cetera ) so pleasing to nature, and so futable to sense and reason, that it must therefore needs be the right. A proper Argument surely : and not all out so convincing as that of Cenalis Bishop of Auranthes, who writing against the Christian Congregation at Paris, and basely slandering their meetings, as if they were to maintain whoredome, will in conclusion needfully prove ( if he could ) the Catholikes to be the true Church, because they had bells to call them together ; but the Huguenots had claps of Harquebuzes, or Pistoles, for that purpose, &c.

As. & Mon.

Therefore your daughters shall commit whoredome, ] Impune, they shall do it, and for a punishment of your Idolatry : and in as much as you have prostituted your souls ( that is, my spouse ) to the devil, your houses shall be whorehouses, to your utter disgrace and heart-break. Certain it is, that where there is most Idolatry, there is most adultery ; as at Rome, which is nothing else but a great brothel-house, and hath fully made good that of the Poet ;

Nomen ab in verso nomine fecit Amor.*

Thus God punished the idolatrous Ethnikes, by delivering them up, to passions of dishonour, or vile affections ; to Sodomitical practises, which did abase them below those four-footed beasts which they adored, Rom. 1. 23, 24, &c. Some put off all manhood, became dogs, worse then dogs, scalded in their own greafe, verse 27. and this is there called, a meet recompense, such as God here threatneth. Mr. Levely ( a very learned Interpreter ) thinketh that when God saith here, your daughters shall commit whoredome, and your daughters in law ( for so he renders it ) shall commit adultery, he meaneth it not of voluntary whoredome, but of that which is forced : according to that of Amos to Amaziah Chap. 7. 17. Therefore thus saith the Lord, thy wife shall be an harlot in the City : and thy sonnes and daughters shall sell by the sword, &c. that is, thy wife shall be ravished by the enemy. Theodoret also is of the same judgement.

Verse 14. I will not punish your daughters, when they commit whoredome, ] q. d. I will not once foul my fingers with them, or be at pains to correct them : but they shall take their swinge in sin, for me, &c. Origen in a certain Homily quoting this Scripture, saith, Vis indignantis Dei terribilem vocem audire, &c. Will you hear the terrible voice of a provoked God ? hear it here, I will not punish, &c. You shall be without chastisement, for an argument that you are bastards and not sons. Never was Jerusalems condition so desperate, as when God said unto her, My fury, shall depart from thee, I will be quiet and no more angry, Ezek. 16. 42. Feri Domine, feri, cried Luther, Strike Lord, strike, and spare not.

Hom. 8. in Exod. 20.

Ferre minora volo, ne graviora feram.

There is not a greater plague can befall a man, then to prosper in sinfull practises. Bernard calleth it, misericordiam omni indignatione crudeliorem, a killing courtesie, Ezek. 3. 20. I will lay a stumbling-block before him : that is, saith Vatablus, tablus, I will prosper him in all things, and not by affliction restrain him from sin. Job surely counts it for a great favour to sorry man, that God accompts him worth melting, though it be every morning; and trying, though it be every moment. And Jeremy calleth for correction, as a thing that he could not well be without, Correct me O Lord, &c. Job 7. 17, 18.

For themselves are separated with whores, ] God seemeth to speak this to others by change of person: Ac si puderet ipsum cum putidis hircis verba facere, as if he were ashamed to speak any longer to such stinking goats. Separates they were, but of the worst sort: they separated themselves with harlots, they gat into by-corners, far from company ( specially of those that know them ) that they might more freely act filthinesse. But what could the Heathen say, Turpe quid acturns, Te sine teste time. Conscience is a thousand witnesses: and men must not think long to lie hid: for God will be a swift witness against the adulterers, Mal. 3. 5. and, it may be, bring them into all evil, in the midst of the Congregation and assembly, Prov. 5. 14. See the Notes on both places. Some render it, They beget bastards, such as the Mule is, ( which also hath his name pered, from this root ) Or they shall be unfruitfull as the Mule. Wantonnesse is commonly punished with want of children. ( See the note above on verse 10. ) Those children that they had took after them, it appeareth here: they were naught by kind, as being an adulterous generation, a seed of evil-doers, a race of rebels; and therefore it was no matter, how little they multiplied. Let those that have children, and others under their charge, keep home as much as may be, and not be separate from their families ( with whores especially ) lest their daughters mean-while commit whoredome, ( counted but a trick of youth, a sin that that slippery age may easily slip into, and not easily be descried, Pro. 30. 19. ) and their spouses commit adultery, by occasion of their leud absence, and to cry quittance with them at home. Let them also make Nebuchadnezzars law, that none under their roof, say, or do ought against the God of heaven; and themselves be first in the practise of it, as so many living lawes, walking statutes; so may they hope to keep their houses chaste, and honest, and provide for the credit and comfort both of themselves and of theirs.

Dan. 3. 29.

And they sacrifice with harlots, ] Heb. Holy-harlots, sacrificing-harlots, such as Solomon speaketh of, Prov. 7. 14. and as those wicked women that lay with Elias sonnes at the door of the Tabernacle, 1 Sam. 2. 22. Or as King Edward the fourth, his holy whore, as he used to call her, that came to him out of a Nunnery, when he list to send for her. His kinsman Lewis the eleventh of France, ( knowing his disposition ) invited him to the French Court, promising him his choice of Beauties there, and adding Adhibebimus tibi Cardinalem Burbonium, then shall Cardinall Burbon shrieve you, and absolve you of all your misdoings, &c. 'Tis well enough known what foul work the Heathens made at their sacra Eleusinia, Bacchanalia, Lupercalia, priapeia ( the same with the sacrificing to Baal-Peor, as Hierom holds. ) And to these this Text may seem to refer; and this people too have separated themselves to that shame.

Therefore the people that doth not understand, shall fall. ] Heb. shall be beaten, as some render it, shall be perplexed, and troubled, so as they know not what to do, or how to help themselves, as Aben-ezra from the Arabick. The Chaldee interprets it, collidetur, shall be dashed in pieces. Ignorance is much instanced and threatned in this Chap. three or four severall times at least. Not because men sin onely by ignorance, as the Platonists think: but 1. to aggravate the hatefulnessse of this sinne, which men use so to excuse and extenuate. 2. to taunt and abase the rebellious nature of man, who now is set in grosse ignorance, and ready to pitch headlong into hell, as the just guerdon of his aspiring and reaching after forbidden knowledge. 3. because ignorance ( affected especially ) is the source of many sins, and a main support of Satans kingdome. See the Notes above on verses 1, 6, &c.

Omnis peccans, est ignorans.

Verse 15. Though thou Israel play the harlot, yet let not Judah offend. ] Left if God lose his glory among them too, he lose it altogether. Judah was grown almost as good as Israel, ( in the dayes of that stigmatick Ahaz especially, 2 Chron. 28. ) Aholibamah, as Aholibah, Ezek. 16. But let it not be so, saith the Prophet, sith not to be warned by the harmes of another, is a just both presage and desert of ruine. Altioris igitur perditio tua sit cautio. Seest thou another shipwrack? look well to thine thine own tackling. God will take that from Israel, that he will not from Judah; because these had many means and priviledges, that the other had not; as the Temple, Priests, Ordinances, &c. Now, good-turnes aggravate unkindnesses; and mens offences are increased by their obligations. Judah was and would be therefore the worse, because they ought to have been better. And God can better bear with aliens, then with his own people, when they offend. The Philistims may cart the Ark, but if David do it, wo be to Uzzah. You onely have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore, (whosoever scape) I will punish you for all iniquities, Amos 3. 2. The unkindness of your sins is more then all the rest: it grieves Gods Spirit, and goes neer his heart, &c.

Come not ye unto Gilgal, neither go ye up to Bethaven, ] Alias Bethel, the house of God, so called by Jacob, who there had visions of God, and said, How fearful is this place? It is even the house of God and gate of heaven. But now it was become the hate of heaven, and gate to destruction, as being abused to idolatry. Corruptio optimi fit pessima. Bethel is become Beth-aven, the house of iniquity and misery, of sin and of sorrow: for their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another God, Psal. 16. 4. The word there rendred sorrows, signifieth also idols, Psal. 115. 4. and 106. 36. because they that worship them, are sure of sorrows.

Come not therefore to Gilgal &c. ] Gilgal was the key of Canaan, situate between Jordan and Jericho, famous for sundry services there performed to God, as were easie to instance; but now basely abused to Idol-worship. Hence this charge (and the like in Amos chap. 5. 5.) not to come neer it; and the rather because it was a border Town, and so more dangerous. Keep thee far from an evil matter, saith Moses, Come not nigh the doors of the harlots house, saith Solomon. From such stand off, or keep aloof, saith Paul. Shun them as the Sea-man doth sands and shelves, as the same Apostles word imports, 1 Thes. 3. 6. A man cannot touch such pitch, but hee shall be defiled: nor live any while in Mauritania, but hee shall be discoloured. Cum fueris Rome, &c. Let them look to it that so much affect to see Italy, Rome, the Pope, the Masse, &c. But what dost thou here Elias? may God well say, as 1 King. 19. 9. What protection hast thou here, either from infection of sin, or infliction of punishment? Saith not the heavenly Oracle, Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, Rev. 18. 4. Mr. Ascham (school-master to Queen Elizabeth) was wont to thank God, that he was but nine dayes in Italy: wherein he saw in that one City of Venice more liberty to sin, then in London he ever heard of in nine yeers. And is it safe pressing into such pest-houses? tampering with such temptations? Tertullian tells of a Christian woman, who being at a play, was possessed of a devil. And when he was asked by those that came to cast him out, how he durst possesse one that was a Christian, he answered, I found her in mine own place. Take heed therefore, ye come not where the devil hath to do. He that doth so, and yet prayes, Leade us not into temptation, may as well thrust his finger into the fire, and then pray that it may not be burnt.

Nor swear, The Lord liveth: ] i. e. Swear not by God and Malcham, Zeph. 1. 5. make not a mixture of religions: halt not between two opinions, think not to serve two masters. What agreement hath Christ with Belial, or the Temple of God with Idols? Cast away (saith one to a neuter passive, Nicodemus) either thy wings, or thy teeth: and loathing this Bat-like nature, be what thou art, either a bird, or a beast. There were (belike) in Judah, that thought they could both frequent places of Idol-worship, and serve Jehovah, swearing by his Name. God will have none of that: if he be served by men at all, he must be served truly; that there be no halting, and totally, that there be no halving. To swear vere, rite, juste, as 1er. 4. 1. is a piece of Gods service, and we may well reckon it amongst our good-works. But to swear by Idols, or before Idols, made to represent the true God (as those bugges at Dan and Bethel, &c.) or by the creature, Matth. 5. 24. is utterly unlawfull. It is a great dishonour to God; and a great dishonour to our selves also: for we alwayes swear by the greater, Heb. 6. 16.

the yoke. As a mad Cow, so the Septuagint. Mr. Dearing told Queen Elizabeth in a Sermon, that whereas once she wrot in Woodstock windowes, Tanquam ovis, as a sheep to the slaughter, Now she was tanquam indomita juvenca, as an untamed heifer: and might well fear lest God would feed her as a lamb in a large place as here, and feed her with his rod, as Mich. 7. 14. The Chaldee rendreth, sicut bos qui saginatur & recalcitrat, as an Ox that waxeth fat and kicketh. But the Hebrew word is feminine: and in all creatures, the female is observed to be more headlong and headstrong.

Heifers also are more wilde, wanton, and untractable: noting the children of disobedience, those refractory rebels: that, as false jades will not stand and pull, (as countrey-men call it) set their shoulders to the yoke, and their sides to the work, but give in and kick against the prick.

Vite. Gen. 3.

Now the Lord will feed them as a lamb in a large place. ] i. e. He will keep them short, as an heifer kept in a sheep-pasture, where there is nothing for her to bite on, it is so bare. A lamb can live where an heifer cannot: a lamb can pick up the grasse of the wilderness, and pick a living out of it. God threatneth these heifers, they shall have henceforth short commons. Thus Gualther carries it. Mercer will have it thus: I will feed them as a lamb, i. e. daintily and plentifully, that being the sooner fatted, they may be fitted for the shambles. Other thus, and I think better, he shall feed them, that is, punish them, (as Mich. 5. 4, 6. & 7. 14.) as a lamb, one single succourlesse lamb, that goes bleating up and down in the wide wast wilderness, having none to tend it, or take care of it: it shall be all alone in a large place. How much better and safer were it to be in Gods fold: where (though pinde, or pent up in a narrower room, yet) Gods lambs are sure to be fed daily and daintily. Whereasthose that affect freedom from Gods service, and hold themselves at best ease when they have elbow-room enough to satisfie their lusts without restraint or controul, they shall be fed with Gods rod, Mich. 7. yea they shall finde that he hath two rods. beauty and bonds, Zech. 11. 7. the latter for those that slight the former. Or if he feed them as a lamb in a large place, alone, and at random, they will quickly become a prey to the Wolf, and soon have enough of that wilde liberty that they so much affected.

Verse 17. Ephraim is joynd to idols, let him alone. ] Ephraim, that is, the ten revolted Tribes, who are called Ephraim in opposition to Judah. 1. Because that Tribe was the greatest of the ten. 2. Jeroboam the ring-leader of that revolt, was of that Tribe. 3. They fell off at Shechem, which was in that Tribe, and from thenceforth was joynd, or agglutinated to idols. ] as the fornicatour is to his harlot, with whom he becometh one flesh: and from whom there is no dissuading him. Some fetch the Metaphor from Enchanters; who by their conjuring Art have society and fellowship with the devils; so had Ephraim with idols: and like an enchanted person he could not stir from them, but stood fastened to them as to a stock or stake. The Tyrians, when besieged by Alexander, fearing the departure of their god Apollo from them, laid chains upon his statue, and fastened him to his Temple. Ephraim was so fastened to his fray-bugs (terriculis, so Junius renders this Text) that there is no likelihood, of his being sundred from them: he had taken fast hold of deceit, Jer. 8. 5. and would not loose his hold. Let him alone, therefore, saith either God to the Prophet (lay out no more words, lose no more labour upon him) or the Prophet to Judah; let them even go, have nothing to do with them, though they be your brethren, meddle not with them, let Christ alone to deal with them at his coming: Maranatha, the Lord cometh. Mean-while, they lie under a dreadfull spirituall judgement, worse then all the plagues of Egypt: even a dead and dedolent disposition, wherunto they are delivered. This is worse then to be delivered to Satan: for so a man may be, and recover out of his snare by repentance, as the incestuous Corinthian did: but when God shall say, Let such a man alone, let him take his course, I have done with him, and let my Ministers trouble themselves no more about him, there is thenceforth but an inch betwixt him and hell, which even gapes for him, where he shall rue it among reprobates. Well he may flourish a while, and feel no hurt; as Saul did not of many years after his rejection: and as the Pharisees, after Christ had said of them, Let them alone, they are blind leaders

ders of the blind. But they shall pine & swelter away in their iniquities Lev. 26. 39. which is the last of those dismall plagues there threatened: they shall not be purged till Gods wrath hath rested upon them, Ezek. 24. 13. so that now they may go and serve every one his idols, sith they have such a mind to it, Ezek. 20. 39. and sith they have made a match with mischief, they may take their belly-full of it. Oh let us feare, lest this should be any of our cases: that God should say let him alone, he is resolved of his way, and I of mine: he will have his swinge in sin, and I am bent to have my full blow at him. I am fully perswaded "(saith a Reverend man now with God) that in these dayes of grace, the Lord is "much more quick and peremptory in rejecting men, then heretofore: the time is "shorter, neither will he wait so long as he used to do. See for ground of this Heb. 2. 3. God is oft quick in the offer of his mercy: Go and preach the Gospel, saith Christ (Go and be quick: tell men what to trust to, that as fooles, they may not be semper victuri ever about to be better, but never begin to set seriously to work) He that beleeveeth shall be saved: he that beleeveeth not shall be damned: I shall not longer dally with him. Destruction cometh and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none. Mischief shall come upon mischief, and rumour upon rumour: then shall they seek a vision of the Prophet: but the law shall perish from the Priest, and counsel from the ancient &c. Ezek. 7. 25. 16. when men are even dropping into hell, and have an hell afore-hand in their consciences, then they'll send hastily for the minister, as they did in the sweating-sicknesse here, so long as the ferventnesse of the plague lasted: Then the Ministers were sought for in every corner, you must come to my Lord, you must come to my Lady, &c. But what if God have said of such a one, Let him alone, as he reproved Samuel for mourning for Saul, and as he forbad Jeremy to pray for the Jewes, and his Apostles to take care for the Pharisees? Oh how dreadfull is that mans condition! and what can a Minister say more then what the king of Israel said to the woman that complained to him of the scarcity of Samaria If the Lord help thee not, whence shall I help thee? out of the barne-floore, or out of the winepresse: If any dram of comfort be applied to a wicked man, the truth of God is falsified, and that Minister will be reckoned amongst the devils dirt-dawbers & upholsters, that dawb with untemper'd mortar & sow pillowes under mens elbowes: Let such alone therefore, and let God alone to deale with them.

Verse 18. Their drink is sowre] That is, they are past grace, and it is now past time a day to do them good: for thou seest how the matter mends with them, even as sowre ale mends in summer: and how they even stink above ground, as Psal 14. 2. Vina probantur odore, colore, sapore &c. but their wine hath neither good colour, smell, nor favour, or tast; it's dead and gone, and they are astrees twice dead and rotten, and therefore pulled up by the roots, such as the Latines call vappa, that is past the best, and now good for nothing, See Esay 1. 22. what life or sweetnesse can be in Apostates: yea how sowre and unfavoury to such are all fleshly comforts? They use to drink away their terrours, and drive away their melancholy dumps with merry company. But will that hold? what are such plasters better then the devils Anodynes, then his whistle, to call men off from better practises? there is a cup in the hands of the Lord, it is full of mixture but extreme sowre: and the very dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them up, Psal. 75. 8. though it be eternity to the bottom.

they have committed whoredome continually] Here they are taxed for whoredome, as before for drunkennesse (so some carry it) and afterwards for covetousnesse. This is that flagitiorum iriga, whereby the Prophet perswadeth Judah to shake off Israel, as not fit to be conversed with. He had charged them before with fornication of both sorts: here he sheweth how unwearied they were in their wickednesse, and withall how intense, for fornicando fornicati sunt, they have done wickedly as they could, they have eeked out their idolatries, and adulteries, and though wearied and even wasted with the multitude of their wickednesse, yet they have not given over but are unsatisfiable, and would sin in perpetuum: as that filthy fornicatour who said he would desire no other heaven but to live for ever on earth, and to be carried from one brothel-house to another. She hath wearied her self with lies: and yet her great scum went not forth out of her: Therefore shall it be in the fire. Ezek. 24. 12. Therefore shall gracelesse wretches be tormented for ever, because they

they would sin for ever : and therefore suffer all extremitie, because they do wickedly with both hands earnestly : wofully wasting the marrow of their time, the flower of their age, the strength of their bodies, the vigour of their spirits, in the pursuit of their lusts, in the froth and filth whereof is bred that worme that never dieth : which is nothing else but the furious reflection of the soul upon its own once willfull folly, and now wofull misery.

her rulers with shame do love, Give ye] Her shields ( o shamefull ! ) do love Give ye : where there is in the originall an elegant Agnomination that cannot be englished, Ababhu bibhu Dilexerunt Afferre, not Afferre, as the Vulgar corruptly readeth it. The Dorick dialect, the horseleaches language Give, Give, they are perfectly skilled in : δωσπαζία gift-greedinesse is all their delight : like the ravens of Arabia, that full gorged have a tuneable sweet record, but empty, screech horribly : Ple-riq; officarij, saith One : Very many rulers do as Plutarch reporteth of Stratocles and Dromoclitus, a couple of corrupt officers, qui sese mutuo ad messum auream invitare solebant, who were wont to invite one another to the golden harvest, thereby meaning the Court, and the judgment-seate. These follow the administration of justice as a trade onely, with an unquenchable and unconscionable desire of gaine : which iustifieth the common resemblance of the Courts of iustice to the Bush, whereunto while the sheep fieth for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of his fleece. Now are these Shields ? are they not rather Sharkes ? Are they protectours, and not rather pillagers ? Latrones publici, publike robbers as Cato called them ? These shields of the earth belong to God, saith David, Psal. 47. 9. should they not then be like him ? Now there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor accepting of persons, nor receiving of gifts : neither by himself nor by his man Elisha, nor by his mans man Gebezi, without distaste. By one period of speech, by one breath of the Lord are they both forbidden, Dent. 16. 18, 19, 20. Thou shalt not respect persons, nor receive a gift : For why : A gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, yea it transformes them into walking Idols, that have eyes and see not, eares and heare not : onely it leaveth them hands to handle that, the very touching whereof will infect and venom a man, as Pliny writes of the fish Torpedo. Let such therefore shake their hands from bribes Isay. 33. 15. as Paul shoke off the viper : and be so far from saying Give ye, that he should rather say to those that offer it, Thy money perish with thee : he that hateth gifts shall live, Prov. 15. 27. Jethro's iustice of peace should be a man of courage, fearing God, hating covetousness, not bound to the peace ( as one phraseth it ) by a gift in a basket : nor struck dumb with the appearance of Angels &c.

Verse 19. The wind hath bound her up in her wings] The evill spirit, ( saith ) Hierom ) hurries them towards hell, which is the just hire of the least sin : how much more of these fore-mentioned abominations ? Take it rather to be spoken of the suddenesse, swiftnesse, and unresistablenesse of Gods judgments set forth by mighty winds rending the rocks, and tearing up the mountaines by the roots, Job. 38. 9. How then shall wicked men ( compared to chaffe or dust of the mountaines ) stand before the tempest of Gods wrath, the thunder of his power ? Well they may applaud and stroke themselves for a time : but the wind shall bind them up in her wings : God shall blow them to destruction, Job. 4. 9. his executioners have the wings of a stork, large and long, and wind in those wings, to note their ready obedience, Zech. 5. 9. And although Ezek. 1. God be represented as sitting upon a throne to shew his slownesse to punish, yet that throne hath wings & hands under those wings, to shew his swiftnesse & readinesse to do seasonable execution upon his enemies.

and they shall be ashamed because of their sacrifices] wherein they trusted, but now see themselves disappointed, their idols not able to help them. Then shall they cast their idols of silver and of gold, which they have made each for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats, to go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, Isay. 2. 20, 21. See also Isay. 30. 22. If they be not thus ashamed of their former fopperies, they are the more to be pittied. Ilum ego perisse dico cui periit pudor. He is an undone man that shames not, shents not himself for his evill practises, that blusheth not bleedeth not before God for them, lying down in his shame. Jer. 3. 25. as fully ashamed of his former hopes, Psal. 119. 116. which now he seeth how far they have abused him.

Hear ye this ye Priests] For you are not so wise, but that ye may heare and increase learning. Chap. 4. 6. and besides, from you is profaneness gone forth into all the land. Jer. 23. 15. For you therefore in the first place I have a citation to appeare before Gods tribunall, to heare your sin & your sentence, your crime, & your doom. God cited Adam immediately & by himself. Gen. 7. 9. Adam, where art thou? so he did Cain, Laban, Nabal, & others, when he sends for them by death, saying as once to that Pope, Veni miser in iudicium, Come away, and heare thy sentence. Mediatly he citeth men by the mouth of his ministers; as he did the Councill of Constance by his faithfull martyr John Husse, and his word stood: and as he doth here the three Estates of the kingdome, Priests, People, and Princes, by the Prophet Hosea. That was very strange and extraordinary, that Mr. Knox reporteth in his history of Scotland, of one Sr. John Hamilton murdered by the kings meanes: that he appeared to him in a vision with a naked sword drawn, and strikes off both his armes with these words, Take this before thou receive a finall payment for all thine impieties: and within 24 houres, two of the Kings sons died. It is indeed but part of their punishment that wicked men here receive, seem it never so grievous when, God entreth into judgment with them, as here it is said.

for judgment is toward you] that is: am about to pronounce sentence against you, and to do execution: and therefore hear, harken, and give-eare, the first second and third time I admonish you, that ye may know that my citation is serious and peremptory: and that your damnation sleepeeth not. Priest and people are set before the house of the king; because theirs was sedes prima, & vita ima, an high place but a low life. And besides, Courtiers and great men, though they be in other cases forward enough to take place of others, yet in point of punishment they flink back, and are well content that others should go before them. God regards none for his greatnesse (Potentes potenter torquebuntur) neither spareth he any for his meannesse, or because they were born down either by the lawes, or lives of their Superiours. The people are here placed betwixt the Priests and Princes, and with them appealed and impeached, to shew how frigid and insufficient their excuse is, who plead that they did but as they were taught by their Ministers, and as they were commanded by their Governours. Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgement, because he willingly walked after the commandment, as it is in the eleventh verse of this chapter. See the note.

for judgement is toward you] Vengeance is in readinesse for the disobedient, be he what he will, kesar or caystiffe, Lord or lofell, Priest or people: every whit as ready in the Lords hand as in the ministers mouth. 2. Cor. 10. 6. neither shall multitudes priviledge or secure them. Though they be quiet or combined, and likewise many, yet thus shall they be cut down, when he shall pass through. Nab. 1. 12. yea though they be briars and thorns that set against him in battle (and those never so much comforted and sharpened) yet God will go through them, and burn them together. Esa. 27. 4. he will cut off the spirit of Princes, and destroy a whole rabble of rebels that rise up against him.

because ye have been a snare on Mizpah] That God may be justified and every mouth stopped, a reason is here rendred of his most righteous proceedings, and the same recited (after the manner of men) in the preamble to their condemnatory sentences.

because ye have been a snare on Mizpah, & a net spread upon Tabor] These were two very high hills, much haunted by hunters, and frequented by fowlers, to whom these Idolaters (striving to catch people retibus suis velut retibus et laqueis, with their nets and snares of errors and superstitions) are fitly compared. For they lie in in wait for mens souls and catch many of them either by perswasions or punishments, by allurements or affrightments, as Julian the Apostate did of old, and as the Papists do at this day. That Jeroboam and his counsellours set watchers in these two mountains, to observe who would go from him to Judah to worship, that he might intercept them and punish them, is a plausible opinion, but wants proof. I know what is alledged, Viz 1 King. 12. 28. and Hol. 6. 8. according to the vulgar vulgar translation. I confesse also that it is not unlikely that such things should be done then (as lately wait was laid by the Papists for such as had a minde to betake themselves as Geneva, Tygre, Basil, &c. for conscience sake. It is more probable that upon those high hills idolatry was committed (see chap. 4. 13. with the Note) and thereby people ensnared, as birds and wilde beasts are in the mountains: and so made slaves to the devill, and even fatted for his tooth. Hence in the next words.

Verse 2. And the revolvers are profound to make slaughter ] They lay their nets and snares deep, and lie down upon the ground that they may take the silly birds that dread no danger. He croucheth and humbleth himself that the poor may fall into his strong pawes, Psal. 10. 10. He studies the devils depths Rev. 2. 24. poisonfull and pestilent pollicies, Machiavellian myteries of mischief. His head is a forge and fountain of wicked wiles: he hath store & strength of strange traps and trains, frauds and fetches, to draw in and deceive the silly simple. That these seducers were deeply revolted Esay 3 1. 6. they had deeply corrupted themselves Hos. 9. 9. they sinned not common sins; as Kore and his complices died not a common death. They made great slaughter of mens souls, and of their bodies too, that refused to yeeld to them. Craft and cruelty seldom sundred in seducers: as some write of the Asp that he never wanders alone, without his companion with him; and as those birds of prey and desolation Esay 34. 16. it is said that none of them want their mate. The devil lendeth them his seven heads to plot, and his ten horns to push and gore, &c.

though I have been a rebuker to them all ] Heb. a correction. Understand it either of the Prophet, that he had dealt plainly with them, and done his utmost to reclaim them, yet they refused to be reformed, hated to be healed. We would have cured Babylon but she would not be cured: Or else of God, that he had both by words and scribes rebuked their superstitions but nothing had wrought upon them. They were tormented with the wrath of God, but repented not to give him the glory, Rev. 16. 9. Corrigimur, might they say, sed non corrigimur, plectimur, sed non flectimur. See how God complains of this stubbornnesse, Jer. 6. 28, 29, 30. and learn to tremble at his rebukes, to profit by his chastisements, lest a worse thing befall us. The just Lord is in the midst thereof: he will not do iniquity; every morning doth he bring his judgements to light, he faileth not: but the unjust knoweth no shame. There are that take the words positively and render them thus Ego vero illis omnibus castigationi sum I have been rebuked or corrected by them all. See the like Lam. 3. 13. and in the Psalms often I am a reproach to mine enemies: thou makest us a reproach to all that are round about us, &c. So the Prophet here may seem to complain, as Jeremy did after him, that he was born a man of contentions, that all the people cursed him, that he was a common by-word, and but-mark: that they sharpened their tongues against him and slew in his face. To Preach, saith Luther, is nothing else but to derive the rage of the whole world upon a mans self, Wisdom (that should be justified of her children) is estoones judged of her children, as some read those words of our Saviour Mat. 11. 19. But I like the active sence better.

Verse 3. I know Ephraim and Israel is not hid from me ] Those that by Ephraim understand the Princes, and by Israel the common people etiam hoc opere addant, et illud ex scriptura probent, saith Tarnovius, let them prove what they say by Scripture, and we will say with them: Till then we take them for Synonima's. An hypocritical nation they were Isai. 9. 17. and Athiestically they thought, by hiding God from themselves, to hide themselves from God. Hear them else Chap. 12. 8. And Ephraim said, yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance; In all my labour they shall finde none iniquity in me: that were sin, that were an hainous business, that iniquity should be found in them, though they were a people laden with iniquity. But I know them through and through, intus et in cute saith God, I am privy to all their plots and policies. And although they are profound to make slaughter (Tindall reads it, They kill sacrifices on heapes to deceive) yet let not them be deceived, I am not mocked. They must not think to put me off with shewes and shadows: to colour and cover their base spirits and vile ends with specious pretences. For I search the hearts, and try the reins: neither is there any creature (no not the creature of the heart, the thoughts and intentions) that is not manifest in his figt: but all things are naked and open (naked for the outside, and open for the inside; the Greek word signifieth dissected, quartered, and as it were cleft through the back-bone) before the eyes of him with whom we have to deal. Heb. 4. 13. Indeed he is all eye; and every man before God is all window: so that no man needeth a window in his breast (as the Heathen Momus wisht) for God to look in at. For his eyes are upon the wayes of man: and he seeth all his goings. There is no darknesse nor shadow of death where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves Job. 24. 21. 22. And how should this both humble them (for which cause it is here urged) and caution them for the future, as it did that holy man, who had written upon the walls and windowes of his study these verses,

Eph. 4. 19.

For now O Ephraim thou committest whoredom and Israel is defiled ] in body and soul, ushering into all impiety without restraint: working all uncleannesse with greediness: being filled withall unrighteousness, fornication wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness: full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, &c. Rom. 1. 29. 30. All these evil things come from within and defile a man Mar. 7. 23. worse then any leprosie, worse then the vomit of a dog, or the mire of a swine. It is the pollution of flesh and spirit, 2 Cor. 7. 1. it is the putrefaction of a dead carcase, the sanies of a plague-sore, the devils excrement, and that which defileth far worse then that which is cast into the draught. Mar. 7. 21. It sets defilement upon our selves, others, the whole land, Jer. 3. 1. yea upon the visible heavens, which must therefore be purged by that last fire. And this was typified by those many Leviticall washings and purifications of garments, vessels, persons, &c. Wash you therefore, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings &c. Esey 1. 16. Wash thy heart from wickedness O Jerusalem, & thy hands onely as Pilate, though those too, Jam. 4. 8. Jer. 4. 14. Cleanse your teives from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, 2 Cor. 17. 1. Of the flesh that is, fleshly lusts and gross evils, as uncleanness, earthly mindedness, or Of spirit, that is, those more spirituall lusts that lie more up in the heart of the country, such as are pride, creature-confidence, self-deceit, presumption, &c. Out with all these: there's both a stain and a sting in them. Run to the Bath of Christs blood, that blessed fountain, Zech. 13. 1. and there wash and be clean. Look not upon Gods Jordan with Syrian eyes, as Naaman did. Abanab and Pharphar may wash and scour: but Jordan is for cure. And if God see fit to lay us a frosting, to fetch out our filth, yea or cast into the fire to take away our defilements, let us be contented.

Verse 4. They will not frame their doings to turn unto their God ] Or, their doings will not suffer them. That is, they are so habituated and hardened in sinful practices that they are not onely disinabled to conversion but evil-affected thereunto: they stand a-crosse to all good: to their sinewes of iron, they have added browes of brasse, to their sin they adde rebellion, which is as bad as witch-craft, 1. Sam. 15. 23. till at length they lose all passive power also of being converted: and so are transformed, as it were, into so many devils: having by custome contracted a necessity of sinning, they are become incurable: they neither will nor can return to their God: they will not frame their doings to it. The Vulgar hath it, their studies, the Septuagint their counsels: Castalio, their endeavours, Pagnine their pains &c. The Originall is very elegant, and metrical Lo ijtenu magnallem Lasub el Elohehem. I scarce know a like text in all the Scripture, unlesse it be that Lam. 5. 16. Oi na lann, chi chattann. Woe to us that we have sinned: which is so elegant also in the Originall, that Master Wheatly of Banbury (who used to be very plain in his Preaching

Preaching, and not to name a Greek, Latine, or Hebrew word : quoted it once in the Hebrew, as witnesse learned Master Leigh who lived some while under his Ministry. But to return to the text : whereas some might possibly conceive or reply, Ephraim is far gone indeed, but he may return. No, never, saith God : for he will not give his minde to it, or shew his good will : he is even set ; and there is no removing of him ; he hath made his conclusion, and is as good as ever he meaneth to be. They are so far from yielding themselves unto the Lord, as 2 Chro. 30. 8. that they stand in full opposition to him, yea send messages after him. We will not have this man to rule over us. The Jewes were an untoward generation, saith Peter Act. 2. 40. they, by their obstinate refusall of the Gospel, judged themselves unworthy of everlasting life, saith Paul Act. 13. 46. there were unmanageable, unframeable, so knotty that they were fit for nothing but the fire, so nasty, that they were fit for no place but the dunghill. And why ?

Master Leigh
his Saints encouragement,
Ecc. ep. dedic.

the spirit of whoredoms is in the midst of them ] The devil is at Inne with them as that Martyr said : he even sits abroad upon them, hatching all manner of evil counsels and courses. he worketh effectually in these children of disobedience, as a smith doth in his forge, an artificer in his shop : he acts them and agitates them, making their souls and all the powers thereof nothing else but a shop of sin, their bodies and all the parts thereof tooles of sin, their lives and all their actions of both soul and body a trade of sin, a web of wickedness spun out and made up by the hands of the devil and the flesh, an evil spinner, and a worse weaver. Hence they lie rotting all their lives long in the graves of sin, wrapt up in the winding sheet of hardness, of heart (they will not frame their doing to turn to God) and blindness of mind (they have not known the Lord) : and as a carcase crawleth with wormes, so do these men swarm with those noisome lusts, that are able to poison up an honest heart. How can it be otherwise ? the spirit of fornication is in the midst of them, as a King in his Kingdom : yea hath filled their hearts from corner to corner, as he had done the hearts of Ananias and Sapphira ? That unclean spirit besiegeth the purest hearts, and compasseth them about, seeking to devour them, 1 Pet. 5. 8, but they keep him out, steadfast in the faith, or if he any way get in, they quickly cast him out again : so that he cannot long rest or roost, much lesse raiga there : for the Spirit of God keepeth them, and that evil one toucheth them not tactu qualitativo with a deadly touch ; they regard not iniquity in their heart, there is no way of wickednesse found in them. Of the spirit of whoredoms see the Note on Chap. 4. 11.

And they have not known the Lord ] He knowes them well enough verse 3. and they shall know it, Jer. 16. 21. to their cost : but they know not the Lord, sc. savingly and effectually : for if they did, they could not be so vile and vitious, so loose and licentious. A man is properly said to know no more of Gods minde then he practiseth : like as of our Saviour it is said, that he knew no sin, that is, he did none : with an intellectuall knowledge he knew it (how else could he reprove it) but not with a practical : and as it is said of Elies two sons, that they knew not God because they obey'd him not. Lo such was the ignorance of this people, affected and acquired ; and this is peccatorum omnium fons et fomes, the mother of all mischief and misery ; as hath been oft set forth in the Notes upon the former chapter.

2 Cor. 5. 21.

Verse 5. And the pride of Israel testifieth to his face ] Pride is the great master-pock of the soul : it will bud, and cannot be hid Ezek. 7. 10. It is the grandiobolo, that filthy spirit that is gotten into the midst of men, into the very heart of the country as it were. It is the leprosie of the soul that breakes forth in the very forehead, and so testifieth to his face. It proceeds from ignorance of God and his will, of a mans self and his duty : hence that connexion of this verse and the former. They know not the Lord : And the pride of Israel testifieth to his face. The Laodiceans were therefore proud, because ignorant : thou knowest not that thou art wretched and miserable, and poor, &c. So those question-sick phantasticks in Saint Paul were proud knowing nothing, 1 Tim. 6. 4. And I would not have you ignorant of this mystery, saith he to his Romans Chap. 11. 25. lest ye should be puffed up in your own conceits. Humble Agur though full of heavenly light, yet vilifies and nullifies himself to the utmost Prov. 30. 2. and so exemplifies that Proverb of Solomon, with the lowly lowly is wisdom, Prov. 11. 2. And as wisdom maketh the face to shine, and humility rendreth a man lovely : so pride on the contrary, sitteth in the face, and deformeth it. The proud man flattereth himself in his own lies, till his iniquity be found to be hatefull, Psal. 36. 2. till his swelling break forth in loathsome ulcers. Thus Miriam's pride testified to her face, and Uzziah's, and Sodom's, Esay. 3. 9. The shew of their countenance witnessing against them. Pride is a foolish sinne, it cannot keep in, it will be above-board, and discover it self by lofty looks, big-twolv-words, proud gate, ridiculous gestures, garish attire, that nest of pride ; but especially by stoutnesse and stubbornnesse against God and his wayes ( as here in this Text it is to be taken. ) When men commit sin with an high hand, and as it were, in despite of God, and on purpose to crosse him. Hence it is that God so hateth this sinne above other : for whereas all other sins flee from God, pride lets flye at him, nay flees in his face, saying, Who is the Lord, that I should obey him ? Hence he will be a swift witnesse against such, and a severe Judge. Learned Mr. Leveley, reads this Text thus ; The excellency of Israel ( that is God, as Amos 8. 7. 2 Sam. 1. 19. ) will testifie to Ephraims face, give in evidence against them. He will indeed be Index, Judex, Vindex, to such : for he resisteth the proud, and delighteth to stain their glory, to cast dirt in those faces of theirs, that are so hatcht with impudence, as to face the very heavens, and to contest with Omnipotency. Hence their fall with a violence, with a vengeance.

Therefore shall Ephraim and Israel fall in their iniquity : ] Corruet, they shall fall with a puff, with a powther, as we say : and in their iniquity, that's worse then all the rest. Ye shall die in your sinnes, saith Christ to those rebellious Jews, Ioh. 8. 21. that was a great deal worse then to die in prison, to die in a ditch, or in the worlds disfavour. Or, in their iniquity, that is, for their iniquity which is indeed the cause of calamities. At the losse of Calice, when a proud French-man demanded of an English Captain, When will you fetch Calice again ? he gravely replied, Quando peccata vestra erunt nostris graviora. When your sinnes shall weigh down ours. If any man ask, ( saith Tarnovius upon this Text ) Unde bodis tanta passim in Germania vastitas ? efficit hanc peccatorum atrocitas. Whence so great desolations in Germany ? It is for the grievousnesse of our iniquity. Why this was better yet, then the result of that consultation held once at Hamborough, by some of his Lutheran fellow-Ministers, concerning the cause and cure of Germanie calamities. They concluded (saith Mr. Boroughes on Hosea, from the mouth of a Minister there, who told it him with grief ) that it was, because their images in Churches were not adorned enough, which therefore they would procure done. A sad businesse, Solomon would have told them, that it is a mans pride that brings him low, Prov. 29. 23. And that before destruction the heart of a man is haughty, Prov. 18. 12. And that pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall, Prov. 16. 18. If the pride of Israel doth testifie to his face, the next news we shall hear of him is, that Israel and Ephraim are fallen in their iniquity. A bulging wall cannot stand : a swelling sore will shortly break. This shall they have for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the Lord of Hosts. The Lord will be terrible unto them : for he will smite all the gods of the earth, &c. Zeph. 2. 10, 11. all those deumuli, those pretty pictures that men so much dote upon : which should not be suffered, if for nothing else, yet for the distraction they may cause in Divine worship. In the Councel-chamber of the Lacedemonians, no picture or image was suffered ; lest in consultation of weighty matters, their mindes thereby might be distracted. Irenaus reproveth the Gnosticks for their pictures of Christ, though made in Pilates time, after his own proportion. Austin denieth that images can be set up in Churches, sine presentissimo idololatrie periculo, without exceeding great danger of idolatry. Epiphanius saith, it is an abomination of desolation, to set up pictures in the Churches of Christians. Plutarch an Heathen saith, it is sacrilege : And Solyman the great Turk, when he had taken Buda in Hungary, would not enter into the great Church there, to give God thanks for the victory, till all the images were cast out. But this by the way onely. Let us take heed by those mistaken Lutherans, whom a deceived heart hath turned aside, that we likewise fall not from our own steadfastnesse.

nation, lest we follow Germany in her plagues, as we began apace to do in her sins: for the which we have also already severely smarted. If Judah comply with Israel in false worship, they shall fall with Israel. God is not tied to any people, but can well be without them. The Lord is with you, whilst ye are with him. If ye seek him, he will be found of you: but if you forsake him, he will forsake you, 2 Chron. 15. 2. But will the Lord be certainly found of them that seek him? yes, if they seek him seriously and seasonably, in a time when he may be found, and before he be utterly departed. But here was the mistake, and the mischief of it. These Apostata's went to seek the Lord, and they went with their cost, but they came too late: they had sinned away their God, and wiped off all their comfortables, as Saul had done before them. The Philistines are upon me, saith he, and God hath forsaken me: he answereth me no more, neither by Prophets nor by dreams, &c. It is said, 1 Chron. 10. 14. that Saul did not enquire of the Lord, therefore he slew him. He did, and yet he did not, because he sought him not with all his heart: his devotion was fained and forced. Now it is a rule in the Civil Law, Ficta pro factis non habentur: nec videtur fieri quod non legitime fit. Fained service is lost labour: neither is that done to any purpose, that is not orderly done. And this was the case of these sacrificers in the next verse. Sodomites God calleth them, Esa. 1. 10.

Psal. 32. 6.

1 Sam. 28. 15

Verse 6. They shall go with their flocks, and with their herds.] Cursitabunt, they shall cut up and down, from altar to altar, with all their stock, as if they would buy off their sins, redeem their sorrows, with hecatombs, and store of holocausts; and then be ready to say, as that Heathen Emperour did, when he was to meet his enemy in the field, Non sic Deos colimus, aut sic viximus ut ille nos vinceret. We have not so served the gods, or lived so, that the enemy should have the better of us. They thought they had merited better at Gods hands, by their thousands of rams, and ten thousand rivers of oil, then to fall, as in the former verse, then to be relinquished by him, as here. Lo this is the guise of gracelesse hypocrites: by their outward performances they think to oblige God unto them; and by their good deeds to set off for their bad. Thus Brunhildis (that French Athaliah) after many murders, and much mischief wrought by her, Anno 600. built many Colleges for Priests, and Monks, in Burgundy and Austria, Eo scilicet beneficio maleficia sua expiavit, saith the French Chronicler; thereby thinking to satisfy for all her cruelty. So here in King Stevens time, there were more Abbeyes built then in an hundred years before. So the Papists at this day, spend and are spent in their blinde devotions: they lavish money out of the bag, and run up and down from Saint to Saint with their cost: They pray publicly in public calamities, for forty hours together, by the Popes command, that they may pacifie God, and divert his displeasure. For the same cause, they make the same man (in their greater Cities appointed) to preach every day in Lent without intermission; so as six dayes in the week he preacheth on the Gospel of the dayes; and on the Saturday, in honour and praise of our Lady, as they call her. Lo, thus they go, as they think, to seek God with their will-worship, and work done, &c. but they finde him as little as they did here, with their flocks, and with their herds: And why? First, they go to seek him: they run, but in a wrong way; and so fulfill that sacred proverb, He that hasteth with his feet sinneth: for the faster he runs, the farther he is out. Next, they pretend to seek him, but indeed they seek themselves: they seek him, but it is to be rid of his rod: they do not so much serve him, as serve themselves and their own turns upon him; as those hypocrites in Zachary fasted to themselves; not to get off their sins, but their chains. Thirdly, they go with their flocks, &c. not mine, but theirs, saith God; he will not so much as own them, though they were rendered to him in sacrifice; because brought with a wicked minde, Prov. 21. 27. as Balaam and Balaam did, Num. 23. 1, 2. and as Cain did, Gen. 4. 5. to whom therefore God had no respect, because he brought non personam sed opus personae, not himself, but his sacrifice, as Luther hath it: who also calleth all those Cainists, that offer to God the work done, but present not their bodies for a lively sacrifice, Rom. 12. 1. Hence he rejects their services with infinite disdain, as Esa. 1. 11, 12. and 66. 2, 3. though never so numerous and precious, Mic. 6. 7. Hof. 8. 13. And to set forth this, as he calleth them here, their flocks, and not his, so Fourthly, he calleth them flocks and herds, not sacrifices: that was too good a name for them.

When he hath withdrawn himself from them] Heb. hath snatcht away himself, hath thrown himself out of their company, as Peter threw himself out from the rude souldiers into a by-corner, to weep bitterly, Mark. 14. 72. Cum se proripuisse, so Beza rendreth it. When God is well pleased with his people, they can no sooner cry, but he will say, Here I am, Isay. 58. 9. And though they offer but small things unto him, as Samuel did a sucking lamb, 1 Sam. 7. 9. they are highly accepted, and graciously answered. But woe unto them when I depart from them, saith God Hof. 9. 12. yea woe upon woe when Gods soul is once disioynted from them. Ier. 6. 8. an evil, an only evil, behold, is come. An end is come, the end is come, it watcheth for thee, behold it is come. Ezek. 7. 5. 6. and why? because God was withdrawing from them: Hence all evils came rushing in, as by a sluice. In the ninth, tenth, and eleventh chapters of that Prophesy, God maketh diuerse removes. And still, as he goes out, some judgement comes in. First he removeth from the Cherubins in the Oracle, to the threshold Chap. 9. 3. and upon that Remove, see what followeth Verse 5, 6, 7. &c. Secondly he removeth to the Cherubins on the right side of the house Chap. 10. 1. and see what followes Verse 2. Thirdly to the East-gate of the house, and the first entrance into the Temple, Chap. 10. 19. and then see what succeeds Chap. 11. 8. 9. 10. Fourthly he removeth to mount Olivet, quite out of the city, Chap. 11. 23. and when God was quite gone, then followed the fatall calamity in the ruine thereof. As there is no light in the world but from the Sun, no water but from the Sea; so no sound comfort or happinesse to be had but with and in God. Better have him angry with us, then not have him at all with us. The loss of God is a peece of hell; in the suburbs whereof the Saints feel themselves, when but a while deserted.

Prov. 6. 35.

Ier. 12. 7.

Verse 7. They have dealt treacherously against the Lord] They have dealt deceitfully in the Covenant, they are a perfidious cursed crew of them: this I see well enough, saith God, though they may think to darken mine eye-sight with the smoke of their many sacrifices, or to stop my mouth with their great presents. See how he complaineth as in this Prophesie often, so, Ier. 3. 20. Surely as a wife treacherously departeth from her husband, so have you dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel. Now in such a case a man will not regard any ransom: neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts: he will not be a pandar to his own bed, unlesse he be very base indeed. Most certain it is, that God will not endure any such doings: but though he love his Spouse never so well, yet if she play false with him, and admit any other into the bridall-bed, he will forsake his house that hath been so dishonest, he will leave his heritage that hath been so embased; he will give the dearely beloved of his soul into the band of her enemies, who shall hate her more then ever they loved her, as Amnon did Tamar, and deale cruelly with her, as Ezek. 16. is at large discoursed. The wickednesse of this people was the greater, for that they pretended religion (as in the former verse) to their base beastly practises. Dessembled sanctity is double iniquity. See how hainously God takes it, Ier. 7. 9, 10. And when others deale treacherously and unworthily with you, see whether you have not done as bad and worse against the Lord. Alphonfus king of Arragon in a speech to the Popes Embassadour professed, that he did not so much wonder at his Courtiers ingratitude to him, (who had raised sundry of them from meane to great estates) as at his own to God.

for they have begotten strange children] bastards such as the Jewes call Mamzer, as ye would say aliena labes, a strange blot. They call them also brambles, such as was Abimelech who grew in the hedge-row of an harlot, and scratcht and drew blood to purpose, Judg. 9. 14. That which is here charged upon the Isralites is, that they had not onely taken to wife the daughters of a strange God, or begotten bastards of harlots, but that they had nuzzled up their children in idolatry, and so made them sevenfold worse the children of the devill then before. This was a very great aggravation of their treachery, that they should impositon their posterity, and propagate their wickednesse from one generation to another; that there should be a line and a succession of it from their loins. None are so ready to drink in false principles, and corrupt practises as young ones. Such parents as have a hand in undoing their children, either by ill counsell, or example, are peremptores potius quam parentes, saith Bernard, rather parricides then parents. They shall give an heavy account to God for their childrens miscarriages. Let it therefore be the care of parents, as to keep themselves pure, so to see to their little ones, that they be not corrupted. Satan bears an implacable spite and hatred to them, as the seed-plot of heaven; and hath his emissaries abroad to marre them. Such was Protagoras, of whom Plato reporteth, that he gloried of this, that whereas he had lived sixty years in all, fourty of them he had spent in corrupting of young people. Of Julian the Apostate it is reported, that being of excellent parts and proof, both in learning and religion, whilst he was young: he was afterwards corrupted by his two Heathenish Tutors Libanius, and Jamblichus, through the carelessnesse of Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia, who should have seen better to it: and that this was a main cause of his Apostacy.

now shall a moneth devour them with their portions. ] Some read it thus. Now shall the enemy devour them moneth after moneth: Others put menses for menstrua, and give this fence. Like as this people make no bones to break their faith with God by spirituall fornication, mingling as it were their seed with strange gods and forraigne people: so shall it come to them, which happeneth to women worn with adulteries, (as Ezekiel speaketh) that their monethly diseases procured by inordinate lust, shall eat up and consume their bodies. For confirmation, they alledge (but not so properly) Jer. 2. 24. I willingly concur with those that by a moneth understand a little short time. How soon is a moneth run out? And yet what havoc will an enemy make in a moneths space? as we have had wofull experience in these late stripping and killing times. Them and their portions shall one moneth make an end of. Death heweth its way thorow a wood of men, in a minute of time, from the mouth of a murdering-piece. The sword contemneth the rod, Ezek. 21. 13. as if it should say; What doth this silly rod do here? Let me come; Ile quickly make work among them. Ile dung the land with their carcases, &c. with their portions, the lots of their inheritance. Wicked men also have their portions in this life, Psal. 17. 14. they live in pleasure on the earth, and are wanton, Jam. 5. 5. but their portion is no other, but a moneth may devour it: their pleasure no other but one drop of an evil conscience may damp and dissweeten it. But if God be thy portion, &c.

Verse 8. Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah, ] Clangite, clamate, not with the inverse trumpets of Furius Fulvius, which sounded a retreat when they should have sounded an alarme. But blow ye the cornet; give notice to all the countrey, that Hannibal est ad portas, the enemy is at the very gates, sending a summons, and sounding for a surrender. The desolation of warre had been denounced in the former verse; here it is proclaimed, as it were by sound of Trumpet: the Prophet acting the part of an herauld; and, by a rhetoricall hypotyposis, representing the enemies approach, as if it were already under view: and not foretold, but acted before their eyes. Rhetorick, we see here, is an art sanctified by Gods Spirit; and may lawfully be used in handling of Gods word. The Scripture is full of it in every part: and happy is that Minister, that thereby can make himself master of his hearers affections: as potent in his Divine Rhetorick as Pericles, or Cicero, were in their humane. Let him (by our Prophets example) strive to make the things whereof he preacheth to the people, as reall before their eyes, as possibly he can. The power of a ministry consisteth much in this; to set forth sin, Christ, heaven, hell, in such lively colours, that the hearer (though unlearned) may be convinced of all, judged of all, and having the secrets of his heart made manifest,

1 Cor. 14. 24. manifest, he may fall down on his face, worship God and report, that God is in the
 25. Minister of a truth : Lo this is Preaching indeed. For as every sound is not Musick,
 c. bryssostom. so neither is every Pulpit-discourse Preaching. Nihil frigidius est doctore verbis Ezek. 4. 1. solummodo philosophante, &c. Ezekiel must lay siege to Jerusalem, portraying it upon a tile, &c. So did Jeremy and other Prophets use signes, and similitudes, Saint Pauls speech and Preaching was not indeed with enticing words of mans wisdom, ( he 1 Cor. 2. 4. did not so paint the window as to keep out the light ) but yet in demonstration of the Spirit, and of power, close to the conscience.

Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah ] that is in the bounds of the Kingdom of Judah, they were both ; and places of great resort : they are now alarmed, and bidden to prepare for the approach of the Assyrian.

Cry aloud at Bethaven ] Or Bethel, as Chap. 4. 11. a city ( as it is said of Athens, Acts 17. 16. ) wholly given to idolatry : and therefore more stupid and stubborn then the rest. Here therefore the Prophet cries louder then ordinary, classicum canit, sic clamat ut stentora vincere possit, he sets up his note that he may the sooner awaken them, and cause them to apprehend their danger, as present and reall. Bethaven was the great place of superstition, and now Rome is the nest of Antichrist, the habitations of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, a cage of every unclean and hateful bird : therefore the Angel crieth mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, certo, cito, penitus, surely, suddenly, utterly. Rev. 18. 2.

 warning here given implies a minde moved and disturb'd, either with fear or anger.

Verse 9. Ephraim shall be desolate in the day of rebuke ] Correptionis, vel Correctionis, ut Pagninus : when thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, &c.
Psal. 39. 11. God hath a day for such sharp rebukes, or chidings by way of conviction, or Argument ( as the word signifieth ) wherein he will be sure to carry it, with a great deal of sound reason and evident demonstration : so that Ephraim shall have nothing to say, why he should not be desolated ; yea so desolated as to make the beholders amazed thereat, as the Hebrew word importeth God, will not now dally with Ephraim, or deal favourably with him as heretofore : he will not shake his rod at him only, but waite it to the very stumps : he shall be utterly destroyed from being a people : the day that now comes is a black day indeed, a day not of instruction, but of destruction, not of correction but of execution ; a very doomsday, wherein God will bring them into the furnace, and there leave them Ezek. 22. 20. And that none may think this sentence over severe : or not so sure but that it might be avoyded or vacated, see what followeth in the text ;

among the tribes of Israel have I made known that which shall surely be ] i.e. Either I have forewarned them sufficiently, but they would take no warning, which is both a just preface and desert of their ruine : Or else thus : I am now fully resolved upon their ruine, neither is there cause that any man should deceive himself with a vain hope, as if these evils that I foretell should not befall you. Experience the mistresse of fools, shall teach you, that the sentence I now pronounce is precise and peremptory, not conditionall as heretofore, but absolute, and unchangeable : and this I here assure you of by this solemn contestation.

Verse 10. The Princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound ] A wickedness condemned by the law and light both of Nature, and Scripture Deut. 27. 17. The Princes are mentioned, because corruption in a people ( as putrefaction in a fish ) begins at the head. Now the land-mark or limit is removed many wayes. As first in Religion : when the true is changed into that which is false, as was here in Queen Marias dayes against her promise, to the Suffolk men. Secondly, in Regione, in the civil State : when one man violently invadeth the right of another ( as Ahab did Naboths vineyard ) and no man must question them because it is facinus majoris Abolla the fact of a great one. Thirdly ; In officio, in a mans office or

or particular station, when he keeps not within his circle, but taketh liberty to transgresse, prescribing new worships as 2 King. 16. 10, 11. 2 Coro. 28. 23. taking upon them to teach Ministers what to teach them, as Mic. 2. 6. or themselves invading the Ministeriall office uncalled thereunto as did Jeroboam 1 King. 13. 4. and Uzziah 2 Chron. 26. 16. to their cost. This (saith an Interpreter) is grandis culpa, et atrox crimen, a foul fault, a crimson crime. Let our Lay-preachers and Levellers look to it, unlesse they covet a curse. Deut. 27. 17. He that breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him. Fourthly, In negotio, in businesses and transactions, in contracts and covenants he removeth bounds, who cozeneth and circumventeth another in any matter 1 Thes. 4. 6. These must remember that God is the avenger of all such: and that it is a fearfull thing to fall into the punishing hands of the living God. The Papists fall foul upon us as Innovatours, and removers of the ancient bounds: because we reject their Ecclesiastical traditions and unwritten verities (as they call them) commended unto us by the Ancients, and embraced by whole nations for many ages. To whom we answer, that Multitude and Antiquity are but ciphers in Divinity: they must (at least) have no more authoritie, then what they can maintain. Let them boast, with the Gibeonites, of their old shooes, mouldy bread, &c. we hold us to the Scriptures, for our limits and land-markes unmoveable and immutable. And when they shall ask us as they oft do, where was your Religion before Luther? we answer as one once did, In the Bible, where yours never was. Erasmus met with an adversary so silly as to charge him for a remover of the ancient bounds, because he had anew Translated the New Testament: a work of singular use to the Church of Christ, in those dark times.

Heb. 10.

therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water ] which shall overflow the bankes to overwhelm those that remove the bounds. Yea God will pour it upon them by whole pailfuls, or spouts (as they call them) at sea. Or if but by vials (as Rev. 16. 1. which are vessels of narrow mouthes and pour out slowly, howbeit) they drench deeply, and distill effectually the wrath of God, which wretched sinners, shall never be able to avoid or abide. Oh when God shall set himself to set open the cataracts of his wrath as once at Noahs flood, and to come against a sinner with a deluge of destruction to pour out his indignation upon him, as water hastily, heavily, irresistibly, what will he do, and where will he finde refuge? This made David pray so hard. Let not the waterfloods overflow me: nor the deep swallow me up, Psal. 69. 15. It is the priv ledge of every godly person, that in the floods of great waters, they shall not come nigh to him, Psal. 32. 6. Or if they come up to his neck, yet they shall not take away his breath: for his head is ever above water. Washt he may be (as Paul was in the shipwrack) drowned he cannot be. Sink he may seem to do once and again to the bottom: but he shall up again with Jonas, if out of the deep, he call upon the Lord, who will set him on a rock that is, higher then he.

Verse 11. Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgement ] Calumniam passus est Ephraim so the vulgar hath it: Ephraim was false accused and slandered: he suffered much by Sycophants, who depraved his good actions, drew him before the judgement-seats and there oppressed him; as Jam. 2. 6. But the word here used signifieth all manner of injuries and oppressions, whether by vexatious suits, by fraud or by force, virulent tongues or violent hands, wrangling or otherwise wronging a man, to his crushing and utter undoing many times: For a poor man in his house is like a snail in his shell: crush that, and you kill him. Ephraim was crushed in judgement by his countrymen, who would do him no right: but much more by the cruell Assyrians, who soon after this carried him captive, and left him without all remedy of law, without hope of a better condition or place for a worse. And what wonder though men so set against him, when God was pouring out his wrath upon him as water? sith all creatures are up in arms against Gods rebels. If the cause go against a man though he have never so much right on his side (for oft-times cedit viribus equum, might overcomes right) and he be broken in judgement, Let him see whether things be right between God and himself: and if broken in judgement, let him be of a broken spirit, and he shall be relieved.

calves. Quoniam voluit, juit, like a tame fool; or, at least, as a foolish childe (so this Prophet calleth him) he was soon won over, he came off with little ado. Jeroboam did but hold up his finger, and he had him straight: A mere fatuellus carried away to those dumb idols even as he was led. 1 Cor. 12. 2. a Melchite, such a generation of Heretickes there were in the Primitive Church; so called because they followed the examples and decrees of the Emperours: resolving to be of the Kings Religion, whatsoever it were, right or wrong. The Russians are such at this day. God and their Emperour they say know best what's truth or falshood: and it is their part to obey, not to enquire. But all Christs sheep are rationall; and will try before they trust, look before they leap: the spirituall man judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged by no man, 1 Cor. 2. 15. Shew him a clear text of Scripture for what you would perswade him to, and convince him thereby that it is the minde of God, and you may have what you will of him. But for these masters of opinions such as are magistri nostri Parisienses, that obtrude their own placits upon people, and require to be beleaved upon their bare word without further proof, he abhors them. And for the decrees of Princes and Rulers, if they crosse the Scriptures, he will take leave to disobey them, as the Apostles did, Acts 4. 19. as the three children in Daniel did, and Daniel himself Chap. 6. and as all the holy confessours and Martyrs both ancient and modern did. The Bishop of Norwich asked Roger Coo Martyr whether he would not obey the Kings Lawes? he answered yes, as far as they agree with the Law of God, I will obey them. Then said the Bishop, whether they agree with the word or not, we are bound to obey them, if the King were an infidell. Coo answered, If Shadrach Meshach and Abednego had done so, Nabuchadnezzar had never confest the living God. True it is that Magistrates must be obeyed: those that are good must be obeyed as God, those that are bad, for God: but then it must be in licitis in things lawfull, and warrantable by the word: and herein we must not frame excuse. The blessed Virgin, though unweildy, went four dayes journey (so far it was from Nazareth to Bethlehem) to obey Augustus his decree, the charge was not so peremptory, but the obedience was as exemplary. Who-so keepeth the commandment, sc. of the King shall know no evil thing, Eccles. 8. 4. 5. And whereas some might reply, why then, let's do all the King bids us without sciscitation, without further delay or enquiry: Solomon answers in the next words. And a wise mans heart discerneth both time and judgement, that is, he knowes both when and how, and how far forth fitly and lawfully the commands of a King may be dispatched; and no further will he go, then he can with a good conscience. The Pope writing to Bernard, requiring him to do that which was unlawfull, Bernard writes back again this answer and it was taken; I as a childe, do not obey, and I obey in disobeying. Antigona in Sophocles saith well, Magis obtemperandum est Dijs, &c. We should rather obey God with whom we must live ever, then men with whom we have but a while to sojourn. Lo blind nature saw so much. See the Note on Alt. 4. 19. It may not be forgotten or slipt over, that the word here readred the Commandment signifies Command thou: Because he willingly walked after Command thou: he danced after Jeroboams pipe, saying to him as he did once to Julius Caesar,

Or as Tiberius answered Iustin. (though upon a better ground & end) Si tu volueris, ego sum: Si tu non vis, Ego non sum, I am onely thy clay, and thy wax, &c. Or lastly, as Luther at first submitted to the Pope in these words (though afterwards, God gave him more courage in his cause) I prostrate my self at your Holinesss feet, with all that I am and have. Vivifica, occide, voca, revoca, approba, reproba; vocem tuam vocem Christi in te presidentis et loquentis agnoscam: that is, Quicken me, kill me, call me, recall me, receive me, reject me: I shall acknowledge your voice as the voice of Christ himself ruling and speaking in you. Jeroboam is not once named here: nor the word (Commandment) set down at large out of detestation (likely) both of it, and Him, because it was a wicked commandment: and He no better then an Usurper. For although he had it cleared to him, that Gods will was that he should be King over the ten tribes, yet because it was a will of Gods decree, and not of his Command, as of a duty done by him, he goes among Divines for an intruder and Usurper usurper in and for that fact of his. 'Tis obedience when we follow a Divine precept: but not ever, when we follow a divine instinct.

Verse 12. Therefore will I be unto Ephraim as a moth, ] Their sin was the greater, because they were so willing to it, and so easily drawn to idolatry, as most agreeable to their nature, and making much for their ease: which was Yeroboams main argument. It may very well be, that he threatned punishment to those that disobeyed his commandement: but here they should have stood out, and have bide the worst; chusing affliction rather than sin; which because they did not, therefore they should perish by their own hand, and counsels: they shall be moth-eaten, as a garment that breedeth the moth, and as a tree that breedeth the worm that wasteth it. Not but that God had a speciall hand in their punishment: and this not permissive onely, but active too, I will be unto Ephraim, &c. For is there evil in a city, and he hath not done it? The changes and periods of Kingdoms are of him, Psal. 75. 6, 7. that men may know that the Heavens do rule, Dan. 4. 26. so are the alterations in mens bodies and estates, as Job setteth it forth, Chap. 4. 19. and 13. 28. and 27. 18. Every one (say some Chymicks) hath his own balsam within him: his own bane 'tis sure that he hath: his clay-cottage is every day ready to drop on his head. And for his Estate, there are oft-times secret issues and drains of expence, at the which it runs out, as at an hole in the bottom of the bag, Hag. 1. 6. See the Note there. Howbeit Gods holy hand is in all this; I will be unto Ephraim as a moth, &c. that is, I will waite them sensim, sine sensu. Secretly, insensively, slowly; but surely, and inevitably: This David after Job, acknowledgeth, Psal. 39. 11. When thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth, thou castest him into a corruptio totius substantia, as the Physicians call the Hectick: surely every man is vanity. Selah: Yea he is altogether vanity, yea and that in his best estate, when he is best underlaid, when settled on his best bottom, verse 5. when he is gotten upon his mount with David, and thinks to die in his nest with Iob: when he counts upon much good laid up in store for many years, as that rich fool, that reckoned without his host, as we say. Tinea damnum facit. & sonitum non facit, saith Gregory. The moth maketh no noise, but doth a great deal of hurt among clothes. The worm here, rendred rottenesse, is minutissimus vermiculus, saith Luther here, a very small creature, but doth no small mischief: for it eats out the heart of the strongest wood, yea of the strongest oaken planks at Sea. See here what a poor creature is man, yea a whole kingdom, when as a moth and a little worm may consume them: when they may be crushed before the moth, as Iob speaks, Chap. 4. 19. he saith not, before the Lion, but before the moth. Learn also to take heed of sin, yea of secret sins, 2 King. 17. 9. lest we be secretly wasted, our graces cast into a consumption, our comfortables wiped away, our consciences wearied with secret buffets, as being smitten with the rod of Gods mouth, Esay 11. 4. our estates melted as the fat of lambs before the fire, and our land insensibly wasted, and by degrees desolated; as Ephraim and Judah were, as the Greek Empire was, and as it began to be here with us, in Queen Maries raigne, which was never prosperous after that she had abolished the Gospel: for beside forraigne losses, of Calice, &c. extreme dearths raged, much hurt was done by thunder from heaven, and by fire in the royall Navie, and all things went to worse, till Queen Elisabeth came in, a repaire of the breach, a restorer of paths to dwell in, Esay 53. 12. according to that glorious Epitaph, caused by King James to be inscribed upon her Princely Monument by him erected.

that smote them, neither do they seek the Lord of Hosts: therefore is not his anger turned away, but his hand is stretched out still, Esay 9. 12, 13. If God be angry, no other helps can relieve us; no creature comfort us; no combination with King Iareb secure us. In a Mine, if a damp come, it is in vain to trust to your lights; they will burn blew and dim, and at last vanish; you must make hast to be drawn upward, if you will be safe. So must men make to God; fleeing from his anger to his grace. Blood-letting is a cure of bleeding, and a burn a cure against a burn; and the running to God is the way to escape him; as to close and get in with him that would strike you, doth avoid the blow. In a tempest at Sea, it is very dangerous to strike to the shoar: the safest way is to have Sea-room, and to keep in the Main still, &c. Iareb cannot be a Defender (according to the import of his name) if God come against a people or person. Brasse and Iron can fence a man against a bullet or a sword; but if he were to be cast into a furnace of fire, it would help to torment him; if into a pit of water to sink him. Now our God is a consuming fire, and his breath a stream of brimstone, &c. as a Reverend man maketh the comparison.

Then went Ephraim to the Assyrian, and Judah sent to king Iareb,] Or, to the king of Iareb, or to the king that should plead, and revenge his cause and quarrell. Ad Regem propugnaturum, saith Iunius. Help O king, said she in the holy historie. Kings should be Helpers, Propugnatores, Protectours. Sanctuaries of safety to the oppressed, whether Subjects or Neighbours: such as the late king of Sweden was to the oppressed Princes of Germany: And before him, Queen Elisabeth to the Low-countrie-men; whose protection when she undertook, the king of Sweden that then was said, that she had taken the crown off her own head, and set it upon the head of Fortune. But what a madnesse was it in Ephraim and Judah, to call in the Assyrian to their help, as they did, 2 King. 16. 7. 2 Chron. 28. 16, 21. but especially 2 King. 15. 19, 20. & 17. 3. This was to invite the enemy into their kingdome, and to shew gold-thirsty Babel, where she might have her full draught. Thus Judea was (after the return from Babylon) lost again to the Romans, by their calling Pompey to decide the controversie betwixt the disagreeing brethren. And such an ungain course was attempted by Iohn King of England, when, being overlaid in his Barons warres, he sent to the Monarch of Morocco for aid, offering to hold his kingdome of him, and to receive the law of Mahomet; but he was rejected with scorne. Afterwards, he passed away his kingdome to the Pope. in hope of help; but had so little joy of it, that he was heard to complain, Postquam me ac mea regna (proh dolor.) Rom. subjeci Ecclesia, nulla mihi prospera, sed omnia contraria advenierunt, I never prospered since I subjected my self and my Kingdomes to the Sea of Rome. No more did the Greek Churches, as above hath been mentioned. By iniquity, saith Solomon, shall no man be established, Prov. 12. 3. Shall they escape by iniquity? saith David: What? no better means and wayes to help themselves by? In thine anger cast down such a people, O God. It is not more a prayer then a prophecy: and it was fulfilled upon this people.

var. hist. lib.
12. cap. 39.

Yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound.] Kings have their names in Greek from healing: they should be Physicians, and binders up of wounds, as Esay 3. 7. (see Corn. à Lapide on that Text) But King Iareb proved a Physician of no value: instead of healing the wound, he made it wider; instead of helping King Abaz, he distressed him, saith the Text. The creature was never true to those that trusted to it. Such are sure to be frustrated, Jer. 14. 3. subjected to Gods wrath, Psal. 78. 22. cursed with a curse, Jer. 17. 5, 6. pointed at as forlorn fools, Psal. 52. 7.

Verse 14. For I will be unto Ephraim as a lion,] I, that is, my Assyrian, the rod of my wrath: will be as a lion, or leopard, a creature swift and fierce above measure. The Vulgar rendreth it, a lioneffe, which, saith Alian, is robustissimum & bellicosissimum animal, a most strong and stout creature: Hence Semiramis gloried much, when in hunting she had taken not a lion, but a lioneffe. What is stronger then a lion, said those Philistims to Sampson, Judg. 14. 14. See 2 Sam. 1. 23. Prov. 30. 29. The Lion (but especially the young Lion, that is in his hot blood) fears no other creature, falls upon his prey with great fury, and teareth it; carrieth it away when he hath done in his mouth, or devours it in the place, and fears no rescue.

rescue. If pursued, he altereth not his gate though he die for it. Some say that he is frightened at the crowing of a cock, or the creaking of wheelles. But the Lion of the tribe of Judah cannot be terrified by any thing or turned out of his track. And Nebuchadnezzar his servant is oft compared to a Lion, Esa. 5. 29. Jer. 41. 7. Dan. 7. 4. as being set awork by God to revenge the quarrell of his Covenant, upon a perverse and perfidious Nation. Hence that oft-repetition here of the pronoun I.

I, even I will tear and go away] Tear the very kell of their heart in sunder, tear them by the teeth of my terrible sword, which shall devour flesh and drink blood; yea be drenched and drunk in the gall of these ungodly wretches. They have no way to help themselves better then to fall down flat before this Lion, to rend their hearts and not their garments, to break off their sins by repentance, and to be abrupt in the work, lest he tear them to piecés, and there be none to deliver them. If this be not timely and truly done, God will go on in his wrath: and of a moth and little worm become a ramping and a roaring Lion. The little cloud though at first but as an handbreadth, will soon overspread the whole heaven: yea as one cloud followeth thicke upon another, so will one judgement upon another, if the Sun of Repentance do not interpose and disperse them. Light afflictions not improved to this purpose, will be but as a drop of wrath forerunning the great storm: as a crack forerunning the ruine of the whole building. That is a known text, If you will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more, and seven times more and seven to that, Levit. 26. 18, 28. Three severall times God raiseth his note, and he raiseth it by sevens; and those are discords in Musick. Such sayings will be heavy songs, and their execution heavy pangs to the wicked.

Versé 15. I will go and return to my place] To my palace of Heaven: so the Chaldee rendereth it, I will withdraw my Majestie, and return into the habitation of my holinesse, which is in heaven. I will go from them that they may come to themselves, with the Prodigal: I will forget them that they may remember themselves: I will trouble my self no further with them (when God comes against sinners he is said to come out of his place, and so to disease himself Esay 26. 21. with Lam. 3. 33.) that they may be afflicted and weep and mourn after me Jam. 4. 9. I will take my rest, and I will consider in my dwelling place, as Esay 18. 4. I will hide my face from them, I will see what their end shall be: for they are a very froward generation, &c. Dent. 32. 20. and they shall see that I will be as froward as they, for the hearts of them, Psal. 18. 26. I will gather them in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave them there, Ezek. 22. 20. that they may know the worth of my gracious presence, (which they have not prized) by the want of it: and be pricked on thereby to pray, Return O Lord: how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants. O satisfie us early with thy mercy, &c. Psal. 90. 13, 14. Thus mothers use to leave their children (or at least turn their backs upon them) till they mourn and make moane after them. Thus the Lion seems to leave her yong ones, till they have almost killed themselves with roaring and howling: but at last gasp she relieves them, whereby they become the more courageous. God also will return to his people, when they once turn short again upon themselves, and see their sin-guiltinesse, and seek his favour. This is Gods end 1 Cor. 11. 32. and the happy effect of affliction sanctified, 1 King. 8. 47.

Till they acknowledge their offence] Heb. Till they become guiltie: till they plead guiltie, and carry themselves accordingly, blushing and bleeding in my presence. Thus Saint James, Be afflicted, or be miserable, Chap. 4. 9. ye are so; but see your selves to be so: tremble and humble at Gods feet for mercy: give glory to God my Son, and confesse thy sin, Josh. 7. 19. The viper beaten casts up her poison. The traytour on the rack confesseth all. He that in affliction acknowledgeth not his offence, and seeketh Gods face, is more hard-hearted then a Jew, as is to be seen here and Psal. 78. 34. and 1 Sam. 7. 6. In the year of Grace 1556. at Weissensteden in Germany, a Jew for theft was in this cruell manner to be executed. He was hang'd by the feet with his head downward, betwixt two dogs, which constantly snatcht & bit at him. The strangenes of the torment moved Jacob Andreas, a grave Divine, to go to behold it. Coming thither he found the poor wretch as he hung, repeating verses out of the Hebrewes Psalms, wherein he cried out to God for mercy. Andreas hereupon took occasion to counsell him to trust in Jesus Christ, the true Saviour of mankind. The Jew embracing the Christian faith, requested but this one thing, that he might be taken down and baptized, though presently after he were hanged again ( but by the neck as Christian malefactours suffered ) which was accordingly granted him. Lan- timer reports a like story of one in his time, who being executed at Oxford, was cut down but not quite dead. And means being used to recover him, he came again to himself, and then confessed all his villany, which before he would not be drawn to do. In the life of Master Perkins also mention is made of a lusty fellow at Cambridge, who being upon the ladder and affrighted with the forethought of hell-torments, was called down again by Master Perkins, who prayed with him and for him to effectually, as that the beholders could not but see a blessed change thereby wrought in the prisoner; who took his death with such patience and alacrity, as if he actually saw himself delivered from the hell which he feared before, and heaven opened for the receiving of his soul to the great rejoycing of the beholders. How well might these men say with Themistocles Periissem nisi periissem. I had been undone, if I had not been undone. David was brought home by the weeping-crosse, Psal. 119. 67. Affliction was a better Schoolmaster to Queen Elizabeth then Master Ascham; Nocmenta documenta, said Crasus, when he was in the hands of his enemies. The Burgundians well beaten by the Hunnes, fled to Christ the God of the Christians, and embraced his Religion.

and seek my face ] Out of a deep sense of their sin-guiltiness. This is the work of Faith, as the former of Repentance. God was not so gone from his people, nor so far out of their call: but that if they could find a praying heart, he would find a pitying heart: if they would acknowledge their offence; he would forgive the iniquity of their sin, Psal. 32. 5. If they would set their Faith a work ( as she in the Gospel did, of whom it is said, that when Christ would have hid himself, it could not be: for a certain woman whose daughter was diseased, came and fell at his feet, fetcht him out of his retiring-room Mark 7. 24. 25. ) he would break the heavens and come down from his place Isai. 64. 1, 2. he would come leaping over all lets and impediments, those mountains of Bether or of division, to the relief of his people ( See this set forth Cant. 5. with the Notes there. ) Provided that they seek not so much their own ease and ends as his face and favour, the sense of his presence and light of his countenance, the fear of his name, and comforts of his spirit. Thus David Psal. 63. 1. O God thou art my God, early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee in a dry and barren Land. Carnall prayers in time of misery are but such as the dry earth, or the hungry raven, make. They are the prayers of nature for ease, not of the spirit for grace: such as was that of Pharaoh, when the rack made him roar, the rod flatter. See Zach. 7. 5, 6. with the Notes.

Ορδυσιστος.

In their affliction they will seek me early ] Manicabunt. They will morning me, so the Originall hath it. They will do it, saith God, for I will give them to do it; both to will it, and to work it: for otherwise afflictions ( Gods hammers ) do but beat cold iron: wicked men grow worse for corrections, as water is more cold after a heat, as naughty boyes are more stubborn or more stupid after a whipping. These also may cry to God, as prisoners at the bar, or malefactours upon the rack: yea seek him early, after a sort, and yet not finde him Prov. 1. 27. no though they seek him with their herds and flocks. Hof. 5. 6. because they seek him not early, and earnestly, or diligently as Prov. 7. 15. inflamedly as Baruch Nehe. 3. 20. and Jabez 1 Chro. 4. 10. accurately and anxiously, as the Church sought her beloved Cant. 5. 1. as the Virgin Mary sought her lost Son. Luke 2. they seek him, not for himself, but for his corn wine and oil Hof. 7. 14. they seek not him but his; they seek him not till they have nothing else to seek to. Most justly therefore may God reject their suits and request upon them, Depart from me ye wicked, Get ye to the gods whom ye have chosen, &c. Justly may he say to them as once Jephth did to his country men. Do ye now come to me in your distresse, who in your prosperity said unto me, Depart from us, we will none of the knowledge of thy wayes? Those that will finde God must seek him early. O satisfie us early with thy mercies, Psal. 90. 14. They must seek him early and late too Esay 26. 9. alwayes and by all means, as the Apostle speaketh in another case; but especially in affliction, as here; for he lookes for it. Our Saviour being in an agony prayed more intensively; so did David out of the deep, Jonah out of the whales belly, the Church when she was in danger, as she thought of losing losing God, then she set up her note and cryed, Thou art put in the midst of us, Jer. 14. 9. leave us not Extingui lucem nec patriam tuam. Thus affliction exciteth devotion in the Saints: and although they seek the Lord and his strength, seek his face evermore, yet especially, In their distresse they cryed unto the Lord, and he heareth them, Psal. 120. 1. in the night of affliction they take the light of a lively faith, and seek him early. And that they may not fail to finde him, they call in help of others, as here in the next chapter. Come and let us return, &c.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Come and let us return unto the Lord, &c. So sweetly was Gods expectation answered: as likewise it was in David Psal. 27. 8. No sooner could God say, Seek ye my face, but his holy heart answered (as it were by an echo) My face Lord will I seek. Look what God aimeth at in his administration to his elect he will have it: He will have out the price of his Sons blood, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, &c. and that he might give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins, Act. 5. 31. See the proof and practice hereof in these Jewish converts. Come and let us return to the Lord, &c. See how in those dayes and at that time the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping they shall go and seek the Lord their God. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come and let us joyne our selves to the Lord in a perpetual Covenant, that shall not be forgotten. Judah and Israel could not agree at other times: but when they are in a weeping condition, then they could, when they passed through the valley of Bara, and made it a Bochim with their penitent tears, even they could go from strength to strength, or from company to company (one company coming this way, and another that) and not rest untill every one of them in Zion appeareth before God. This was fulfilled, partly when the Lord turned again, the captivity of Zion out of Babylon, and those that had sown in tears reaped in joy: those that went forth weeping and bearing precious seed came again with rejoycing and brought their sheaves with them, Psal. 126. 5, 6. confer Jer. 29. 13. partly, under their captivity and oppression by the Romanes, which was when Christ came and by his Apostles converted thousands to the faith, so that multitudes of them were daily added to the Church, Act. 2. and 3. And lastly at that long looked for calling of the Jewes; when they shall flie to Christ crucified as the doves unto their windows; when they shall bring their brethren as an offering to the Lord upon horses, in chariots, and in litters: that is, though sick, weakly and unfit for travell, yet rather in litters, then not at all; every one exciting other, and saying, Come and let us return unto the Lord, &c. Return unto him, from whom we children of Israel have deeply revolted. Let us not pine away in our transgressions, as those Ezek. 33. 10. for yet there is hope in Israel concerning this thing, Ezra 10. 2. we have done all this wickednesse; yet let us not turn aside from following the Lord: for this were to adde rebellion to sin, 1 Sam. 12. 20. this were worse then all the rest.

Come let us return unto the Lord ] By our sins we have run from him: by repentance let us return unto him. See for this the Note on Zach. 1. 2. If the wicked have their Come, Prov. 1. 11. Esay 56. ult. should not the Saints have theirs? as Esay 2. 3. Zech. 13. 21. See the Note. Should not Andrew call Philip, and Philip Nathanael, as one linke in a chain doth another, &c. True grace is communicative, charity is no shurle; the Saints like not to go to heaven alone.

For he hath torn ] Rapuit not cepit, as the vulgar, by a foul mistake of capio for rapio in the Hebrew Lexicons. Here these converts confesse that their affliction neither came forth of the dust, Job 5. 6. nor without their desert: they acknowledge God to be the Lion that tore them, Chap. 5. 14. and not without cause: for that they had wickedly departed from him. This is one property of true repentance, still to justifie God, and to say as Mauritius the Emperour did (after David) when he saw his wife and children slain by the traytour Phocas, &c. Righteous art thou, O Lord in all thy wayes, and just in all thy proceedings. Another property of it is, to bring a man to God with some assurance of healing.

He

tentia est

He will heal us, ] For he is Jehovah the Physician, Exod. 15. 26. Now Omni-potenti medico nullus insanabilis occurrit morbus, saith Isidore, To an Almighty Physician, no disease can be incurable. Ephraim went to the Assyrian upon sight of his disease; but he could not heal him, Chap. 5. 13. But God both can and will.
Here he is compared both to a Physician, he will heal; and to a Surgeon, he will binde up. That which the Poets fable concerning Telephus his Spear, is here onely verified: Una eademque manus vulnus opemque ferat. The same, holy hand that tare us, must cure us: and the sound perswasion of his readinesse to do it for us, will soonest of any thing bring us into his presence. Iudas confesseth his wound, and despaireth of the cure. But Peter is constrained by the love of Christ to weep bitterly, and beleve. A stroak from guilt broak Iudas his heart into despair: but a look from Christ brake Peters heart into tears. There is no mention of Israels lamenting after the Lord, while he was gone: but when he was returned, and settled in Kiriath-jearim, then they poured forth water, &c. 1 Sam. 7. then they gather about him, and will do any thing that he commandeth them. Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, Heb. 11. 22.

Verse 2. After two dayes will he revive us, ] Whereas some of those that were called upon to Come and return unto the Lord, might say with those in Jeremy, Nay, for there is no hope, God hath mortally wounded us, so that we are already in the jawes of death, free among the dead, as the Psalmist hath it, free of that company:
The better sort of them, fullest of faith, answer: Dead though we be, yet God will revive us: and long though it seem, yet after two dayes, or such a matter, in a very short space, so soon as ever it shall be convenient, and for our greatest good,
He that shall come to our comfort, will come, and will not tarry. And for the certainty of it, as sure as the third day followeth the second, so sure shall deliverance come in due season: fear ye not.

In the third day he will raise us up, ] He will, he will, never doubt of it. O the

26. 20. & 10. 25, Hagg. 2. 7. Habak. 2. 3. Heb. 10. 37. and have patience. Gods help seems long, because we are short: Nec quia dura, sed quia molles patimur.
We should draw forth hope as a line: and think we hear Christ saying as he did to Peter, What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter.

Verse 3. Then shall we know, ] Heb. And we shall know, we shall follow on to know, i. e. We shall experimentally know the Lord, if we turn unto him: wee shall tast and see that the Lord is good. We shall not onely be raised out of the dust of death, that is, of deep afflictions, (wherein we lay as among the pots) and live in his sight, that is, comfortably; but we shall know him, which is life eternall; yea we shall prosecute knowledge, follow on to know; as unsatisfiable, and not content with any measures already required: yea we shall proceed therein and make progress, as the morning light doth to the perfect day. Those that turn from their

He that first begs, and then digs for knowledge, searching for her as for hid treasure, Prov. 2. 3, 4. He shall be sure of some daily comings in from Christ: he shall understand the fear of the Lord, and finde the knowledge of God, verse 5. Christ will say unto him, as once he did to Nathaneel, Thou shalt see greater things then these, Iohn 1. 50. even great and mighty things, which thou knowest not, Ier. 33. 3.

His going forth is prepared as the morning, ] That is, as sure as the morning followeth the night, and shineth more and more unto the perfect day; so sure shall God appear for our comfort, and shall dispell the night of our calamity. Mourning lasteth but till morning; and as before the morning-light is the thickest darknesse, so before deliverance our afflictions are usually increased upon us. God appeareth on the sudden and beyond expectation, (as out of a cloud, or as out of an engine) and shews himself then usually, when things are at worst. Hence that of Iob, Post tenebras spero lucem: and that of the Church in Micah, Though I fall, I shall arise: when I sit in darknesse, the Lord shall be a light unto me. Vatablus applieth this Text to the coming of Christ, that day-star from on high, that Sun of righteousness, to whom all the Prophets point Gods people, when they would comfort them indeed; for he is the Consolation of Israel, the Desire of all Nations, for whom their souls waited more then they that watch for the morning, wait for the morning, Psal. 130. 6. But because Gods going forth is opposed to his departure, when he retired to his place, Chap. 5. 10. therefore his settled going forth here, is by most interpreted of his manifestations of his mercy to his poor prisoners of hope, those disconsolate captives, whom he not onely brought back from Babylon, but also shined into some of their hearts, by the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Iesus Christ. 2 Cor. 4. 6.

and he shall come unto us as the rain, ] As the showres of blessing, Ezek. 34. 26. rain of liberalities, Psal. 68. 9. rain of righteousness, Hos. 10. 12. Cito exaudi me Domine: complue me, saith Austin upon those words of David, My soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Hear me quickly, O Lord, rain righteousness upon my dry soul, fill me with the fruits of thy Spirit; whose work it is to illuminate and sanctifie, as it is the Fathers to heal, verse 1. and the Sons to revive, and raise us together with himself, the first-fruits of them that sleep, verse 2.

as the latter and former rain unto the earth. ] sc. in perfection of gifts and graces, by degrees wrought in our hearts: Or, in seasonable and sutable comforts, as rain in seed-time, softening the ground: and a little before harvest, to plump and fill up the corn in the ear.

Verse 4. O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee, &c. ] See how soon the Prophet changeth his note. Hitherto he had set forth their repentance, in sense of mercy: now all on the sudden, he upbraideth and threatneth them for their incorrigibleness, and inconstancy. Ministers must turn themselves, as it were, into all shapes and fashions, both of speech and spirit, to win people to God. Aarons bells must be wisely rung, saith One. Sometimes the Treble of Mercy sounds well. At other times the Tenour of Judgement, or Counter-tenour of reproof sounds better: and it oft falls out that the Mean of Exhortation soundeth best of all. It is his wisdom to observe circumstances, and know how to curse as well as blesse, chide as well as comfort, and speak warre to a rebell, as well as peace to a friend. And herein indeed lieth the wisdom and faithfulness of a Teacher. Then, and onely then shall he prove himself sincere, and unpartiall, when he holds this course. What shall I do unto thee? It is, as if God should say, I have done mine utmost, as Esay 5. 5. Mich. 5. 3. and now am at a stand, and can scarce tell what to do more. See the like expostulatory complaints, Ier. 2. 30, 31. & Chap. 5. 3. Amos 4. 6. Esay 26. 10. Matth. 11. 16, 17, 18. & 23. 37. I would, but thou wouldest not. As the loving hen is alwayes caring for her chickens, and calling them about her, that she may gather and guard them from the mischief of all vermin: but they will needs be stragling, and so perish. So if Gods people will not hearken to his voice, if Israel will none of him: what can he do lesse then give them up to their own hearts lusts, Psal. 81. 12. yea give them up to the devil, to be further hardened to their just destruction, saying, That which will die, let it die? All that God can do is, as here, to mourn for their obstinacy, and fool-hardinesse in rejecting his grace, as he wept over Jerusalem, Luke 19. 42. We should also do the like, crying out with Esay, My leannesse, my leannesse! and with Jeremy, My bowels, my bowels! and with Paul, I have great heavinesse and continuall sorrow in my heart, for my perverse Countrey-men. Peter calleth them, an untoward generation: such crooked pieces that there was no working upon them. A cunning Carver can cut the similitude of any creature, yet not on a crooked or rotten stick. Where lieth the fault? surely in the crookednesse of the stick, and not in the Carvers cunning: so is it here. When men wrestle with God, as Deut. 32. 5. shift him off, as the Apostles word signifieth, Heb. 12. 25. take up the bucklers against the sword of his Spirit, lest it should prick them at heart, as Acts 2. 37. and let out the life-blood of their lusts, that they might live; what can the Lord do in this case, more then pity their unhappinesse, and punish them for their stubbornnesse, as the Judge pitieth a malefactor, as he is a man, but yet condemneth him as a thief or murdurer? Tell me not here, that God could have done more for Ephraim and Judah then he did; and they might have said in answer to Gods question here, as that Lepre in the Gospel did. Why? Lord if thou wilt thou canst make me clean. Hence it is, God by his absolute power can make iron swim, rocks stream forth water, stones to yeeld children to Abraham: he can do whatsoever he pleaseth; save without means, &c. But it is his actuell power that men must look to. And so he (having tied the end and the means together) cannot (say Divines) because hee will not, bring men to the end, without their using those means which tend unto the end: for that is the ordinary course which he hath decreed to use, and which he will not alter, but upon speciall occasion, as our Saviour notheth in the cure of Naa-man, and in the feeding of the widow of Sarepta, Luke 4. 26. 27.

for your goodnesse is as the morning cloud, &c.] This people hearing God say, What shall I do unto you? might possibly reply; why? what should you do, but rain down righteousness upon us, and load us with loving-kindnesses? for we are good all over, we have returned and done right in thy sight, as it is said of those hypocrites, Ier. 34. 15, 16. and as Peter saith of some Apostates in his time, that they were clean escaped from them who live in error: and (for matter of practise) they had also escaped the pollutions of the world; knew the way of righteousness, and seemed very forward in it; were as the fore-horses in a Team, ring-leaders of good exercises, &c. who yet afterwards fell off to the world, turned from the holy commandments; and returned with the dog, to their vomit, and with the washed sow to her wallowing again in the mire. And this is that which the Lord here upbraideth this people with, (and so stops their mouths) viz. that their goodnesse, or mercifulnesse, their piety toward God, and charity toward men, was nothing else but a morning-cloud, a waterlesse cloud, as Jude hath it, a meer flaunt, or flash, an out-side onely, an empty sound, a vain pretence; It was also as the morning-dew, which is soon dried up by the Sun-beams: In a word, they were both false and fickle, unsteady and unstable, constant onely in their inconstancy. Hence this patheticall complaint of them; God knew not where to have them, and therefore not what to do with them. These were never right with God, because not stedfast in his covenant, Psal. 78. 36, 37. they are unstable as water, therefore they shall not excell, Gen. 49. 4. they never were a willing people in the day of Christs power, Psal. 110. 3. his power was never put forth upon them, to subdue their wils to Gods will. They never yet attained to that spirit of power, of love, and of a sound minde; 2 Tim. 1. 7. Inconstancy comes from weaknesse. The strength of Israel repenteth not, 1 Sam. 15. 29.

Verse 5. Therefore have I hewed them by my Prophets,] Therefore? wherefore? because there is so little stability, and solidity in them: because they are so off and on, so light and false hearted; therefore I have spared for no pains, (though all to small purpose) but have sharply rebuked them, that they might be sound in the faith: yea I have fought against them with the sword of my mouth, and slain them by powerfull convictions of conscience: so that they are self-condemned, and the judgements are written, as it were with a beam of the Sun, they are so clear to themselves themselves and others. This is the coherence, and the reason of the illative particle Therefore. It is the sad complaint of a late Reverend writer, *when we have spent all our wind on our people, their hearts will be still apt to be carried away with every wind of doctrine. They are wonne, faith another, with an apple, and lost with a nut: no man knows where to find them in one mind for a moneths space: such a generation of Moon-calves never appeared in the world before. Our giddy-hearers (faith a third) after all our pains taken with them, have no mould, but what the next teacher casteth them into; being blown like glasses, into this or that shape at the pleasure of his breath. But to return to the Text.

I have hewed them by the Prophets ] who are here compared to Masons or stone-hewers, 2 King. 12. 12. 1 Chron. 22. 3. Job 19. 24. Esay 51. 1. to Carpenters 1 King. 5. 15. Prov. 9. 1. Esay 5. 2. to day-labourers who dig pits and cisternes Dent. 6. 11. and 8. 9. 2 Chron. 26. 10. Neh. 9. 25. Jer. 2. 13. A ministers life is no idle-mans occupation; they meet with many rough stones, knotty pieces, hard quarres, tough work. Some are stones crumbling, all to crattle, as soon as we begin to hammer them; and as timber falling to splinters when we fall to hewing of them: and other such sons of Belial there are that a man cannot speak to them: 1 Sam. 25. 17. they are thorns that cannot be taken with hands, but the man that shall touch them must be fenced with iron, and with the staffe of a speare. * These shall be thrust away as thorns, and utterly burnt with fire, 2 Sam. 23. 6, 7. And for the better sort, those lively stones, 1 Pet. 2. 5, and smother pieces that are to be set into Gods building, being made by his grace more malleable and tractable, there must be a great deal of painstaking with them, that they may be as the polished corners of the Temple: they must be humbled and hammered, Ier. 23. 19. pared and planed here in the mount; for there may neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron be heard in the heavenly house, for which they are fitting, 1 Kin. 6. 7. And herein we are labourers together with God; ye are Gods husbandry, ye are Gods building, 1 Cor. 3. 9. In which labourous kind of life, I endure all things for the Elects sake, that they may be saved, faith Paul, 2 Tim. 2. 10. And I dare be bold to say, faith Luther, that faithful Ministers do labour and sweat more in a day, then husbandmen do in a moneth. And for mine own part, faith he, Si mihi esset integrum vocationem deserere, If it were lawful for me to leave my calling, I could with lesse pains and more pleasure, dig and do day-work, then labour as I now do, in the work of the ministry. Pareus thinks that the next words,

I have killed them with the words of my mouth ] is spoken by God of the Prophets. q. d. I have set them so heavy a task and put them so hard to it, that it hath been the death of them; such crabbed and rugged spirits they have met with, such stubborn and tough timber that had long lain soaking in the waters of wickednesse: these tooles of mine are even worn out with working. * But though this be a pious interpretation, and not altogether improbable, because of the change of person here, viz. them for you: yet because such a change is ordinary in Scripture and Emphatical also; namely when God seemeth deeply displeased with any one, and therefore leaveth taking to him, and turns himself suddenly to another ( see chap. 4. 14. and 5. 3. 4. ) I conceive it may very well be so in this place. Occidi istos I have slain these refractories and rebels with the words of my mouth. I have beaten so hard upon their consciences, that they have had no joy of their lives. I have marked them out for destruction, by threatening it, as Ier. 18. 7. 8. and ch. 1. 10. Elisba hath his sword as well as Jehu and Hazael, 1 King. 19. 17. and when Elisba unsheatheth and brandisheth his sword, it is a fair warning that the sword of Jehu and Hazael are at hand. See Ezek. 11. 13. And it came to passe that when I prophesied, Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. So did Ananias and Sapphira, Acts 5. So do many despisers now adayes, though it appear not by them. A man may have his bane about him, though he fall not down dead in the place. If any man hurt Christs two witneses, fire ( though not felt ) proceedeth out of their mouthes and devoureth their enemies. Rev. 11. 5.

And thy judgements are as the light that goeth forth ] i.e. I have clearly denounced them and will as openly execute them in the sight of this Sun. The righteous shall see it and shall say, Lo this is the man, &c. Psa. 52. 6. 7. and 119. 137. Thou, by thine hypocrisie, and externall services; as verse 6. hath cast a mist before mens eyes, that they cannot think thee to be so near a judgement: but I will dispell that mist, and make

make my works a comment upon my word: and having sent unto thee a powerfull ministry, but to no purpose, I will make thee, who wouldst not hear the word, to bear the rod, and who hath appointed it. Mic. 7. 9.

Verse 6. For I desired mercy and not sacrifice ] that is, rather then sacrifice: I prefer the marrow and pith of the second table, before the ceremony and surface of the first.

I desired mercy ] Heb. I desired it with singular delight and complacency, Aurea certe sententia, saith Rivet. This is a golden sentence, twice quothed by Christ himself, Mat. 9. 13. and Mat. 12. 7. which noteth the eminency of it. And with it agreeth that answer of the Scribe so much approved of by our Saviour Mar. 12. 33. To love thy neighbour as thy self is more then all burnt-offerings and sacrifices, And that of the Authour to the Hebrewes. But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased Chap. 13. 16. a great deal better pleased then with all the outward services and sacrifices of the Law, which yet were commanded by God, but not to be rested in: These be famous sentences indeed; such as a man would fetch upon his knees from Rome or Jerusalem, as a Reverend man saith of certain brave sayings of Luther, which he had recited. Mercy is here put for all the duties of charity; as the knowledge of God is for those other of Piety, whereof it is the rise and foundation. Mercy is set first non ut potior sed ut notior, not as better but as better known, and more noticed. They are set together, because they must not be sundred in our practise. Obedience must be universal, extending to the Compasse of the whole Law. A man must not be funambulus virtutum, as Tertullian speakes, going in a narrow track of obedience, picking and chusing what he will do and what not; following God in such duties as will suit with him and no further. He must follow after God as Caleb Num. 14. 14. ha ve respect to all Gods commandments, and do all his wills, as David walkt in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, as Zachary and Elizabeth Luke 1. 6. These partiall and perverse Jewes walked in all the ordinances, but they cared not for the commandments: they were altogether for the ceremoniall Law, but neglected the moral. Or if they did any thing that way, it was but the outward act of a commandment, which men may naturallly perform. Thus Abah humbled himself: and some think that Uria (which Esay calleth the faithful witnessse) the same with him that brought in the Altar of Damascus, yet reputed a faithful man of his word. An hypocrite may shew mercy, but not love mercy, Mic. 6. 8. and know God, but not affectively, practically, according to that of Saint Iohn, Hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments, 1 Joh. 2. 23. This is that obedience which is better then sacrifice, 1 Sam. 15. 22. Ier. 7. 21. and no wonder, Quia per victimas, aliena caro, per obedientiam voluntas propria mactatur, saith one; in sacrifices the flesh of another, but in obedience our own wils are offered up: and this the very Heathen, by the dim rush-light of nature, saw to be better. Hold thou it the fairest sacrifice and best service, to keep thy self pure and upright, saith Isocrates. O Nicoles, And,

Verf. 7. But they like, men ] Heb. like Adam, that Arch-Rebel, that old μαγιστῆς, after the similitude of whose transgression these men had sinned, Rom. 5. 14. and so deserved, in like sort to be punished, by being cast out of their country, as he was out of paradise. Thus some sence it: as if the prophet would here reduce these covenant-breakers, to that first transgressor Adam in whom they all were; as the whole country is in a Parliament-man, and as Levi was in Abrahams loynes, and paid tithes in him, Heb. 7. 9. Others take Adam for an Appellative, and give a reason for it out of the text, because it is Keadam, and not Kabadam, with an emphatical. And of these some again read it thus, Illi tanquam hominis transgressi sunt fœdus, they transgressed the covenant, as if it had been a mans covenant: they made no more of breaking it, then as if they had had to do with dust and ashes like themselves, with their fellow-creatures, and not with the great God: and might therefore deal by their covenants, as monkeyes do by their collars, which they fit on for their masters pleasure, and slip off again for their own. Others read it, as we do;

They

They like men have transgressed, &c. sorry men, fickle and falsehearted men, such as David pointed at, when he said, All men are liars, and Paul, 2 Cor. 3. 3. Are ye not carnal, and walk as men, that is, as profane men, aliens from the common-wealth of Israel? Singular things are expected from Gods peculiar, Mat. 5. 47. as to be eminent in good works, Tit. 3. 14. to get above others, as Saul was above the people by head and shoulders; to get to the very top of godlinesse, as the Apostles phrase importeth, Esaï. 5. 15. to keep Gods covenant as the apple of the eye, as Solomon saith, Prov. 7. 2. that little man in the eye, that cannot be touched but he will be distempered. This the world counts precisenesse, and makes nothing of transgressing, of leaping over the hedge of any commandment, so they may shun a piece of foule way. Lo, this is the manner of most men, yea, of all men by nature; they make no bones of transgressing the laws, of changing the ordinance, of breaking the everlasting covenant; Esaï. 24. 5. And this when they do, they work de suo & secundum hominem; for Homo est inversus Decalogus, the natural man stands acrosse to the law of God, to the whole Decalogue: the two tables whereof are called the tables of the covenant, Deut. 9. 9, 11. Neither is this any excusing or extenuation of their sin, that they do but their kind, they do it as men. It is an aggravation rather, q. d. They not onely transgress my covenant, but they do it naturally, and out of the vilenesse of their proper inclinations: like as the devil, when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh, de suo of his own, Job. 8. 44. he can do no otherwise. It is as impossible for those that are carnal and walk as men to keep covenant with God, as for a toad to spit cordials. If at any time they make an overture of doing it, if they make an essay, it is but as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that goeth away, as vers. 5. with which this verse cohereth; the 6. verse coming in, as it were by a parenthesis.

There have they dealt treacherously against me,] There? where? in the very point of the covenant, which by their sacrifices and burnt-offerings they so solemnly professed and engaged to observe: lo, therein have they prevaricated, and then at the same time have they falsified, as the same word is used, Psal. 14. 5. I have been neare in their mouth, but far from their reines, Jer. 9. 2. In words they professe to know me, but in works they deny me, being abominable and disobedient, and to every good work reprobate, Tit. 1. 16. Or there, that is, (as the Chaldee Paraphrast feneth it,) In that good land which I have given them, even in Gilead, as in the next words. They live in my good land, but not by my good laws: yea, they have filled it (as the cursed Canaanites did before them, Ezra. 9. 11.) from one end to another with their uncleannesse, which therefore longs for a vomit to cast them out: There have they dealt treacherously, as the adulteresse doth, who forsaketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God. The sins of such as break covenant with God are sins of a double die; they are wickednesse with a witnesse, because they do wickedly against the covenant, Dan. 11. 32. these treacherous dealers deal treacherously, yea, these treacherous dealers deal very treacherously, Isaï. 24. 16. And this they have done against Me, who have stooped so low, as to strike a covenant with them; and such a covenant, 2 Sam. 23. 5. and have never failed or falsified. See Deut. 29. 24, 25.

Verf. 8. Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity,] Another Pœniropolis; such a city there was in Greece, and so called by king Philip, for the naughtinesse of the Inhabitants. This Gilead was one of those ten cities of refuge beyond Jordan, given to the Priests for a possession, Josh. 21. 36. &c. and probably the chief city, which therefore bare the name of the whole countrey, as Athens was called the Greece of Greece. The inhabitants thereof (though Levites) were the worst of men, workers of iniquity, such as did wickedly with both hands, earnestly wearying themselves in the Devils drudgery; and then sitting down to rest them in the chair of pestilence. There is not a worse creature upon earth, or so fit for hell, as a profane Priest, a debauched Minister, Mat. 5. 13. Corruptio optimi pessima, as the sweetest wine makes the fowrest vinegar, as the finest flesh is resolved into the vilest earth; and as the whitest ivory burnt, becomes the blackest coal: Who would have looked for so much wickednesse at Gilead, at Shiloh, at Anathoth, at Jerusalem where the Priests and Scribes bare sway, and did dominari in sugg:stis? And yet that once faithful city was become an harlot: it was full of judgement, righteousness lodged in it, but now murderers. In our Saviours time it was Prophetarum macellum, the slaughterhouse of the Saints; as now Rome is, and once London was in bloody Bonnors dayes: whom a certain good woman once told in a letter, that he was deservedly called the common cut-throat, and general slaughter-slave to all the Bishops of England. At his death he boasted (as Stokesley had done before him) how many heretikes he had burned: seven hundred faints in four or five yeers (space those bloody and deceitful men sent to heaven, in fiery charrets. Gilead was polluted with blood,] not onely with the blood of souls, (by their default drowned in perdition and destruction) but of bodies too, destroyed by their hands or means. The Priests of these times may seem, by what is said of them in the next verse, to have been men of their hands, the sworn sword-men of the devil, such as was Timotheus Herulus Bishop of Alexandria, Anno 467. Pope Innocent who threw Peters keyes into the river Tiber, and took up Pauls sword, as he called it, and that Philip Bishop of Beau-view in France, taken in a skirmish by our Richard the first, who sent his armour to the Pope with these words engraved on it, Vide num filii tui tunica sit, vel non. See whether this be the coat of thy son, or of a son of Mars. These, and their like in their several generations, were non Pastores, sed Impostores, non Doctores sed Seductores, non Episcopi sed Aposcopi, as an Ancient hath it: And indeed, the Church hath ever been so pestered with leud and lazy Ministers (those dehonestamenta Cleri) that Chrysostome thought there were scarce any of that order in his time, that could be saved: Hierome saith, that the paucity of such as were good, had made them very precious. And Campian cries out, not altogether without cause (Malice may be a good informer though an ill Judge) Ministris eorum nihil vilium; Now this is here instanced as an odious transgression of the covenant, when such as made such a shew of sacrifice to God, should exercise so little mercy to men: when such as should be Teachers, were turned Tyrants and blood-suckers.

Verse 9. And as troops of robbers wait for a man,] This verse hath much of the former in it, saith an Interpreter. The sum of it is, saith Wigandus, to shew, that all the forementioned wickednesses were committed, instinctu doctorum, by the instinct of their Priests, who were now turned Tories or Mosse-troopers. Hierome asked his Jew-doctour the meaning of this text, and received this answer: that at the time of the Passover and the Pentecost, the people used to come to Jerusalem; and as they were going in their journey, these Priests would stand in the way and slay them. Others think, that these corrupt priests took into their city of refuge divers thieves and murderers; who not having whereupon otherwise to subsist, turned high-way-men, (as they call them) and returning again into the city, divided the spoyle with the Priests, who had their share: and are therefore called companions of robbers, and are said to murder in the way by consent, or with one shoulder, or as Simeon and Levi did at Shechem q. d. Sichemice craftily and cruelly (for so many wayes these words are rendred) & all this they did of malice forethought, of premeditated mischief, called here committing leudnesse. Even as they thought in their hearts, so they acted, saith King David. They executed the counsel of the wicked, saith the Chaldee Paraphrast. They machinated mischief, and then practised what they had plotted with a deliberate will, and as it were with an high hand. Look now upon the Popish Monkes, saith Tarmonius, and compare them with these Priests whom Hosea reproveth. And Luther saith, that they had a proverb in Germany, that there was nothing so bad, which the Monkes could think of, but they would dare to do it.

Cap. 6.

Verf. 10. I have seen an horrible thing in the house of Israel,] Now a very den of thieves, as verf. 9. a Pantheon of all sorts of idols, a chamber of imagery, an Egyptian Temple, gay and goodly without, but within an ox or calfe, with women weeping for Tammuz, Ezek. 8. 12. 14. that is, for Osyris King of Egypt, whose image (under the shape of an ox) his wife Isis had advanced to be idolatrously there adored. This kind of abomination Ieroboam had learned in Egypt (whither he fled from Solomon his master) and brought into the house of Israel. And whereas those those Idolaters said, The Lord seeth us not, the Lord hath forsaken the earth, Ezek. 8. 12. I have seen it, saith God, and been sore troubled at it, and even affrighted; so as a man is quando horripilatur, when his hairs stand an end; as when the devil appeareth to him like an hairy Satyr. See Lev. 17. 7. with the Note. Certain it is, that God hateth sin (but especially Idolatry, that abominable thing, as he calleth it, Jer. 44. 4.) worse then he hateth the devil himself: for he hateth the devil for sins sake, and not sin for the devils sake. Idolatry must needs be so much the more odious to him, because therein the devil sets up himself in the place of God; and requires men (as once he did Christ himself) to fall down and worship him. See Deut. 32. 17. 1 Cor. 10. 20. Rev. 9. 20. So he dealeth by the poor Indians at this day, compelling them to worship him with bodily worship, and tormenting them, if they do not, worse (if worse may be) then the cruel Spaniards; who suppose they shew the wretches favour, when they do not, for their pleasure, whip them with cords, and day by day drop their naked bodies with burning bacon. The Hebrew word here used, hath some letters more then ordinary in it, to encrease the signification, and to shew what a very horrible thing Idolatry is. It is spurca pollutio, as Jer. 23. 14. and worse. See Jer. 2. 11, 12. and 18. 13. and know that God doth not use to aggravate things beyond truth, as men do, witnesse Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 3. 14. Is it true, O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego? Or, is it of set purpose? so Buxtorf rendreth it. Is it for the nonce, to provoke me? Or Nunquid desolatio? so Arias Montanus: As if he should say, What? you, to oppose the command of a king? If this be suffered, what desolation must needs follow? But this is not Gods way: he layes no more words upon a thing, then the matter amounteth to. If he call Idolatry, filth, fornication, abomination, an horrible thing, such as a man would start, or stand agast at, we may be sure it is so. The Septuagint here, render it ἐπιδόξω, things to be trembled at, or shrieked at. In Barbary 'tis death for the Xeriffs wife, when she seeth a man, though but thorow a calement, not suddenly to shriek out. God is a jealous God, and allows not his to look toward an Idol. If they do, he will soon see it, and visit for it. I have seen, &c.

There is the whoredome of Ephraim, ] Thus God looketh upon it as filthinesse, and nastinesse, which the people beheld as finenesse and neatnesse. And the same do all (that have the minde of God, and senses exercised to discern betwixt good and evil) judge of all the Popish pomp and palterment, wherewith they bewitch the deluded vulgar, as the serpent Scytale doth the fleeing passenger, whom when she cannot overtake, yet with her beautifull colours she doth so astonish and amaze him, Plin. that he hath no power to passe away, till stung to death.

Verse 11. Also O Judah, he hath set an harvest for thee, ] This is a very difficult Text: and much vexed by Interpreters. Et hic nisi Lyra tyrasset, nos omnes delirassemus. Lyra sets this sence upon the Text; and I accord him: Though thou Judah, art also to be carried captive: yet God hath set, or provided for thee, an harvest in thine own land, when I shall have returned the captivity of my people, viz. under the conduct of Zorobabel, by the Decree of Cyrus. Here then is a promise of a joyfull harvest to Judah, who is not to be punished with like severity as Israel, Chap. 1. 7. and for the change of person, when I returned, for he shall have returned. See Esay 29. 19. Ier. 31. 23. Zeph. 3. ult. Psal. 14. ult. Simul Juda captivitas & reditus predicatur significanter admodum, saith Hierom here; Both the captivity and return of Judah is here very significantly foretold. It is a very good Note that One giveth here, sc. that God in his chastisements ever sheweth himself mindfull of his Covenant: after a long barrennesse, he setteth for his people a plentiful harvest, and turneth again their captivity, after that for a time he hath tried them. His mercy also and faithfulness herein appeareth, that he mingleth promises with threatnings: and whiles he utterly destroyeth the kingdome of the ten Tribes, he preserveth the Common-wealth of Judah, wherein the Messias was to come, and whereof there was not (by the ancient propheties) to be a dissolution, till Shiloh came. Hence it is, that promises of the restauration of Judah are ever intermingled, lest any should doubt of the manifestation of the Messiah, in the fulnesse of time.

Verse 1. WHEN I would have healed Israel, &c.] Whereas Israel, hearing of an happy harvest promised to Judah, Chap. 6. 11. and themselves excluded, might complain of hard dealing: God shews them here, that Cru- delem medicum intemperans aeger facit, the fault was meerly in themselves. God came with his healing medicines to have cured them, but they hated to be healed, and like mad-men, railed and raged against the Physician, spilt the potions, would none of those slibber-sauses, as they accounted them: yea (as if on purpose to crosse God.) then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the wickednesses (malitia multiplex) of Samaria,] Of so perverse a spirit were they: and therefore (in Solomons judgement, Prov. 12. 8.) worthy to have been despised and let alone to perish in their corruptions. In Hippocrates his time, the Physicians were bound by oath, to leave such under their wounds to perish by them, as were unruly, and would not be ordered. We would have healed Babylon, (saith the Church) but she would not be healed: forsake her therefore, saith God, Jer. 51. 9. Let them alone, saith Christ, Matth. 15. 14. That, that will die, let it die: A fearfull sentence. Let them swelter and pine away in their iniquities, Levit. 26. 39. In their filthinesse is leudnesse, their disease is complicate, it is the leprosie in the head, it breaketh forth in their forehead, and my people love to have it so: but what will they do in the end thereof? Ephraim here discovereth a headstrong wilfulness that was uncounsellable, uncureable. He runs away after conviction, with the bit between his teeth, as it were: he runs, I say, upon the rock. Am. 6. 12. where he first breaketh his hooves, and then his neck. Some grow desperately sinfull, like those Italian Senatours, that despairing of their lives, (when upon submission they had been promised their lives, yet) being conscious of their villany, made a curious banquet; and at the end thereof every man drank up his glasse of poyson, and killed himself. So men feeling such horrible hard hearts, and privie to such notorious sins, they cast away souls and all for lust; and perish wofully, because they lived desperately, and so securely. It is a fearfull signe of reprobation, when Gods means and medicines do men no good, but hurt rather: when Physick which should remove the disease, doth cooperate with it, then death comes with the more pain and speed. The stronger the conviction of sin is, the deeper will be the wrath against it, if it be not by repentance avoided.

for they commit falsehood,] They do not the truth, 1 Job. 1. 6. but deal falsely, Jer. 6. 13. every one of them, from the Prophet, even to the Priest: they work a deceitfull work, Prov. 11. 18. their bellies prepare deceit, Job 15. 35. they have an art in lying, in stitching one lie to another, as the word signifieth, Psal. 119. 69. Idolatry is a reall lie, as she in the book of Martyrs answered the Doctour, that asked her, Dost thou beleve that the body of Christ is in the Sacrament of the Altar really and substantially? I beleve said she, that so so hold, is a reall lie, and a substantiall lie. These Idolaters having plaied false with God, and treacherously dealt with him, what wonder though they lie, deceive, rob, spoil, both within doors and without, in private negotiations, and publike transactions? but especially forge lies against those that withstood their superstitious vanities, and prey upon their goods; as Heb. 10. 34. Sublata pietate tollitur fides, is a truth irrefragable. Take away piety, and fidelity is gone: as we see in that unrighteous Judge, Luke 18. 2. and as Abraham concluded of the men of Gerar, Gen. 20. 11, and lastly, as Constantinus Chlorus, the father of Constantine the Great, experimented in his own Councillours, and Courtiers: whence that famous Maxime of his, recorded by Eusebius: He cannot be faithfull to me, who is unfaithfull to God; religion being the ground of all true fidelity and loyalty.

Verse 2. And they consider not in their hearts,] Heb. They say not in their hearts: that is, they set not down themselves with this consideration, they commune not with their consciences upon this most needfull, but much neglected matter. A good mans work lieth much within doors: he loves to be dealing with himself, and working good and wholesome considerations upon his own affections. He is never lesse lesse alone, then when hee is alone: for still hee hath God and himself to talk to.

that I remember all their wickednesse,] i. e. Record and register them, as in a book, with a pen of iron, and point of a Diamond, Ier. 17. 1. that I seal them up in a bag, Job 14. 17. as the Clark of Assizes seals up Inditements, and at the Assizes brings his bag, and produceth them. Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deut. 32. 34. So little reason is there, that wicked men should please themselves in hope of impunity. And yet they do, Psal. 94. 7. they strive to perswade themselves, that the Lord doth not see, neither doth the God of Jacob remember: They hide God from themselves, and then think they have hid themselves from Him. Herein they are alike foolish as the Struthiocamelus, Plin. lib. 10. cap. 1. a bird as big as a Camell, and taller then a man: When this Bustard would hide her selfe, she thrusts her head into a thicker, as conceiving that no body seeth her, because she seeth no body; and so becomes a prey to the hunter. Caveatur carnalis securitas. Let us walk evermore in the sense of Gods presence, unlesse we had rather be carnally secured, then soundly comforted.

now their own doings have beset them about.] Their studied wickednesse, their contrived iniquities, so Luther expounds the word doings: for wicked men are great students, and break many a nights sleep in pernicious ploddings, Prov. 4. 16. But as the Blackbird is taken by birdlime made of his own excrements, so is the wicked beset by his own devices; as by so many serjeants set on by God. Some think (and not without probable reason) that the Prophet in this phrase of besetting them about, alludeth to the future siege of Samaria: wherein these sinners against their own souls were so straitly beset by the enemy, that they could not flee, or stir, without danger. And this he saith shall befall them. Now, that is, shortly, and sooner then they think for: indeed how should it be otherwise, when as their doings are before my face? E regione & velut adversa ac detestata, Over-anent and in full view, as a continuall eye-sore to me, Psal. 57. 5. & 90. 8. so that though I could or would forget them, yet they will not suffer me to do so: such is their impudency, and importunacy for vengeance. Lyra makes it a metaphor, from a thief taken in the act, with his back burden of stolen goods; and as it were beset with them, and so brought before the Judge. His own iniquities shall take the wicked, saith Solomon, Prov. 5. 22. For how can he escape the multitude of his sins within him, and the variety of Gods heavie judgements without him, &c?

Verse 3. They make the king glad with their wickednesse,] A sad syncretismus surely of king and people, exhilarating themselves and each other in wickednesse. Their kings were well apaid of the peoples compliances with their unlawfull Edicts: and the people no lesse well-pleased to gratifie and flatter their kings, as the Romans did Tiberius and other Tyrants, who therefore said of them, that they were servum pecus, servile foules, & homines ad servitutem parati, men made for slaves. Tyrants care not how wicked their subjects are: for then they know they will swallow down any command though never so impious, without scrupling, or conscience-making. They like to have such about them, as will down with any thing, digest iron for a need, with the Estrich; and say as that wretched man "said (when one complained he could not do such a thing for his conscience) "I am "master of my conscience, I can do any thing for all that. Thus Balaam resolved to curse what ever came of it: he went not aside as at other times, neither built he any more altars; but set his face toward the wildernesse, as fully bent to do it, and nothing should hinder him now, Numb. 24. 1, 2. (confer Luke 9. 51.) He also gave wicked counsell to king Balak (and so made him glad at parting, though before he had angered him) to lay a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, viz. to set fair women to tempt them to corporall and spirituall fornication, that God might see sin flagrant in Jacob, some transgression in Israel, and so fall foul upon them with his plagues, Numb. 23. 21. Parasites propound to kings suavia potius quam sana consilia, pleasing, but pestilent counsell: they also act for them, and under them, as Doeg did for Saul, and so gratifie them, Lettise them, as here, make them glad, but it proves to be no better then risus Sardonius, such a mirth as brings bitterness in the end: Wo to such mirth-mongers and mirth-makers; for if they shall still do thus wickedly, they shall be consumed, both they and their king, 1 Sam. 12. 25.

Prov. 29. 12.

And the princes with their lies] with calumnies and false accusations, wherewith they load Gods innocent servants, and that against their own consciences. Thus Doeg dealt by David; the Priests and Prophets by Jeremy; the Persian courtiers by Daniel and his companions; Amaziah by Amos, Haman by the whole nation of the Jewes, Tertullus by Paul, the Heathen Idolaters by the primitive Christians; which caused those many Apologies made for them by Tertullian, Athenagoras, and others. If a Ruler hearken to lies (and that's a common fault among them, as David tells Saul, 1 Sam. 24. 9. all his servants will be wicked: he shall have his Aiones and Nigones that will say as he sayes, and fit his humour to an hair; he shall have plenty of such as will slander the Saints, and cast an odium upon the consciencious. I once saw (saith Melancthon) an old coyn, on the one side whereof was Zopyrus, on the other Zoilus; he adds, fuit imago aula, comitantur calumnia bene merentes, It was a picture of Princes courts, where are store of such, as, by flattery, dawb white upon black, and, by calumny, sprinkle black upon white.

Vers. 4. They are all adulterers,] Adulterio caleſcunt, so Pagnine, scalded in their base lusts as those, Rom. 1. 27. all (for the most part) were such: but especially the Courtiers, and clawback-Informers, as vers. 3. God, in his just judgement, giving them up to those vile affections or passions of dishonour, and punishing their impieties with impurities: as He did also in those Heathens, Rom. 1. 24.

as an oven heated by the baker] An apt similitude setting forth the intense heat of filthy lust, (better marry then burn, 1 Cor. 7. 9.) and of long continuance as the heat of an oven; yea, of Nebuchadnezzars oven, yea, of hell it self, whence it was enkindled, and where it shall be perpetually punished. The holy Angels at the last day will be most active against such, to bring them to condign punishment, 2 Pet. 2. 10. (But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness. Note the word chiefly, and consider the example of the Sodomites) and God most severe against them, Heb. 13. 4. How much they have lived deliciously, and drenched themselves in fleshly delights, so much torments and sorrow shall they have proportionably, Rev. 18. 7. Vers. 5. In the day of our King,] Our good king, on whom they so doted, that they forgot God and his sincerer service. Quacunque à regibus dicuntur aut fiunt, Gallis minificè solet placere, It is reported of the French by their own Chronicle, that they are wonderful well pleased with whatsoever is said or done by their king: so that they affect to speak like him, to be arraigned like him, & to imitate him in every thing. Their song is Mihi placet quicquid Regi placet. But is not this to idolize the creature? and have not many (otherwise well-minded men) amongst us been by this means miscarried to their cost in our late combustions? This day of their king was either his Birth-day (so Pagnine rendreth it here) or his Coronation-day (so the Chaldee Paraphrast carrieth it) which also is the Birth-day of a king as he is king, Sam. 13. 1. unlesse haply he have the happiness to be crowned (not in his cradle onely, as Europus king of Macedony and the late king James were, but) in his mothers womb, as Misdatus king of Persia was, the crown being set upon his mothers great belly before he was born. Now in this solemn day of the king, (when they should have been better busied) The princes have made him sick, or, the princes were sick, they drank themselves sick, drowning their bodies and souls (as Richard the third did his brother Clarence) in a Butt of Malmesey. How many importunate and impudent drinkers are there, that by drinking other mens health, destroy their own? See Master Prinnes Healths-sickness, and accord him that said,

But what beastly bedlams or rather incarnate devils were those three drunkards mentioned by Jo. Manlius in his common places, who drank so long till one of them fell down stark dead: and yet the other two nothing terrified with such a dreadful example of divine vengeance, went on to drink, and poured the dead nians part into him as he lay by them? Oh horrible! Drunkenness is a detestable vice in any,

but

but especially in men of place and power, Prov. 31. 4. Wo be to those drunken vice-gods (as I may in the worst sense best call them) woe to the very crown of their Pride, in drinking down many, Esay. 28. 1. as Marcus Antonius wrote, or rather spued out a book concerning his own abilities to bear strong drink; Darius also boasted of the same faculty in his very Epitaph: a poor praise. Drunkenesse in a king is a capital sin, and makes the land reel; witness Belshazzar carowing in the bowles of the Sanctuary to the honour of Shar his drunken god; Alexander the great drinking himself to death, and killing fourty one more with excessive drinking, to get that crown of one hundred eighty pound weight, which he had provided for him that drank most: Bonofus the Emperour that beastly drunkard, called therefore a Tankard: and Tiberius surnamed Biberius for his tipling; like as Erasmus called Eccius, Iccius for the same cause: And well he might; for as he lived a shameful drunkard, so being nonplust at Ratisbon by Melanchthon in a publique disputation, and drinking more then was fit that night at the Bishop of Mundina's lodgings (who had of the best Italians wines) he fell into a fever, whereof he died. Drunkenesse is a flattering evil, a sweet poison, a cunning Circe that besots the soul, destroyes the body, dolores gignit in capite, in stomacho, in toto corpore acerrimos, grievous diseases and dolours in the head, stomach, whole man: At the last, it biteth like a Serpent, and stingeth like an Adder, Prov. 23. 32. The drunkard saith as the vine in Joshams parable, Non possum relinquere vinum meum, Take away my liquor, you take away my life. But it proves to him, in the issue, like that wine mentioned by Moses, Deut. 32. 33. Their wine is the poison of Dragons, and cruel venom of Aspes, which makes the spirits warm, and the body sick to death.

with bottles of wine] Or, with heat through wine, as Esay. 5. 11. and so Jarchi expoundeth it. The same word signifieth the poison of a Serpent, Psal. 58. 4. which inflameth and killeth: confer Prov. 23. 32. and think of that cup of fire and brimstone, Psal. 11. 6. to be one day turned down the wide gullets of intemperate drinkers; which will be much worse to them then was that ladle-full of boyling lead, which the Turkish Bashaw caused to be poured down the throat of a drunken wretch, without giving him any respite for the recovery of his lost wits.

he stretcht out his hand with scornors] He that is the king, forgetting his kingly dignity, authority and gravity, (for there is a decorum to be observed in every calling, but by great ones especially) stretcht out his hand, as a companion and cope-mate, as an hail-fellow-well-met, (as they say) prostituting his regal authority to every scoundrel that would pledge him; or at least, giving them his hand to kisse, which Job saith God will not do, Chap. 8. 20.

with scornors] Those worst of men, Psal. 1. 1. those Pests, as the Septuagint here render it, those incorrigible persons as they translate the word, Prov. 20. 1. where also it is fitly said, that wine is a mocker, because it maketh men mockers. Hence that of David, with hypocritical mockers at feasts they gnashed upon me with their teeth, Psal. 35. 16. And that holy jealousy of Job for his children, lest (while they were feasting and merry-making) they should curse God, or mock at men. Tales enim evadunt qui strenue bellantur. It is ordinary with such as are full gorged with good chear, and thoroughly heated with wine, to set their mouths against heaven, and to license their tongues to walk through the earth, Psal. 73. 9. they have a flout to fling, and a foolies bolt to shoot at their betters by many degrees: yea, though they be kings that do it, (as here) if they stretch out their hands with scornors, and jeer at the power and profession of Godlinesse, they are no better then base fellows, as great Antiochus is called, Dan. 11. 21. and as Kimchi upon this text noteth from his Father, that those that at the beginning of the feast or compotation were here called Princes, are afterwards when they fell to quaffing and flowing called (in contempt) scoffers & scornors. Polanus & others by stretching out the hand understand, ad aequales hausitus potare, &c. a drinking share and share like with every base companion, till drunk; they became despicable. Nempe ubi, neque mens, neque pes suum facit officium. The Greeks when they meet at feasts or banquets, drink small draughts at first, which by degrees they increase, till they come to the height of intemperancy. Hence Gracari, and as merry as a Greek. How much better those Spartans, of whom the Poet,

And what a drunken beast was Domitius the father of Nero, who slew Liberius an honest Roman, because he refused to take up his cups, as he commanded him? The Carthaginians made a law, that none of their Magistrates during their office should drink any wine. Romulus being invited to a feast would not drink much, quia postridie negotium haberet, because he had publike businesse to dispatch on the morrow. Abashuevosh drinking more freely on the first day of the feast, became so frolick, that in his mirth he forgot what was convenient; and guided by his passions, sent for Vasthi.

Verf. 6. For they have made ready their hearts like an oven.] As an oven red hot is ready to bake whatsoever is cast into it, so are wicked mens hearts, heated from hell, prepared for any evil purpose or practise that the devil shall suggest: but especially to lie in wait for blood, and to hunt every man his brother with a net, Mic. 7. 2. David complains of some that lay in wait for his soul, Psal. 59. 3. that satanically hated him, Psal. 38. 20. and 7. 13. and 109. 4, 6, 20, 29. that sought his soul to destroy it, not his life onely but his soul too; as that monster of Milkain did, that made his adversary first forswear Christ, (in hope of life) and then stabbing him to the heart said, Now go thy wayes soul and body to the devil: and as the Papists dealt by John Husse, and Hierome of Prague, to whom they denied a confessor, which he required after the manner of those times, to fit him for heaven; and for John Husse, after they had burnt him, how despitefully did they beat his heart (which was left untouched by the fire) with their staves: Besides, that the Bishops when they put the tripple crown of paper (painted with ugly devils on it) on his head, they said, Now we commit thy soul to the devil. Did not these mens hearts burn like an oven with hellish rage and cruelty?

their baker sleepeth all the night,] Concoquens illa, scilicet corda, so Vatablus; He that concocteth or worketh their hearts, that is the devil (as some interpret it) or evil-concupiscence, as others, Tota nocte protrahitur furor eorum, so the Chaldee; their rage is deferred or drawn out to the length all night long, till in the morning, i.e. at a convenient season it break out and bestirs it self. A metaphor from a baker, who casting fire into the oven with good store of lasting fuel, lets it burn all night and sleeps securely; as knowing that he shall find it through hot in the morning. Those scornors in the former verse, by being over-familiar with their drunken king, come not onely to slight him for his base behaviours, but also to conspire against him, and to plot his death; wherein their heart is the oven, ambition the fire, treason the flame of that fire, Satan that old manslayer the baker; who, though he make as if he slept all night, yet by morning he hath set his agents the traitours a-work (either by secret treacheries or open seditions) to do as in the next verse, and as is to be seen, 2 Kin. 15.

Verf. 7. They are all hot as an oven,] That none might post it off to others, all are accused of this mad desire to do mischief; as all the Sodomites full and whole, young and old, came cluttering about Lots house, Gen. 19. 4. and have devoured their Judges; all their Kings are fallen, &c.] Scil. being slain with the sword of those that succeeded them in the throne, as may be read, 2 Kin. 15. 8, 9, &c. and as it was in the Roman State, where all or most of the Cesars, till Constantine, died unnatural deaths. Neither was it much better here in England, during the difference between the two houses of York and Lancaster; wherein were slain fourscore Princes of the blood-royal, and twice as many natives of England as were lost in the two conquests of France. This is the fruit of sin, Prov. 28. 2. For the transgression of a land many are the Princes thereof: either many at once (as once here in the heptarchy), or many ejecting and succeeding one another, to the great calamity and utter undoing of the people by their new Lords, new Lawes.

there is none among them that calleth unto me,] though in so great a confusion, and under so heavy calamities: a strange stupor, that there should be none to set to his shoulder to shore up the falling State. None there were (to speak of) in a considerable considerable number of praying people to stand in the gap, and to divert the divine displeasure. Their sins cried loud for vengeance, their blood-guiltinesse especially. But had there been but a few voyces more of praying Saints, their prayers had haply out-cried them. A few birds of song are shriller then many crocitating birds of prey: stirre up your selves therefore, ye that are Gods remembrancers, to take hold of him, and give him no rest. Lie night and day at the gate of his grace, knocking thereat by the hand of faith, and praying for the peace of our Jerusalem. If Englands fears were greater, thy prayers might preserve it, Ier. 5. 1. as if our hopes were greater, thy sin and security might undo it, Eccles. 9. 18.

Vers. 9. Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people, viz. In confederacies, marriages, manners, superstitions. They were conformed to those nations from whom God had separated them with a wonderful separation, Exod. 33. 16. and put them up by themselves from all the world in the promised land, as it were in an Island, Isay. 20. 6. And this they had done not once but often, as the conjugation importeth; and that wilfully without any necessity: yea, and that constantly, and of custome, or desperate obstinacy, (Heb. he will mingle himself) so that there was little difference to be discerned betwixt Ephraim the professed people of God, and profane heathens. Hence that, Amos. 9. 7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel, saith the Lord? Hence Saul is called Cush, or an Ethiopian for his black and ill conditions; Psal. 7. title, as the Chaldee interpreteth it. Cast we may be upon bad company, but we must not mingle with them. The rivers of Peru, after they have run into the main sea, yea, some write twenty or thirty miles, they keep themselves unmixed with the salt water: so that a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were neer the land. At Belgradi in Hungary, where the Danuby and Sava (two great rivers) meet, their waters mingle no more then water and oyl; not that either fote above other, but joyn unmixed: so that neer the middle of the river I have gone in a boat, (saith mine Authour) and tasted of the Danow as clear and pure as a well. Then putting mine hand not an inch further, I have taken of the Sava as troubled as a street-channel, tasting the gravel in my teeth. Thus they run sixty miles together, and for a dayes journey I have been an eye-witnesse of it. To come nearer home, the river Dee in Merioneth-shire running thorough Pimble-meeri remains intire, and mingleth not her streams with the water of the lake. Let not Ephraim mix himself among the people, but cry with David, Gather not my soul with sinners, Psal. 26. 9. and vers. 5. I have hated the congregation of evil-doers, and will not sit with the wicked.

Ephraim is a cake not turned, And so but half-baked, or dowe-baked; neque crudus, neque coctus, neither hot nor cold, as Laodicea, Rev. 3. 15. halting between two, as 1 Kin. 18. 21. Mongrels, as those 2 King. 17. 33. Zeph. 1. 5. Barnacles that are neither fish nor flesh: Amphibians that will conform to the world, and yet seem to be for the Lord. But he likes no such retainers, no such holy-day-servants; he requirereth to be served truly, that there be no halting: and totally, that there be no halving: he cannot away with dowe-baked duties. Men must be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, they must be zealous of good works, if they look to be accepted. The effectual fervent prayer, or the thorough-wrought prayer of a righteous man availeth much. A cake that is half-baked, half burnt pleaseth not the palate: no more do customary, formal bedulling performances please the Lord. It is Gualthers note upon this text; As a cake, saith he, that is raw on the one side and scorcht on the other is cast away; so Hypocrites that are hot in their superstitions, but cold in their devotions are rejected of God;

I know the words are otherwise interpreted by Luther, Mercer, Polanus, and others, with reference to the following words, thus: that Ephraims adversaries, even those strangers with whom he hath mixed himself, shall be so greedy to devour him, that they shall not stay till he be baked on both sides, but shall eat him raw. But I like the former better.

Vers. 9. Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not, Strange stupidity, such as was that of Sampson, who had lost his haire, and therewith his strength, and wist not of it. These strangers were the Kings of Syria, but especially of of Assyria. See 2 King. 13. 7. & Chap. 14. with 15. 19, 30. & 17. 6. Salmanasar, as a deep gulf swallowed them up whole. Now that they should not know how these strangers had devoured their strength, that is their wealth, and warlike power, this was very strange. The Chaldee Paraphrast helps us to the meaning of it: Non novit formidare à facie mea. He knew it not, that is, He knew not how to fear before me, to tremble at my judgements, and to flee to my mercies: this he knew not, that is, he cared not to do, as the old world knew not till the flood came, though fairly forewarned, Matt. 24. 39. and as the Greeks would not know that the Turks had invaded their Empire, till they were got into the very bowels of it. So was it with Ephraim. A spirit of pride and of slumber had so surprized and seized him, that he took no knowledge of the enemies and evils that were upon him. Thus the spirituall sleeper stirs not with Saul, though the water-pot and spear be taken from his bolster. Like the foolish hen, which loseth her chickens one by one, by the devouring kite; when one, or two, or three, are snatcht away she still continues to pick up what lies before her. It is our wisest way to observe, and improve Gods dealings with us, to be sensible of his strokes, and to return to him that smote us, and can as soon heal us, if we come to him for cure, Lev. 26. 40. yea, gray-hairs are here and there upon him, Heb. sprinkled, sparsi, non spissi. He began but to decline and decay, as a man doth when he grows toward fifty. And as gray hairs come the sooner through cares and griefs, (Histories tell us of a young man, who being for some capitall offence condemned to die, grew gray in one nights-space, and was therefore pitied and spared) and are fore-runners and fore-warners of death. So the many and grievous miseries inflicted upon this people, foreshewed their utter destruction to be even at next door by. And this the rather, because they knew it not, (as before) but (as it is said of the Flemings) that the elder they grow, the foolisher they are. Cleantes was wont sometimes to chide himself: Ariston wondering thereat, asked him, whom chidest thou? Cleantes laughed and answered, I chide an old fellow, qui canos quidem habet, sed mentem non habet, who hath gray hairs indeed, but wants understanding, and prudence worthy of them. It was Chrysippus (I trow) that offered to the world that fowre distribution and choice, Aut mentem, aut restim comparandam; Either get wit worthy of your years, or go out of the world by an halter. That of Eleazer is very remarkable, who would not do any thing which might seem to be evil, because he would not spot his white head. Gray hairs should be a strong argument to move men to live blamelessly (because old age is a crown, when found in the way of righteousness, as it is said of Abraham, that he went to his grave with a good gray head) and gray hairs in a State, that is, lesser and lighter judgements, should make men prepare to meet and prevent God: because, as in an house, stillicidia præcedunt ruinam, and as in a man, gray hairs fore-signifie death, so do these, desolation; if course be not timely taken.

Verse 10. And the pride of Israel testifieth to his face, Sept. the ignominy, or impudency of Israel: q. d. They think to brave it out in a stout and stomachfull way. Low they are, but not lowly; humbled, but not humble. God thrust him downward, as it were with a thump on the back: but he stood stouting it out with him; and so discovered a great deal of arrogancy and folly. Plectimur, may such say, nec tamen flectimur: Corripimur sed non corrigimur; We have been stricken, but not sick; beaten, but not sensible, &c. the drunkards ditty, Prov. 23. 35. When for all this, for all that God can do to tame them, and turn them again, they will on in their wicked wayes, and not accept of the punishment of their iniquities: not confesse and forsake their sins, that they may have mercy: not seek him, that is, come unto him by faith, Heb. 11. 6. and subject themselves unto him by true obedience, 2 Chron. 7. 14. this is such a piece of pride as testifieth to mens faces, that they deserve to be destroyed: this is wickedness with a witness: this is fastus adeo enormis atque notorius, faith Pareus, such horrible and notorious insolency, as is not to be endured. God complains of Israel for this with a sigh, Ah sinfull nation, &c. and resolves upon revenge, verse 24. See more of this in the Note on Chap. 5. 5. Of turning to God. See Zech. 1. 3. and of seeking God, see Hos. 5. 15.

Septuagint render it ἀγυς, insensata, witlesse, or wanting an heart, as the next words explain it; the heart being put for the understanding, as Jer. 5. 21. and oft in the Proverbs. Lo such a thing is Ephraim; and yet he holds himself wondrous wise, in calling to Egypt, and going to Assyria for help. Which was as wisely done, as if sheep should commit themselves to the Wolf for safeguard. The Egyptians were their ancient oppressours: the Assyrians should be shortly their executioners. Betwixt these two, as betwixt two millstones, they had been, and were to be ground to powder, as it were: and yet to these, they were ready to run for refuge. This was indeed to be like a silly dove, which flies from the claws of the Hawk into the net of the fowler, who will soon make a breakfast of them: or that waits till the fowler be gone, that she may fall upon the bait, never fearing the snare that is laid for her. See 2 King. 17. 4. A serpents eye in a doves head is a singular ornament. Be ye wise as serpents, innocent as doves. The serpent, when charmed, stoppeth his ears, by applying one to the earth, and covering the other with his tail. The dove is too credulous and persuasible, dulce canente fistulâ. She is also dull, and defends not her young ones, as other creatures do. She will sit quiet in her columbary, and see her nest destroyed, her young ones taken away, and killed before her eyes, and never offer to rescue or revenge; which the hen and other fowls seem in some sort to do. Lo such was Ephraims stupidity. The Philistines were upon him, the enemies spoiled and made a prey of him, yet he knew it not, as it is verse 9. he was not affected with it, nor driven to God by it: but either sat still, as the spoiled dove doth in her nest, or upon her dove-coat, delighted in the beauty of her feathers, priding her self in the clapping of her wings: or else ran a wrong way for refuge: flew to king Jareb, to humane helps, to carnall confederates, which never were true to those that trusted them. See chap. 5. 13. with the Note. Where you shall see that from the Assyrian they had pro presidio ludibrium: as likewise those Christians had that called in the Turk, or the like to help them. True it is that religion without policie is too simple to be safe: but it is no lesse true, that policie without religion is too subtil to be good. As the dove without the serpent is easily caught: so the serpent without the dove stings deadly. Let that bee held and remembred, that there is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsell against the Lord, Prov. 21. 30. and that he takes it very ill, when we decline him, and knock at the creatures door for help, Jer. 2. 13. shifting and sharking in every by-corner for comfort. This is the devils policie to draw men from God the Rock of ages, (as Ioshuah did the men of Ai out of their city, and as Bristow counselleth his fellows, the Popes Janizares, to draw the Lutherans out of their strong-hold of the Scriptures, into the open field of Councils and Fathers) that he may do what he will with them, and destroy them. For he knows, that be our hopes never so high, our helps from the creature never so likely, yet if God deny his concurrence, and influence, the arm of flesh (as Ieroboams) shrinks up presently; and the strongest finew of it cracks, and becomes usefull.

Verse 12. When they go, ] Yea, flee (as the dove doth very swiftly, pleasing her self in the clapping of her wings, and cutting of the air) they cannot flee so high, but I shall easily reach them, Obad. 3. 4. for in the thing wherein they deal proudly, I am above them, Exod. 18. 11. I can over-top them, melt their waxen wings, and bring them down with a vengeance. He taketh the wise in their own craftinesse. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise that they are vain, 1 Cor. 3. 19, 20. So saith the Apostle out of the Psalmist; but with this difference. The Psalmist saith, the thoughts of men, the Apostle, the thoughts of the wise, meaning the worlds wizards, the choicest and most picked men, the greatest politicians, the most nimble and Mercuriall wits, quorum praeordia ex meliore Into finxit Titan. These God will take, saith Paul: he will lay hold upon them, as they are running away, (so the word signifieth) as brut beasts made to be taken and destroyed, 2 Pet. 2. 12. or as fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare: so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them, Eccles. 9. 12.

God will meet with them in their out-strayes, casting his net over them : or bring them down with his bowe, whilest (with the foolish bird) they are gazing at the bolt : hee hath wayes enough to hamper such as go out of his way : to be for a gin, and for a snare unto them, Esay 8. 14. to shoot at them with an arrow, suddenly shall they be wounded, Psal. 64. 7. How are they brought into desolation in a moment ? they are utterly consumed with terrour, Psal. 73. 19.

The hypocrites in heart, heap up wrath : they cry not when God bindeth them, Iob 36. 13. God expects men should cry peccavi, when they are bound as Paul was, to be beaten with rods ; and not be silent in darkness, *1. I will chastise them as their Congregation hath heard. ] Crebrò & clarè, I have plainly and plentifully told them my minde : and foretold them by my Prophets, what would be the issue of their evil practises. Sed surdo fabulam, They would not hear Moses and the Prophets. See 2 King. 17. 13. 2 Chron. 24. 18. 19. They thought that my words were but wind, and that all my threats were but in terrorum, to fright them a little, and not in good-earnest. Therefore they shall finde that the just Lord is in the midst of them, he will not do iniquity : every morning doth he bring his judgement to light, he faileth not : but the unjust knoweth no shame, feareth no colours, trembleth not at Gods word though it come never so close to his conscience, though it even dash him in the mouth as it were, and make him spit blood. Verse 13. Wo unto them, for they have fled from me : ] As Cain (the devils Patriarch) did when he went out from the presence of the Lord, in his fathers family, into the land of Nod, Gen. 4. 16. being himself a Nad, that is, a runagate, verse 12. of the same root, that is here made use of in the Text. Now as that land took name of Cain, and his wofull state therein, so is every land and place a Nod to Apostates : and St. Jude throws a Wo after them, Wo unto them, for they have gone in the way of Cain, Jude 11. that is, they have wickedly departed from God, and his blessing, and gotten into the worlds warme sunne : yea, they not onely go from God, but flee from him in hurry-hast, as from an enemy ; a metaphor from birds flying amain, Prov. 27. 8. As a bird that wandreth from her nest, (where God took order for her security, Deut. 22. 6, 7.) so is a man that wandereth from his place (how much more from his God, that Infinite good ?) exposed to misery and mischief, to ruth and ruine. Wo to such, yea double wo : Wo and alas : destruction to such, and devastation, as the word signifieth. Perdition and destruction, as the Apostle phraseth it, 1 Tim. 6. 9. whereby is meant, remediless misery, mischief without measure, torments without end, and past imagination. This truth must be told, how ever it be taken ; that wicked men may not perish without warning. Toothlesse truths, and silken words, would better please people who are most of them sick of a Noli me tangere, and cry out against these fierce Preachers, that come with their Wo unto them, Destruction unto them, &c. This is the way, say they, to drive men into utter despair. We answer ; First, if it should be so, yet that is not the proper effect of the Word so dispensed ; but to abate the pleasure that reprobates take in sin, and to restrain them from outrage : that they despair, it proceeds meerly from their own corruption and guiltinesse. They reply, that it comes comes rather from the severity of the Teachers, who set themselves to preach damnation, and utter terrible things. Secondly, therefore we answer; that the mad world (ever beside it self in point of salvation) is herein very much mistaken. Let them give us an instance of any one that was ever driven to despair by the sincere preaching of the word: and yet for one bitter word given by us, the Prophets gave ten. This whole Prophecy of Hosea is much more Comminatory then Consolatory. God himself comes here with Wo unto them, Destruction to them. Indeed by this pathetical exclamation, he declareth his affection toward them whom he threatneth: and how little delight he takes, either in their destruction, or in such denunciations thereof: And so must Gods Ministers, &c.

Because they have transgressed against me: ] This is a new degree of their Apostasie from God. Wicked men and deceivers grow worse and worse, and adde rebellion to sin. As a stone will fall down to come to its center, though it break it self in twenty pieces: so will Apostates, till they come to their own place with Judas: they cease not till they become altogether filthy, Psal. 53. 3. as the dog at his vomit, or the sow in her flow, 1 Pet. 2. 22. It fareth with such as in that case, Lev. 13. 18, 19, 20. If a man had a bile healed, and it afterwards brak out, it proved the plague of leprosie.

Though I have redeemed them, yet they have spoken lies against me. ] All was done against God, whence the word me, is so often inculcated in this and the next verse. God is, as it were, a sufferer in all the sins of the sonnes of men: and this is no small aggravation of the evil of sin, that it strikes at Gods face, lifts at his throne, makes to his dishonour Thou hast made me to serve with thy sinnes, and wearied me with thine iniquities, Esay 43. 23. And to shew this to be so, it was, that the offendour was confined to the city of refuge, during the High-priests life; as being the chief God on earth. Good David was very sensible of this, and much humbled, when he said, Against thee, thee onely have I sinned, Psal. 51. 14. The trespass was against Uriah, but the transgression against God, so gracious a God; and there lay the pinch of his grief: viz. the unkindnesse that was in his sinne. Therefore also Moses, in his swan-like-song, sets on this humbling consideration, Dent. 32. 6. Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? Is not hee thy Father? and wilt thou kick against his naked bowels? hast not where else to hit him but there? Again, Is not he thy Redeemer, that hath bought thee, and brought thee out of the iron furnace, where thou labouredst in the very fire, and wast wearied out with unufferable servitude? More, hath he not made thee, and dost thou rebell against thy Maker, thy Master? Or, hath he not made thee, that is, exalted thee: in which sence, he is said to have made Moses and Aaron, 1 Sam. 12. 6. that is, to have advanced them to that honour in his Church: and so we say, Such an one is made for ever. Lastly, hath he not established thee, that thou mightest abide in his grace, and remain unmoveable? And dost thou yet evil requite him, &c. To render good for evil, is Divine; good for good, is humane; evil for evil, is brutish; but evil for good, is devillish. See how grievously God taketh it here. Though I have redeemed them, viz. out of the hands of their enemies in generall, (See an ample proof hereof, Nehem. 9. and the whole book of Judges thorowout) and in speciall, as a late particular mercy to Ephraim, I have delivered and prospered them in their warres, under Ieroboam the sonne of Ioash, 2 King. 14. 27. and therefore they should have given me their good word at least, and spoken good of my Name: yet They have spoken lies against me. ] Ascribing the glory of their deliverances to their Idols, or arrogating it to themselves, or fathering their false worship upon me as the Authour, or at least, Abbettour thereof, by my present prospering of them. For why? They howled indeed to some tune, (as they say) the Hebrew word hath a letter more then ordinary, to note as much. It was the Heathen fashion to cry hideously to their gods: as also the Indians do at this day. So did these, because kept short, and held to strait allowance. Or secondly, they rebell after they have assembled themselves, and made a shew of no small devotion: when once the duty is over, they go to their old courses again, and undo all their prayers, as Jerem. 5. 3. as if now they had prayed, they had purchased a license to live as they list. Whereas duties should mightily ingage us against sin; and deliverances command obedience.

yet do they imagine mischief against me,] All goes against God ( See the note on vers. 13.) Here they imagine mischief against him, as before they spake lies against him, vers. 13. and acted rebellion against him, vers. 14. Thus they spake and did evil things as they could, Jer. 3. 5. and the reason of all was, they imagined mischief ; cogitabant quasi cogitabant, they were men of wicked devices, Prov. 12. 2. wholly made up of sinful projects and purposes : they plotted and plowed mischief, and that against God himself (which is horrible.) David thought much that his enemies should machinate mischief against him, though but dust and ashes ; and threatneth them sore for so doing, Psal. 62. 3. How long will ye imagine mischief against a man ? Te shall be slain all of you ; as a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence : he meaneth, ye shall be surely and suddenly ruined. What then will become of those Zammims that imagine mischief against the Lord ? and such a Lord as hath bound and strengthened their armes, that had been broken by the enemies ; and sought their good every way, puniendo, muniendo, malis & bonis afficiendo, &c.
If they had slipt into some small offence against him, of infirmity and at unawares, it had been nothing so grievous : but to busie their braines, and bend their wits and studies scientes, volentes, & deliberato consilio to plot and practise mischief, or (as the Septuagint render it) mischiefs against God, ( for every transgression and disobedience is contrary to his most pure Nature, and sacred Law, and shall therefore receive a just recompence of reward, Heb. 2. 2.) so gracious a God, this is detestable ingratitude. This is, as if those in the Gospel should have railed against Christ, for raising them from the dead : it is like the matchlesse mischievousnesse of that monster Michael Balbus, who that night that his Prince pardoned and releas'd him, gat out and slew him. Omne peccatum est deicidium, for although wicked men cannot reach God, yet they reach at him ; shooting up their darts against heaven, (as the Thracians did once in a storm) and saying in effect as Caligula did to his Jupiter, ἢ μὴ ἀνδρὲς ἡ ἐγὼ οὐ ! either kill me, or I will kill thee.

Verf. 16. They return but not to the most High,] Gnal for Gnelion by contraction: as Jah for Jehovah, so afterwards, Chap. 11. 7. and 2 Sam. 23. 1. Return they do, or seem to do at least (for it is their hypoerisie that is here described) but not to the most High : to whom then ? to idols, or humane helps, or any thing rather, and sooner, then to God. Jehu went farre in the work of Reformation, and made a great flaunt at first, as if he would have done as much that way, as ever Josiah did :
But he and his people came not up to the height, turned not to the most High God, honoured him not as a just and jealous God, that can endure no corrivals. They gave the half-turn, but returned not with all their hearts, Joel. 2. 12. they turned from west to north, but not from west to east, to the full counterpoint, setting their faces toward God, and having their backs towards their sins. They had haply a kind of velleity, some short-winded wishes and wambings, as I may so say, but it boyled not up to the full height of a resolution for God ; they made beleve they would cast away their transgressions, but it was but as the mother makes her childe beleve, that she will caite him to the puttock or into the water ; when as she holds him fast enough, and means him no hurt at all. These faint essayes of returning are not worthy of the most High : he delighteth not to be dallied with, but requireth the best of the best ; and that we serve him like himself, that is, after a godly sort, or worthy

For indeed the most High stoopeth to the true convert (who considering his distance repents and abhors himself in dust and ashes) he dwelleth in the highest heavens and lowest hearts, Esa. 57. 17.

They are like a deceitful bow] a rotten bow (though otherwise fair) when an arrow is drawn to the head, breaks and deceives the archer. Or thus, when a man shoots with a deceitful bow, though he level his eye and his arrow directly to the mark, and thinks with himself to hit it; yet indeed the arrow, by reason of his deceitful bow goes a clean contrary way; yea, and sometimes reflects upon the archer himself; semblably these false Israelites dealt with God. Their hearts were as the bow, their purposes and promises to return as arrows; the mark they aimed at conversion; to the which, they, in their afflictions looked with so accurate and intent an eye, as though they would repent indeed; but their hearts deceived them as being unsound: hence they started aside like a deceitful bow, Psal. 78. 57. and the arrowes of their fair promises and pretences vanished in the aire, as smoak. Some take the words in another sense, as if punishment and disappointment were here threatned: but I best like the former. Let us look to the secret warpings of our hearts, and, seeing we are Gods bow, Zach. 9. 13. let us not be deceitful, &c.

Their princes shall fall by the sword for the rage of their tongue.] and the people with them; for princes fall not alone, as we have seen in our late wars, wherein Lords and Lords fell together not a few at Newbury-fight especially Κοινῶς ἐνυόλητο, the sword devoureth one as well as the other, 2 Sam. 11. 25. God hangs up the heads of the people as it were in gibbets, Num. 25. 4. their greatnesse cannot bear them out, nor their life-guards defend them, for the detestation of their tongue (so some read this text) for the hatred that God beareth to them for their blasphemies and great swelling words of vanity, uttered against him, his people, and his ordinances. With our tongue, say they, we will prevaile, our lips are our own: who is Lord over us? Lo this and worse is the rage of their tongue: as his, that said he would not leave one Lutheran in his dominions: another, that he would ride his horse up to the saddle in the blood of the Lutherans: a third, that he would send them all to dine with the devil, &c. God will cut off the spirit of such outrageous Princes. They shall fall by the sword, they shall be a portion for foxes, Psal. 63. 10, and a derision to the Egyptians.

this shall be their derision in the land of Egypt,] their confederates in whom they trusted; and upon whose help bearing themselves over-bold, they had spoken loftily, setting their mouthes against heaven, and their tongues walked thorow the earth, Ps. 73. 9. Lo, these should not onely faile them but jear them; not onely not succour them, but scorn them; as the Monarch of Morocco did our King John, that sent to him for help in the Barons wars. He grew into such dislike of our king (saith the story) that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. Neither met he with better entertainment from the Pope, to whom he basely submitted and surrendred his kingdome. It is better to trust in the Lord, then to put confidence in Princes. For, Deo confisi nunquam confusi, they that trust in the Lord shall never be ashamed.

CHAP. VIII.

Vers. 1. Set the trumpet to thy mouth,] Heb. The trumpet to thy palate. A hasty expression, an abrupt and imperfect speech, common with such as are moved with passions, of anger, grief or fear, as Chap. 5. 8. after thee O Benjamin. God, though not subject to such perturbations, Iam. 1. 17. yet here and elsewhere utters himself in this sort; to set forth the nearnesse of the peoples danger by the enemies approach: and the necessity of their return to him by true repentance, for the diversion of his displeasure. Break off thy sinnes by righteousness, saith the Prophet to Nebuchadnezzar; be abrupt in the work, cut the cartropes of vanity, if it may be a lengthning of thy tranquillity, Dan. 4. 27. Take the bark from the tree, and the sap can never find the way to the boughes: get sin remitted, and punishment shall be removed. In this sermon of the Prophet (which is much sharper then the former former, and may seem to be one of the last, because God is so absolute in threatenng, as if he meant to be resolute in punishing) there is (as one saith) peccatorum & poenarum conuersione; an heaping together of sins and punishments of many sorts: and the prophet is commanded to give suddain warning of the enemy at hand, which is elegantly set forth by a military hypotyposis or lively representation; as if it were now a doing. The trumpet to thy mouth, that is, set up thy note, and proclaim with a loud and clear voyce, as Esay. 58. 1. crie in the throat (so the Chaldees hath it here) (spare not, that none may say he was not warned: lift up thy voyce like a trumpet, that all may hear and fear, Am. 3. 6. as people use to do when an alarm is sounded, or the bells are rung backward. See chap. 5. 8. There they had been before alarmed, here reminded in brief: for the prophet is as it were, monosyllabus, as one in haste; he uttereth amputatas sententias & verba ante expectatum cadentia, as Seneca somewhere hath it, broken sentences, concise, but pithy periods.

he shall come as an Eagle against the house of the Lord, ] He, that is, the Assyrian; not Nebuchadnezzar, though the like is said of him, Ezech. 17. 3. 7. Much lesse the Romans (as Lyra interpreteth this text of the last destruction of Jerusalem, because the Eagle was their Ensign) but Pal, Tiglath-Pileser, and Salmanafer, who came against the ten Tribes as an Eagle, to waste, spoil, and carry captive speedily, impetuously, irresistibly: as Ierem. 4. 19. The Eagle is the strongest and swiftest of birds, and feareth no obstacle, either from other fowl, or winde, or thunderbolt, as Plinie affirmeth. Nebuchadnezzar is not onely compared to an Eagle (as before is noted) but to a Lion with Eagles-wings, Dan. 7. 4. that is, with invincible armies, that march with incredible swiftnesse. And all this was long since forethreatned, Deut. 28. 49. The Lord shall bring a Nation against thee from farre, from the end of the earth, as swift as the Eagle flieth: to which Text the Prophet here seemeth to allude; as indeed all the Prophets do but comment upon Moses, and draw out that Arras, which was folded together by him before.

And although they were now become Apostates, yet they gloried no lesse then before, to be of the stock of Abraham, and of the family of faith: like as the Turks call themselves at this day, Musulmans, that is, the true and right beleivers; especially after they are circumcised, which is not done till they be past ten yeers of age; following the example of Ismael, whom they imitate, and honour as their Progenitour: alledging that Abraham loved him, and not Isaac, and that it was Ismael whom Abraham would have sacrificed.

because they have transgressed my Covenant, and trespassed ] Sin is the mother of misery: and the great Makebate betwixt God and his creature. It moves him when we ask bread and fish to feed us (as verse 2,) to answer us with a stone to bruise us, or a serpent to bite us. The sin of this people was the more hainous, because they were covenanters, and confederate with God. It was his covenant that was in their flesh, Gen. 17. 13. and he had betrothed them to himself, and betruisted them with his Oracles. but they like men, transgressed the covenant, and dealt treacherously against him, Chap. 6. 7. (See the Note there.) they performed not the stipulation of a good conscience toward God.

they trespassed against his law. ] As if it had not been holy, and just, and good, precious, perfect, and profitable; grounded upon so much good reason, that if God had not commanded it, yet it had been best for us to have practised it, Esay 48. 17. I am the Lord that teacheth thee to profit, &c. O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandements! &c. q. d. It is for thy profit and not for mine own, that I have given thee a law to live by. But they have trespassed, or prevaricated: and this, out of pride and malice, as the word signifieth; and as before he had oft convinced them of many particulars, and more will do: therefore are they justly punished.

Rom. 7.

Verse 2. Israel shall crie unto me, ] It is their course and custome to do so: they will needs do it though I take no delight in it. Hypocrisie is impudent, as chap. 5. 6. and Ier. 3. 4. 5. No nay, but it will despite God with seeming honour; and present him with a ludicrous devotion. Israel, though revolted and degenerated into Iezreel, chap. 1. shall crie, yea cry aloud, vociferabuntur, cry till they are hoarse, as criers do: and unto me, but not with their heart, chap. 7. 14. It is but clamor sine fide vide fatuus, an empty ring, that God regards not. For, not every one that saith unto him, Lord, Lord, &c Mat. 7. 21. Many leane upon the Lord and say, Is not the Lord amongst us? none evil can come unto us, Mic. 3. 11. who yet shall hear, Discedite, Avaunt ye workers of iniquity: I know you not. Wo then to all profligate professors, carnall Gospellers: their prayers shall not profit them, neither shall they be a burton the better for their loud cries to the most High, (Pro. 1. 28. and odious fawnings;

My God, we know thee.] When their hearts are far from him. Of such pretenders to him and his truth, it is that the Apostle speaketh, Tit. 1. 16. They professe that they know God, (which yet God denies, Hos. 4. 1. & 5. 4.) but in works they deny him: being abominable, and disobedient, and to every good work reprobate. To come and call God Father, the guide of our youth, and then to fall to sinne, this is to do as evil as we can: We cannot easily do worse, Ier. 3. 4, 5. To cry, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord: and then to steal, murder, and commit adultery, &c. this is painted hypocrisie, Ier. 7. 4, 9. when men shall take sanctuary, and think to save themselves from danger by a form of godlinesse (as the Jews fable that Og king of Bashan escaped in the flood by riding astride upon the Ark) when they are perfect strangers to the power of it, this is to hasten and heap up wrath, Iob 36. 13. Religion, as it is the best armour, so the worst cloak: and will serve hypocrites as the disguise Ahab put on, and perished. Castalis maketh this last clause to be the speech of the blessed Trinity, We know thee O Israel: g. d. Though thou collogue and cry, My God: yet we know thine hypocrisie and the naughtinesse of thy heart. But the former sence is better, though the placing of the word Israel in the end of the verse, seem to favour this: for thus it runs in the Hebrew, To me they shall cry, My God, we know thee, Israel.

Verse 3. Israel hath cast off the thing that is good,] Heb. The Good: as first, the good God, who is good originall, universall, All-sufficient, and satisfactory, proportionable and fitting to our soul. He both is good, and doth good. Psal. 119. 68. and that both naturally, abundantly, freely, and constantly. Good thou art, O Lord, and ready to forgive, saith David, Psal. 86. 5. And the Good Lord be mercifull, &c. saith Hazekiah in his prayer for the people. To speak properly, there is none good but God, saith our Saviour, Matt. 19. 17. but Israel cast him, or rather kickt him off (procul à se-rejecit) as the word signifieth: So do all grosse hypocrites: they are rank Atheists, practicall Atheists though professionall Christians. Secondly, they reject Christ as a Sovereigne, though they could be content to have him, as a Saviour: they send messages after him, saying, We will not have this man to rule over us: they will not submit to the lawes of his kingdom, nor receive him in all his offices, and efficacies: they are Christlesse creatures, as without God, so without Christ in the world. Thirdly, hypocrites reject the good Spirit of God, (as David calleth him, Psal. 143. 10.) the fruit whereof is in all goodnesse, and righteousnesse, and truth, Ephes. 5. 9. When God striveth with them by his good Spirit (as Neh. 9. 20.) they, by yeelding to Satans suggestions, grieve that holy Spirit, and by grieving resist him, and by resisting quench him, and by quenching maliciously oppose him, and offer despite unto him; and so cast themselves into the punishing hands of the living God, Heb. 10. 29, 31. Lastly, they cast off the good Word, and true Worship of God: those right judgements, true lawes, good statutes, and Commandements, Neh. 9. 13. they put the promises from them, and judge themselves unworthy of everlasting life, Acts 13. 46. they hate instruction, and cast Gods words behind them, Psal. 50. 17. In a word, hee hath left off to bee wise, and to do good: hee setteth himself in a way that is not good: hee abhorreth not evil, Psal. 36. 3, 4. The words may be read thus, The good (God) hath rejected Israel; the enemy shall pursue him: according to that in the Psalme, God hath forsaken him, persecute and take him, for there is none to deliver him, Psal. 71. 11. Sure it is, that the Lord is with us, while we are with him: and if we seek him, he will be found of us. But if we forsake him, he will forsake us. And if he forsake us, Wo be to us, chap. 9. 12. we are in danger to be caught up by every paltry enemy, as young Lapwings are to be snatcht up by every buzzard. If Israel cast away the thing that is good, what marvell if evil hunt him to overthrow him, Psal. 140. 11. and if he find himself in all evil in the midst of the Congregation, and the assembly, Prov. 5. 14. Hence Cains fear, when cast out by God; and Sauls complaint, that the Philistines were upon him, and God had forsaken him.

Verse 4. They have set up kings, but not by me, &c. ] The Septuagint and vulgar Latine render it, They have reigned to themselves: like as St. Paul telleth the haughty Corinthians, who, carried aloft by their waxen wings, domineered and despised others, ye have reigned as kings without us, &c. 1 Cor. 4. 8. But our reading is according to the Originall: and so they are charged with a double defecti- on: the one Civil, from the house of David, they have set up kings; &c. the other Ecclesiasticall, from the sincere service of God, they had made them idols. For the first, it was not their fault to set up kings; but to do it without God; without his licence, and approbation. They took counsel, but not of God: they covered with a covering, but not of his spirit, that they might adde sin to sin, Esay 30. 1. They went headlong to work, in setting up Jeroboam the son of Nebat. For although the thing were done by the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God; as was likewise Christs crucifixion, Acts 2. 23. (See 1 King. 11. 31, 17. and Chap. 12. 15, 24.) yet because the people were led by their own pride and ambition to chuse a new king, without either asking Gods consent, or eyeing his decree, they did it rashly, and seditiously; neither aimed they at any thing else, but at the easing of their bur- dens, and drawing to themselves the wealth of the kingdome. As for Jeroboam; it is before noted, that although he had it cleared to him, that Gods will was he should be king over the ten Tribes, yet because it was a will of Gods decree, not of his command, as of a duty to be done by him; and because he did not as David, who when he had the promise of the kingdome, (yea was anointed king) yet invaded not the kingdom, but waited till he was lawfully exalted thereunto by God: there- fore passeth he for an usurper. And the people are here worthily reprehended, sith whatsoever is not of faith is sin: and it is obedience when men obey a Divine pre- cept; but not ever, when they follow a Divine instinct.

they have made princes; &c. ] Some render it; They have removed Princes, (as if in the word Hafiru Sin were put for Samech) they have taken liberty to make and unmake Princes at their pleasure: as the Roman Army did Emperours: and as that potent Earl of Warwick, in Henry the sixths time, who is said to have carried a king in his pocket. But because the former reading is confirmed by the Chaldee Paraphrase, and the sense is agreeable to what went before: neither read we of any kings of Israel deposed by the people, we retain it as the better.

Of their silver and their gold have they made them idols, ] Of the guts and gar- bage of the earth had they made them terricula, fray-bugs, or molestations: ter- rorem enim & tristitiam duntaxat afferunt suis cultoribus, for they cause terrour and heaviness onely to those that worship them. Their sorrow shall be multiplied that hasten after another God, Psal. 16. 4. The Greek Churches, for instance, so set up- on Image-worship; and therefore now subjected to the Turkish tyranny: a type whereof were these ten Tribes carried captive by the Assyrian, without any return. Idols are called griefs, or sorrows, saith Peter Martyr, because they torment the minde; and trouble the conscience; neither can they quiet or pacifie it: so that Idolaters must needs be alwayes in doubt and despair, as Papists are, whose whole religion is a doctrine of desperation. Their penances and pilgrimages to such or such an Idoll, might still their consciences for a while: but this was a truce rather then a peace: a palliate cure, which would not hold long; a corrupting of the sergeant, but not compounding with the Creditour.

that they may be cut off. ] Not their silver and gold, the matter of their idols, as some fence it; but the whole nation, Princes and people together. Idolatry is a God-provoking, and a land-defolating sinne, as in this Prophecy. Often it is not so much the enemies sword as the sin of idolatry that destroyeth cities and king- doms, through the justice and jealousy of Almighty God.

Verse. 5. Thy calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off, ] That is, it can do thee no stead, nor deliver thee from the destroyer. Be not afraid of such mawmets (saith Jeremy) for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good, chap. 10. 5. they can neither hurt, nor help: for an idoll is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. 8. 4. nothing but a meer fiction: it hath no god-head, or power divine in it self, as the following words shew, that there is none other God but one. How then can help be reasonably expected from it? Israel had cast off the thing that is good, for calf-worship, ver. 3.

therefore is he worthily cast off by his calf, called here Samaria's calf, or calves, because that was the chief City, the Palace of the King, and is therefore put for the whole Province: and their idols called a calf, by way of contempt, as the brazen-serpent is called Nehushtan, or a piece of brasse when once it was Idolized. See how Rabshakeh insults over those Heathen-deities, 2 King. 18. 33, 34, 35. and blasphemously applieth it to the God of Israel, who never casteth off his faithfull servants: but is with them in trouble, to deliver them, and honour them, Psal. 91. 15. Surely the Lord will not cast off his faithfull people, neither will he forsake his inheritance, Psal. 94. 14. Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man, Job 8. 20. But though he cause grief, yet he will have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies, Lam. 3. 31, 32. some reads it thus, Thy calf, O Samaria, hath been carried away into a far countrey, namely into Assyria: as the idols of the nations which were overcome, were carried away captive in triumph by the Conquerours. See Hof. 10. 6.

Myne anger is kindled against them, ] God is said to be angry against idolaters, because he doth that which an angry man useth to do, viz. 1. chide, 2. fight; see the second commandment in the sanction of it, and tremble at Gods displeasure, which when once kindled, and comes into his face, or, nostrils (as here) it burneth to the lowest hell, consumeth the earth with her increase and sets on fire the foundations of the mountains, Deut. 32. 22. It is ill angring him that is the Ancient of dayes, and a consuming fire. The Jewes use to say to this day, that there is no punishment befalleth them, in which there is not an ounce of Aarons golden calf.

How long will it be ere they attain to innocencie? ] Quousque non poterunt innocentiam? a forcible ellipsis: as if God were so vexed, that he could not fully utter himself, nor at all speak to Samaria as he had begun, but turn his discourse to others, saying, How long will they not be cleansed? or, not abide innocency? By which powerfull expression three things are intimated. Firſt, that these Israelites were refractarie and desperate: not onely unclean, but enemies to innocency, such as could not abide it: they were inveterate, and incurable, their diseases ingraind, and not easily stirred by any potion. Secondly, that God is most patient, who though he thinks over-long of the time that men continue in their evil courses, and therefore cries, Quousque, How long, &c. and when will it once be? yet bears with their evil manners, and inviteth them to better. Thirdly, that he will at length break off his patience, and proceed to punishment, sith there is no other remedy, 2 Chron. 34. 16. Prov. 29. 1.

Verse 6. For from Israel was it also, ] There is an Emphasis in Also, and it is as if the Prophet should say, This calf of Samaria is no lesse from Israel, and came out of his shop or device, then that of old set up by them in the wilderness. Israel then brought a calf out of Egypt, Jeroboam brought two; and Israel hath received them, and are much taken with them: so that they cannot attain to innocencie, (as it is in the former verse) so far they are engaged, and so fast joyned to idols, that they cannot get off: there is so much of Self in it: it was the barn of their own brain; and hence so over-admired, so clasped and hugged, with the Ape, &c. or rather, as Cleopatra hugged her Vipers that sucked her blood, and took away her life; so did they their own inventions, though fairly warned of the danger, verse 3, 4, 5. Lo this was Israel, that acted thus madly. Israel that was wont to laugh at, or pity other Nations for their Idolemany, for worshipping the works of their own hands, for going a whoring after their own inventions, for changing the glory of the incorruptible God, into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things: As in Lap-land, the people worship that all day for a god, whatsoever they see first in the morning. Now that a calf-worship should be found in Israel, and not onely so, but found out by Israel; who was herein worse then Egypt: for that the Egyptians worshipped a living Ox of Gods making; but Israel, a dead calf of their own making: such fots they were grown, and so thwart to the very principles of reason.

the workman made it, ] who confessedly is no God, therefore it is not God, ] for no man can give that divinity to another, which himself hath not. Nay it is certain that that God himself by his infinite power cannot make any thing to be a God to us. He cannot do this I say: like as he cannot lie, he cannot die, he cannot deny himself, &c. so he cannot raise a created excellency to that height, as to be a God to us. How vile then is the Voluptuary, that maketh his belly his god? the Mammonist, that maketh his gold his god? the Ambitionist, that maketh his honour his god? How abominable the Masse-monger, that maketh his god, and eateth him when he hath done? This made Averroes the Mahometan cry out; Quoniam Christiani Deum suum manducant, sit anima mea cum Philosophis, that is, Forasmuch as Christians do eat their God, let my soul be rather with the souls of the Philosophers. Those Pseudo-christians the Papists, stick not to call the consecrated Host, their God and Lord: and Harding (that sottish Apostate, for he was once a zealous Preacher against Popery, and wished that he had a voice as loud as the bells of Osney, to cry it down) in his disputation against Juel, is not ashamed to defend it. And yet we all know that that Host or Sacrament, as they call it, of the Altar, is the work of the Baker, therefore it is no God, neither Lord nor God. (whatsoever our Lord God the Pope say to the contrary) Which yet further appeareth, in that (as the calf of Samaria here) it may bee broken in pieces, or to shivers, (which word of ours seemeth to come from the Hebrew shebharim here used) yea ground to powder, as was the molten calf in the wilderness, whereto the Prophet may well here allude. Is not their breaden-god broaken by the Priest into three bits? Is it not chawed with his teeth? May it not be gnawed by mice, become meat for worms, &c? Murescit, putrescit, & corrumpitur: all which things the Papists themselves confesse may befall their god, which is therefore no god, or nomine tantum & non numine deus, a nominall god onely. And the like we may say of images, and reliques (such as is at Genua, the tail of that Ass, whereon Christ rode into Jerusalem) these and other monuments of idolatry may, nay they ought to be broken, burnt, and utterly abolished, Exod. 34. 13. Dent. 7. 5. Ezek. 20. 7. as (blessed be God) they are lately amongst us, by our Worthies in Parliament: to whom perhaps, for that and the like good services, we attributed but too much, we even idolized them: and the king of Sweden (that bright Northern-starre) a little before his decease, being in discourse with Dr. Fabricius his Chaplain, he told him, that he thought God would ere long take him away, because the people did so overvalue and deifie him.

Verse 7. For they have sown the winde, and shall reap the whirl-winde: ] To sow the winde is to labour in vain, as Eccles. 5. 16. to labour for the winde, and Prov. 11. 29. to possesse the winde, to feed on the winde, Hos. 12. 1. and to be eaten up of the winde, Jer. 22. 22. The Greeks expresse the same by hunting after, and hurbanding the winde. The winde we know maketh a mighty bustle, as if it were some great businesse, solid and stable: but presently it blowes over, and comes to nothing. Or if it get, as seed, into the bosome of the earth, either it breeds an earth-quake, or at least ariseth in a whirl-winde, which blowes dust into the eyes, and once at least buried a considerable Army in the Lybian sands. Solomon saith, He that soweth iniquity, shall reap vanity, Pro. 22. 8. But our Prophet here, saith more: He that soweth the winde of iniquity, shall reap the terrible tempest of unconceivable misery. By the blast of God he shall perishe, and by the breath of his nostrils he shall be consumed, Job 4. 8, 9. As the beginnings of Idolatry, hypocrisie, vain-glory, carnall policy, &c. are empty and unhappy, (it is but the sowing of blasted corne, as the Septuagint here hath it, seed corrupted by the winde) so the end thereof is very sad and dismall. The word here rendred, the whirl-winde, hath a syllable in it more then ordinary, to note (saith Tremellius) the fearfulness of the divine vengeance, that will befall the forementioned: and especially at death, when they are entring upon eternity. Oh what a dreadfull shriek gives the guilty soul at death, to see it self launching into an infinite Ocean of scalding lead, and must swim naked in it for ever: not having the least cold blast of that winde it sowed all its life long to cool it; but rather to adde to its torment! Then will God speak to such, as once he did to Job out of a whirl-winde, but after another manner; Go to now ye formalists, false-worshippers, triflers, troublers of Israel: ye that have been meer mutes, and ciphers, nullities in the world, superfluities in the earth, or worfe then all this: Go to now, I say, weep and howl for the miseries that are come upon you. To have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton: ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter. But now, an end is come, is come; an evil, an onely evil, without mixture of mercy, sorrow without succour, mischief without measure, torments, without hope of ever either mending or ending, are the portion of your cup: the dregs of that cup of mine must you now drink off, that hath eternity to the bottom. O lamentable! Oh did but men forethink what would be the end of sin, they durst not but be innocent. Oh let that terrible tempest at death bee timely thought on and prevented, Job 27. 20, 21, &c. Terrours take hold of him as waters: a tempest stealeth him away in the night. The East-winde carrieth him away, and hee departeth, and as a storm hurleth him out of his place. For God shall cast upon him and not spare: he would fain flee out of his hand, &c.

*It hath no stalk: the bud shall yeeld no meal: ] Nihil habet fertilitatis firmitatisque, as Ruffinus expoundeth it; It hath no firmnesse or fruitfulness: the winde of wickednesse that thou hast sown, the blasted corn that thou hast committed to the earth, will yeeld thee nothing but losse, and disappointment. A blade there may be, but not a stalk: or if a stalk, yet not a bud: or if a bud, yet it shall bee nipt in the bud: it shall yeeld no meal, but onely dust and chaff: or if it come to the meal, yet strangers shall swallow it up, so that you shall bee never the better for it: but after that ye have sown the winde of iniquity, ye shall reap the whirl-winde of misery, maledictionem omnimodam, curses of all kindes, which God hath hang'd at the heels of your idolatry, a pernicious evil, (whatever those superstitious thee-sinners bragg'd to the contrary, Ier. 44. 17.) Or if they flourish for a season, and have hopes of a large crop: yet God will curse their blessings, and frustrate their fair hopes, Psal. 37. 2. as he dealt by that rich wretch mentioned by Mr. Boroughes, in his Comment on the second Chapter of this Prophecie, pag. 379. I had certain information, saith he, from a Reverend Minister, that in his own Town there was a worldling, who had a great crop of corn. A good honest neighbour of his walking by his corn said, Neighbour, you have a very fine crop of corn, if God blesse it: yea, saith he, I will have a good crop: speaking contemptuously. And before he could come to get it into the barn, it was blasted, that the corn of the whole crop was not worth six pence.*

Judg. 5;

*Verse 8. Israel is swallowed up, ] Not their meal onely, as verse 7. but themselves also are devoured by those workers of iniquity, that eat up Gods people as they eat bread, Psal. 14. 4. Persecutors are men-eaters, more cruel then those American Canibals, that devour men peeces-meal: they make but a breakfast of Gods people, as Senacherib meant to do of Jerusalem; and the Powder-papists of England. if it had not been the Lord who was on our side, when men rose up against us, Then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us. But blessed be God, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth, Psal. 124. 2, 3, 6. Let us keep us out of the claws and clutches of that old man-slayer, who night and day walketh about (in a circular motion) that he may take us at advantage, seeking whom hee may swallow down his wide gullet, which he hath even made red with the blood of souls, and is therefore happily, called the great red-Dragon, Rev. 12. 3. that hath seven heads to plot, and ten horns to push men into the sin of idolatry, and thereby into hell. So long as Israel was holinesse to the Lord, and the first-fruits of his increase, all that devoured him found that they offended: for evil came upon them, Ier. 2. 3. they could no more digest him, then the Whale did Jonah: a cup of trembling, or of posson he was to all the people round about, Zech. 12. 2. See the Note there. But, when he offended in Baal, he died: when he chose new gods, then was warre in the gates: when they made leagues with idolaters, then were they even swallowed up by them: as were likewise the Greek and Latine Churches, by the Eastern and Western Antichrist, those crooked Leviathans, those dragons in the sea, as the Egyptian, and Assyrian are called, *Esay 27. 1.

now shall they be among the Gentiles, ] whose favour and friendship they have basely sought, and dearly bought. It was threatned in the former Chapter, verse 16. that they should be a derision in the land of Egypt. See the Note. To have Egyptians deride us, and that for sin, is an heavy judgement. So here, to be disdained and vilified by such, as an old broken vessell, fit for none but unclean uses.

as a vessell wherein is no pleasure. ] No delight or complacency; was despectum, reijcendum, reijculum, abjectum, a vessell that is for the carrying up and down of excrements ; so shall Israel be employed by Gentiles, in base and contemptible offices : as they were by the Babylonians, Jer. 51. 34. yea Ichojakim himself ( though a King ) was no better used, Ier. 22. 18. and Moab, that haughty nation, Ier. 48. 38. In which sence, Moab shall be my washpot, saith David, Psal. 60. 10. that is, brought into most abject slavery ; as your scullions or scavengers : they shall lie among the pots, Psal. 68. 13. not onely to make pots, for the king of Babylons use, ( as those servile souls, the base brood of their degenerated forefathers, 1 Chron. 4. 23. ) but also to hold pots, or empty pots and vessells of dishonour ; that they might know a difference betwixt Gods service ( which is all clean and fair work, fit for a vessell of honour, an elect vessell, elect and precious, sanctified and fit for the masters use ) and the service of their enemies, base and beastly ; such as is beneath the excellency of an ingenuous man : such as the Turks at this day put the Jews to ; and the Spaniards the poor Indians.

2 Tim. 2. 21.

Verse 9. For they are gone up to Assyria, a wilde asse alone by himself, ] This was that that most moved the Lord to denounce and determine hard and heavy things against Israel, they had suspicious thoughts of God, as if he either could not, or would not do for them, and help them out, as the Assyrian ( though an enemy ) would. This prank of theirs, God uttereth here with as great indignation, and dislike, as old Jacob did his sonne. Reubens incest, when he said, He went up to my couch. The Lord is as jealous of his glory as any man can be of his wife : neither will he give it to another, Esay 42. 8. he admits not of any corivall in heaven or earth, as Potiphars wife was his own peculiar. Now God is no way more glorified by us, then when we put our trust in his love and faithfulness, and expect from him safety here, and salvation hereafter. For in so doing, we set him up for our king, Judg. 9. 15. and put the crown royall upon his head, Cant. 3. 11. As in doing otherwise, we turn his glory into shame, loving vanity, seeking after leasing. Hence that angry expostulation, Ier. 2. 36. Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way ? How dost think to mend thy self, by running to the creature ; as if there were no God in Israel ? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria : Yea thou shalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thine head ( after the manner of mourners, 2 Sam. 13. 19. ) for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

a wilde asse alone by himself : ] Foolish and fierce above measure, untameable and untractable : loving to be alone, and so becomes a prey to the lion, as saith Siracides, chap. 13. verse 21. Pliny speaketh much of the wilde asse, and his properties : and Interpreters on this Text, bring many reasons why Israel is compared to him. Israel is as stupid, and as mad as the wilde asse, saith Lyra. He is all for himself, saith Iunius : he casteth off Gods yoke, saith Tremellius : he is a contemptible creature, saith Kimchi : he walks where he lists, as masterlesse, saith the Chaldee : he seeketh water in the wilderness, but hardly findeth it, so doth Israel help of the cruell enemies, and hath it not, saith Oecolampadius : he taketh a great deal of pains for his belly, saith Mercer : he cannot be tamed and made serviceable, saith Gesner. He is left alone by God to be carried captive by the Assyrian, saith Ribera. The Scripture describeth the nature of this creature in many places, Gen. 16. 12. Iob 6. 5. & 11. 12. & 24. 5. & 39. 8. Psal. 104. 11. Esay 32. 14. Ier. 2. 23. & 14. 6. Dan. 5. 21.

Lib. 8. cap. 40.

Ephraim hath hired lovers. ] This is the second similitude, taken from a most libidinous harlot. See the like baseness in Judah, Ezek. 16. 33. They were so mad upon their idols, and creature-confidences, that they were at no small charge for them : they lavished money out of the bag : and laid on, as if they should never see an end of their wealth. They sent great gifts and summes of money to the Assyrians and Egyptians ; and leaned upon them as their champions : they hired loves, as the Hebrew here hath it. But love as it cannot well be counterfeited, ( a man may paint fire, but he cannot paint heat ) so it cannot at all be hired or purchased. Those that go about it shall finde loathing for love, and be scorned of those mercenaries, which are seldome either satisfied, or sure.

Verse 10. Yea, though they have hired among the nations, ] The uncircumcised ; strangers to the promises, and aliens from the common-wealth of Israel : that they should should so far distrust God, and debase themselves, as to seek help of such; this went neer to the heart of God, and was very grievous. They brought up an evil report upon Gods house-keeping, charged him with unfaithfulness to his people, whom he now seemed to leave in the lurch, to shift for themselves in their straits; and hardened his enemies in their wicked, but yet more prosperous condition. Felix scelus virtus vocatur. How would these Heathens hugge themselves in the conceit that Israel should do thus, who was Gods portion, Dent. 32. 9. the dearly beloved of his soul, Jer. 12. 7. of whom it was anciently sung, and commonly said among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them, Psal. 126. 2. Happy art thou O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people! saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help; and who is the sword of thine excellency: and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high-places, Dent. 33. 29. Whosoever was free of the city of Rome, might not accept of any freedome in another city: for that they counted a dishonour to Rome. And will not God take it in ill part from his covenanters, to seek or make after correspondency with his enemies, and safety by them? The help of the wicked, Ecclesia sunt tandem pernicioſa & semper perfidioſa, are the best perfidious, and at length pernicious to the Church.

now will I gather them, ] This the Chaldee, and the Vulgar make to be a promise of bringing back their captivity; when indeed it is a commination of carrying them into captivity. I will gather them, ] that is, either the enemies against Israel; or else Israel, for the enemies; ut eos acervatim perdam, that I may lay them heaps upon heaps, and gather them, as dead corps slain in battle are gathered together for buriall. Or, I will gather them, to the end that I may disperse them. And they shall sorrow a little, ] And but a little now, for the burden of the king of princes, ] for the taxes and tributes exacted from them by the king of Aſſyria, (whose Nobles, were Princes, 2 King. 18. 24. Esay 10.) See 2 King. 15. 19, 29. But all this is but a little: it is but the beginning of sorrows; it is but small drops fore-running the great storm; or as a crack fore-running the fall of the house. They shall sorrow much more hereafter, when carried captive, and made a scorn to the scum of the people. See Dent. 32. 42. Some read the whole verse, Yea, because they have hired among the nations, now will I gather them together: (for they have begun a little) because of the burden of the king of Princes. And they thus paraphrase it: Well may they bribe and hire, but this will be the end: The Israelites themselves shall fall by heaps; the nations whom they hire shall come so tumbling in upon them (as Esay told Ahaz, Esay 8.) Do you not see it pretily well begun already? Look upon the late example that is yet now fresh and bleeding before your eyes: so you will the better beleieve my threatening in that which is to come: I mean, the sacking and carrying away of the Tribes beyond Jordan, by Pul and Tiglath-Pileſer. If you ask me the reason, why God should be so angry with you? It is because you are so foolish, or so wicked rather, to send presents and tributes to the king of Aſhur (who in the pride and vanity of his heart nameth himself the King of Princes, the mighty and most potent King) with the pilling, polling, and burdening of your Subjects.

Verse 11. Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sinne, ] Because he hath multiplied altars against Gods expresse command, Lev. 17. 3, &c. Dent. 12. 5, &c. Josb. 22. 22. Jer. 11. 13. and that, to sinne: as if it were on purpose to crosse and provoke the Lord to anger, by their superstitions and will-worship, and to despite him with seeming honours (for displeasing service is double dishonour) therefore he shall have enough of it, ere I have done with it. He shall be given up to a reprobate sense: that going on from one sin to another, he may fill up his measure, till wrath come upon him to the utmost.

Idolatry is sinne with an accent, wickedness with a witness, 1 King. 15. 30, 34. & 16. 2. 1 King. 12. 30. & 13. 35. and shall be punished accordingly: for so the Chaldee paraphraseth here; Because they have multiplied their altars for sin, the altars of their idols shall be their ruine: there is one Hebrew word for sin and punishment: sinne hales hell at the very heels of it, as One saith wittily. Polanus upon this Text, hath these three profitable Observations. First, that as in the old Testament, one onely altar was set up by Gods command in the Tabernacle and Temple: so also in the new Testament, we have no other altar but Christ; Heb. 13. 10. Iren. lib. 4. contra hares. cap. 34. Secondly, as the Israelites sinned in multiplying altars: so do the Papists most grievously, in that not content with Christ and his satisfactory sacrifice alone, they set up other altars, and bring in other expiatory sacrifices. Thirdly, as the Israelites made many altars to sinne, though they pretended good intention and devotion: So the Papists at this day multiply altars (even hundreds in some one Church in Rome) to sinne, though they falsely pretend their good intention therein, and the preservation and augmentation of Gods service.
on

Verse 12. I have written to him the great things of my Law, ] Magnalia legis; there are also minutula legis, Mat. 5. 22. both must be looked to: for though the Civilian say of his Law, De minutis non curat lex, the law takes no notice of small faults: yet it holds not true of the Law of God, which is spiritual, and must be kept as the apple of the eye, Prov. 7. 2. and observed in every point and part, nay in every punctilio and particle thereof. But to come to the words; Ephraim could not plead ignorance of Gods minde, for their many altars, and superstitions: Deus enim jure querat & queratur, for God might very well say and complain, as Prov. 22. 20. Have not I written for thee excellent things in counsels and knowledge? and in the verse next afore, I have made known (my minde) this day to thee, even to thee. So here, I have written, sc. by my Pen-men and Secretaries, to him chiefly, and for his better direction in my service, that he might walk therein by rule, and not at randome, (See Deut. 4. 8. Psal. 147. 29.) the great things, or excellent documents (the multiplicity or multiformity, saith the Chaldee) of my Law, or of my doctrine sapientiall; Prov. 13. 14. which taketh in the Gospel too, that Law of Christ, Gal. 6. 2.

But they were counted as a strange thing. ] As not pertaining to them, as that wherein they were little or nothing concerned, as the narration of forraign affairs. Whereas men should read and regard the holy Scriptures, as they do the Statutes of the Land: holding themselves as much concerned and intended as any other: threatening themselves in every threat, binding themselves in every precept, blessing themselves in every promise, mingling the whole Word with faith in their hearts, and resolving upon the obedience of faith; as knowing that these are verba vivenda non legenda, words to be lived, not read onely: and that they should indwell in us familiarly, and yet richly, Col. 3. 16. and we should be as inwardly acquainted with them, as any man is with his sister, or nearest allies, Prov. 7. 4. All this the rather; First because God is the Authour of the holy Scriptures, both matter and words are his, 2 Pet. 2. 21. he spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets which have been since the world began: and he guided their hands in writing the Bible. How dare Papists then say, that they wrote it injussu without command from God. Secondly, because God hath written his Law for us, for our behoof and benefit, Rom. 4. 23. and 15. 4. The Scripture is Gods Epistle to us, saith Gregory. It is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my pathes, saith David. Not a light that I see at a distance, a great way off; but a light held to my feet, that I may see my way in this land of Chabul, this dirty and dark world: and not lift up one foot, till I descry and finde sure footing for another, as those Psal. 34. 6. Thirdly, because he hath written for us, the honorabilia legis, honourable and precious things, such as a man would fetch from China or the uttermost part of the habitable world upon his bare feet, rather then be without. David prefers it before gold and silver, Psal. 19. 11. Solomon before pearls and rubies, Prov. 3. 15. Moses before all the learning of other Nations, Deut. 4. 6. The Scripture is the souls food, saith Athanasius: the souls physick, saith Chrysostome: the invariable rule of truth, saith Irenaeus. It is faith Another, the Aphorismes of Christ, the Library of the Holy Ghost, the divine Pandeets, the Wisdom of the Crosse, the Cubit of the Sanctuary, the Firmament of Faith, the Touchstone of Error, &c. What reason then had Darbshire (Bishops Boners kinsman and Chaplain) to say to Mr. Hawkes the Martyr, that he was too curious: for he would have nothing but his little pretty-Gods-book? And is it not sufficient for my salvation? said Hawkes: yes, said he, but not for your instruction. God send me the salvation (said Hawkes) and you the instruction. That the Scripture is full and sufficient for both instruction and salvation, see 2 Tim. 3. 16, 17. and my Treatise called the True Treasure. Has igitur nocturnâ versate manu, versate diurnâ, p/at. 1. 2. Let there not, by infrequency or disuse, grow an alienation or strangeness betwixt us and the holy Scriptures: but be ready in them, and have them, as Saul had his pitcher and spear at his bolster: as David had his chosen stones at hand in his scrip, &c. Luther wisheth all his own books burnt; because I fear, saith he, they hinder men from reading the Bible, that book of books; in comparison whereof all the books in the world are but wast-paper. After which, I tremble, saith he, to think of the former age, wherein many Divines spent so much time in reading Aristotle and Averroes, and so little in reading the Book of God. Melancthon saith that he heard some preach upon Texts taken out of Aristotles Ethicks. Carlostadius, was eight yeers Doctour when he began to read the Scriptures: and yet at the taking of his degree, had been pronounced, Sufficientissimus. Another Doctour of Divinity, being asked whether he had read the Decalogue, negitabat se huiusmodi librum in Bibliotheca sua habuisse unquam: he denied that he had ever had, or heard of any Book so called: such a perfect stranger was he to the great things of Gods Law. And if the learned Doctours be thus bard and ignorant, what may we think of the poor misled and muzzled multitude, that lie fast lockt up in the Popes dark dungeon, and are flatly forbidden to meddle with the Scriptures, lest they should be infected with heresie, or possessed with a devil, as some (say they) have been by that means?

Verse. 13. They sacrifice flesh in the sacrifices of mine offerings, and eat it; ] q. d. They would seem not to have rejected the great things of my Law, nor to be such strangers thereunto; sith they were much in sacrificing according to the Law. But their hypocrisie is most hatefull: In that First, they offer (with Cain) Non personam, sed opus persona, as Luther saith; not themselves, but their bare sacrifices, Esay 66. 3. which is but as a brainlesse head, and soul-lesse body: it is but flesh, as it is here called in contempt, and scorne. See the like, Jer. 7. 21. Hof. 9. 4. And think the same of all externall services; si careant animâ suâ, id est rectâ in Deum fidem, & erectâ in illum mentem, if not performed in faith and obedience. Secondly, They pretended to serve God, when indeed they onely served their own bellies, as those, Rom. 16. 18. sought their own ends, Phil. 2. 21. catered for the flesh, Rom. 13. 14. insigne donum quo afficior (as Luther Paraphraseth the text) carnem offitii quam vos ipsi voratis, i. e. A goodly gift it is that you give mee, viz. the flesh of your peace-offerings which your selves may feast with: and you therefore multiply sacrifices that you may gorge your selves with good cheer. Now one egge is not more like to another, then these old flesh-mongers were to the Popish flesh-flies at this day. It was an honest complaint of one of them; We, saith he, handle the Scripture, tantum ut nos pascat & vestiat, onely that it may feed us, and cloath us. And it is evident to all the world, that their Masses, pilgrimages, festivals. vowed presents and memorials, &c. are onely to pamper their paunches: which made them so angry with Erasmus, and Luther, for meddling.

but the Lord accepteth them not, ] How should he (say) when there was nothing but flesh, nothing but self in them. See the like, Jer. 4. 10. Am. 5. 22. Esay 1. 10. where God telleth them, that their sacrifices were grievous and offensive to all his severall senses, nay to his very soul too. The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord, Prov. 15. 8. yea though he bring it with never so good an intent, Pro. 21. 27. how much more if he bring ex rapina holocaustum, a sacrifice of what he hath got by rapine and robbery? and so the Chaldee carrieth the sence of the former words: the sacrifices of mine offerings, quæ collecta sunt ex injuria, saith He, which were gathered and gotten by wrong-dealing: how then should the Lord accept them?

now will he remember their iniquity, ] Even while they are sacrificing: let them not think to blinde his eyes with the imoak of their offerings, to stop his mouth with their rich gifts, and donaries: to bribe him into a connivency: to expiate and set off their sinnes with their sacrifices: for God will remember them, and punish them. Yea, now will he do it, in the time of their holy duties: he will come upon them then in his wrath, as Pilate came upon the Galileans, and mingled their blood with their sacrifices. Sure it is that sin (brought into Gods holy presence) petition ons against the sinner, as Esther did against Haman, at the banquet of wine: picks out the time of prayer and other duties to accuse and call for vengeance. Take we heed, lest while we are confessing our sinnes, (which yet we close with, and will not forsake) and judging our selves worthy to be destroyed, God say not, Out of thine owne mouth will I condemn thee, thou gracelesse person, that hast so much impudence as to bring thy Cozbi into my presence, then; when all the people (as on a fast-day) are weeping before the door of the Tabernacle. God will be sanctified of all that draw nigh unto him: one way or other he will be sanctified; either in them, or on them. Of such he saith, as Solomon once did of Adoniah, If he be from himself a worthy man, there shall not an hair of his head fall to the earth: but if wickednesse shall be found in him, he shall die. If any defile the Temple of God; him shall God destroy.

they shall return to Egypt. ] They had a minde to run thither for refuge: they sent also to So king of Egypt for that purpose, 2 King. 17. 4. Instead of making their peace with God, they betook themselves to base shifts; and sought help of the creature. This is the guise of gracelesse men, when distressed. But they shall soon have enough of Egypt, chap. 9. 3, 6. Their strength (or their Egypt) had been to have sitten still, in expectation of help from heaven, Esay. 30. 7. and to have considered that the last and greatest curse denounced against their disobedience, was, And the Lord shall bring thee into Egypt, &c.

Verse 14. For Israel hath forgotten his maker, ] Not more his Father, then his Benefactor, as 1 Sam. 12. 6. the Lord made Moses and Aaron, i. e. he advanced them to that honour in his Church. So our Saviour is said to have made twelve, when he ordained them to the Apostleship, Mar. 3. 14. And the Apostle saith of Israel, that God exalted the people, when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, Acts 13. 17. sc. to the priviledge of his peculiar people, the possession of the promised land, the custody of his Oracles, and services, &c. besides the many benefits and deliverances wrought for them. All which they are said to have forgotten. 1. Because they laid them not to heart, see Esay 57. 11. they saw not God in them: 2. Because their lives were not answerable: they walked not worthy of such a God: but said (in effect) We are delivered to do all these abominations, Ier. 7. 10. God challengeth remembrance, and well he may, Eccles. 12. 1. for he hath created us for his glory, Esay 43. 7. he hath formed us, yea he hath made us, (as it followeth there, and all that we might remember him) the word (made) is used for a degree of grace after creation. Those that are his workmanship, his artificiall fa<sup>cture</sup> created in Christ Jesus (who is the beginning of this creation of God, Rev. 3. 14.) unto good works, Ephes. 2. 10. if ever they should forget God, (which is the character of a wicked man, Psal. 50. 22.) if they should forsake God that made them, and lightly esteem the Rock of their salvation; as Solomon did the Lord that had appeared unto him twice; if they should not prefer him above their chief joy, or make him ascend above the head of their joy (as the Hebrew hath it, Psal. 137. 6.) and set him over all, as Pharaoh did Ioseph (causing Sun moon, and starres to do obeysance to him) I mean all their naturall, morall, temporall, and spirituall abilities to bee subject and serviceable to him, he would have an unanswerable action against them, and both heaven and earth would have cause to blush at their disingenuity, and unthankfulnesse. Let it ever be remembred, that of all things God cannot abide to be forgotten.

and buildeth temples; ] To God, no doubt: and yet because they worshipped him not in his own way, they are said to have forgotten him: So do Papists in all their structures, vowed presents, and memories (as they call them.) In king Stevens time here, notwithstanding all the miseries of warre, there were more Abbeys built, then in an hundred years before. But who required those things at their hands? Christus opera nostra non tam actibus quam finibus pensat. Now the end why those Temples and Monasteries were built, appears in stories to be pro remissione & redemptione peccatorum, pro remedio & liberatione anima: pro amore celestis patrie: in honorem gloriosae Virginis, in elemosynam animae, &c. for remission of sins, redemption of souls, honour of the Virgin Mary, and other superstitious ends and uses.

selves against Gods wrath, to mott themselves up against his fire, that had burnt up the ten tribes, and threatened them. Strong cities and munitions may be lawfully built; but then their foundations must not be laid upon fire-works. If sin be at the bottom (as the voice from heaven is said to have told Phocas) though they build as high as heaven, it will not do. Babylons thick wals and large provisions could not secure her from the enemy: Samaria held out for two or three years, but was surprized at last by the Assyrian: so was Jerusalem by the Babylonians, and then by the Romanes, Esay. 22. 8, 9, 10, &c. great fault is found with this people for their war-like preparations with neglects of God, vers. 11. and of deep and down-right humiliation, vers. 12, 13, 14. The Jebusites were beaten out of their fort, though they presumed it impregnable. The men of Shechem were fired out, Judg. 9. 49. so shall Judah be: for,

I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, ] The enemy did this, but not without the Lord; who cannot brook it that men should thrust in palaces and strong-holds: and as Luther well observeth, in this whole chapter is fully set forth whence it is, that strong Palaces and flourishing kingdoms come to nought; it is because men believe not in God, but trust to their own strength, Deut. 28. 52. they fortifie themselves against an enemy, but do not pacifie Gods displeasure; who is himself a devouring fire, and can quickly quash all our forces, and confute our confidences.

CHAP. IX.

Vers. 1. Rejoyce not, O Israel, for joy as other people, ] Not as good people, for they have reason to rejoyce, and are called to it in both Testaments: joy is the just mans portion, but thou art naught all over, thou hast gone a whoring from thy God; who will shortly meet thee as a bear robbed of her whelpes, or as the jealous husband doth his adulteress. Again, not as other bad people, for they may revel (rejoyce indeed they cannot) and be merry, after a sort: rejoyce they may in the face, as the Apostle phraseth it, and from the teeth outward: some kind of frothy and flashy mirth they may have (and let them make them merry with it, 'tis all they are like to have) but so mayest not thou; because thou hast had warning sufficient, and hast known thy masters will, but not done it: yea, thou hast done that abominable thing that other nations never yet did, Jer. 2. 11. 12. thou hast changed thy God for those that are no gods; thou hast forsaken the fountain, and run to the cistern, &c. which is such a prodigious wickednesse, as the very heavens are astonished at, and are horribly afraid, yea, desolate; mourning, and as it were melting at this horrid act. Shall the heavens mourn, and wilt thou rejoyce? yea, fetch a frisk, or dance a galliard for joy, as the word signifies: what if other nations do so, when they have got the better of their enemies, or gathered in their harvest, Ez. 9. 4. or otherwise have all things go well with them? yet revolted Israel had no such cause, unless they were upon better terms with God. Say that this were the time when Joash beat Benhadad thrice over, and recovered the cities of Israel, 2 Kin. 13. 15. Or say it was, when he took Amaziah, and brought all the spoyle of Jerusalem to Samaria, Chap. 14. 13. or else when Pekah slew in Judah an hundred and twenty thousand in one day, and carried captive two hundred thousand, with much spoyle: these were times of great mirth and jollity, 'tis confessed. But, are there not with you even with you sins against the Lord your God (as the prophet Oded there betpeaks them) and should not those sins be bewailed? Besides, are they not your brethren whom you have slaughtered and captivated? and can you have any joy of such a conquest, of civil wars that are --- nullo habitu triumphos, that are such a misery as all words (how wide soever) want compasse to expresse? Hear what the prophet amos (who was Hosea's contemporary) saith to this, Ye which rejoyce in a thing of nought, (so he calleth their victories present prosperity, pomp and pride) which say, have we not taken to us horns by our own strength? Behold, I will raise up against you you a nation, O house of Israel, that shall tame you, and take you a link lower (as they say) so that your laughter shall be turned into mourning, and your joy into heaviness. There is ever a snare (or a cord) in the sin of the wicked, viz. to strangle their joy Jam. 4. 9. with; but the righteous sing and rejoyce, Prov. 29. 6.

For thou hast gone a whoring from thy God.] That's a foul businesse, and may well damp thy joy. Sins are the snuffes that dimme our candlestick, the leaven that sowreth our pascovers, the Sanies of a plague-fore that threatneth our very life. And, whereas the finnes of others are but rebellions against God, the sins of his professed people are treacheries: they go a whoring from their God, desuper Deo suo, vel omisso Deo suo, from under their God, or laying aside their God; casting him, as it were, into a by-corner. Hence those pathological complaints in Jeremy, Chap. 18. 13. Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things? the virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing; filthiness in a stewes is nothing so odious as filthiness in a Virgin. And again, Chap. 32. 30. The children of Israel, and the children of Judah have onely done evil from their youth. God takes evil so hainously from them, as if they had never done him any good service all their dayes; or as if they were the onely sinners upon earth: they were so much worse, because they ought to have been better then other nations. Now God expects our sorrows should be proportionable to our sins; Rejoyce not therefore, but (by a Liptote) weep and houl for the miseries that shall come upon you.

Thou hast loved a reward (or a harlots hire) upon every corn-floor,] i. e. Thou hast prostituted thy self to a loose Idolatry; like to a common whore that goeth a whoring up and down the threshing-floors. Hence Boaz his fear lest it should be noised that Ruth had lain at his feet, and that a woman came into the floor, Ruth. 3. 14. Or else he meaneth (saith Diodate) some particular kind of idolatry used in the time of harvest and threshing; as if they would have acknowledged their increase to come by their idols goodnesse. Such was that of the Metapontines, of whom Strabo storiet, that when they had had a good harvest, and were grown rich thereby, they dedicated to Apollo at Delphos χρυσὴν στέγαν harvest of gold. See more of this Chap. 2. with the Notes.

Verf. 2. The floor and the winepresse shall not feed them,] Culpam; poena premitt comes, Punishment attendeth sin at the heeles. They had abused their plenty, and ascribed it to their idols: therefore shall they be cut short either in their store, as Hag. 3. 6. 10. and 2. 16. or in their strength, as Hos. 4. 10. and 8. 7. (See Chap. 2. 8. 9. with the Notes.) One way or other their hopes shall be frustrated, the creature shall lie to them, and not answer their expectation.

The new wine shall fail in her,] Mustum mentietur ei, see the like phrase, Hab. 3. 17. Es. 58. 11. Job. 41. 6. they shall come to the corn-floors and wine-presses, as men come to a lottery with heads full of hopes; but depart disappointed, with their hearts full of blanks. As they have lied to God (idolatry is nothing else but a large lie,) and dealt deceitfully with him in the covenant: so shall all things lie to them, and not answer their hopes. Look how a certain Prince paid a false traitour (who for a summe of money had betrayed his countrey to him) in false coyn; so shall it fare with such as falsifie with God: he will blast their hopes, and curse their blessings, cut them short in the height of their expectancies, strike them in the things that their hearts are most set upon, the new wine shall lie to them, and so set them a howling, Joel. 1. 5.

Verf. 3. They shall not dwell in the Lords land,] Because they would not live by the Lords lawes; they shall therefore be turned out of his house (so this land was called Chap. 9. 3.) as rebellious children, that are a disturbance and a disgrace to their fathers family: they shall hold no longer, as tenants of him the chief Landlord, because so backward to send a lamb (as rent or an homage penny) to the ruler of the land, Esay. 16. 1. they were tenants at will, and held upon condition of obedience, Levit. 18. 26. it was divided amongst them by lot: Ioshua divided it amongst them, and left none to himself. The people gave him a portion, and he was content with it; though it were but a mean one in the barren mountains, as Hierome noteth. He had the promise that God would never leave him nor forsake him: and he well knew, that if he trusted in the Lord, and did good, he should dwell in the land and be verily fed, Psal. 37. 3. He and Caleb were of another spirit, and fulfilled after God; therefore they onely of all that generation entred the promised land, the Lords land: which because Moses might not do, it was a great grief to him. These Idolaters here are threatened to be cashiered and cast out of this good land, and to have their pleasant land laid desolate, to be spewed out, as the Canaanites had been before them, Levit. 18. 28. and so consequently to be deprived of Gods favour, help, and protection; and altogether dispriviledged, yea, disinherited. This was an heavy judgement to them, and must be a warning to us, that yet live in the bosome of the Church, and under the joyful sound; that we forfeit not our present enjoyments, that we sinne not away our precious priviledges, as the seven Churches and others have done. Alterius perditio tua sit cautio. We stand upon our good behaviour, as they did; See Dent. 30. 19. 20.

But Ephraim shall return to Egypt,] which they ought to have been sensible of as a punishment long since threatned, Dent. 28. ult. (see Hos. 8. 13. with the Note) though now, of their own accord, they returned to it, for fear of the Assyrian (whom by their false-dealing they had justly incensed) yet that should not shelter them, but Gods hand would find them out, and fetch them thence into captivity. Oft they had been warned not to go down to Egypt for help; and they must needs be hard bestead that fled thither. True it is, that the Egyptians are renowned in histories for a thankful people, and the Israelites are charged not to abhor an Egyptian, because they were once strangers in his land, and had tasted of his courtesies. But withall, they could not but know how hardly the Egyptians had dealt with their fore-fathers, and how treacherously also with them; and that they ought not de jure, to have returned thither upon any terms. Sed Deus quem destruit dementat, and although here they were resolved for Egypt, yet Chap. 11. 5. God resolveth otherwise; and voluntas Dei necessitas rei, his will shall stand, when all's done.

And they shall eat unclean things in Assyria,] Things forbidden by the law, as swines-flesh, &c. they shall be forced to eat or starve: they must not look for liberty of conscience in Assyria, nor have that favour to make a difference of meat as Daniel had, Chap. 1. but as Ezekiel baked his barley-cakes with mans-dung: Even so said the Lord, shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the heathen, whither I will drive them. So haughty they were grown, that their fathers house could not hold them; therefore they shall be glad of huskes with hogs, (as that prodigal) they shall eat as the heathens, sith they would needs act as the heathens. They thought it was hard with them in their own land, when the floores and the wine-presse would not feed them, vers. 2. But now it is farre worse, when forced by hard hunger, they are glad of any meat, be it clean or unclean: neither have they any more mind to be so merry with other nations, as vers. 1. or cause so to be: their stomacks craving and themselves (with Drusus in Tacitus) ready to eat the stuffings of their bed; or (with the Jewes in the last siege of Jerusalem) not onely to feed upon dogs, rats, cats, &c. but the leather of their shooes, girdles, targets, bridles, yea, ox-dung was a precious dish unto them, and the shreddings of pot-hearbs cast out and trodden under foot, &c.

Vers. 4. They shall not offer wine-offerings unto the Lord,] Non libabunt, minus libabunt, they shall not have wherewith to offer sacrifice, when they are in their banishment, Chap. 3. 4. much lesse to serve God with cheerfulness, to exhilarate his heart with their wine-offerings, Judg. 9. 13. to chear up themselves with the wine and oyle-offerings, Num. 15. 5. which were symbols, and signes of the Merit and Spirit of Christ (for the Ceremonial Law was their Gospel, it was Christ in figure) and the deprivation of them threatened the deprivation of grace and glory. Now therefore, sith such a sad condition, and such sinking of spirits abided this people, what reason had they to rejoyce with joy as others.

Neither shall they be pleasing to him,] Heb. they shal not be sweet or mingled; for as sweet and sowre maketh the best sawce, so the mixture of things of divers qualities maketh the sweetest confections, and most pleasing to the palat: but so shall not be these mens wine-offerings to God, if any they should present; but sowre and favourlesse. He is now resolved to take another course with them, to glorifie himself in their calamity, and to give unto them another while the cup of the wine of the fiercenesse of his wrath, Rev. 16. 19. that is, to delight as much in their misery, as a man would do in drinking off a bowle of generous wine.

Their sacrifices shal be unto them as the bread of mourners,] i. e. as funeral-feasts (whereof read Jer. 16. 7, 8. Ezech. 24. 17.) made ad levandum luctum, eaten in heaviness by those that were polluted by the dead, and therefore altogether unfit for sacrifice; sith God loveth a cheerful service, and will not have any of his come off heavily. See Levit. 10. 19. Dent. 13. 7. and 26. 14. Mal. 2. 13. where those unkind husbands are blamed, for causing their wives, when they should have been cheerful in Gods service, to cover the Lords altar with tears, with weeping and with crying out, so that he regarded not the offering any more. So Ezr. 9. 5. that holy man, though till then he sat astonied at the sins of the people, yet he arose from his heaviness at the evening sacrifice; for he knew, that even sorrow for sin might be a sinful sorrow, if unseasonable and fullen: for it sowres a mans spirit, and makes his services unacceptable to God.

For their bread, for their soul shal not come into the house of the Lord,] Their bread, That is, their meat-offering or other sacrifices, (see Mal. 1. 7. with the note) for their soul, that is, for themselves (soul is oft put for the whole person) shal not come, rightly and in due manner unto divine acceptation, into the house of the Lord, it should not have come into the Temple while it stood, and the Levitical service was orderly performed: how much lesse shal it be accepted now in a strange land, being the bread of mourners. Others by the bread for their soules understand their natural and necessary sustenance. He speaks, say they, of that meat-offering, Levit. 2. 5. appointed for a spiritual use, yet called here the bread for their life or livelihood, because God esteemed it no other then common meat. Tarnonius by the house of the Lord here understandeth the Church, as Chap. 8. 1. and 9. 5. and 2 Tim. 2. 20. The door of this house, saith he, is Christ, Job. 10. 9. the door-keeper the holy spirit, ibid. vers. 3. the foundation and corner-stone Christ, Eph. 2. 20. the wall is God, Zach. 2. 9. the stewards the ministers, those of the household the Saints, &c.

What will ye do in the solemn day, &c.] q. d. How will ye do to laugh and leap then, as ye do now? vers. 1. How will you be able to support your selves, to keep your hearts from dying within you? when you call to mind and consider your former solemnities and festivities, which now (alas!) in your captivity you are utterly deprived of? Time was when you went with the multitude to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy-day, Psal. 42. 4. with dancing, eating, drinking and joy, Dent. 16. 14, 15. Judg. 21. 19. 10. But now the scene is altered; your singing is turned into sighing, your mirth into mourning, your joy into heaviness; and you must needs hold your selves so much the more miserable, that you have been happy. The Epicures indeed held that a man might be cheerful against the most exquisite torments. 1. In consideration of his honesty and integrity, 2. In consideration of those pleasures and delights that formerly he had enjoyed; and now cheered up himself with the remembrance of. This last is a very slight and sorry comfort indeed. The former hath much in it; for a good man keeps every day, holy day, said Diogenes: and can be merry without musick, saith another Philosopher. He hath a merry heart, or good conscience, which is a continual feast; and is bound to rejoyce evermore, 1 Thes. 5. 16. and to keep the feast in all countries, 1 Cor. 5. 8. the Calender of his whole life is crowned with continual festivals; and he is the happiest man, and may be the merriest if he but understand his own happiness. But this (alas) was not the case of these woful caytives and captives. They had sinned away all their comforts; and what with the sad remembrance of their former enjoyments, and with the sense of their present servitude, they had little mind to keep holy-day. Hence this passionate exclamation, what will ye do, &c.? God had threatned before, Chap. 2. 11. to take away their feast-dayes, new-moons, sabbaths and solemnities; but they heeded him not, tantum monstra marina Dei verba surda aure preterierunt: therefore now God fulfilleth what he had forethreatned, and calleth, as in a solemn day, his terrors round about them, what they were wont to do in their solemn dayes and festivals, may be seen, Num. 10. 10. what we do or should do at least, upon our Lords-day-sabbaths, (the delight of every good soul) we need not be told. Let us take heed, lest by profane violating or careless observing that holy rest, with all its solemnities, we deprive not our selves (as these Israelites did) of such a precious privilege: God gave us a good warning, in that the first blow given the German Churches was upon the sabbath-day; which is there so ill sanctified, that if it should be named according to their deserving of it, Dæmoniacus potius quam Dominicus, saith Alsted, it should be called not the Lords-day, but the Priests-day rather. It is very remarkable, that upon that day was Prague lost, and with it all opportunity of hearing, singing, publique praying, communicating on that high and honourable day, Esay. 58. 13.

Vers. 8. For so they are gone, because of destruction,] They are gone either into Egypt for refuge, or into the state of the dead, they are gone out of the world. They shall perish by destruction, so some render it. When God had said in the former verie what will ye do, they should have fallen down before him and said, What wilt thou have us to do, Lord? we know not what at all to do, but our eyes are toward thee. This had been right, and thus they might have disarmed Gods indignation: but they had other carnal shifts, and thought they could tell well enough what to do, and whither to go: whereupon they were so fully bent, that the prophet here reports them gone already. For so they are gone, and got to Egypt; as divers of them did doubtlesse during the siege, and after the sack of Samarina, when they were forced to shift for themselves as they could: but did they so escape by iniquity? in thine anger cast down the people, O God, saith David, and it is not more a prayer then a prophesie, Psal. 56. 7. and this people had the proof of it.

Egypt shall gather them,] either for punishment, or for burial, as Ezech. 29. 5. Jer. 8. 2. so that they fled but out of the smoak into the fire; and in running from death they ran to it: as the Historian saith of those poor Scots at Muscleborough-field, who running for their lives, so strained themselves in their race, that they fell down breathlesse and dead.

Memphis shall bury them,] Left they should please themselves with vain hopes of return to their countrey, he shews that that shall never be; but they shall lay their bones in a strange land. Memphis (anciently called Noph, Isay. 19. 13. or, (as some will) No, Nahum. 3. 8. at this day Grand Caire, famous for the Pyramides and the kings sepulchres) Memphis, I say, a principal city of Egypt shall be a Kibroth-hattavah to you, a place of sepulchres; especially then, when Nebuchadnezzar, sent by God (who giveth him Egypt as his pay for his paines at Tyre) shall come and smite that land, and deliver such as are for death to death, and such as are for the sword to the sword, &c. Jer. 43. 11.

The pleasant places for their selves, nettles shall possesse them,] Heb. shall possesse them as their inheritance; so that the Israelites nor their heirs shall ever repossesse these pleasant places for their silver, i. e. where they either laid up their silver (their repositories or counting houses) or where they laid out their silver, either in costly buildings and sumptuous furniture, or else in idols and statues placed therein to their no smal charge & delight. These shall be ruined and over-run with nettles, thorns and thistles, a token of horrible desolation, Esa. 32. 13. and 34. 13. Note hence, that as God spareth a place for a few good men found therein, (as he would have done Sodom, which is now a place of nettles and salt-pits, Zeph. 2. 9.) so a fruitful land bringeth he into barrenesse, (or saltnesse) for the wickednesse of them that dwel therein, Psal. 107. 34. witnesse Judea that land of desire, Ezek. 1. ult. that garden of Eden, Joel. 2. 3. that glorious land, Dan. 11. 16. yea, glory of all lands, Ezek. 20. 15. now wofully waste and desolate: so is Grecia, formerly so famous for armes and arts: so are some parts of Germany, and so may England soon be (without the greater mercy of God, by a miracle of whose mercy, and by a prop of whose extraordinary patience we have hitherto subsisted) I say, England, whose vallies now are like Eden, whose hills are as Lebanon, whose springs are as Pisgah, whose rivers are as Jordan, whose walls is the Ocean, and whose defence is the Lord Jehovah.

Vers. 7. The dayes of visitation are come,] A visitation that is like to prove a vexation; for every transgression and disobedience, that is, Omision and commission, shall receive a just recompence of reward from the God of Recompences (so he is called Jer. 51. 56.) whose eyes behold, his eye-lids trie the children of men, Psal. 11. 4. the former points out his knowledge, the latter his judgement, or his critical descant in his visitation or inquisition, the dayes whereof are set, Stat sua cuique dies, and Israels dayes are come, are come, it is repeated for more assurance, as Babylon is fallen, is fallen, certò, citò, penitus : and as Ezek. 7. 5, 6, 7. the Prophet tells them, The end is come, is come, is come ; and so some ten or twelve times, that he might beat it into them, and awaken them them out of the snare of the devil. The wickeds happineffe will take its end surely and swiftly : but its hard periwading them so : And the Jews, as they were ever noted for obstinate, and overweening, so to this day they are light, aeriall, and Satanicall, apt to work themselves into the fools paradise of a sublime dotage. But they shall know it to be so as I have said, by w<sup>o</sup>ll experience, that Mistrresse of fools.

[Israel shall know it, ] sc. to his sorrow, he shall pay for his learning, buy his wit, open his eyes (as the mole doth) when death is upon him, roar and look upward, Ejay 8. 21. as the hog doth when the knife is at his throat. O Lord (saith the same Prophet, Chap. 26. 11.) when thy hand is lifted up (and thy hand is a mighty hand, Jam. 4. 10. it falls heavy) they will not see, they wink wilfully, or seek strawes to put out their eyes withall, as Bernard hath it : but they shall see, will they nill they, and be ashamed of their former ofcitancy, or rather obstinacy, when that hand of God which was lifted up in threatning, shall fall down in punishing, and the fire of thine enemies shall devour them : How much more at that last and great visitation, that terrible day of Retribution, when they shall answer for all, with flames about their ears. Tunc sentient magno suo malo, then shall they feel to their eternall wo, the truth of all the threatnings, which till then they heard, and read, as a man doth an Almanack-prognostications of winde or foul-weather, which he thinks may come to passe, and it may be not : And give nothing so much credit to them, as the Prior of S. Bartholomewes in London did to an idle and addle-headed Astrologer, when he went and built him an house at Harrow on the hill to secure himself from a supposed flood, that that Astrologer foretold.

The Prophet is a fool, &c. ] פֶּחַל, a naughty man ; the Hebrew word here is evil, and signifieth a rash and unadvised fellow, that is headstrong and headlong : such were their false prophets that promised peace when warre was at their gates, and made all fair weather before them, when the tempest of Gods wrath was even bursting out upon them ; such a tempest as should never be blown over. These should now appear to be fools, or rather Impostours, that had brought the credulous people into a fools paradise.

the spiritual man is mad, ] Heb. the man of the spirit, or ventosus, the windy man, that uttereth vain and empty conceits, humani cerebelli Minervus, the brats of his own brain, light, aery Nothings, the disease of this age, full of flashes and figments, idle speculations of men of corrupt mindes, and destitute of the truth. These pretend altogether to the spirit, and would be thought the onely spirituall men ; as the Swenkfeldians (whom for their ill savour, Luther called Stenckfeldians) who bewitched many with those glorious words (which were ever in their mouthes) of Illumination, Revelation, the inward and spirituall man, &c. and entituled themselves, the Confessors of the glory of Christ. So the Enthusiasts and Anabaptists, what boast make they of the spirit : professing that they will deliver nothing but what they have immediately revealed to them from heaven. Muncer (their ringleader) wrote a base book against Luther (which he dedicateth to king Iesus) wherein Lutherum flagellat quod Enthusiasmorum spiritu careat & nil nisi carnalis sapiat, he falls foul upon Luther, as wanting the spirit of revelation, and one that savoureth nothing but carnall things ? All his followers look upon Luther as more pestiferous then the Pope : and for Calvin they say, (and I have heard it) that it had been happy for the Church if he had never been born. It was their practise of old (as Leo Juda observed in his epistle before Bullingers book against the Catabaptists) and is still, to discourage and disparage Christs faithfull Ministers all they can, as carnall, and not relishing the things of the spirit : the right off-spring they are of those ancient Hereticks called Messalanii (the same with the Enchiries, and Enthusiasts) who in the year of Christ 371. professed to be wholly made up of the spirit : gave themselves much to sleep : and called their dreams and wild phantasies, prophecies and revelations.

for the multitude of thine iniquity, and the great hatred. ] Heb. the great Satanicall hatred, that thou hast born against God and thy neighbour ; but especially Gods faithfull prophets, whom thou heartily hatedst for their plain dealing ; as Abab did Micaiah,

Michaiah, because he never spake good to him. It is very probable that Michaiah was that disguised Prophet who brought Abab the fearfull message of displeasure and death, for dismissing Benhadad; for the which he was ever since fast in prison, deep in disgrace. Lo this is the worlds wages. Truth breeds hatred, great hatred, as the text hath it, devillish hatred, and this is through the multitude of mens iniquities, the overflow of sinnes, which wretched men hold so dear to themselves, that they cannot but rage against those that declaime against them, and proclaim hell-fire against their hatefull practises: they cannot stand still to have their eyes pickt out; how should they? say. Now for such, what wonder is it if God in justice give them up to the efficacie of errorr that they may beleieve a lie, sith they would not receive the love of the truth, 2 Thess. 2. 11? ut insatuati seducantur, & seducti judicentur, that being insatuated they may be seduced, and being seduced, perish? what wonder also if he deliver them up, as to strong delusions, so to vile affections, and abominable actions, that they may receive in themselves that recompense of their errorr that is meet, Rom. 1. 27? What marvell, if men that will not endure sound doctrine be left to seducers? if those that have itching ears meet with clawing Preachers? if such as turn away their ears from the truth, be turned to fables and fopperies? It is for the multitude of mens iniquities, and especially for their great hatred to the truth, that the Church is so pestered with Impostours (2 Pet. 2. 1, 2.) who bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. Do not our modern seducers so amongst us, when (among other portentous opinions held by them) they stick not to affirm, that Christ is a carnall or fleshly thing: That those that are grown Christians may go to God immediately without a Christ: that Christ did not rise again, &c. Others contemn him by the notion of the man dying at Jerusalem --- O horrible! Time was when the Popes were so notoriously naught, as to speak thus basely of Christ; to deny, or at least doubt of the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, &c. and then a poor Popeling cried out, that the sinnes of that Synagogue were so great, as that it deserved not to be ruled by any other then Reprobates. Certain it is, that God plagues contempt of the truth (that great Gospel-fin) with an inundation of errorrs and enormities.

Verse 8. The watch-man of Ephraim was with my God, ] i. e. The false prophets above mentioned, pretend themselves to be with God, and for him; speak, look, and act as if they came out of Gods bosome, or were so many Angels newly dropt from heaven: take upon them glorious titles to that purpose, as Watch-men, Prophets, spiritual-men, &c. These titles proved snares to many that enquired not narrowly into them: and especially because they preached placencia, soothed men up in their sinnes, sowed pillows under their elbowes, dawb'd with untempered mortar, &c. Hence silly people lent both their ears to them (as birds do to the lure, or whistle of the fowler) and were soon ensnared.

the prophet is as a snare of a fowler, &c. ] Seducers have their pishonologie, their art to perswade before they teach, as the Valentinians had: they are cunning and insinuate as Zanchy testifieth of Laelius Socinus, that, by propounding questions, he sought to ensnare him, semper interrogans quasi cuperet doceri, labouring to drop into him certain dangerous principles of the Samosatenian heresie. This slie trick they have learned of that old manslayer the devil, who by these Emissaries of his catcheth simple people, as the fowler doth the bird, by casting baits: or as the fisher, by one fish catcheth another, that he may feed upon both.

And hatred in the house of his God. ] Satanicall hatred (as in the former verse) which these wicked watch-men do stir up against the true Prophets, and faithfull servants of God. Diodate carrieth it thus, These wicked watch-men are the chief occasion of Gods hatred, and of the rejection of his people, who are as it were his family. Luther, Wigandus, and others set this sence upon the whole verse. (taking the former part to be spoken of the good watch-men) Those ancient watch-men of Ephraim were joyned with my God, and wholly for him: but those at this day are a snare, &c. and if there be any yet left of the former stock, they have left off to do good, and are become hatefull, as Psal. 36. 2, 3. their iniquity is found to be hatefull. There are that render the words by way of exclamation thus, O rem odiosam & abominandam in domo Dei! Oh hideous and hatefull! oh how hath the devil bestirred him, to stir up such Seducers, to do so much mischief among Gods people!

There are that interpret these two Verses, not of false Prophets, but of the true, who were looked upon as fools and mad men, by the mad world; ever beside it self in point of salvation, &c. It is not for nought that Rivet saith, Hi duo versus jasus sunt intricati, these two verses are very intricate. And of this eight verse Luther saith, that the brevity thereof hath caused obscurity. Drusus also saith, Locus iste difficilior est quam vulgus existimat; This text is harder, then most men imagine.

Verse 9. They have deeply corrupted themselves, as in the dayes of Gibeah: ] The people are as bad as possible, shamelesly, lawlesly wicked: nothing better then those sonnes of Belial the men of Gibeah, that were sunk to sins bottom: totally transformed into sinnes image, extreemly flagitious, so that a worse people could hardly be found upon the face of the earth. As it was given in answer to a godly man who desired to know of God, why Phocas was set up for Emperour? because there could not be a worse man found, and that the sinnes of Christians required it, Lipsius maketh mention of one Tubulus (about Tullies time) who was so desperately wicked, ut ejus nomen non hominis sed vitij esse videretur, that his name seemed to be the name not of a man, but of wickednesse it self. Lo such were these men of Gibeah, Judg. 19. nothing behind Sodomites in sinne: as Samaria now was nothing behinde them, and is therefore fitly coupled with her sister Sodom, Ezek. 16. 46. The reason of all which is here given, their wicked watch-men: according to that, Esa. 3. 12. qui te ducunt, seducunt. They which lead thee, cause thee to erre: and again, Esa. 9. 16. The leaders of this people cause them to erre; and they that are led of them are destroyed. It is thought that the Gibeah here mentioned, and to which this verse relateth, was the same which Josh. 21. 17. is called Gebab; which was a city given to the Priests, who being lords and owners of the Town, were (probably) the ring-leaders of the rest in that matchlesse villany; and so were of the number of those worst of sinners, who knowing the judgment of God (that they which commit such things are worthy of death) not onely do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them.

Rom. 1. 32.

Now will he remember their iniquities, and visit their sinnes. ] Now that they had filled up the measure of their fathers sinnes, Matth. 23. 32. nay sought to outsinne them, Et puduit non esse impudentes (as Austin saith somewhere) God would forbear them no longer. Let this be noted, by such as being told of their vile and vicious practises, plead that they do but as their forefathers did. Certainly if the times be as ill as they were heretofore, they are even for that cause much the worse; and God will the sooner remember and visit, pay wicked men for the new and the old. See chap. 8. 13.

Verse 10. I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness, ] Where any thing is good and sweet, because in a barren and solitary place. Hence they are said to have sucked honey out of the rock, Deut. 32. 13. that is, water as sweet as honey, because in such necessity. The Vine and Fig-tree are of so great account, as that Joshua in his parable brings in the trees, offering the soveraigne power to them, Judg. 9. 10, 12. To these two noble and usefull trees, and to their most seasonable and comfortable fruit doth the Lord here compare Israel: to grapes in the wilderness, and to the first-ripe figs, qua delicatis in summo sunt precio, which are counted great dainties. Our Saviour came with great desire to the fig-tree, Matth. 21. 19. his soul desired the first ripe fruits: and though they had not been full ripe, he could have been glad of them, even of the first-fruits of the fig-tree, at her first-time, as it is here, in primordio ejus, of those untimely fruits which the fig-tree casteth when shaken of a mighty winde, Rev. 6. 12. By this expression then is set forth Gods dear and free love to Israel, when he found him in a desert land, in the wast howling wilderness: he compassed him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye, Deut. 32. 10. All this and more he did for them, ex m. ro motu, out of pure and unexcited love, according to his own heart, according to the good pleasure of his will, he loved them because he loved them, Deut. 7. 7, 8. and 10. 14. in the wilderness especially, where they grieved him fourty years together, and tempted him ten times, Num. 14. 22. But God had said of Israel, He is my sonne, even my first-born, Exod. 4. 22. and so, higher then the kings of the earth, Psal. 89. 27. He had chosen him for his love, and now loved him for his choice. This sonne sonne of his he called out of Egypt, to keep a feast to the Lord in the wilderness, Exod. 5. 1. that is to serve him, Exod. 4. 23. to serve him acceptably, Heb. 12. 28. to set up his pure worship according to his own precript in the Mount, Exod. 25. 40. This was altogether as delightfull to God, as grapes in the wilderness are to a wearied parched traveller. And this the rather, because it was the 'kindnesse of their youth, the love of their espousals, which was as the first ripe of the fig, in the first time, at the first bearing: for the fig-tree bears twice a year: and the Egyptian fig-tree seven times a year, saith Solinus. Now the first-ripe-fruits are Ladies-meat, we say, or longing-meat. Gods soul doth even long after the first-ripe-fruits, Mich. 7. 1. as we prize even Nettle-buds, when they bud out first. If the Vine do but flourish, the Pomgranates bud, the tender grapes appear, Cant. 6. 11. & 7. 12. he will pour his spirit upon the seed, and his blessing upon the buds, Esay 44. 3. Hee liketh not those arbores autumnales, Jude 12. that bud at latter end of harvest: he made choice of the Almond-tree, Ier. 1. 11. because it blossometh first. So he called for first-fruits of the trees, and of the earth, in the sheaf, in the threshing-floor, in the dough, in the loaves: yea for ears of corn dried by the fire, and wheat beaten out of the green ears, Lev. 2. 14. to signifie how pleasant unto him is the primrose of our age.

but they went to Baal-peor, ] See Num. 25. 3. with the Note. Heb. they went in to him, which obscœnum quid & turpe denotat, as Gen. 16. 2. so Psal. 106. 28. They joynd themselves also to Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead, that is, sacrifices offered to the infernall Gods, or to Pluto the Devil (whom the Phœnici-ans called Morb, or Death) in the behalf of the dead.

and separated themselves, ] Heb. Nazarized themselves, ad religiôsè colendum: they became Votaries, to that shame, ] i. e. to that shamefull and abominable Idoll, that blushtfull Priapus, qui referebat viri pudendi speciem: and whose worshippers are brought in saying, Nos, pudore pulso, stamus sub love, coeleis apertis, &c. Βορβορέμβια ταύτη λέγοντες, we rake a dunghill (as Cyril speaks in like case) in discoursing of such dunghill-deities. Isidor interpreteth Baal-peor, simulachrum ignominie, an image of ignominy: and most sure it is, that idolaters, left off their Idols in deepest dangers, shall be ashamed of their expectation of help from them, Ier. 3. 19. and 11. 13.

and their abominations were according as they loved. ] Or, according as they listed, so some interpret it: or, according as they loved the Moabitish women more or lesse, so they worshipped their Idols: Solomon did the same. Or, they became as detestable as their very Idols, which they loved and worshipped. Or, I abominate them as much now as ever I loved them before: and how much that was he had shewed in the beginning of the Verse. Now there is nothing that goeth more to Gods heart, then the losse of his love upon an unthankfull people. He had healed their back-slidings in Egypt (where they had worshipped Idols, Ezek. 16.) hee had loved them freely, and immensely. Now therefore that they should so slight such a love, to go after such a shame, and so to undo themselves for ever; this was monstrous ingratitude, this was an unfufferable injury.

Nier. Epist. 7.

Verse 11. As for Ephraim, their glory shall flee away as a bird, ] Heb. Ephraim by a Nominative absolute. Or, O Ephraim, as with a sigh, or a shriek, for grief and horror of their ensuing calamity, exilium, excidium, & exitium. The Lord afflicts not willingly, nor grieves the children of men, Lam. 3. 33. It goes as much against the heart with him, as against the hair with us; witnesse this pathetically expression. See also chap. 11. 8. Their glory, that is, their God, as in the next verse. Or, their children, as in the next words. They worshipped Baal-peor for fruitfulness; but it shall not do: For either they shall be punished with barrennesse, or else with a luctuosa fecunditas (as Hierom saith of Lata, who buried many children) a dolefull fruitfulness.

Plut. in vit.

their glory shall flee away as a bird, ] Suddenly, swiftly, irrecoverably, shall their numerous posterity (which they looked upon as themselves multiplied and eternized) be cut off, be snatched away by the hand of death: so that (Rachel like) they shall refuse to be comforted, because her children were not: or as Cratisclea in Plutarch, who seeing her dear children slain before her, and her self ready to be served in like sort, uttered onely this word, Quò pueri, estis profecti? Poor children, what's become of you?

From

From the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. ] In all these states shall the curse follow them close: Either they shall not conceive, or die in the womb, or be stifled in the birth: they shall all prove scabods. It is God that gives strength to conceive, as he did to Sarah, Hannah, Elizabeth, &c. It is he that formeth us in the womb, and that by the book, Psal. 139. 15; 16. and preserveth us there, Job 10. 8. when neither we can shift for our selves, nor our parents provide for us. It is he that taketh us thence, Psal. 22. 9, 10. as a nurse or midwife doth the new-born babe. It is he that keepeth us in the cradle, and in childhood, when we are subject to a thousand deaths and dangers: for puerilitas est periculum pelagus: it is a just wonder that any childe attains to maturity. But if wicked mens children do so, as oft they do, (for they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes, Psal. 17. 14.) yet it follows,

Verse 12, Though they bring up children, yet will I bereave them, ] If his children be multiplied, it is for the sword; and his off-spring shall not be satisfied with bread, Job 27. 14. This was fulfilled in Ahabs seventy sonnes, beheaded together, 2 King. 10. 6. in whom he had vainly promised himself the establishment of his house, which God had threatned to root out: In Iehu and his posterity after the fourth generation: Those Romans that went out against the enemy at the Porta scelerata (as it was thereupon called) and never returned again: and that Eckins Raschachius a German Captain, at the siege of Buda, Anno 1541. whose sonne a valiant young Gentleman, being got out of the army without his fathers knowledge, bare himself so gallantly in fight against the enemy, in the fight of his father and the Army, that he was highly commended of all men, and especially of his father, that knew him not at all. Yet before he could clear himself, he was compassed in by the enemy, and valiantly fighting, slain. Raschachius exceedingly moved with the death of so brave a man, ignorant how near he touched himself, turning about to the other Captains said, This worthy Gentleman, whatsoever he be, is worthy of eternall commendation, and to be most honourably buried by the whole Army. As the rest of the Captains were with like compassion approving his speech, the dead body of the unfortunate sonne rescued, was presented to the most miserable father; which caused all them that were there present to shed tears. But such a sudden and inward grief surprized the aged father, and struck so to his heart, that after he had stood a while speechlesse, with his eyes set in his head, he suddenly fell down dead.

Yea, wo also to them when I depart from them, ] This is indeed worse then all the rest: this is that only evil spoken of by Ezekiel: hell it self is nothing else but a separation from Gods presence, with the ill consequents thereof: and the tears of hell are not sufficient to bewail the losse of that beatificall vision. How miserable was Cain, when cast off by God? Saul, when forsaken of him? David, when deserted though but for a few moneths? Iob for a few years, Suidas saith seven? While God was graciously with him, and prospered him, he was Iobab, (that same mentioned Gen. 36. 34, as some think) but when under sense of Gods absence, contracted into Iob. See the like, Gen. 17. 5. Ruth. 1. 20. His desertion was far more comfortable then Dauids: it was probationall. onely, but Dauids penall. for chastisement of some way off wickednesse. O lay we hold upon God (as the spouse doth upon her beloved) and cry as the Prophet did; Lord leave us not. If he seem to be about, and his back be turned, cry aloud after him; as the blinde man in the Gospel did, till Iesus stood: set up thy note, as Micha did after his lost idols, Judg. 18. 24. Ye have taken away my Gods, saith he, and what have I more? as if he should have said, I esteem all that you have left me as nothing, now that my gods are gone. Jerusalem the joy of the whole earth pleased not Absalom, unless he might see Dauids face. God was no sooner gone from Miriam, but the leprosie appeared in her face. But of this before.

Jer. 14. 9.

Verse 13, Ephraim, as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: ] And therefore pleaseth himself as not forsaken of God. But He may be angry enough with those that yet outwardly prosper: As he was with the old world buried in security: with Sodom, who had fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idleness: with the land of Shinar (where Babel was built, Gen. 11.) fruitfull beyond credulity, as Herodotus and Pliny testifie, with Tyrus a maritime and magnificent city, planted in a pleasant place.

place, in the very heart of the Sea; as Venice is at this day, mediâ insuperabilis undâ, environed with her embracing Neptune, to whom (as the ceremony of her throwing a ring into the Sea implies) she marrieth her self with yearly Nuptials, and hath for her Motto, Nec fluctu, nec flatu movetur, Nor windes, nor waves can stir her. Of the pomp, pride, and populoufnesse of Tyrus read Ezech. 26, 27, & 28. chapters. Lo such a one was Ephraim, when ripe for ruine, near to an utter downfall. What can be more fair and flourishing then a corn-field, or vineyard, a little afore the harvest, the vintage? Physicians say, that the uttermost degree of bodily health is next unto sicknesse. Glasse, or other metals cast into the fire, shine most, when ready to melt and run. This was Tyrus case, this was Ephraims, pleasantly planted, but marked out for destruction: as a Carpenter cometh to a Wood, and with his Ax marketh out the fairest trees for felling. Ephraim is the worse because he seeth Tyrus yet prosper. But God will take that from heathen Tyrus, that he will not take from Ephraim: and the sun-shine of prosperity doth but ripen the sins of them both for divine vengeance.

They shall bring forth children to the murderers.] As to Gods executioners: and so shew themselves not parents, but parricides: because they betray their children (as Babel did, by her idolatry, Psal. 137. 8. and Esay 13. 8.) into the hands of the enemy. Wherein they are more cruell then that false School-master in Italy (mentioned by Livy and Florus) that brought forth his scholars (the flower of the Nobility and Gentry there) to Hannibal: who if he had not been more mercifull then otherwise, they had all been murdered. But what shall we say of such wretched parents, as bring forth children to that old man-slayer the devil? and how shall such undone children curse their carelesse parents in hell, throughout all eternity? If the Lord also could say of those poor children that were sacrificed to Moloch (the Chaldee paraphrase understands this Text of those children) Thou hast slain my children, and delivered them, to cause them to passe thorow the fire for them (namely for the images of the foresaid idols) Ezek. 16. 27. what will he say, or rather what will he not say, to those bloody parents, that carry their children with them, to Satans slaughter-house?

Verse 14. Give them O Lord: what wilt thou give?] This question implieth abundance of affection in the Prophet, praying for this forlorn people devoted to destruction. It is the property of gracious spirits, to be more sensible of, and more deeply affected with the calamities that are coming upon the wicked, then those wicked ones themselves are: as Daniel was for Nebuchadnezzar, whose dream hee had interpreted, and as Habakkuk was for the Chaldeans, whose destruction hee had fore-prophecied, Hab. 3. 16. Hoseah likewise (out of great commiseration of Ephraims direfull and dreadfull condition) sets himself to pray for them; though himself seems set at a stand, and in a manner non-plust, that he cannot well tell what to ask for them. God once made a fair offer to a foul sinner, even to Ahaz, that sturdy stigmatick, Esay 7. 11. Ask thee a signe of the Lord thy God: ask it either in the depth, or in the height above. But Ahaz said, (churlishly enough) I will not ask, neither will I try the Lord, ver. 12. he would none of Gods kindnesse, which yet the Lord there heapeth upon him verse 14. that where sin abounded, grace might superabound. Had our Prophet had but half such an offer, or any the least such encouragement, oh how gladly would he have embraced it, how hastily would he have catch at it, as those Syrians did at Ahabs kind words, 1 King. 20. 33. But he, considering the severity and certainty of Gods judgments denounced against them, vers. 12, 13. and being much amazed thereat, sets himself to intercede and make request for his deplored countrey men; as Samuel did for Saul rejected by God, 1 Sam. 16. 1. as Paul did for the obdurate Jews, Rom. 9. 3. And because he saw that he could not obtain of the impartiall Judge of the world, to let go such an impenitent people altogether unpunished, he begs for them, that of two evils they may suffer the least: and rather bring forth no children at all, or children that may die as soon as born (this had been threatned vers. 11, 12.) then bring forth children to the murderer: It being the greatest misery that can befall a tender hearted parent, to see his dear children butchered before his eyes, as Zedekiah and Mauricians the Emperour did: and before them both the king of Edom, whose eldest sonne, was by the king of Moab sacrificed upon the wall, in his fathers sight, 2 King. 3. 27. Amos 2. 1.

Dan. 4.

Thus Rabbi Kimchi giveth the sense of this text : Give Lord, what thou wilt give ? viz. that they may suffer in the womb, or at least in their infancy, that which they should otherwise suffer by the enemies sword : Confer, Jer. 20. 18. Luk. 23. 23. Eccles. 4. 2. Job. 3. The prophet knew well that God is never so bitterly bent against a people or person, but that something he will yeeld to faithful and fervent prayer, Mat. 24. 20.

Vers. 15. All their wickednesse is in Gilgal,] We have had the prophets prayer : Followes now the Lords answer in this and the following verse, where we have the former threats repeated, to shew that God was unchangeably resolved upon their ruine ; and that first for their Idolatry, secondly, for their other vile practises, thirdly, for the apostasie of their Princes : All this here. Their Idolatry was the worse, because committed at Gilgal, where God had done much for their forefathers : See the Note above on Chap. 4. 15. The quality of the place addes much to the greatness of the sinne, Esay. 26. In the land of uprightness they will deal unjustly, Esay. 25. 10. the faithfull city is become an harlot, Esay. 1. 21. Esay. 5. 7. he looked for judgement, but behold a scab, The devil desireth to set up himself in such places, as have been formerly eminent for Gods sincere service, as Gilgal once was, 1 Sam. 10. 8. and 11. 15. for the ark of the covenant was there, which these Idolaters had not. So in the holy land, (as they still call it) which is possessed by Mahometans, and Papists : So Wittenberg, where Luther first began to reform, is now deformed by divers errors and heresies, as Polanus observeth. Wilkinson against the Familists reports the like of Colchester in Essex.

For there I hated them,] Angry I was with them before, and grieved for their other misdoings : but their idolatry hath enraged me with an holy hatred of them ; and that there, where I shewed greatest love to their forefathers. God thinks the worse of such places wherein Idolaters rest and roost : like as he thinks the better of the towns and houses, where his faithful servants inhabit, as Esay. 49. 16. their walls are ever before him.

For the wickednesse of their doings I will drive them out,] Revenge and expulsion is the next effect of hatred. There is a great deal of other wicked doings, where idolatry (that wickednesse with a witness as it is here stiled) is set up. Surely of this abominable thing we may well say as Saint James doth of discord ; where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work, Jam. 3. 16. But God will not endure such doings in his house : David would not in his, Psal. 101. Solomon entertained Jeroboam into his house & service, because he saw the young man was meet for the work, 1 King. 11. 28. but he proved a mischief to and against his house. Many now adays scruple not to entertain and harbour such as are serviceable, though otherwise their religion be either a popish puppet and calf worship, or a flat irreligion : These have little of God in them.

I will drive them out of mine house, saith he, I will love them no more,] A fearful sentence, like that Jer. 16. 13. I will shew them no favour : this was worse to them, then their captivity there threatened. Ephraim had a great deal of outward peace and prosperity, but love they had none ; because none of those graces that flow from election, and accompany salvation. These are Gods love-tokens, that all must court : But oh ! take heed (saith one) if thou add'st any more to thy wickednesses, lest that this dreadful sentence be pronounced in heaven against thee, I will love thee no more, Heb. I will adde no more to love thee.

All their Princes are revolvers,] Col sarehem forerim, an elegancy past englishing. The Princes were all rebellious and refractory, uncounsellable, unperfuadable (as the Seventy render it) like that king of Scotland that would seldom ask counsel, but never follow any : so wedded he was to his own will. Elati superbiâ volebant superiores esse verbo, saith Luther upon this text. Jeroboam-like they would stretch out their hand against a prophet, that should crie against their altars, and deal plainly with them, as Hosea here doth : testifying to their faces that they were all Apostates, and made Israel sin. Princes should be the Lord-keepers of both tables of the Law ; as it was written upon the sword of Charles the Great : But when they are

Vers. 16. Ephraim is smitten,] As a tree that hath received a deadly wound, or that hath the bark pulled off it, so that the sap cannot find the way to the branches: or that is blasted, as the fig-tree in the Gospel was by Christs curse; and as a vine smitten by great hailstones, and beaten down to the ground. The Lord shall smite Israel, saith another Prophet, as a reed is shaken in the water, and he shall root up Israel, &c. 1 King. 14. 15. root and branch in one day.

The root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit,] The root of the righteous shall not be moved, Prov. 12. 3. The root of the matter is found in me, saith Job. Chap. 19. 28. the holy seed shall be the substance thereof. Esay. 6. 13. as a teyl-tree, and as an oak, whose substance is in them, ib. The Duke of Florence gave for his ensigne a great tree with many spreading boughes, one of them being cut off with this posie, Vno avulso non deficit alter Aureus. But it is otherwise with the ungodly; as it was with Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. 14. nay, worse; for not so much as a stump of their roots is left in the earth, Vers. 15. but they are written in the earth, Jer. 17. 13. written childlesse, Jer. 22. 30. their root is dried up, the parents shall perish; they shall bear no fruit, beget no children, which are the fruit of the womb, Dent. 28. 11, 18. Luk. 1. 42. Doegs doom shall befall them, Psal. 52. 5. God shall destroy thee for ever; he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.

Yea, though they bring forth,] as Abah did seventy sonnes, after that God had threatened his utter extirpation, following the work of generation so much the rather; see the note on verse 13.

Yet I will slay,] for it is God that lets in, and sets on the enemy; it is he that killeth and maketh alive, 1 Sam. 2. 6.

Even the beloved fruit of their womb,] Heb. their desires, or their desireable ones, their dearest children, called by Tully also his desideria. The Latines seem to have their filium a son, from quidam beloved; there is an Ocean of love in a fathers heart: though the more he loveth, the lesse he is loved sometimes, (as David by Abisalom) and is sure if he belong to God, to be crossed in his earthly Idol. Children are certain cares but uncertain comforts: they may prove, as Augustus his three children did, whom he called his three ulcers or cankers, &c.

Vers. 17. My God wil cast them away,] My God, not their God, for they are cast-awayes and Apostates: see the like, 1 John. 5. 17. and learn to stick to God the closer, when others start from him; & to secure our own interest in a general defection, by siding with God, and subscribing as here the prophet doth, to his perfect righteousness in the rejection and destruction of reprobates.

Wil cast them away] with disdain and detestation, as vile and execrable, He will do it, saith the prophet here, not without a great deal of grief, as finding that God was fully resolved, and would not alter. The eternity of Israel will not lie, nor repent; for he is not a man, that he should repent, saith Samuel to Saul, that cast away and it is very dreadful: as indeed it is for any wicked men to have such as have interest in God, to declare against them; sith the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, Psal. 25. 14. and their sentence is not to be slighted. Gods messengers especially, out of their acquaintance with their masters proceedings, can foresee and foretell a punishment.

Because they did not hearken unto him,] Hac notabilis est sententia, This is a notable sentence, saith Luther upon the text; and worthy to be written upon all our walls and windows. Death came into the world by the ear, so must life: for it is, Hear and your soules shall live; and they that will not hear the instruction of life, are doomed to destruction, as were Elis sonnes, 1 Sam. 2. 25. and Amaziah, 2 Chro. 25. 16. A heavy ear is a singular judgement, Esay. 6. 10. an uncircumcised ear a forerunner of ruine, Jer. 6. 10, 11. O pray God to pull off that filthy foreskin, and to give us an hearing ear, (that way to wisdom) an understanding heart, such as Solomon begged, 1 King 3. 9. Pray, that he would bore our ears, as Psal. 40. 6. and make the bore big enough, that we may not onely hear, but hearken; listen as for life, hear and give ear, be not proud, for the Lord hath spoken it, Jer. 13. 15. when God hath spoken once, let us hear it twice, as David did, Psal. 62. 11. he preached over the Sermon again to himself at home. We must do with the words directions, directions, as we do with oyl to a stiffe joynt; rub and chafe them on our hearts by deep and frequent meditation and prayer: lest else we hear with these in the text.

Because they did not hearken unto him, they shal be wanderers among the nations,] Heb. Nodedim: Cains curse shall befall them. A fugitive and a vagabond shal I be upon the earth, but could not wander so wide as to misse of hell; nor flie so far as from his own evil conscience. Lo, this is the case of these wandering Jewes, a dis-fected and despised nation exiled out of the world by a common consent of all people, till God turn again their captivity as the streams in the south, till he gather the out-casts of Israel.

Gen. 4. 12.

CHAP. X.

Verf. 1. Israel is an empty vine,] Heb. an emptying vine; losing her fruit, and so deceiving the owner. How can Israel but be empty of all good, of all fruits of the spirit, when he will not hearken unto God, nor dwell under the droppings of a powerful ministry? when he is cast off by God, who fills his people with the fruits of righteousness: and is not a wilderness a land of darkness unto them? Jer. 2. 31. when his root is dried up, Chap. 9. 10. and all his juyce and strength runs out into leaves, so that is (frondosa vitis as the vulgar renders it) a leavy vine; such as are our profligate professors, and carnal gospellers, and such as was Saint James his solifidian, that empty fellow, as he calleth him, Chap. 2. 20. when, lastly, the holy Spirit (those two golden pipes, Zach. 4.) empties, not into his candle-stick the golden oyles of all precious graces, as from two blessed olive branches? The Vine and the olive (two of the best fruit-trees) grow best together, saith Melancthon. If Israels heart be divided from God, as vers. 2. and hath not his fruit found in him, as Chap. 14. 8. what marvel if he prove (as Nabum, 3. 10.) empty and void, and waste; and though (as verse 2.) the Lord turn away the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel: for the emptiers have emptied them out, and married their vine branches?

Chap. 9. 17.

He beareth fruit to himself,] As he beareth fruit in and from himself (like the ivy, which though it clasp about the oak, and sometimes kills it, yet brings forth all its berries, by virtue of its own root) so he beareth fruit for himself, or to himself. Profit, pleasure, and preferment is his Trinity: and corrupt self is all these in unity. He fasteth to himself, as those hypocrites, Zach. 7. 5. he prays, hears, confers, giveth alms, &c. out of sinful self-love. In all that he doth sibi soli velificatur, he seeks his own ends onely; as the Eagle, when he flieth highest, hath his eye on his prey. In parabola ovis capras suas querit: like the fish in the Gospel, either he is dumb, or hath nothing but silver in his mouth, he is a notorious self-seeker, he bears fruit to himself: he sacrificeth to himself as Sejanus did. As Prometheus is fabled to have stolen fire from Jupiter; so the false Israelite would cozen God of heaven, if he could tell how. Spir confessed that he used prayer onely, as a bridge to bring him to heaven; and therefore he despaired of acceptance; as well he might: for how should God relish such sorry hedge-fruits? how should he say of such clusters of Gomorrab, Destroy it not, for there is a blessing in it? The good soul, as she bears all her fruit in Christ, Ioh. 15. 2. so she keeps all her fruit for him, Cant. 7. 13. and cries out, Propter te Domine, propter te. As all his springs are in her; so all she has and is, is for him; and if she had more and better, she could bereem it him. Hence it is, that when he comes into his garden (upon her invitation) Cant. 4. 16. to eat his pleasant fruits, he gathereth his myrrhe with his spice, he eateth his honey with his honey-comb, as it were crust and crumb together, Chap. 5. 1. He takes in good part the better and worse-performed services; he passeth by failings in the manner, where the heart is upright, for the main: wicked men present also some kind of fruit, (as the oak bears some kind of apples and acorns, but they are not mans meat: swine indeed will haunch them up; so the devil likes well enough of these self-fruits) but they make not to Gods palat. Dolice res est Spiritus Dei, our oaken apples will not down with him. Self must be strained out, and God set up, that ye may be called Trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he alone may be glorified,

Esa 61. 3. being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God, Phil. 1. 11.

according to the multitude of his fruit, he hath increased the altars, ] juxta ubertatem, exuberant simulachris, saith the Vulgar elegantly; but yet short of the Original, where there is a dainty Agnomination, and a double Polyptron. For the sense: the Prophet as he had accused Israel of emptiness, and selfishness, so hee doth here of unthankfulness, in abusing Gods plenty to the promoting of idolatry; as if God had hired them to be wicked. See the like before, chap. 2. 8. with the Note: and consider how far against the ingenuity of a Christian it is, to be least for God, when he hath most from him: when his own turn is served, then to turn his back from the Author of all his good: to do as the Moon, that getteth furthest off the Sun, when she is fullest of his light.

according to the goodness of his land, ] Idolaters desire to be where there are good lands, fruitful fields: that they may lavish upon their Mawmets; that they may so beautifie, or (as the Hebrew word here is) bonifie their images, as Jezebel did her head with tires and brave dresses, 2 King. 9. 30. Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another God, or, that endow another God, and give gifts to him, as that Text may be rendred, Psal. 16. 4. What excessive cost the superstitious papists bestow upon their idols, or images, (which are one and the same, as we see here) and especially upon their Lady of Loretto, the Jesuite Turfellinus hath set forth to the world. And why they so much desire and endeavour to recover England (praying for it, as is to be seen written on the gates of their Colledges, Jesu, Jesu converte Angliam: fiat, fiat) the reason is evident: it is a good land, and would easily yeeld them goodly images, stately altars, &c. England was wont to be called, the Popes asse, and his puteus inexhaustus, his pit of treasure, that could never be drawn dry: he was wont to say, that he could never want money, so long as hee could hold a pen in his fingers, to write to England. He received here-hence yearly, above nine tunne of gold. Now, according to what they received, they expended upon their images. What a shame is it then for true worshippers, that there is no proportion between their increases for God, and their encreases from God: that those that are rich in this world, are not rich in good works: that they lay not by for pious and charitable uses, according as God hath blessed them, 1 Cor. 16. 2. but that they should be the richer the harder: as children that have their mouths full, and both hands full, yet will part with none, but spill it rather. It is observed, of men that grow very fat, that they have so much the lesse blood. And so the fatter many men are in their estates, the lesse blood, life, and spirits they have for God.

Verse 2. Their heart is divided, ] sc. From God; whose soul therefore is justly disjunct from them, Ier. 6. 8. They professed to worship the true God, and yet they transferred the honour due to him alone upon dumb-idols: they halted between two, and would needs serve two Lords: but God would none of that. "Be the gods of the Heathen good-fellows, saith One, the true God is a jealous God, and will not part stakes with another: The double-minded man is not for his service: for he will be served truly, that there be no halting; and totally, that there be no halving. Good therefore and worthy of all acceptation is the counsell of St. James to such, chap. 4. 8. Cleanse your hands ye sinners: and purifie your hearts ye double-minded, or ye cloven-hearted. Out with the corruption that cleaveth to your hearts: and then there will be a constancy and evenness in your mindes, mouthes, and manners: which is absolutely necessary to such as draw nigh to God in holy duties, and the contrary abominable, Esa 29. 13.

Now shall they be found faulty, ] Sinners against their own souls, procurers of their own ruth, and ruine. And this they shall so clearly be convinced of (as afflictio dat intellectum, smart makes wit) that they shall cry out with Josephs brethren, We are verily guilty, Gen. 42. 21. and conscience awakened shall answer as Renben in the next verse, Spake I not unto you saying, Do not sin? (O do not this abominable thing) and yet would not hear? Did not the Prophets foretell you what would be the fruit of your idolatries? did they not even slit up your hearts with the sacrificing knife of Gods word, (sharper then any two-edged sword) and lay all your evil thoughts naked and open, or dissected, quartered, and cleft in the back-bone

(as the Apostles word signifieth, Heb. 4. 13.) but ye would not then be convinced of all, and falling down upon your face worship God; as 1 Cor. 14. 24, 25? Now you are found faulty, or guilty, and cry peccavi: or now you are, that is, shortly ye shall be wasted and desolated, as some render it: or now shall they die, (so the Vulgar) shall they perish: how should they do otherwise whose heart (that seat of life) is cut in twain, and whom the jealous and just God will cut in twain; tearing their souls from their bodies by death, Satans slaughter-man, and appointing them their portion with hypocrites, Matth. 24. 51.

He shall break down their altars. ] He, that is God, my God, chap. 9. 17 for this Chapter is a continuation of that (though Gualter make it the beginning of Hosea's seventh Sermon) He, that excellent He, that Aph-Hu, 2 King. 2. 14. Even He, proved by five reasons to be one of Gods Attributes, by Mr. Weems in his Exposition of the Morall Law, Part. 1. pag. 162. Vide sis. Others render it thus: It shall break down their altars, Ipsum cor. It, that is, their Heart, (which indeed is the next Antecedent) and happy had it been for them, if their heart divided from their wickedness, had been active in breaking down their Altars in the Prophet Esaie's sense, chap. 27. 9. as a fruit of their true repentance: By this therefore, that is, by their affliction sanctified, shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit (and good fruit too) to take away his sinne: When (in testimony of his sound repentance, and self-aborrancy for former idolatry) he makes all the stones of the altar as chalk-stones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and images shall not stand up. But it appears not any where that Israel was so well-affected though grievously afflicted: that his divided heart prompted him to any such holy practise. Rather it brought ruine upon him, to the decolling of his altars, and spoiling of his images (which he so doted on, and delighted in) and so might well say to him, as Apollodorus the tyrants heart did, who dreamed one night that he was flea'd by the Scythians, and boyled in a caldron: and that his heart spake to him out of the kettle; Is it I that have drawn thee to all this: thou mayest thank me for all.

'Εγώ σε τή-

Verse 3. For now they shall say, We have no king, ] sc. to do us good: he is no better to us now, then a king of clouds: he cannot protect us, or deliver us out of the hands of our enemies. If we cry unto him, as she did, Help O king; he must needs answer as there, If the Lord do not help thee, whence I help thee? Vain is the help of man now that God sets against us. Feared him we have not, and now help us he will not. Eft ergo interrogatio negantium & desperantium, saith Rivet. This is the question, not of penitentiaries (as Lyra thinketh) but of such as despair, and deny that help can be had, either from God, whom they have slighted, or from their king, who is over-matched; as Asa was by the Ethiopians, when he came forth against them, with an Army of five hundred thousand, but was encountered by an Army of a thousand thousand, the biggest, I think, that we read of in the book of God, 2 Chron. 14. and was therefore fain to cry, Help us O Lord our God, for we rest in thee: and in thy Name, not in our own strength, we go against this multitude, ver. 11.

because we feared not the Lord, ] We trembled not at his word, as chap. 9. 17. and now it hath taken hold of us, Zech. 1. 6. See the Note. By our prophane-ness we have enraged God against us: by our creature-confidence, we have made him our enemy: and now, all too late, we acknowledge our impiety, we bewail our folly: for what should a king do to us? what can he do for us? more then weep over us, as Xerxes did over his Army? cry Alas, Alas, that great city Babylon, &c. as those kings her paramours, Rev. 18. 9, 10. wish they had never reigned as Adrian, &c. Once the cry of this people was, Nay, but we will have a king, and they had him: but no such great joy of him. After that again, they would have a king of their own choosing, Ieroboam I mean; and he proved a singular mischief to them, as did likewise all his Successors. They doted upon a king, and put their trust in Princes; but they soon found that in them there was no help, Psal. 146. 3. that they could not rescue them out of the punishing hands of the king of kings, the living God.

Felix si non

Verse 4. They have spoken words, ] Bubbles of words, great swelling words (as 2 Pet. 2. 18.) thereby thinking to bear down, and outface the Prophets, and the godly-

godly-party. They speake violent words, (as the Chaldee hath it) robustious words, as if they would yet carry it (though their king could not help them) by confederacies, and covenants, confirmed with oathes: holding that rule of the Presbyterianists for Gospel (as they say.)

Iura, perjura: secretum prodere noli:

And that maxime of Machiavel, that Religion it self (in contracts and covenants) should not be cared for; but onely the appearance, because the credit is an help, the use a cumber: but all these are but words, saith the Prophet, and those but winde: they shall do them no good, because without God.

Conventus? ventus: fœdera? verba mera.*

[Swearing falsely in making a covenant,] A foul businesse, whether it be understood of covenanting with God (whereof before) or with the Assyrian, with whom they broke, to ingratiate with So king of Egypt, 2 King. 17. How God plagueth perjurors, &c. covenant-breakers, see Zach. 5. 3. and Mal. 3. 5. with the Notes. He will appoint the sword to avenge the quarrell of his Covenant, Lev. 26. 25. as he did upon Jerusalem, not leaving there one stone upon another: upon those seven golden candlesticks, long since broken in pieces for their breach of covenant: upon Bohemiab, that seat of the first open and authorized Reformation, whatever will yet become of England, &c.

[thus judgement springeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field.] Heb. Of my field, where I have plowed and made long furrowes, fitted for good seed, wherein I looked for judgement, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a crie, Esay 5. 7. This root of bitterness, these stalks of hemlock (that venomous weed, full of deadly poyson) is bad any where, but worst of all, when found in Gods field, noted for an habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness, Jer. 31. 23. Where should a man look for justice, but where holiness is professed? sith primo precepto reliquorum omnium observantia precipitur, the second Table of the Law is included in the first: yea the keeping of all the ten is enjoined in the first commandement? Of Rome it was anciently said, that all the neighbouring cities were the better for her example of singular care to do justice. It should be so said of the city of God: where when judgement is turned into wormwood, and the fruit of righteousness into hemlock, as Amos 6. 12. Well it may grow till it be ripe in the field, but God will not suffer it to shed, to grow again, but cuts it up by a just and seasonable vengeance.

[Verse 5. The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear,] sc. When God shall break the necks of their altars, and spoil their images, as verse 2. They feared not God, by their own confession verse 3. therefore they are full of base fears, whereof the true fear of God would have freed them, Matth. 10. 28. Hee that feareth God needeth not fear any other thing, or person, Psal. 112. 7. but can say with David, My feet, that is, mine affections, stand in an even place, that is, in an equable tenour: Impavidum ferient ruina, I shall rest in the day of trouble, when he cometh up against the people, (saith holy Habakkuk, chap. 3. 16.) I shall rejoyce in the God of my salvation: when those that fear not God shall be at their wits end: yea they shall be mad for the sight of their eyes that they shall see, Deut. 28. 34.

[Because of the calves of Beth-aven,] Calves in the feminine gender, Shew-calves, by way of contempt and derision, as Hierom noteth: as Esay 3. 12. Women rule over them. The Jewes at this day look upon women as a lower creation, and suffer them not to enter into the Synagogue. As among the Turks they never go to Church, neither is there any reckoning made of their religion. The Heathens had the like conceits and expressions: O Phrygia, neque enim Phryges—Αχινδες εν ις—Αχινδες, &c. We cannot speak over-basely of idols: the Scriptures calleth them, excrements, Nothings, &c. Luther wonders that Jeroboam knowing how ill the people had sped with their golden Calf in the wilderness, should yet dare to set up two at Dan and Bethel (both here called Bethaven, or house of iniquity:) and a man might as well wonder, that having as great a miracle wrought before him in the drying up of his hand, as St. Paul at his conversion, yet was he no whit wrought upon. But if God strike not the stroke, if the Spirit set not in with the means, all's to no purpose. Who would think that men should ever be so void of reason, as to trust in that which cannot save it self from the enemies hands? as these calves of Beth-aven, and as the Papiſts breaden-god, brought into the field by the rebels of North-folk, in King Edward the fixths dayes: neither was there lacking masses, crosses, banners, candlesticks, with holy-bread, and holy-water plenty, to defend them from devils and all adversary power: which in the end, neither could help their friends, nor save themselves from the hands of their enemies: but est-foons both the consecrated god, and all the trumpery about him, was taken in a cart, and there lay all in the dust; Leaving to them a notable lesson of better experience, saith Mr. Fox, who relateth it.

For the people thereof] i. e. of the calf, to whom they had dedicated themselves; as the Moabites are called the people of Chemosh, Num. 21. 29. and Turks, Mahometans. For all people will walk every one in the name of his God; and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever; Mic. 4. 5.

Do mourn over it,] As those women wept for Tammuz, Ezech. 8. 14. that is, for Osiris king of Egypt, whose image they had adored, as those Rev. 18. wailed over that old whore, when they saw her a broyling; as Idolatrous Micah cried after his gods, Judg. 18. and as the people of the East-Indies in the Isle Zeylon, having an apes tooth which they had consecrated, gotten from them, mourned, and offered an incredible masse of treasure to recover it. Should not men then mourn after the sincere service of God, and hold it dear to their souls?

And the Priests thereof that rejoiced in it] Heb. the Chemarims, or Chimney-chaplaines, that were all black and sooty with the smoak of the sacrifices, and were therefore called Chemarim or Camilli, as affecting a black habite sanctimonie ergo; or having black brand-marks upon their bodies, in honour of their Idols, whereof these haply were the Hierophanta, or masters of the Ceremonies, and made a great gain thereof the ground of their joy: for it is utroque quia xpi Idm, gain so called; because it delights the heart.

though in another sense; yet they must needs be poor despicable deities, that fall into the enemies hands. The Ark indeed fell into the Philistines hands: but the Ark was not Gods, but onely a signe of his presence, which God suffered so to be taken, for a punishment to his people, and for a plague to his enemies, whom he smote in the hinder parts, and so put them to a perpetual reproach, Psal. 78. 66.

Ephraim shall receive shame] because they hoped and harped upon better things, Job. 6. 20. O pray, with David, that our hopes be not disappointed: that they make us not ashamed, as Paul speaketh; that they prove not as the spiders web, curiously framed but to catch flies onely; or as the childes hope, who catcheth at the shadow on the wall which he thinks he holds fast, or at the butterflie, which if he catch, he hath no such great catch of.

And Israel shall be ashamed of his own counsels] of their impolitick plots and practises, in dividing themselves from Dauids house, and setting up unwarranted worships, calling in forrain helps, &c. Their own counsels have cast them down, Job. 18. 7. because they were acted by false principles, and aymed at their own corrupt ends. They took counsel, but not of God; and covered with a covering, but not of his spirit, that they might adde sin to sin, Esay. 30. 1. They made not the Word the man of their counsel, as David did, Psal. 119. 24. neither prayed they

In a word, they perished by their own counsels, Hof. 11. 6. whereby they provoked God, and so were brought low, by their iniquity, Psal. 106. 43. and then they were ashamed of their own counsel, they saw themselves befooled by their carnal reason, and by that which they call Reason of State, which indeed is treason, unless it be seasoned with Justice and Religion.

Vers. 7. As for Samaria, her king is cut off, as the foam upon the waters,] An apt simile (whereof this prophet is full) Her king, (not her idols, as some sense it) though gotten into Samaria, a strong city, so well victualled and fortified, as to hold out a siege of three years continuance, yet shall be cut off, or silenced as Chap. 4. 7. as the foam upon the waters, bulle vanida, more weak then water, whereof it ariseth, and whereby it is wherried away, and cannot resist: or, as a bubble blown up by every small wind, and as easily blown out again; it no sooner appears but it disappears. Lo such are the greatest kings and kingdoms, when God taketh them in their wickedness. He cuts off the spirits of Princes, Psal. 76. 12. he slips them off, (so the Hebrew is) as one would slip off a flower between ones fingers; or as one would slip off a bunch of grapes. The kingdoms of the earth are like foam upon the waters. 1. For their seeming brightnesse. 2. For their great eminence. 3. For their instability and inability to resist. 4. For their sudden fall, and disappearance. The Turkish Empire (which hath swallowed up so many glorious Empires and renowned kingdoms) laboureth with nothing more then the weightiness of it self: and shall shortly be cut off as foam, and live no otherwise then by fame, as others now do: though for the present, it be no whit inferiour, in greatness, and strength to the greatest Monarchies that ever yet were upon the face of the earth; the Roman Empire onely excepted.

The vessels that held the sin-offering, if made of earth, they were to be broken; if of brasse, or other metalls, to be purged with fire: as one day the earth and visible heavens also shall be for the defilement that mans sinne hath set upon them.

they shall say to the mountains, Cover us,] This they shall say out of the sense and terrour of Gods just judgements driving them to desperation. --- tellus prima dehiscat, &c. Aristides commendeth Themistocles for this, that he never was so perplexed by any evil occurrence, as to wish that the earth would swallow him up quick, or to pronounce the dead happy. Rivet well observeth here, that Indea, as it was full of hills and rocks, so they were wont to dig themselves therein caves and denes, wherein to hide in time of danger. To these David oft repaired, and so secured himself from Saul. And to these he alludeth when he calleth God his Rock, Psal. 18. 2. and the Rock of his refuge, Psal. 94. 22. And of these places of security Iosephus writeth, describing the forme of them. Now when they were in those holes of the hills, and were distressed by the enemy there, what wonder though they said to the mountains, fall upon us, cover us bury us alive, crush us to pieces, grinde us to powder, rather then that we fall into the bloody fingers of these merciless monsters; who will put us haply to a lingering death, kill us peecemeal, as Tiberius did those he was angry with: and as the Canibals of America, when they take a prisoner, feed upon him alive, and by degrees, to the unutterable aggravation of his horreur and torment. Our Saviour foretold his disciples, that at the last destruction of Jerusalem, men should crie out to the mountains on this manner:

And so shall the Antichristian rout also do one day, Rev. 6. 16. They that would not worship the Lamb, shall finde him a Lion: those that would not cast away their transgressions, but faced the heavens, shall run into the rocks to hide them; those that would not aspire to eternity, shall despair of mercy; those that would not lift up their eyes to the everlasting mountains, from whence comes help, shall now in vain tire the deaf mountains, with hide us, help us. Now what can the mountains do more then give an eccho to such help us; for they need help also: the wrath of God is upon the creature, &c.

Verse 9. O Israel thou hast sinned from the dayes of Gibeah, ] Or, pra diebus worse then in the dayes of Gibeah. What those dayes were, see chap. 9. 9. and Judg. 19. when they were, is not so certain: but probably, before the time of the Judges, and soon after Joshuah's death: for Jebus, or Jerusalem, was not yet taken, Judg. 19. with chap. 1. and Phineas was yet alive and ministred before the Lord, chap. 20. 28. and was one of those Elders that out-lived Joshuah, who had seen all the great works of the Lord, which he did for Israel, Judg. 2. 7. so that these dayes of Gibeah, were very ancient: and Israels sinne the worse, because from those dayes: and yet more, because above, or beyond those dayes. God made use of your forefathers to punish that great sin: and yet you continue to be more vile and vitious then they were, that were so punished by your forefathers: Neither are ye at all warned by their harmes: which is a just both preface and desert of your downfall. Alierius perditio tua sit cautio. Exemplo alicuius qui sapit, ille sapit.

there they stood. ] Who stood? either the men of Gibeah stood stoutly to it: and slew in two severall battles fourty thousand. Or, there stood the men of Israel, and their battle did not overtake the children of iniquity: not so overtake them at first, but that they were twice beaten by them: All which notwithstanding, they stood it out, and prevailed at last: but so shall not you, sith it is in my desire, and decree, verse 10. to order it otherwise, and utterly to destroy you at once. Non surget hic afflictio.

Verse 10. It is in my desire that I should chastise them, ] That is, I am unchangeably resolved, and fully bent upon't, to carry them captive and enslave them to their enemies: wherein they shall finde that they have to do with God, and not with man; and that it is I that binde them, though I make use of the Affyrians to that purpose. Luther renders it, Valde cupido eos castigabo, exceeding desirously will I chastise them. O the venomous nature of sin, that maketh the mercifull God to desire and to delight in mens miseries: to take comfort in their punishments, Ezek. 5. 13, 15. to laugh at their destruction, Prov. 1. And although he bear long with mens evil manners, yet he beareth them as a burden, whereof he desireth to be eased, Esay. 1. 24. as a servitude whereof he desireth to be freed, Esay 43. 24. as a pain, not inferiour to that of a travelling woman: and albeit he bite in his pains, as it were, for a time, yet hear him what he saith, Esay 42. 14. I have long time holden my peace, I have been still and refrained my self; now will I cry like a travelling woman: I will destroy and devour at once.

The enemies shall not be moved to pity the poor Israelites, when tired with hard labour: but shall make them plow like bealts, giving them no rest till they have even wearied and worn them out. This is Polanus his interpretation: who further admonisheth us, as oft as we behold, or think upon the yoking of oxen for the plow, that wee likewise bethink us of the miserable condition of such poor Christians, as are slaves to Turks, and Tartars, and other enemies, who binde them indeed in their two furrows. Neither can I here passe by Tillies cruelty at Magdeburgh in Germany: where after twenty thousand persons at least put to the sword, and the Town burned down, his souldiers committed all manner of ravages, all the countrey over: Ladies, Gentlewomen and others, like beasts, they yoked and coupled together, leading them into the woods to ravish them; and such as resisted, they stripped naked, whipt them, cropt their ears, and so sent them home again. The Irish cruelties unnameable, might here be instanced, O quam durum, O quam tristem serviunt illi servitutem! See Mr. Clarks relation, The words may be read, They shall binde them together.

Verse 11. And Ephraim is an heifer that is taught, ] sc. With the Ox-goad, which hath its name from teaching, Judg. 3. 31. because therewith Oxen are taught to plow, saith R. David. Ephraim was a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke, Jer. 31. 18. but God brought her to it and taught her, though at first a backsliding heifer, chap. 4. 16. (see the the Note there) taught her, as Gedeon taught the men of Succoth, with briers and thorns of the wildernesse, so that they paid dear for their learning, Judg. 8. 16. But Ephraim, though taught it, loveth not plowing work, because hard and hungry. She loveth rather to tread out the corn, ] where she may dance and frisk in the loft straw without either yoke or muzzle, Deut. 25. 4. As we thresh, so it was their manner to tread out their hard corn with the feet of beasts, or by them to draw Wains over it, and so get it out of the husk. Now this was fair and free work, and Ephraim delighted in it; the rather, because he might feed all the while at pleasure: whereas those heifers that plowed, wrought hard all day, and in all weathers, without any refreshment. It is an ill signe, when men must pick and choose their work: this they will do for God, but not that. A dispensatory conscience is a naughty conscience: neither doth he Gods will but his own, that doth no more, or no other, then himself will. Such holy-day-servants, such retainers God careth not for. Every one can swim in a warm Bath; and every bird will sing in a summers day. Judas will bear the crosse, so he may bear the bag. And those carnall Capernaïtes follow Christ, whiles he feeds them: as children will say their prayers, so they may have their breakfast. But Abraham will forsake all to follow God, though he knew not whither: yea though God seemed to go crosse-ways: as when he promised him a land flowing with milk and honey, and yet as soon as he came there, he found famine, Gen. 12. 1, 10. So when he promised him seed as the stars, yet kept him without child for twenty years after: and after that hee must kill him too, Gen. 22. So Iob will trust in a killing God: Ionah calls upon him out of the deep: David keeps his statutes, when God had in some degree forsaken him, Psal. 119. 8. and behaved himself wisely in a perfect way, though God was not yet come unto him, Psal. 101. 2. This is the triall of a Christian, to do difficult duties upon little or no incouragement; to wrestle as Jacob did, in the night, and alone, and when God was leaving him, and upon one leg, &c. This is work-man-like. The staff-rings were to continue upon the Ark: the Kohathites shoulders felt wherefore: and so long God helped them to carry it. But when they once fell to carting it for their own ease, as the Philistines had done, 1 Sam. 6. ) God made a dismal breach upon them, 2 Sam. 6. and David was very sensible of it, when he came up the second time to fetch the Ark, 1 Chron. 15. 12, 13.

but I passed over upon her fair neck, ] God will make her both bear and draw; though she were grown delicate and tender, with long prosperity; her good, and fair, and fat neck, not galled, or brawned with the yoke, which now she made dainty of; yet He would bring her to it: though he were by her untractableness forced to sit upon her neck, and make her more towardly to the yoke, as the manner of plowmen was in that case.

I will make Ephraim to ride, ] Or, as the Vulgar hath it, I will ride him and rule him, though he kick and lay about him never so much: though he champ upon the bridle, and stamp with his feet, &c. He master him, and make him more serviceable, or at least, lesse insolent. See this fulfilled, Jer. 31. 18, 19. where Ephraim is brought in seeing his need of mercy in the sense of misery.

Judas

Judah shall plow, and Jacob shall break his clods. ] Judah doth the worst of the work, and suffers more hardship in the wayes of my worship, and is held under by Israel, as appeareth in the second book of Kings, chap. 10. 16. &c. Jacob, that is, the ten Tribes, did onely break the clods, or harrow, which is the lighter work; and should therefore have been done with more delight. But they love to take their ease, and onely follow after their pleasure, and profit: and though taught to plow, yet like it not, because laborious: no though they have Judah for an example of better.

Verse 12. Sowe to your selves in righteousness, reap in mercy: ] Righteousnesse is a sure seed, a precious grain, which those that sowe (and every action of our life is a sowing) shall doubtlesse come again with rejoycing, and bring their sheaves with them, Psal. 126. 6. Onely they must not look to sowe and reap all in one day; as one faith of the Hyperborean people far North, that they sowe shortly after the Sun-rising with them, and reap before the Sun-set: that is, because the whole half year is one continuall day with them. The Church is Gods husbandry, 1 Cor. 3. 9. the seed is the Word of God, Luke 8. 11. Ministers are Gods husband-men, harvest-men, Matth. 9. 37, 38. the plough, Luke 9. 62. plough-staff, Luke 13. 8. axe, Mat. 3. 10. are the Lawes threatnings: the fruit-causing rain, are the promises of the Gospel, Esay 55. 10, 11. faith that works by love, are the fruits: the last day, the harvest, Mat. 13. 39, 40, 41. Then, at utmost, those that sowe bountifully (or, in blessings, as the Greek hath it) shall reap bountifully, 2 Cor. 9. 6. He that soweth seemeth to cast away his seed: but if he sowe in locis irriguis, (as Eccles. 11. 1. Ezek. 34. 26.) upon fat and fertile places, he knowes he shall receive his own, with usury. In some parts of Egypt, where the river Nilus overfloweth, they do but throw in their seed, and they have four rich harvests in lesse then four moneths. Oh sowe bountifully the seeds of piety and charity into Gods blessed bosome: and then be sure to reap plentiful mercy, in thy greatest necessity: reap in the month of mercy (as the Originall here hath it) that is, according to the measure of divine mercy (see Levit. 27. 16. Exod. 16. 16.) proportionably to the infinitenesse of Gods mercy. Now the Scripture hath three notable words to expresse the fulnesse of Gods mercy in Christ, to those that sowe in righteousness, Ephes. 2. 7. the abundant riches of his grace, that are cast in over and above, Rom. 5. 20. The grace of God hath been more then exceeding: there's a second cap., 1 Tim. 1. 14. The grace of God was exceeding abundant. It had a pleonasm before: yea, but here's a superpleonasm; here's good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over shall God give into mens bosomes: Like as when a poor man asked Mr. Fox for an alms, he (finding him religious) gave him his horse: Or as Alexander gave one (that craved some small courtesie of him) a whole citie. And when the poor man said, It was too much for him to receive: yea, but not for me to give, said he. So God giveth liberally and like himself, Jam. 1. 5. He doth not shift off his suiters, as once a great Prince did a bold begging Philosopher. He asked a groat of him, and the king told him, it was too little for a king to give. He requested the king then to give him a talent: the king replied, It was too much for a begger to crave. Certain it is, that God in his spirituall blessings and mercies to us, is wont to regard not so much what is fit for his to ask or expect, as what standeth with his goodnesse, and greatnesse to bestow. If Israel had a hundred-fold increase of his seed, those that sowe to themselves in righteousness, by doing and suffering Gods will shall have much more: Even an hundred-fold here, and eternall hereafter, Matth. 19. 29. so great a gain is godlinesse; so sure a grain is righteousness: who would not then turn spirituall seeds-man?

break up your fallow ground, ] sc. of your hearts, that ye sowe not among the thornes, Jec. 4. 3. The breaking up of sinfull hearts, is a singular meanes to prevent the breaking down of a sinfull nation. Hence the Prophet, though almost out of hope of any good to be done, upon his desperate countrey-men, resolves to try one more exhortation to them: and as in the morning he had sowed his seed, so in the evening he with-holdeth not his hand: for who can tell whether it may not prosper? and whether in the midst of threats, they might not suffer a word of exhortation, and whether it might not leave some impression, being delivered in few words? Sowe (therefore saith he) to your selves in righteousness, &c. but first break up for it is time to seek the Lord, ] High time, sith your souls lie upon it. Plowmen, we know are carefull to take their time: so are all others, wise enough in their generation. The wayfaring-man travelleth while it is light. The Seafaring-man takes his opportunity of winde and tide. The Smith smites whiles the iron is hot. The Lawyer takes his terme-time to eatertaine Clients, dispatch suits. The men of Issachar were in great account with David, because they had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do, 1 Chron. 12. 32. so are they with God, that regard and use the seasons of grace; that seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near: that put in the plough, set upon the practise of repentance, after a showre, when the heart is best affected; after God by his Word and Spirit hath taught (so some render the Text) or rained righteousness upon them. Rain comes from heaven: so doth every good and perfect giving. Rain pours down plentifully, Psal. 68. 9. thou didst send a plentiful rain on thine inheritance: so do the showres of righteousness on good hearts. Not a drop of rain falls in vain, or in a wrong place, but by a divine decree, Job 28. 26. so here. Seek it in time, and we shall not fail of it. Onely we must not set God a time when to come, but wait upon him, who waiteth to be gracious. Elijah sent seven times ere the rain came. Seek till God comes: Limit not the holy One of Israel. As he seldom comes at our time, so he never failes in his own. Hold out therefore faith and patience: for behold he cometh on the clouds, on the wings of the winde, and his reward is with him. To him that soweth righteousness, shall be a sure reward, Prov. 11. 18.

Old things are past, let all things become new: turn up the turf, stock up, and stub up the roots and weeds; get into Christ, and become a new creature. Till this be done, men are in an undone condition, though they should spend their whole time in gathering up pearls and jewels.

Job 4. 8. Even as I have seen, saith Eliphaz, they that plow iniquity, and sow wickednesse, reap the same. Ye have reaped iniquity, saith our Prophet, that is, dignum factis premium,* the reward of your wickednesse. And her iniquity is opposed to mercy in the former verse, as wickednesse also is to righteousness: or wickednesse may be taken for their Apostacy, Idolatry, and creature-confidence; and iniquity for the rest of their enormities, proceeding from those former: for these wicked ones are never out of action. Arant, serunt, oecant, scelera, they plow, sowe, and harrow mischief: so that would they but take the like pains for heaven that they do for hell, they could not (lightly) misse of it.

Ye have eaten the fruit of lies, ] That is, ye have been cozened, by your false Prophets, and State-politicians; whose fetch it is to formalize and enervate the power of truth, till at length they have left you an heartlesse and saplesse religion. Ye have fed hungerly upon the murdering morsels of sin; and that's the reason that there is so much ill blood amongst you. Your bread is that panis mendacij Solomon speaks of, Prov. 20. 17. full of grit and gravell, made up with saw-dust (as they served the Martyrs) and mixed with lime, as the treacherous Greeks dealt by the Western Christians, marching towards the Holy-land.

because thou didst trust in thy way, ] In thy Calf-worship. Way is oft put for religion: and every action men do, is a step either to heaven or to hell: he that walketh uprightly, walketh safely. These Idolaters were very confident of their way: so are our Papists, and other heretikes; as David George, that pestilent Libertine, was fully perswaded, that the whole world would submit to him. And Campian, Coster, and other zealous Papists tell us to our heads, that our religion is errour, our selves heretikes, our end destruction: that one heaven cannot hold us hereafte, one Church now, &c. Thus the way of a fool is right in his own eyes: but

These Ephraimites liked their way of false worship the better, because backt by a strong Army. That way the mighty men go, that shall be troden: this is a secret byasse, a strong poysie upon the spirits of most men, Rev. 13. when power and authority was put into Antichrists hands, the whole world wondered after him. Verse 14. Therefore shall a tumult arise among the people, &c.] Even among those mighty men, wherein ye trusted, shall there be seditious tumults, that shall soon bring all into a miserable confusion. Intestine commotions may undo a people; as a man may die of an inward bleeding.

lib. 1.

When the multitude is in a rage, they are like to a tiled house that is on fire (saith One) there's no coming near the house, the tiles do so flie about your face: so it is in tumults, there's no coming neer to talk to them, to convince them: but they are ready to flie presently upon you. In Kets sedition, Dr. Parker in his Sermon before the Rebels neer Norwich, touched them for their misliving so neer, that they went neer to touch him for his life. The rude rage of the rebels was such, that some being disabled almost to hold up their weapons, would strive what they could to strike their enemies: others being thrust thorow the body with a spear, would run themselves further, to reach those that wounded them deadly. Yea boyes were observed to be so desperately resolved, as to pull arrows out of their own flesh, and deliver them to be shot again by the archers on their side. There are none so insolent and cruell as the vilest of the people, when they are got together in a head. What havock made the seditious in Jerusalem a little before the last destruction of it? the Guelfs and Gibellines in Italy? Was Tyler and his complices here? That Rebell, held up by the many-headed multitude, dared to say, that all the Lawes of England should come out of his mouth. The Hebrew word here used signifieth an inundation, or multitude of waters, which over-run their banks with violence and roaring. The people are a most dangerous and heady water, when once it is out: it is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food, Prov. 28. 3. The Septuagint render it, Destruction. Sal. Jarchi saith, it signifieth the voice of those that cry, Fugite, Fugite, Away, Away, the enemy is at hand, &c. Some say, to the same purpose, that it signifieth clamorem meticuloorum, the crying of those that are scar'd, as when there is Luctu, ubique pavor, & plurima morti imago. See Am. 2. 2. Thy terriblenesse hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill: though thou shouldest make thy nest as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord, Jer. 49. 16. ria in this Prophets time. Salman is vox truncata, a name cut off to the halves: a thing very ordinary in all the learned languages, as were easie to instance. See Esay 15. 2. Bamoth for Bamoth-Baal, Iosh. 19. 35. Chamath for Chamath-Dor. Hesiod puts Bgi for Betaedi, Ennius hath Fabric for Fabricius. This Salmanasar (or as Luther will have it, some other great warrior called Salman, not elsewhere mentioned in Scripture, but not unknown to the ten tribes) did cruell execution, it seems, upon Betharbel, a city beyond Jordan, 1 Maccab. 9. 2. like as Tamerlan (for a terrour to the Greek Empire, much whereof he afterwards subdued) did at Sebastia; where he made a mercilesse slaughter of all sexes and sises; whereby he held the whole East in such awe, as that he was commonly called, The wrath of God, and Terrour of the world. There are that think this Arbel to be the same with that Arbela where Alexander defeated Darius, and won the Persian Monarchy. They make it a city or countrey of Assyria, beneath Arpad, and hinted at by Rabshakeb, 2 King. 18. 34. Where are the gods of Hamath, and Arpad? sc. Salmanasar hath utterly destroyed them. Arbel is by some interpreted, the city of Bel, where Belus or Baal was worshipped. By others, Beth-arbel is interpreted, The house of the insnaring god, the god of policie, or subtily: It seemeth to them, that the people of this place had a god that they thought would ensnare and ensnare all their enemies: but it proved much otherwise.

For the mother was dashed in pieces upon her children.] Dashed against the ground (so the word signifieth) against the walls, or pavement. See Gen. 32. 11. Psal. 137. 9. Esay 13. 16. Such is the savage cruelty of warre, when God lets it out. Such was the barbarous dealing of the French in the Parisian Massacre, such the Sicilian Vespers, and at Merindoll; where the paps of many women were cut off, which gave suck to their children; which looking for suck at their mothers breasts being dead before, died also for hunger. Was not this to kill the mother with the children? which God forbade by a symbol of taking the dam with the young, Dent. 22. 6. and again of killing the ewe and the lamb both in one day, Lev. 22. 28. The Spaniards murdered fifty millions of Indians in 42. years, as Acosta the Jesuite testifieth. Arsenoe was killed upon her children by her bloody brother Ptolomee king of Egypt. And another of that name killed thirty thousand Jewes, and compeld the living to feed upon the flesh of the dead. When the Switzers vanquished the Thericienses in battle, they banquered in the place where they won the victory: using the dead bodies of their Adversaries instead of stools and tables. The sight of such like cruelties, common in warre, might well make Zuinglius say, when he had been abroad with the Army, that he had found more wickednesse, and bad counsels and courses therein, then ever he had known before, either by experience, or out of books. This passage in Gods book (and the like, chap. 13. 16. their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ript up.) he could not be ignorant of. The Prophet refers his hearers to a sad example of fresh-bleeding cruelty, well known to them: that they might relent, repent, and prevent the like misery upon themselves. This is the use we should all put such examples to, Luke 13. 2. 3. 5. & 47. 26. 28. 1 Cor. 10. 6. 7. 8. 11.

Vers. 15. So shall Bethel do unto you,] i. e. the idolatry that you have committed at Bethel, by a Synechdoche of the place, this shall undo you. Or, So shall he do unto you, O inhabitants of Bethel. Bethel shall be made a Betharbel. They that take not example by others, shall be made an example to others. Lege historiam, ne sis historicus.

Because of your great wickednesse:] Heb. the wickednesse of your wickednesse, the iniquity of your sin, the foolishnesse of your madnesse, Eccles. 7. 25. your idolatry especially, that wickednesse with a witnesse. Let us (by Gods example) learn to lay load upon our sins, and not to extenuate; but to aggravate them against our selves.

In a morning shall the king of Israel be utterly cut off.] This was fulfilled in Hoseab the last king of Israel, 2 King. 17. cut off in a morning, that is, in a moment, as foam or a bubble upon the waters. The morning-light lasteth not long, but shineth onto the perfect day. Or, in a morning, when some hope appears, and some comfort is expected, as Psal. 30. 6. it is but a lightning afore death.

CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. When Israel was a childe, then I loved him, ] Or Because Israel was a childe, I loved him. Young things are lovely; young children especially, for their innocency, and ignescency. Some sence it thus, Israel was a child, and had nothing of worth, or lovely in him; yet I loved him freely, Deut. 7. 7. Hof. 10. 9. called him out of Egypt, out of the iron furnace, led him thorow the deep, as an horse in the wilderness, Esay 63. 13. possessed him of the promised land. Out of which though I shall shortly cast him for his ingratitude: yet there is hope of his restauration, by the Messiah my Sonne, whom when I have called out of Egypt, he shall gather together again the dispersed of Israel, and bring life and immortality to light by the Gospel. The foundation of which restauration, he here maketh to be his own free-grace. He hath holpen his servant (or his childe) Israel, in remembrance of his mercy. God so loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Son, &c. Joh. 3. 16. Here then beginneth our Prophets first Evangelicall sermon, as Tarnovius observeth: who also readeth the Text thus: Albeit Israel was a childe, such a forlorn out-cast childe, as is described, Ezek. 16. and 23. Yet I loved him, and adopted him for my sonne: not for any defect on my part, (for I had an onely begotten Son, in whom I am well pleased:) or, for any desert on his part, for I found him in his blood, in his blood, in his blood, when I cast my skirt of love over him, and said unto him, Live. Yea and for his salvations sake, I have called, that is, I have decreed to call out of Egypt (whither he fled from Herod, and where he abode two or three years at least) my childe Jesus, whose office it is to save his people from their sinnes. And although I might justly have deprived them of such a Saviour for ever, because when he came to his own, his own received him not, (yea, rejected him to whom their own signes given to Herod, did so aptly and evidently agree) yet out of Egypt, to shew the constancy of my love to Israel, have I called (by mine angel, as Jacob by a messenger called his wives to him into the field, Gen. 31. 4.) My Son Christ, who is Gods Son, first by eternall generation, Prov. 8. 22, 23. Secondly, by personall union, Psal. 2. 7. And thus God called out of Egypt, first Israel his people, and then Christ the Head of his people; in whom at length this prophecy was fulfilled.

Verse 2. As they called them, ] i. e. As the Prophets and Ministers (whose names are here concealed, that the Word onely may be glorified, as Acts 13. 48.) called to them, to come out of spirituall Egypt, out of darknesse to light, and from the power of Satan to God, that they might receive forgiveness of sinnes, and inheritance among the Saints, by faith that is in Christ, Act. 26. 18.

so they went from them: ] They went a contrary way, as the child Samuel, when God called him, ran to Eli: or rather as the wilfull Jews, when God would have gathered them, as the hen doth her chickens, they would not. When God called his naturall Son out of Egypt, he came presently, Heb. 10. 7. Psal. 40. 7, 8. not so his adopted sonnes: for they turned upon him the back, and not the face, as Jer. 2. 27. they refused to be reformed, they hated to be healed. See chap. 7. 1. with the Note. Nay to make up the full measure of their sins, and to heighten their contempt, they sacrificed unto Baalim, and burnt incense to graven images, ] Quasi agere facturi Deo, as if they would despise God on purpose, and spit in his very face: commit the like villany in his presence, as the Irish Rebels lately did, when they bound the husband to the bed-post, whiles they abused his wife before him. See the Notes on chap. 2. and almost on every chapter where their idolatry is cried out upon, and their extreme ingratitude.

Verse 3. I taught Ephraim also to go, ] A child he was verse 1. and like a childe I dealt with him, teaching him how to set his feet, pedare to foot it, as nurses do their little ones: he keepeth the feet of his Saints, he guideth their feet in the way of peace, Luke 1. 79. See for this, Deut. 1. 31. & 32. 11. Num. 11. 12. So great is the goodnesse of God to his people, that he dealeth with us as with his little children, nos sublevando, submonendo, docendo, ducendo, regendo, regendo, convocando, condonando, portando, confortando, &c. saith a learned Interpreter truly, and trimly. he loveth us as a father, he directeth us as a friend, guiding us with his eye, leading us in his hand, setting us betwixt his knees, as some interpret that text, Dent. 33. 3. setting us upon his knees, as a father doth his darling, and rejoycing over us with joy, yea joying over us, with singing, Zeph. 3. 17. His affections are more then fatherly: and his expressions are according. "We are like infants (saith One) new-born, in a manner. They are kept by the loving parents from fire and water: they are fed, laid to sleep, made ready, and unready, and shifted in their scapes, but they know not who doth all this for them. So doth our heavenly Father by us in Christ. But (he knows) little understanding have we of him. After this, he teacheth us to go, taking us by the arms,] to help our feeble knees. And taking us up in his own arms, when we come to a foul or rough place: helping us over the quagmires of crosses, and the difficulties of duties. And whereas we fall seven times a day, and in many things fail all: he taketh us up after that we have caught a knock, and cherisheth us in his bosome, &c. Montanus and Junius carry the fence another way, as if the words were not a description of Gods love to the people, but of their unthankfulnesse to God; rendring the words thus: When as I inform Ephraim, he taketh them in his arms, that is, he setteth up idols, and, after the manner of impudent and shamelesse strumpets, he taketh the puppets in his arms, and embraceth them before my face. But I like the former fence better.

But they knew not that I healed them.] Not onely held them, that they might not fall, but healed them when they had fallen. Daring they would be sometimes to stand upon their own legs, to prevail by their own strength, 1 Sam. 2. 9. to say with her in the Poet, Consilij satis est in me mihi, &c. I am wise enough, and able enough, to go on as if they were petty-gods within themselves, and had no need of nor dependance upon me. Hence they hurt themselves, but I healed them. I forgave all their iniquities, I healed all their diseases, their bruises, and putrifying sores, that else had not been closed, bound up, nor mollified with ointment, Esay 1. 6. God left not his people in their low estate, as some Physicians do their Patients: but provided a soveraigne salve, an horn of salvation, such as would cure any disease, or maim, even the sinne against the holy Ghost too: but that it is the nature of it to rage and rave both against the physick, and the Physician. Christ is both the one and the other: as beeing made unto us of God, Wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Quod sanitas in corpore, id sanitas in corde. He is Jehovah that healeth, for he is Jehovah that sanctifieth. This Ephraim knew not, that is, out of pride and stoutnesse they acknowledged it not, but sacrifice to their own nets, wits, endeavours, &c. Of all things God can least endure to be neglected, or to have the glory of his benefits transferred upon others (See chap. 2. 8. with the Note.) When men shall either say in the language of Ashdod, It is a chance, or else, I have made my self thus and thus happy. This, though the Saints should at any time do, yet God will pardon their frowardnesse, and say, as Esay 57. 17, 18. I have seen his wayes, (his waywardnesse) and will heal him (nevertheless) and restore comforts to him.

Hadst thou but bethought thy self of those few words, What have I done? thou wouldst never have been so covetous a cormorant. Oh could men have but so much power over their passions and lusts, as to get alone and weigh Gods wayes, much good might be done upon them: But for want of this, Fertur equis auriga, &c. they rush into all excesse of riot, as an horse into the battle: yea they are so farre unmand, as to think that they have reason to be mad, and that there is no small sense in sinning. with bands of love, ] Heb. thick cords, cart-ropes (as it is rendred, Esay 5. 18.) ropes of many wreathes, twisted together, and inter-twined with love, that sweetest Attractive. So Jer. 31. 3. With loving-kindnesse have I drawn thee: and Esay 63. 9. In his love and his pity he redeemed them, and he bare them, and carried them all the dayes of old. He gave them a law, the summe of which was nothing but love; and multiplied mercies upon them without measure, as is amply set forth by those holy Levites, Neh. 9. Now, mercy commands duty: and every new deliverance is a new tie to obedience. Love should have love, Publicans and sinners yeeld that, Matth. 5. 46. Yea, love should shew it self strong as death, Cant. 8. 6. Jonathán would have died for his David; David for his Abisalom; Priscilla and Aquila, for Paul, Rom. 16. 4. Christ out of his love did die for his people. Have I but one life to lose for Christ? said that holy Martyr. Let men take heed how they sinne against love, for this is the greatest aggravation of sinne: this is bestiall, this is like unruly horses in a teame, to break the gears, to snap in sunder the traces, that should hold them. Such yokelesse sons of Belial shall one day be held by the cords of their own sinne, and whipt with those cords of conviction, that they would not be drawn by. Shall the harlots hands be bands, her words cords to draw men to destruction, and shall God stretch out his hand all day long to them to no purpose? Shall he lose his sweet words upon them, &c? Peters heart burst, and hee brake out in weeping, when he saw Love sparkling in Christs looks; and considered how he had burst asunder the bands of love, sinned against such manifestations of mercy, wiped off all his comfortables for the present, drew from Christ those piercing quick questions, Lovest thou me? yea but dost love me indeed? O let the cords of Gods kindnesse draw us nearer to him, hold us closer: to sinne against mercy, is to sin against humanity: and as no surfeit is more dangerous, then that of bread: so no judgement is more terrible, then that which grows out of love felt and slighted.

and I was to them as they that take off the yoke on the jaws, &c. ] i. e. on their neck: albeit it seemeth by that law, made for not muzzling the ox that treadeth, &c. that those creatures when they wrought, were muzzled or haltred up: and that halter fastened to the yoke that was upon their necks. The sence is this, I unyoked them often, to give them meat, as the good husbandman doth that is mercifull to his beast, he lifts up the yoke that lies hard upon its neck, leads it to the manger, layes food before it, &c. So dealt God by this people all along from the wilderness, and forward: not suffering them to abide jugiter sub jugis Gentium, long under their enemies yoke: but delivering them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them, Ezek. 34. 27. Christ also hath delivered His out of the hands of those that hated them, and lay hard upon them; as the devil is an hard taskmaster, that neither takes off the yoke, nor layes meat: gives no rest or refreshment to his drudges, and dromedaries: but acts them and agitates them day and night, &c. Egypt shall prove no better then a broken reed running into the hand of him that leaneth on it 2 King. 18. 21. The Egyptian was ever an enemy to Israel: and though for his own ends he gave goodly words, and seem reconciled: yet such Reconciliations are but voluptas amicitiae. But were he never so fast a friend, yet sin-guilty Israel shall not have their an Aylum, nec stabile stabulum (see Chap 9. 3. with the Note) because the desire of the wicked shall perish Psal. 112. 10. They take counsell together, but it shall come to nought, they speak the word, but it shall not stand Esay. 8. 10. Confer Esay. 30. 1. 2. and 31. 1. 2. 3. Prov. 21. 38.

but the Assyrian shall be his king] Will they, nill they, they shall be carried captive to Assyria: and sith they will needs be crossing of God, he will crosse them much more: he will walk contrary to those that walk contrary to him Lev. 26. 21. and be as froward as they for the hearts of them Psal. 18. 26. They will not return to me, saith the Lord, they shall not therefore return to Egypt: they will not submit to my scepter, they shall therefore have the Assyrian for their King, that proud cruel stout-hearted Prince Isay. 10. 5. 7. 12. who will tyrannise over their bodies, and over their cattle at their pleasure, so that they shall be in great

because they refused to return] Heb. they disdained to do it, scorned the motion, slighted the messenger. By their sins they had run from God: by repentance they should have returned unto him, and then the amends had been well-nigh made: for Quem poenitet peccasse parè est innocens the penitent is in almost as good a case as the innocent; Ambrose saith he is in a better. But for these men, to all other their sins to add obstinacie and impenitencie, as Herod to all his former evils did the death of the Baptist, this was to heap up wrath against the day of wrath Rom. 2. 5. The word here rendred (refused) is by the Seventy turned They would not. That therefore they returned not to God, it was the fault of their will. True it is, they had no power to turn themselves: but the cause of that inability too, was in themselves. They therefore neither could nor would return: and both by their own fault and folly.

Vers. 6. And the sword shall abide on his cities] Heb. shall keep residence or rust upon his cities. It can do no less; it cannot return into the scabbard, rest or be still till the Lord, who put it into commission, call back againe his commission, Jer. 47. 6. 7. It is a dreadfull thing when the sword abideth on a people; as in Germany that stage of warr, Ireland still a land of divine ire &c. England hath some Haileys at present, praise be given to God: and let every good man pray with David, scatter thou the people that delight in warr Psal. 68. 30. The Pirats warr was dispatched by Pompey with incredible swiftness, to his eternall commendation. And we have cause to bless God (saith a countryman of ours) that God hath raised up instruments for us, who have hazarded the shortening of their own lives for the shortning of the warr: who have done their worke of late, as if they had took it by the great &c. And the same Author observeth, that it is a sad thing for the sword to be in the field; but for the sword to be in the cities it is much more sad; and he instanceth in Jerusalem out of Josephus, where the number of the slain was eleven hundred thousand: We may further instance in that unhappy city of Magdeburg in Germany, where so much cruelty was exercised first by Charles the fifth, (much regretted by him at last in his retired life, taking account of his actions) & since that in our memory by Monsieur Tilly, who like a bloody villain put to the sword there twenty thousand persons at least of all ranks, ages, and sexes: that great city also he burned down, utterly turning it into cinders excepting an hundred nine & thirty houses &c. The like immanity was exercised by the Popes champions upon the poor Protestants at Angroque in France: where they killed and burned without mercy: but could never set fire upon the two temples there, nor upon the Ministers house, which remained whole, the houses round about being all consumed with fire.

and shall consume his branches and devour them] His branches or his villages, which are as branches of the greater cities. The trees of America (but especially of Brafile) are so huge, that it is reported of them, that severall families have lived in severall armes or branches of one tree, so such a number as are in some petty village or parish here. The greater cities are as the body or root of a tree, the villages as the branches. The scripture oft calleth them mother and daughters, as Heshborn and all her daughters; That is villages Num. 21. 25. as the Chaldee there explaineth it. See Ezech. 16. 44. 45. 46. 48. 53. hence we read of a citie and mother in Israel 2 Sam. 20. 19. Branches also are called daughters of the trees they grow from Gen. 44. 23. The word here rendred branches is by some rendred Barres, by others, Diviners or Liers, as the word here used is interpreted Jer. 50. 36. A sword is upon the liars or diviners, and they shall dote: potest Augur Augurum videre & non ridere? saith Tully of such diviners: that is, Can they one looke upon another and not laugh, considering how they gull people with their lies and fopperies? The sword shall be upon such, as it was upon Balaam Satans spelman, they shall be a portion for foxes Psal. 63. 10. as those that because of their own counsels] He that goeth to school to his own carnall reason, is sure to have a fool to his master; an ignis fatuus that will bring him into the bogges and briers. The wisdom of the flesh is enmitie to God. Nemo laeditur nisi a seipso. See the Note on chap. 10. vers. 6.

Vers. 7. My people are bent to backsliding from me] they have a principle of Apostacie in them, as those Galathians had, of whom the Apostle, I marvel that you are so soon removed unto another Gospell Gal. 1. 6. and as those old Apostates in the wilderness, who so soon as Moses his back was turned almost, cryed out to Aaron, Make us golden Gods. This people was before accused to be acted by a spirit of fornication, a certain violent impetus, a strong inclination to whoredome, and to be apt to backslide with a perpetuall backsliding: all their recidivations and revolts were but a fruit of the bent of their spirits, which were false and unsettled: not resolved whether yet to turne to God, though they were beset with so many mischiefs: they hang in suspence and rather inclined to the negative then else. Suspensis sunt, so Calvin, Parvus, and others, read this text: My people are in suspence, or in a maimering whether to turne to me or not, they hang in doubt, as the same word is rendred Deut. 28. 68. God liketh not that his people should stand doubtful as Screechers; and adhere to nothing certainly: to be in religion as idle beggars are in their way, ready to goe which way soever the staffe falleth: but that they should strive to a full assurance in what they beleve Luk. 1. 4. to be fully perswaded as ver. 1. and to a firm purpose of heart in what they should practise Act. 11. 23. Irresolution against sin or for God can hardly consist with the power of Godliness: be not off and on with him, halt not, hang not in doubt what to do; but follow God fully as Caleb did; come off freely as David, who had chosen Gods precepts when he was solicited to have done otherwise Psal. 119. 173. And again, I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me ver. 38. I have weighed them, and am resolved to keep them, I am come to a full determination.

tion. Mr. Deodate senseth the words thus. They desire and expect that I should turn in favour to them and relieve them: whereas they should turn to me by repentance, which they will not do: and herein he followeth Arias Montanus. Thus those stiffnecked Jewes in Jeremy expected that God should still deal with them (however they dealt with him) according to all his wondrous works chap. 21. 2. presuming and promising themselves impunity; and thus Judas also had the face to ask, as the rest did, Is it I? as resting upon Christs accustomed gentleness, and that he would conceale him still, as he had done certain daies before.

though they called them to the most High] They, that is the Prophets as vers. 2. called them with great importunity, upon every opportunity, to the most High, to God (in opposition to those Dii minutuli petty deities whom they doted on. See chap. 7. 16.) to come up to him, to have high and honourable conceptions of Him, not casting him in a base mould, as those miscreants did, Psal. 50. 21. but saying as David, and with a David-like spirit, Thou Lord art high above all the earth, thou art exalted far above all Gods, and there-hence inferring, Ye that love the Lord, hate evil Psal. 97. 9. 10. I am God Almighty, walk before me and be upright Gen. 17. 1. The God of glory appeared to Abraham Abt. 7. 2. he so conceived of God; and hence his unchangeable resolutions for God.

none at all would exalt him] Heb. together he exalted not, (scarce a Heb. a single man that would do it, that would lift up his head to listen to such good counsel, (so some sence it) or that would exalt and extol the most High; who though he be high above all praise as Neh. 9. 5. and cannot be praised according to his excellent greatness: Yet is he pleased to account himself exalted and magnified by us, when, considering the infinite distance and disproportion that is betwixt him and us, we lay our selves low at his feet for mercy, we set him up in our hearts for our sole Sovereign, we esteem him as the people did David more worth then ten thousand, we give him room in our soules, and with highest apprehensions, most vigorous affections, and utmost endeavours wee bestow our selves upon him, as the only Worthy. Now this is done but of a very Few, and well done but of fewer yet; so drossy and drowsy are mens spirits, and so little is the Lord, lifted up by the sons of men. See the Prophet Esay his complaint chap. 64. 7.

Vers: 8. How shall I give thee up Ephraim?] Here beginneth the second part of this chapter, full of many sweet Evangelicall promises, and here, if ever, Mercy rejoiceth against Judgment, or treadeth on the very neck of it, as St. James his word importeth chap. 2. 13. The Lord seemeth here to beat a stand, or at strife with himself about the destruction of this people fore-threatened; which well might have been a gulf to swallow them up, and a grave to bury them in for ever, being most worthy to perish, as were the Cities which God destroyed in his wrath. Gen. 19. Howbeit God in the bowels of his mercy earning and taking pitty of his Elect amongst them (for he had reserved 7000. hidden ones that had not bowed their knees to Baal) spareth to lay upon them the extremity of his wrath, and is ready to save them for his mercies sake. Heare how father-like he melts over them;

how should I expose thee O Ephraim? how should I deliver thee up O Israel? How should I dispose thee as Admah? how should I set thee as Zeboim?] q. d. Justice requires that I should lay thee utterly wast, and even rain down hell from heaven upon thee as once upon Sodom and her sisters. But Mercy interposeth her four several How's (in the Originall two onely, exprest, but the other 2. necessarily understood, and by Interpreters fitly supplied) foure such patheticall Interrogations as the like are not to be found in the whole book of God, and not to be answered by any but God himself: as indeed he doth to each particular in the following words, My heart is turned within me, that is the first answer, The second, My repentings are kindied together: The third I will not execute the fiercenesse of my wrath: The fourth I wil not return to destroy Ephraim. And why? First I am God and not Man: Secondly the Holy One in the midst of thee.

My heart is turned, or turneth it self, within me] that is my mind is changed, or at least is, in doubt what to do, in this businessse. This is spoken ὑπομετανοῶν after the manner of men, and must be understood ὑπομετανοῶν agreeably to Gods greatnesse. Here is mutatio rei non Dei, effectus non affectus, facti non consilij: Repentance with with man is the changing of his will. Repentance with God is no more then the willing of a change: ill is not a change of his will, but of his work. Confer Lam. 1. 20. & 2. 11. Am. 1. 12. There are that render it, My hart is turned against me, that is, against my former severe sentence of cutting them all utterly off at one blow; Fiat justitia, pereat mundus. Oh! I cannot finde in my heart to do it. For my repentings are kindled together, ] Simul aestuant viscera mea penitentiâ. So Tremellins: My bowels are altogether on a light fire with repentings, as Gen. 43. 30. and 1 King. 3. 27. Now repentings are as improperly attributed to God, as bowels. There were a sort of ignorant Monks in Egypt, who started this foolish and ridiculous question (which yet bred no small stirres there Anno Dom. 403.) An Deus corporeus sit? Whether the Divine Essence be a body, having hands, heart, bowels, &c? The ruder sort of them held it affirmatively. What blasphemies Vorstius hath vented, in that base book of his de Deo, I need not relate. How God is said to repent, hath been said already: Sure it is, that herein he graciously accommodateth himself to our rudenesse, and speaketh as we are able to bear. It appeareth that fury is not in God, Esay 27. 4. Our sins put thunder-bolts into his hands, and it is, Non nisi coactus with him, when he proceeds to punishment. His bowels are very ready to work in the wayes of grace, and mercy toward sinners: and the least act of faith in that mercy, would certainly set bowels on work again. This the Church in Esay well knew, and therefore prayed when deserted, Look down from heaven, &c. Where is thy zeal, and thy strength? the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies toward me? are they restrained? Doubtlesse thou art our Father, notwithstanding thine austerities. God seemeth sometimes to lose his bowels, and then we must find them for him: to sleep, and we must awake him: to hide himself, and then we must fetch him out (as the woman of Canaan did by the force of her faith, Mark. 7. 24, 25.) God will come, but he will have the faithfull prayers of his people to lead him. I came forthy word, Dan. 10. 2. &c.

Calvin.

Esay 63. 15, 16.

Verse 9. I will not execute the fiercenesse of mine anger, ] Heb. the heat of it Gods bowels kindled, and whatsoever might cause repentance came together, and lay glowing as it were at his heart: and this cooled and even quenched the heat of his wrath, (as the Sun-beams when they shine full upon the fire) so that now he resolves not to execute the height of his heat, the extremity of his fury, for then the spirit should fail before him. Ephraim is Gods dear sonne, his pleasant child: whom when he hears bemoaning himself, as Jer. 31. 18, 19, 20. he soon repents him of the evil, and cries,

I will not return to destroy Ephraim, ] I will not undo him twice over, or utterly ruine him: as those that have laid their enemy for dead, returne to see whether he be dead out-right: or as souldiers that have once pillaged a city, return after a while to take all that little that was left before, and to set the rest on fire. God will not deal so hardly with Ephraim, though he might do it. Reprobates indeed shall have an evil, an only evil, Ezek. 7. 5. without mixture of mercy: they must expect one plague upon another, as it fared with Pharaoh, till God had dashed the very breath out of his body, &c. But for his elect people, Hath he smitten them, as he smot those that smot them? No, but in measure, in the branches onely: hee stayeth his rough wind, &c. Esay 27. 7, 8. And as Cresus his dumb sonne burst out into Kill not King Cresus. So when enemies are ready to devour the Church, or Satan to swallow Gods child up in despair, his bowels work; he can hold no longer, but cries, Save my child, save my Church, &c. Why should the spirit fail before me, and the souls which I have made? I have seen his wayes, and (though bad enough) I will heal him, I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him, and to his mourners.

For I am God, and not man, ] yea such a God, as the like is not, for pardoning iniquity, and passing by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage, Mic. 7. 18. 'Tis naturall to him, Exod. 34. 6. 'tis usuall, Neh. 9. 17. there he is called a God of pardons, as Esay 55. 7. he is said to multiply pardons. He hath commanded men to forgive an offending but repenting brother, seventy times seven times in a day, Mat. 18. 22. What then will himself do? For he is God Almighty, and not man. Man is an angry vindictive, cruell creature: one man is a Wolf, yea a Devil to another: unsociable, implacable, unmercifull, as those were Rom. 1. 31. Beware of men, saith our Saviour to his disciples, Matt. 10. 17. absurd and wicked men, 1 Thess. 3. 2. barbarous, and brutish, skilfull to destroy, Ezek. 21. 31. Yea beware of good men, when enraged. What strange deaths did David (soon after his foul fall, and not fully recovered) put the poor Ammonites to, 2 Sam. 12. 31. Further, men as they are unmercifull, so they are unmindfull of their promises. But God is not a man that he should lie, Num. 23. 18. What he hath spoke with his mouth, he will make good with his hand. The eternity of Israel will not lie, (as men will, Rom. 3. 4.) nor repent, (as men do, whatever he may seem to do; see the note on the former verse) for he is not a man that he should repent, 1 Sam. 15. 29. Men are mutable: the truest friend is ἡμετέριος ζῷον, an easily changeable creature, as the Heathen complained; all in changeable colours, as Tertullian saith of the Peacock; as often changed as moved. Not so Almighty God. I am Jehovah, I change not, Mal. 3. 6. See the Note there, and remember still to retain high thoughts of God: not measuring him by our modell; as to think him to be as mercifull as we are, as powerfull as our understanding can reach, &c. See Esay 55. 8, 9. and beg supernatural grace: without which it is impossible for a finite creature to beleve the infinite Attributes of Almighty God.

the holy One in the midst of thee,] Though Israel had deeply revolted, set up golden gods, and done wickedly as they could, so that there was no visible Church amongst them, yet God was the holy One in the midst of them: Seven thousand he had reserved that Eliab knew not of, 1 King. 19. 18. and a Church there was in Israel, when at worst. Like as there was in medio Papatu, in the darkest midnight of damned popery: and at this very day, there are said to be thousands of profest Protestants, even in Italy it self: and in Sivil, a chief city of Spain, there are thought to be no fewer then twenty thousand.

and I will not enter into the city.] I will not invade the city as an enemy, to wast all with fire and sword, as once at Sodom. For why, there are holy ones in the midst of thee (so Rivet expoundeth it by an enallage of the number) a considerable company of righteous people; for whose sake I will spare thee, Jer. 5. 1.

Verse 10. They shall walk after the Lord,] powerfully calling them by his Word and Spirit: going before them, and bringing up the Rere, Esay 52. 11. their King shall passe before them, and the Lord on the head of them, Mic. 2. 13. Time was, when they fled from God, Hos. 7. 13. and said, I will go after my lovers, &c. chap. 2. Now they are of another minde, and other manners: they shall walk after the Lord, non pedibus sed affectibus: they shall be carried after him with strength of desire, and delight, which he shall work in them: they shall follow the Lamb whither soever he goeth: Gods people are said in Scripture to walk before him in godly sincerity, to walk with him in an humble familiarity, to walk after him in an holy conformity, yeelding unto him the obedience of faith. As Israel in the wilderness, so must we, follow God and the line of his Law, though it seem to lead us in and out, backward and forward (as them) as if he were treading a maze.

he shall roar like a lion,] By the preaching of the Gospel, he shall shake heaven and earth. The voice of the Gospel is, Repent. Aut penitendum, aut perendum, except ye repent ye shall all perish. He that beleeveth and is baptized, shall be saved: He that beleeveth not, shall be damned, was a terrible voice. Of the Lion it is reported, that he roareth so fiercely, that the rest of the creatures stand amazed: and that, whereas his own whelps come dead into the world, he roareth over them, and reviveth them. Afterwards, when he meeteth with prey, he roareth for them to come about him. Let this be applied to the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, Confer Joel 3. 16.

Mar. 16. 16.

Plutar. in lib. de just. animal.

then the children shall tremble from the West.] The children of grace, Deut. 14. 1. shall joyn themselves in spirit to the communion of the Church from all the ends of the world, where they have been scattered: they shall serve the Lord with fear, rejoyce with trembling. The Ancient Hebrews applied this promise to the coming of the Messiah: onely they dreamt of an earthly kingdom of his, as did also the disciples, being sowed with the leaven of the Pharisees. Others think it to be a Prophecie of the conversion, and calling of the Jewes, to be accomplished in the last dayes: as also of the generall spreading of the Gospel, and gathering of the Elect, far far and wide from one end of the heavens unto another. And this they call, the time of the Resurrection of all things.

Verse 11. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, ] Trepidat accurrent, so Tremellius: they shall run tremblingly. Fear causeth haste. Men delay and trifle till God strikes their hearts with fear: then 'tis ecce ego, mitte me, Here I am, send me, Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth, What wilt thou have me to do Lord? &c. timor addidit alas; as the doves when pursued by the hawk, scour into their columbaries. As birds frightened, fly to their nests, and other creatures to their holes, and harbours: so do those that are prickt at heart with the terrors of the law, flee to the precious promises of the Gospel: hiding themselves in the wounds of Christ crucified, and are relieved. All St. Paul's case was, that when he was sought for by the justice of God, he might be found in Christ, not having his own righteousness, but that which is through the faith of Christ.

and as a dove out of the land of Assyria, ] i. e. out of what country soever, where they shall be scattered, I will recollect them by my Gospel, which is therefore called Gods arm, because thereby he gathereth his Elect into his bosom. Doves fly swiftly, Psal. 55. 6. and by flocks, Esay 60. 8. so shall the Elect to Christ, both of Jewes and Gentiles. By the children of the West, may be meant these Western Churches, and withall the Northern parts. By Egypt, the whole South. By Assur, all the Eastern Tract, those large and mighty kingdoms that lie Eastward from Judea, even to the Sun-rising. Thus many shall come from East and West, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. Mat. 8. 11. The molten-Sea stood upon twelve Oxen, which looked to all the four quarters of the world: so did the twelve gates of the new Jerusalem, &c. and I will place them in their houses, ] Not in strong garisons, but in their own houses; where they shall dwell securely under their own vines and fig-trees: for they shall have the Gospel of peace, and the peace of the Gospel, See 2 Sam. 7. 10. Or thus, I will place them in their own houses, that is, in my Church (saith Polanus) which hath its houses and places of receipt among all people the whole world thoroughout, where they may serve God, without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all their dayes. Thus the Apostles in their travels, where ever they came, found brethren, &c. and having nothing, yet they possessed all things, 1 Cor. 6. 10. True tranquility and sound security is to be found no where but in Christ, Mic. 4. 4. and 5. 5. nor by any but by those that hear him roaring, and calling them to the participation of his grace and peace. Those that hearken to Christs Oracles shall dwell in his tabernacle.

Verse 12. Ephraim compasseth me about with lies, ] They get about me as if they would do me double service (Psal. 76. 11. the saints are called a people that are round about God: and Psal. 148. 14. a people near unto him, and that compasseth his altar. See Rev. 4. 4.) but all's but counterfeit: a meer imposture, a loud lie, Psal. 78. 36 whereby they would cozen me of heaven, if they could: putting upon me false coyn silver'd over a little; and circumventing me, if it lay in their power. But what saith Bernard, Sapiens nummularius Deus est; Nummum fictum non recipit. God is a wise Mint-man: there's no beguiling him with counterfeit coyn. Hypocrisie (that reall lie) is an odious, a complexive evil: for it hath in it, 1. Guile, opposite to simplicity, as intending to beguile God, which he cannot, and man, which he fain would, and oft doth, to further his worldly and wicked designs, as Judas, Herod, Matth. 2. 8. Pharisees, Mat. 23. 14. 2. Falshood, opposite to truth; as onely acting religion, playing devotion, compassing God with deceit, as the house of Israel here, deceiving him not by impotency onely, and in the event; but by imposture, and so in purpose; contenting themselves with a shew, with a semblance, Luke 8. 18. with a form of knowledge, Rom. 2. 20. and of godliness, 2 Tim. 3. 5. rather seeming to be good, then seeking to be so. These are hells free-holders: and other sinners are said but to have their part with them. There are that thus interpret this Text; Ephraim compasseth me, the Prophet preaching mercy, and promising good things, they beset me, and gather close about me, as desirous of my doctrine: but it is in mendacio, in batifoll hypocrisie (see Ezek. 31. 31, 32.) and when I crosse them never so little, they craftily conspire to prejudice my Ministry, to asperse my person, &c. To preach faith One, is nothing else

but to derive the rage of the whole world upon a mans self, to become the But-mark, yea the Center ad quod omnes linea dolorum tendunt, to which all the lines of lies and falsehoods do tend.

but Judah yet ruleth with God, ] To serve God is to rule with him (as Livia said, she ruled her husband Augustus, by obeying him) It is the greatest liberty, Rom. 6. 18, 22. 1 Pet. 2. 16. Abraham was a prince of God, Jacob prevailed with God, and had power as a Prince, Gen. 32. 28. Moses (as if he had been Chancellor of heaven) over-ruled the business, and God is fain to bespeak his own freedom, Exod. 32. 10. Judah also is here said to rule with God, to be potent with him; because God was sincerely served amongst them, and they held fast their first integrity: the true religion was openly professed, and the true worship of God incorruptly maintained in the Temple at Jerusalem. This made Abijah (though none of the best) so boldly to boast, and he prevailed: so that there fell down of Israel slain four hundred thousand, 2 Chron. 14. 10, 17. and yet the men of Judah that slew them, were but four hundred thousand in all, verse 3. Israels Apostacy is here aggravated by Judah's integrity: they were not under the temptation of evil example. Judah was the worse for them, and not they for Judah.

and is faithfull with the Saints. ] Or, with the most Holy: he keepeth the faith to God, those Holy Ones, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit (so some sence it) as Job. 24. 19. Prov. 9. 10. he is far from those false and fraudulent dealings where-with the ten Tribes seek to circumvent and beguile God. Or thus, Judah is faithfull with the saints of former ages: he holds to his old principles, to the good old way, wherein Abraham and the other Ancients went before him. He is also faithfull with such as are sanctified, the true priests of God, consecrated to himself, and set apart for holy use: In opposition to the ten Tribes, who went after those leaden priests made by Ieroboam of the lower sort of the people, and well fitted to golden deities. Lastly, he is faithfull with the people of God, those good souls that left the ten Tribes and went to Judah, to the true worship of God. With these Judah was faithfull, courteous, and communicative: embracing and encouraging them all that might be. This was a singular commendation.

CHAP. XII.

Isay 55. 10.
2 Cor. 9. 10.

Verse 1. Ephraim feedeth on wind, ] Slender feeding; unlesse Ephraim were of the Chamaleon-kind: quippe nec cor auro satiatur nec corpus auri. Wind fills, but feeds not. Ephraim had sowed the wind, chap. 8. 7. but to what profit? Hee that ministrereth seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, would here, surely, neither give bread for food, nor multiply their seed sown, but send them to the gods that they had chosen, and to their confederates whom they so relied upon, from whom they should reap the whirlwind. (See the Note on chap. 8. 7.) Wind, we know, bloweth up storms and tempests: so doth idolatry and creature-confidence, the tempest of Gods wrath that will never be blown over.

and followeth after the East-wind, ] Which if he catch, a great catch he is like to have of it. Eurus est ventus urens & exsiccans. The East-wind is noted in Scripture for pernicious and hurtfull to fruits and herbs, Gen. 41. 6. Ezek. 7. 10. and 29. 17. Hos. 13. 15. violent it is also, and spareth not men, Ion. 4. 8. The Seventy render it, αἰνῶνα, a burning blast, as they do the former words, Ephraim is an evil spirit, by a mistake of the points. Iob speaketh of some that fill their bellies with the East-wind; they think to do so, but it proves otherwise: they snuff up the wind with the wild-asse, but it tumours them onely, and proves pestilentiall. It is very dangerous for men to follow after their own conceits and counsels. It may be worse to them upon their death-beds, when they are lanching into the main of Immortality, then any rough East-wind, or then any Euroclydon, that wind mentioned, Acts 27. 14. that hath its name from stirring up stormes, and is by Pliny called Navigantium pestis, the Mariners misery. An empty body meeting with tempests, will have much ado to bear up. If Ephraim first feed upon wind, and then fall under the East-wind, it must needs go hard with him. The godly man, who is filled with all the fulnesse of God, Ephes. 3. 19. shall have him for a refuge from the

the storme, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storme against the wall, Esay 25. 4. His prayer is that of Ieremy, chap. 17. vers. 17. Be not thou a terror unto me, O Lord: thou art my hope in the day of evil. If the wind be not got into the earth, and stir not there, storms and tempests abroad cannot make an earthquake: no more can afflictions, or death, an earthquake, where there is peace with God: Such a mans mind immota manet, is as mount Zion which cannot be removed.

He daily increaseth lies and desolation, ] This being the fruit and consequent of those; for flagitium & flagellum sicut acus & filum, sinne and punishment are inseparable companions, Wo unto them for they have fled from me: destruction unto them, because they have transgressed against me, Hos. 7. 13. See the Note there. To heap up lies, is to hasten desolation: A false witnesse shall not be unpunished: and he that speaketh lies shall perish, Prov. 19. 9. They tell us of a threefold lie, i. e. A merry lie, an officious lie, and a pernicious lie. But the truth is, every lie is pernicious: and a man should rather die then lie. He that lieth in jest, may go to hell for it in earnest. Iacob told his father an officious three-fold lie, and scarce ever had a merry day after it, Gen. 27. 19. God followed him with one sorrow upon another, to teach him and us, what an evil and a bitter thing it is to commutare lirs, as here, and how it ensnares and ensharles us.

And they do make a covenant with the Assyrian, and oil is carried into Egypt. ] that is, all precious and pleasant substance was carried for a present, to make room for them. Oil is instanted, as the chief staple commodity of the land; (see Ezek. 27. 17.) and in Egypt very scarce: This sin of theirs in seeking to other nations, and relying on the arme of flesh, is oft reprov'd and threatned thoroughout this Prophecie. See chap. 5. 13. & 7. 11. & 9. 8. & 10. 4. & 11. 5. To teach Gods Ministers to continue crying out against the prevailing finnes of the people, and never give over, till they see a reformation wrought amongst them. The Grecians are always liars, &c. Rebuke them sharply, saith the Apostle; yea, be instant and constant, in season, and out of season, using the same liberty in beating down sin, that men do to commit it. Chrysostom told his hearers at Antioch, that till they left their swearing, he would never leave preaching against it.

Th. 1. 19.

Verse 2. The Lord hath also a controversy with Judah, ] Left the Prophet should be thought partiall in the law, Mal. 2. 9. (See the Note there) and left Ephraim should say of Judah, as once Oded did of Israel; Are there not with them, even with them also, finnes against the Lord? The Prophet answers by way of confession, that there were so indeed; and that therefore God had a controversy with them, a litigation, or disceptation: he was expostulating with them by words, and some lighter stroaks, notwithstanding he had commended them before, as ruling with God, and retaining his pure worship: God would take his time to deal with them too, for their many impieties, and especially for running to Egypt for help, as they did in the dayes of Ahaz, and Zedekiah; see Esay 30. 2. and 31. 1. but because they were not yet so bad as the ten Tribes, nor so desperately wicked, therefore the Lord was yet but pleading with them; he had not passed sentence, he was not resolved upon their ruine and utter extirpation: as he was for the ten Tribes, those foul Apostates and shamelesse covenant-breakers: concerning whom he saith, and is set upon't, I will punish Jacob according to his wayes. ] See the like words, chap. 4. verse 9. with the Note. He calls them Jacob, because they gloried much in him: their Progenitour, as did likewise the Samaritans that succeeded them, Iob. 4. 12. So did the Jews in Misab chap. 2. 70. But the Prophet Hosea answereth them in effect (as there) by proving a disparity: O thou that art named the house of Jacob, (that wilt needs be named so, and therein prides thy self) is the Spirit of the Lord straitned? (ye are not surely straitned to him, but in your own bowels, that yee expresse Jacob no better, that ye resemble him no more) Are these his doings? was Jacob a man of your practises? No: for he left no means unattempted, that hee might attain the blessing; he strove for it with his brother in the womb, afterwards with the Angel, against whom with much wrestling and raising of dust, he prevailed, as it followeth in the two next verses.

Verse 3. He took his brother by the heel in the womb, ] to have hindred him if he could, of the first-birth-right; so desirous he shewed himself, so soon, of that defireable privilege, and the promises annexed. Whence we may learn (saith One) that God taketh care even of unborn babes, that belong to him, and worketh strangely in them sometimes, as he did in the Baptist, Luke 1. 44. the child leaped in the womb, by a supernatural motion; he leaped more like a suckling at the breast, as the word signifieth, than an unborn Embryo. Mention had been made in the former verse, of the name of Jacob: here we have the etymon, or reason of that name; He took his brother by the heel, or foot-sole, as if he would have turned up his heels and got to the goal before him. Hence his name was called Jacob, Gen. 25. 26. that is, Caldanearius, or Heel-catcher, as if he would have pulled his brother back; or preface of what he should afterwards do, viz. supplant Esau, and get the preeminence both of birth-right, and blessing; Gen. 27. 36. and withall a fruit, an instance of Gods free grace, in preferring Jacob when he could not yet do any thing that was good, before Esau, though he were the elder, stronger, stouter, a manly child, a man already, as his name importeth, one that had every thing more like a man than a babe. See Mal. 1. 2. with the Note. And observe, that God here upbraideth *Jacob*s degenerate brood, with his benefits toward him their forefather, whereof they now walked so utterly unworthy.

ἐν τῇ αὐτοῦ. And by his strength, [i. By his hard labour, say the Seventy: but better, by, or in his strength, that is, by the supply of the Spirit of Iesus Christ, Phil. 1. 19. and by the power of the Almighty, casting him down with the one hand, and bearing him up with the other;

He had power with God; Heb. he played the Prince with God, fortitor & fideliter se gerit; he bore himself bravely, and had strength with God. He doth not lie down, faint and discouraged, but wrestled with excellent wrestling; he held with his hands; when his joints were out of joint. He wrestled in the night, and alone, and when God was leaving him, and upon one leg, and prevailed, as it is in the next verse. This he did partly by his bodily strength elevated, for he was a very strong man; as appeareth Gen. 29. 10. by his rolling the great stone from the Well mouth; but principally by the force of his faith put forth in prayer, which can work wonders. Oh, its a sweet thing indeed to be strengthened with might, by the spirit, in the inner man, Origin his home, non est amicum! This is the generation of them that seek him: that seek thy face, this is Jacob's yea, this is Israel, for so God brightned him, as it were, in the field for his good service: and new named him Gen. 32. 28. Neither were the faithfull ever since called Abrahamites, or Ismaelites, but Israelites; for honours sake. Should I dare to call me that Angel of the Covenant, Mat.

3. 10. the Angel of the great Council, as the Seventy render, Esay 9. 6. the Lord Christ, who redeemed Jacob from all evil, Gen. 48. 16. and is called Elobim in the former verse. Jacob is reproved for asking his name, an argument of his Majestic God as he that mounseth all creatures, and hath no parallel, so he surpasseth all potion, and is above all name. The Africans call him Amom, that is, Hens, in, quis es?

tion, and is above all name. The Africans call him Amon, that is, Hens, tu, quis es? Our best eloquence of him, is a humble silence: Or if we say anything, to say as in the next verse following, Jehovah, God of hosts, Jehovah is his memorial, and prevailed: 3. Sept. Ammon. He had power, or got the better, Christ yielding himself overcome by the prayers of the Patriarch: for the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, saith St. James: there is a kinde of omnipotency in it, saith Isaiah, of whom also that saying passed amongst his friends, Isa vir potius apud Deum, quid vultis, That man could do what he would with God. The reason wherof is given by St. Hieron, in these words, Deus ipse qui nullis contra se viribus superari potest, precibus vincitur, that is God himself, who is otherwise insuperable, may be overcome by prayers: provided that men persevere in prayer as Jacob did, holding out till the morning-light, and growing more resolute toward the later end, then he had been before.

He wept, and made supplication. ] Jacob did. (not the Angel, as Mercer and Druid fims would carry it ) His wrestling was by weeping, and his prevailing by praying.

We

We read not till this Text, of his weeping for the blessing, (no more we do of the earthquake in Hezekiah's dayes, till Amos 1. and Zach. 14.) But this we know, that ardent prayer is a pouring out of the soul to God, not without a shower of tears, or at least a storm of sighes. And as musick upon the water sounds farther, and more harmoniously then upon the land: so prayers with tears are more pleasing to God, and prevalent with him. Christ could not but look back to those weeping women that followed him to the crosse, and comfort them. Tears of compassion, and of compunction, when men love and weep, as Mary Magdalen did, are very acceptable to God, who puts them into his bottle as precious. There are tears of another sort, lachrima nequitie, tears of wickednesse, expressed either by hypocrisie or a desire of revenge: such were Esa's tears for the blessing too, Gen. 27. 38. but he went without it, because a profane hypocrite: he cried out of discontent, and threatened his brother Jacob: he complained of his fathers store, (Hast thou but one blessing) of his brothers subtilty, (was he not rightly called Jacob?) but not a word of his own wickednesse. He roared for the disquietnesse of his heart, but he did not, as Jacob, weep and make supplication to his Judge, deploring his own wants, and imploring the supplies of his grace, quam unice expetijt, as the main thing he desired.

he found him in Bethel, ] that is the Lord found Jacob there, Gen. 28. 18. but especially, Gen. 35. 14. confirming his promises to him and all his posterity.

there he spake with us, ] who were then in Jacob's loyns, and promised that God should be our God: but we have falsified with him, and turned Bethel into Beth-aven: abusing that place to idolatry and calf-worship, where we, in our forefathers, had so many manifestations of divine mercy. Oh better he had never spoken with us there, then that we should have so slighted his promises, cast his words behinde our backs, and wickedly departed from our God. Is this Jacob-like, &c. There he spake with us. What he spake with Jacob, he spake with us: and wee are to hold our selves no lesse concerned therein then he was. See a like expression. Psal. 66. 6. See likewise, R m. 15. 4. and Heb. 13. 5. what God spake to Ioshua, chap. 1. 5. he spake to all Beleevers. And that which he spake to his afflicted, Psal. 102. He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer, that he spake to us: for verse 18. This shall be written for the generations to come. The Hebrews have a proverb, Qua patribus a ciderunt signum sunt filijs, What things befall the fathers, those were a signe to their children: and thence it is, that the deeds of the fathers are oft attributed to the children. Let us labour to see our own names written upon every promise: and secure our interest by searching for the conditions whereunto the promises are annexed; and then put them in suit by faithfull prayer, saying with David, Remember thy word unto thy servant; whereupon thou hast caused me to trust.

Verse 5. Even the Lord God of hosts, ] Lo, He it is who promised, who spake with us at Bethel: even that Jehovah who is himself unchangeable and Almighty; whose promises are eternall, and infallible: who will perform with his hand, what he hath spoken with his mouth, to the thousandth generation of those that return unto him. Concerning Gods name Jehovah, see the Note on Mal. 3. 6. Concerning his Title, God of Hosts, see the Notes on Mal. 3. 17. Doff. 1.

The Lord is his memoriall. ] Jehovah is that nomen majestativum (as Tertullian hath it) that holy and reverend name of God, whereby he will be known, and remembered, Exod. 3. 19. which place doth notably illustrate this. True it is, that the Jews to countenance their conceit of the ineffability of this name Jehovah, do corrupt that Text: and, for this is my name Legnalam for ever; they read, this is my name Legnalam, to be concealed. Where it is well observed by One, how crosse the superstition of men is to the will of God. They in a pretended reverence to God, will not so much as mention this name; because they say, 'tis a name that God so much glorieth in: and yet the Text saith, this name is Gods memoriall: it is the name by which he would be remembered to all generations, as that which setteth forth his glory more then any other Name whatsoever. So that when we would have a holy memoriall of God (and to remember Him, is every whit as needfull as to draw breath, saith an Ancient) we need no Images or other unwarrantable helps: the meditation of the Name Jehovah, and the import of it, will be of singular use.

that way. Papists have their pictures, and their memories, as they call them; Idolaters fain to themselves diverse representations, and remembrances. Behind the doors also and the posts hast thou set up thy remembrances, Esay 57. 8. where Gods Law should have been written, according to Deut. 6. 9. & 11. 12. and when as Gods Name should have been remembred, Psal. 135. 13. and Psal. 102. 12.

Verse 6. Therefore turn thou to thy God, ] The premises considered, Repent: and so return to God from whom thou hast deeply revolted. It is to thy God, to whom thou art exhorted to turn; not to a tyrant, but to a God in covenant: yea it is wish thy God (as the Hebrew hath it) with his good help, that thou shalt turn. Onely cry unto him, Turn us Lord, and we shall be turned, draw us, and we will run after thee, &c. Of turning to the Lord, see the Note on Zach. 1. 3.

Keep mercy and judgement, ] Those magnalia legis, those weightier matters of the Law (as our Saviour calleth them, Matth. 23. 23.) which Ephraim had made light of, chap. 4. 1. He is therefore called upon to evidence the truth of his turning to God, by bringing forth fruits meet for repentance, Matth. 3. 8. such as are, tantamount, and weigh just as much as repentance comes to. Optima & aptissima penitentia est nova vita, faith Luther; The best and rightest repentance is a new life, universall obedience to both Tables of the Law: Mercy and judgement are here put (by a figure) for the duties of the second Table: as constant waiting upon God for the duties of the first: for the Prophet here observeth not the order of nature, but of our knowledge, when he instanteth first in the second Table, as doth also the Prophet Micah, chap. 6. 8. Mercy must be kept and exercised, by 1 Giving, 2 Forgiving: This God prefers before sacrifice, Hos. 6. 7. This Chrysostom faith, is a more glorious work then to raise from the dead. And here let those that would keep mercy (and not shew it onely sometimes, when they are in a good mood) steep their thoughts in the mercies of God: and so strive to be mercifull, as their heavenly Father is, Matth. 6. Judgement also must be kept, and justice done, Esay 56. 1. after the example of God, who is said to exercise loving-kindnesse, but withall judgement, and righteoufnesse in the earth, Ier. 9. 24. Gracious is the Lord, and righteous, yea our God is mercifull, Psal. 116. 5. the mixture of mercy and judgement is very comely: as in publike persons, Psal. 101. 1. (where we see, that Dauids ditty was composed of discords, which made an excellent harmony) so in others of all sorts, Prov. 21. 21. who are required to be mercifully just, and justly mercifull in all their enterdealings: according to that golden rule, given by our Saviour, Luke 6. 31. Whatever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye to them likewise. This is the standard.

and wait on thy God continually. ] First, beleeve Him to be thy God, by a particular individuating faith: and then thou wilt be easily drawn to wait upon him, who waiteth to be gracious: or to draw near unto him, (as the Seventy here render it) and come boldly to the throne of grace, Heb. 4. 16. for as the Ark of the Covenant, and the Mercy-seat, were never separated: so neither is the mercy of God from those that are in covenant with him, and can truly call him Theirs. Hope is compared to a line (the same Hebrew word that signifieth the one signifieth the other) and waiting on God is nothing else but Hope and Trust lengthened, or drawn out. Sure it is that Trust in God at length will triumph: and all his dispensations will appear beautifull in their season. Hold out therefore faith and patience. Wait upon the Lord, be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thy heart: Wait I say upon the Lord. Ponder that sweet promise, Habak. 2. 3. not delivered only, but doubled, and trebled for more surety. And then consider first thy distance from God in worth, and degree: next thy deperdance upon him, thine undone condition, if he desert thee: and then thou wilt be content to wait upon him continually, to stay his leisure as David did for the kingdom, and as those in Esther did for deliverance: to say with those good souls in the Acts, The will of the Lord be done.

Verse 7. He is a merchant, ] Heb. He is Canaan, that is, a meer natural man, Ezek. 16. 3. a money-merchant, who so he may have it, careth not how he comes by it: he is more like a Canaanite then a Jacobite. Jacob said, I have enough my brother; but Ephraim is sick of the plague of unsatisfiability: and instead of keep mercy and judgement, as in the former verse, he keepeth false ballances in his hand, and and false weights in his bag, Deut. 15. 13, 14, 15. Lev. 19. 36. Prov. 11. 1. and 16. 11. and 20. 10. See the Notes there; He that hath his hands full of the ballances of deceit, and will not loose them to take hold of God, will not part with his fat and sweet (as the Vine and Olive in Iothams Parable) though it be to raigne in heaven, how can it be expected that he should turne to God, or that he should love to be his servant; Esay 56. 6?

when hee loveth to oppresse.] To get gain, if not by fraud and cunning contrivance, then by force, and by forged cavillation, as Luke 19. 9. Sic quacunq; potest arte nocere, nocet: And all this he loveth to do: he delights in it; he not onely is pleased with it, but pleadeth for it, and opposeth with crest and brest whatsoever standeth in the way of his own heart; exercised with covetousnesse, (as S. Peters phrase is, 2 Pet. 2. 14.) which he constantly followeth, as the Artificer doth his trade. Let such Canaanites read that flaming text, 1 Thess. 4. 6. and take heed, lest while they get all they can, by wretch and wile, lest while they count all good fish that comes to net, they catch at length the Devil and all: lest they receive no lesse summes of curses, then of coyn; lest screech-owls of woe cry aloud, from the beams of their chambers, &c. See the Note on chap. 7. 1.

[Verse 8. And Ephraim said, yet I am become rich,] Sed mihi plaudo domi. I have it howsoever, though I hear ill for it; though the Prophet inveigh against my covetousnesse, yet I am rich, while he and his companions are poor, and indigent:

yea I have found me out substance,] An idol, so the Vulgar renders it: and indeed, every covetous man is an idolater, and performs both outward and inward service to his Mammon of unrighteousnesse, to his golden-calf. Substance hee here crackes of, and rest to his soul (as the Seventy render it) in opposition happily to the aery notions (as he accounted them) of the Prophets invectives against his covetous practises, and the terrours of his own conscience, which he endeavoured to corrupt and bribe: See to like purpose, Esay 57. 10. Thou hast found the life of thy hand, that is, a livelihood by thy labour; therefore thou wast not grieved: thy heart is hardened, and thou art insensible of thy sin-guiltinesse; thou testest the gain against the guilt, and then all is hail with thee. Felix scelus vitas vocatur; Prosperous wickednesse is accounted vertue. Leah, because fruitfull, and successfull, rejoiced in that whereof she had greater reason to repent. So did those Idolaters, Ier. 44. 11. Dionysius, after the spoil of an idol-Temple, finding the winds favourable in his Navigation; Lo, said he, how the gods approve of sacriledge. It is no better that Ephraim here deals with the Almighty: Surely saith he, if God disliked my courses so much as the Prophet would make beleieve, I should not gather wealth as I do: but the world comes tumbling in upon me, therefore my wayes are good before God. This is an ordinary paralagisme, whereby wicked worldlings deceive their own souls; hardning and heartning themselves in their sinfull practises, because they outwardly prosper. But a painted face is no signe of a good complexion. Seneca could say, That it is the greatest unhappinesse to prosper in evil.

In all my labours,] so he calleth his fraudulent and violent practises, as making the best of an ill matter.

They shall find no iniquity in me.] Though they search as narrowly as Laban did into Jacobs stuff: What can they find, or prove by me? Am I not able, either to hide mine ill-dealings, or to defend them? Can they take the advantage of the Law against me? Why then should I be thus condemned and cried out of, as I am? Thus the rich man is wise in his own conceit, Prov. 28. 11. and covetousnesse is never without its cloak, 1 Thess. 2. 5. which yet is too short to cover it from God, who is not mocked with masks, or fed with fained words, whereof the covetous carter is full, 2 Pet. 2. 3. witness Ephraim here, with his pretences, of innocency, In all my labours, that is, mine ill-gotten goods; (the fruit of mine hard and honest labour, saith he) they shall find none iniquity; no crimen stellionatus, no craft or cruelty.

That were sinne.] Piculum esset, that were a foul businesse: farre be it from me to stain my trading, or burden my conscience with any such misdeed. I would you should know, I am as shie of sinne as another: neither would I be taken tripping for any good. Thus men notoriously guilty, may yet give good words, yea largely professe what they are guilty of, to be an abominable thing. And this is a sure signe of a profane and cauterized conscience, of an heart that being first turned into earth and mud, doth afterwards freez and congeal into steel and adamant.

Verse 9. And I that am thy Lord God from the land of Egypt, ] This seemeth to be interlaced for the comfort of the better sort, that trembled at the former threatenings: for as in a family, if the dogs be beaten, the children will be apt to cry; so is it in Gods house. Hence he is carefull to take out the precious from the vile, and telleth them, that he hath not cast off his people whom he foreknew: but would surely observe his ancient covenant, made even in the land of Egypt toward his spirituall Israel.

I will yet make them to dwell in tabernacles, &c. ] i. e. I will deliver my Church from the spiritual Egypt: and make her to passe thorow the wilderness of the world, in particular Churches, aspiring toward the heavenly Canaan: even as my people dwelt in Tents in the wilderness, the remembrance whereof is celebrated in the feast of Tabernacles, Lev. 23. 43. See Zach. 14. 16. with the Note.

Esay 30. 20.

Verse 10. I have also spoken by the Prophets, ] And not suffered you to walk in your own wayes, as did all other Nations, Acts 14. 16. The Ministry is a singular mercy, however now vilipended.

and I have multiplied visions, ] whereby I have discovered thy present sins, and imminent dangers, though thou hast said, They shall finde none iniquity in me, &c. and used similitudes by the ministry of the Prophets, ] Heb. by the hand, which is the instrument of instruments, saith the Philosopher: so is the ministry of the word, for the good of souls. It is called a hand, because it sets upon mens souls with the strength of God, and a certain vehemency. Did not my word lay hold upon your fathers? Zach. 1. 6. See the Note there. It is said, Luke 5. 17. that as Christ was teaching, the power of the Lord was present, &c. The Gospel of Christ is the power of God, Rom. 1. 16. It is his mighty arm, Esay 53. 1. Now it was ordinary with the Prophets to use similitudes, as Esay 5. 2. Ezek. 16. 3. which is an excellent way of preaching and prevailing: as that which doth noth notably illustrate the truth, and insinuate into mens affections. Galeatius Caraccolum, an Italian Marquesse, and Nephew to Pope Paul the fift, was converted by Peter Martyr reading on 1 Corinth. and using an apt similitude. Ministers must turn themselves into all formes and shapes, both of spirit and of speech for the reaching of their hearers hearts; they must come unto them in the most woin, winning, and convincing way that may be. Onely in using of Similies, they must, 1. Bring them from things known and familiar, things that their hearers are most acquainted with, and accustomed to. Thus the Prophets draw comparisons from fishes to the Egyptians, vineyards to the Jews, droves of cattle to the Arabians, trade and traffique to the Egyptians. And thus that great Apostle, 1 Cor. 9. 24. fetcheth Similies from runners, and wrestlers, exercises that they were well acquainted with in the Isthmian Games, instituted by Thesus, not far from their city. 2. Similies must be very naturall, plain, and proper. 3. They must not be too far urged: we must not witwanton it in using them: and let it be remembered, that though they much illustrate a truth, yet Theologia parabolica nihil probat. There are interpreters of good note, that read this whole verse in the future tense; and make a continuation of that promise in the verse afore. I will speak by the Prophets, sc. in the dayes of the Gospel, when great was the company of those that published it, Psal. 68. 11. I will multiply visions: See this fulfilled, Acts 2. 17. with Joel 2. 28. I will use similitudes, teach in parables, and illustrate therewith grave sentences. and doctrines, as Christ and his Apostles did, and as the best Preachers still do, that they may thereby set forth things to the life, and make them as plain, as if written with the Sunbeams.

Verse 11. Is there iniquity in Gilead? ] What in Gilead, a city of Priests? (See chap. 6. ver. 8. with the Note) yea Gilead is a city of those that work iniquity, a very Poneropolis, a place of naughty-packs, chap. 4. 15. Now there is not a worse creature on earth, then a wicked Priest, nor a worse place then a wicked Gilead.

The.

The Hebrew hath it thus: Is Gilead iniquity? Or and another, Drusius, and others, Surely it is so. Confer Mich. 1. 5. Gregory Nazianzen reports of Athen, that it was the plagueiest place in the world for superstition. Our Universities were so in times of Popery, and began to be so again, a few years since. Revera Gilead est iniquitas, profecto vanitas sunt, they were grown so incorrigibly flagitious, that they seemed to be as it were, transformed into sinnes image. Some render the Text thus: Is there iniquity in Gilead? Arashey namely, vanity in Gilead? They sacrifice bullocks, &c. and set this fence upon it: What? think you the men of Gilead, those beyond the river of Jordan, whom Tiglath Pileser spoiled and led captives, that they onely were guilty of idolatry, and you not, because you remain at home, untouched of the Assyrian? Nay, saith Hos, the very entrance into the Countrey, Gilead it self, so aboundeth with idolatry, that it is not to be doubted, but in the rest of the parts of the kingdom, their altars are as thick as furrows in the field, that is to say, innumerable. Some think this last phrase, their altars are as thick as the furrows of the field (or of my fields, whereof I am chief Lord, and wherein he should have served me, and not idols) hath reference to some superstitious way of theirs, of seeking God, by erecting altars in the furrows, for the fructifying of their fields, the Heathen did so to their Dij Terminales: and the Papiists still do so in their solemn Processions, erecting crosses and crucifixes in the bounds of their fields, and thereby thinking to get a blessing on their corn and pastures. Tanquid non noteth here, that God in the old Testament would therefore have but one Altar, whereon to offer sacrifice, and that to be at Jerusalem onely: to teach them that Christ, the Anti-type of all their sacrifices, should once be offered up upon the altar of his Crosse, a propitiation for their sinnes. Mich. chap. 9. 8. & 10. This Altar he also appointed to be in the Temple, that the sacrificers might believe the gracious presence of God with them, and might worship him in spirit and in truth. you are turned to

Verse 12. And Jacob fled into the countrey of Syria, Isaac, in whom ye glory, was a poor forlorne fugitive, glad to runne for his life, and to take hand on for his livelyhood. Gen. 28 & 29. This they were bound by the Law to make confession of, ever when they offered their basket of first-fruits, and to say, A Syrian ready to perish was my father, &c. Deus. 26. 6. that, considering the meanness of their original, they might not boast of their intoltry; but magnific Gods free-grace in their present enjoyments; and say as that noble Athenian General Aphierates did, in the midst of all his triumphs, He gloried not from how great calamitie and misery, to what great blessedness and glory are we exalted? King Agasicles, would be served in earthen vessels, to remind him of his father, who was a poor potten Willigis Arch bishop of Mantz, Anno 1011 being a Wheel-wrights sonne, hang'd wheels, and wheel-wrights-tools round about his bed-chamber, and under-wrote in Capitall Letters, Willigis, Willig is regale, unde vneris, Remember things Originall. How low and mean were we of this Nation at first? Brich signifieth blew-coloured, so with word; Hence our name Britains. This was their fine clothing: their food was barks of trees and roots. Herodotus saith, what some old men he knew, who told of times in England, that if the good-man of the house had a matrix, or a flock-bed, and a sack of chaffe to rest his head on, he thought himself as well lodg'd, as the Lord of the Town: for ordinarily, they lay upon straw-pallets covered with canvas, and a round log under their heads instead of a bolster. They said, pillows were fit onely for women in child-bed: and in a good farmers house, it was rare to find four pieces of Pewter: and it was accounted a great matter, that a farmer should shew five shillings, or a noble together in silver, &c. There are that render the Text thus: Thither fled Jacob out of the countrey of Syria, after Isaac had served for a wife, and for a wife had hepe shepherds blowed him

Verse 13. Thither also by a Prophet did Jehovah bring up Israhel out of Egypt, &c. ] that is, Gilead served as a sanctuary unto Jacob, when he fled from Laban. In Gilead also God by Jehovah renewed his Covenant with your fathers, after he had brought them out of Egypt, by the hand of Moses and Aaron. A horrible thing therefore it is, if well considered, that these two places should now be so compared with idolatry, and become the nurseries of evil, which heretofore were the means of so great comfort to Gods people. Thus Punjab, Belanus, and others. A witty interpretation, but somewhat forced.

And Israel served for a wife, ] He had nothing to endow her with; he would therefore earn her with his hard labour: wherein he shewed singular humility, patience, meeknesse, waiting upon Gods providence: none of all which graces were found in his degenerate posterity, who yet prided themselves in their father Jacob.

And for a wife he kept sheep. ] q. d. Jacob, that he might obey his father, was content to serve his Uncle; and to suffer a great deal of wrong from him: but ye refuse to serve me though a liberall Lord, a bountifull Benefactour. He held close to me in that hard service: but you abusing your liberty, enslave your selves to false gods. He in his misery kept his confidence of the blessing: but you in your prosperity, cast it clean away, &c. Luther upon this Text speaketh much about the blessing of a good wife, (a commodity that cannot be too dear bought) and the plague of a scold that is alwayes rayling and wrangling. The Heathen well saith, that every man when he marieth, bringeth either a good, or an evil spirit into his house; and so maketh it either an heaven or an hell. Pareus well observeth here, the great use of Histories and holy examples, according to Rom. 15. 4. Plauto thinks that Historia comes of ἱστορίαι & ἴστωρ, of stopping the flux of errors and enormities.

Verse 13. And by a Prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, ] By Moses that Prophet, by an excellencie: as Aristotle is called the Philosopher, Tully the Orator, Paul the Apostle, Calvin, the most learned Interpreter, &c. Moses was a famous Prophet indeed, and a Type of Christ. Confer Dent. 18. 15, 18. and 34. 10, 11, 12. Acts 3. 22. and 7. 35, 36, 37, 38. Theodoret calleth him the great Ocean of Divinity. Bellarmine, Gods speciall favorite, then whom Antiquity had nihil sapientius, sanctius, mirius, none more wise, meek, and holy: Indeed, titles of honour are not worthy of him. Howbeit he was but a mean man at first, Exod. 4. 30. he took his wife and his sonne and set them upon an asse; that was the best, and the onely beast that he had, for ought we read. It was not very likely that so poor a Prophet should do so great a deed. But God loves to help his people with a little help, Dan. 11. 34. that through weaker means, his greater strength may appear. His end here may seem to be the same as before, in setting forth Jacobs meanness, to take down the haughtinesse of the people, proud of their Founders and forefathers. A Prophet he is purposely called, and his name concealed. 1. To shew, that the work was done not by might nor by power, but by Gods Spirit; Zech. 4. 6. 2. To shew what God will do for his people by the prayers and for the sake of his Prophets, when they are most shiftlesse and hopelesse. 3. To let this unworthy people see how much God had done for them once by a Prophet, how little soever now they see by such. This is Cyrus observation.

Verse 14. Ephraim hath provoked him to anger, most bitterly, ] Heb. with bitterness, or unto bitter displeasure, or with bitter things, that is, sinnes that imbitter Gods Spirit and put thunder-bolts into his hands. As a Bee stings not till provoked, so neither doth God punish, till there be no remedy, 2 Chron. 36. 16. If Ephraim will provoke him to anger, (which he will not dare to do to his land-lord) if he will put it to the triall, whether God can be angry, as those did, Heb. 3. 9. he shall know the power of his wrath, Psal. 90. 11. he shall feel, to his sorrow, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that he hath forsaken the Lord, and that his fear is not in them; Jer. 2. 19. there will be bitterness in the end, Principium dulce est, sed finis amoris amarum, Amor amator. Lust is a lie, as Amnon proved. Her end is bitter as wormwood, though her lips drop as an honey-combe, saith Solomon of sinfull pleasure, Prov. 5. 3. It is like Jonathans honey, or Esaus pottage, or Iudas his thirty pence, which he would gladly have been rid of, but could not. Those that provoke God shall one day hear, Do ye provoke me to anger? Are ye stronger then I? they shall be taught to meddle with their match, and not to contend with him that is mightier then they, Eccles. 6. 10. they shall cry out in the bitterness of their souls, as Lam. 3. 15. He hath filled me with bitterness, he hath made me drunk with wormwood. And God shall reply, as Jer. 4. 18. Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee: and this is thy wickednesse, because it is bitter.

the guilt of his sinne shall remain upon his soul, and then punishment cannot be far off. See Ezek. 24. 7, 8. with chap. 18. 13. Job. 2. 29. Or, the enemy shall leave him all bloody.

and his reproach shall his Lord return unto him. ] His Lord, not the Assyrian, as some sence it, but his Liege Lord (whom he hath reproached, by changing his glory into the similitude of a calf, and other corruptible things) shall cry quittance with him, as verse 2. cast utter contempt upon him, according to 1 Sam. 2. 30. and make him know that he is his Lord.

Rom. 1. 23.

C H A P. XIII.

Verse 1. When Ephraim spake trembling, ] Or, there was trembling, as there is among the beasts of the field; when the Lion roareth. Ephraim whiles innocent of the great offence, spake with authority, and none durst budge against him: for he had great power in his hand. Now, as the Philosopher told Adrian the Emperour, who challenged him to dispute; Difficile est ei contradicere, qui potest aqua & igni interdicere: vel adversus eum scribere, qui potest proscribere. It is dangerous meddling with the Lions beard. Nebuchadnezzars Majesty was such, that all people, nations, and languages trembled and feared before him, Dan. 5. 19. wheresoever his commands or armies came, there were very great heart-quakes and concussions of spirit. Where the word of a king is, there is power: and who may say unto him, What dost thou? Eccles. 8. 4. Job was no king: and yet whiles hee was Jobab, that is, in a prosperous condition, The young men saw him, and hid themselves: the nobles held their peace, and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth, Job 29. 8, 10. The people feared Jobab (chap. 4. 14.) as they feared Moses, all the dayes of his life: for why? the Lord had magnified him in the sight of all Israel. Naturall conscience cannot but stoop to the image of God in whomsoever. When Ephraim was first in the Throne, he became formidable: but when he fell openly from God, he grew feeble: first he was a terror, and then a scorn.

Gen. 36. 34.

But when he offended in Baal, he died. ] When by Jezabel (who did all under her husband, she was King, and he Queen) Baal-worship was brought in, then Ephraim fell from his dignity: then every paltry adversary trampled upon him, as the Hare will do upon a dead Lion. See how Benhadad insulted over Ahab, 1 King. 20. Thy silver and thy gold is mine, thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest are mine. And the king of Israel answered and said, My Lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have. Look how the worried Curie falls upon his back, and holds up all four, as craving quarter: so did this sordid Idolater, glad to crouch to his enemy: when God was departed from him; he was even as a dead carcase.

He that departeth from God (who is his life) by an evil heart of unbelief, subiecteth himself to all sorts of deaths, Naturall, Civil, Spirituall, and Eternall.

Heb. 3.

Verse 2. And now they sinne more and more, ] Heb. They adde to sinne: God in his just judgement hath given them up unto hardnesse of minde, and to their hearts lust: that for all this sudden change, they repent not, but run more and more into Idolatry. Not content to worship Baal, and such Heathen-Deities, They make them molten images of their silver, ] they laid their monies together, to make the golden-calves, or silver-thrines, as Acts 19. 24. and other idolatrous trinkets: they lavished silver out of the bag, and were at no small charge. They multiplied their altars, chap. 10. and abused Gods gold and silver to mysticall adultery, chap. 2. All this they did Now, saith the Text: most unseasonably, and as it were in flat opposition to God; after he had sought to reclaim them both by counsels, and corrections, and had hang'd Ahab and his house up in gibbets, as it were, before them, for their admonition. Surely it is a just both presage and desert of ruine, not to be warned. See chap. 7. 1. with the Note.

And idols according to their own understanding, ] i. e. according to their own inventions; motu suo proprio; forsaking the Rule of the Word, they will needs be schollers to their own Reason, though they are sure to have a fool to their Master. That's a good saying of Solomon, Trust in the Lord with all thy heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding, in matters of Gods worship especially; for there Deus damnat quicquid ardet iudicio hominum vel rationi, that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God, Luke 16. 15.

all of it the work of the craftsmen, ]. And should men worship the work of their own hands? what can be imagined more irrational and fortish? But it is a most righteous recompence of their error. See Esay 29. 13, 14. God doth blinde and blast such, causing their madnesse to appear to all, and that they are men compact of meer incongruities, solacising in opinion, speeches, actions, all: nothing is more irrational then irreligion.

they say of it, Let the men that sacrifice kisse the calves. ] They, that is, the king and his counsellours, or the idolatrous priests by their appointment. These were active to invite, and incite men to partake of those idolatrous services. Should we be lesse diligent in calling upon others to kisse the Son, with a kisse of love and homage? should we not be as serious and sedulous in building stair-cases for heaven, as the wicked are in digging dungeons to hell?

kisse the calves. ] That the custome of kissing in divine worship was used in all Nations, is evident. They kissed either the idols mouth, or their own hand (where the idoll stood on high, so that they could not come at it) in token of homage. See 1 King. 19. 8. Job 31. 27. So (after the example of Dioclesian) the Pope holds forth his foot to be kissed by the greatest Potentates: whiles he sitteth as God, in the Temple of God, &c.

Verse 3. Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, ] They shall vanish and come to nothing: the morning cloud irradiated by the sun, seems very gay at first, but is soon dispelled by it, the dew lies very lovely upon the grasse, and seems to impearl it: but is soon dried up. See chap. 6. 4. The chaff lies hollow and high, but is soon disperst before a whirl-wind. See Psal. 35. 5. Dan. 2. 35. Psal. 1. 5. The smoke rowls out of the chimney, as if it were some solid substance, and would muffle the whole heavens, but is presently scattered; Evaporat & evanescit, the higher it ascendeth, the sooner it vanisheth. See here how that is verified chap. 12. 10. I have used similitudes by the ministry of my Prophets, (four in a breath wee have here) and be hereby advertised. 1. Of mans weaknesse. 2. Of Gods power. 3. Of the swiftnesse of Ephraims ensuing misery. 4. The severity of Gods dealing with idolaters, he will leave no signe nor remaine of them: he will utterly remove them as a man takes away dung, till it be gone, 1 King. 14. 19. Sic transi gloria mundi. Life it self is but a shadow, a dream, yea a dream of a shadow, Psal. 144. 4. profit, an uncertainty, 1 Tim. 6. 17. pleasure, a spirt, honour a blast, pomp a phancy, Act. 25. 23. the whole world a scheme, or notion that hath nothing in it of any firmnesse, or solid consistency. Why then should wicked worldlings brag, and look so big? Why should the Saints be affected either with it's allurements, or affrightments, and not cry out with that heroicall Luther, Contemptus est a me Romanus & favor & furor, I care neither for Romes favour, nor fury; I am neither fond of the one, nor afraid of the other, for all is but fumus aut funis vanity and vexation?

Verse 4. Yet I am the Lord thy God, &c. ] Yet for all the sorrow: and though, I thus threaten thee: for since I spake against thee, I do earnestly remember thee still, &c. Jer. 31. 20. It is easie to observe, all along this Chapter, an interchange of menaces and mercies, as in the preceding verse and this; so verse 8. and 9. verse 13. and 14. verse 16. and chap. 14. 1. to shew how soon the Lord repents him of the evil, and how ready to shew mercy to the worst that return. If men could but finde a penitent heart, he would easily finde a pitying heart: like as David would have been friends with Abalom after all the unkindnesse, would he have been but better at last. To reduce Ephraim it was, that this Chapter, like checquer-work, is made up of promises and threatnings; that the tartnesse of the one might make him the better to taste the sweetnesse of the other.

Yet I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, ] See the Note on Chap. 12. 9.
He

He was their God before, Gen. 17. 7. but then he mainly manifested himself so to be, when he brought them thence with a strong hand, and so declared himself to be Jehovah, Exod. 6. 2. yea I am ready to shew thee the like mercy still: for I remember (saith he) the kindnesse of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown, Jer. 2. 2.

and thou shalt know no God but me, ] i. e. Effectually acknowledge, worship, serve, love, none save me, Deut. 13. 2. Gal. 4. 9. Thou shalt experience none other: it is a blessed thing to be ignorant of false-worship; and not to be insighted into, or versed in the depths of Satan, Rev. 2. 24. Thou shalt not enquire how these Nations worshipped their gods, Deut. 12. 30. Ahaz got hurt by seeing the Altar at Damascus: Many that will needs see the Popish-service, are ensnared thereby.

for there is no Saviour beside me. [ This is a Title that God much glorieth in. See Ej. 60. 16. and 63. 1. Ait. 5. 31. and we should go oft to him in this Name, as Jer. 14. 8. sith he is able to save them to the utmost that come unto him, Heb. 7. 25. to save them perpetually, and perfectly. He is a sole Saviour, a thorow Saviour, a Saviour in solidum: and doth not his work to the halves, as Papists make it. How blasphemous is that direction of theirs to dying men, to say, Joyn, Lord, mine obedience with those things which Christ suffered for me, &c.

Verse 5. I knew thee in the wilderness, in a place of great drought, ] In terra torridissima, where I gave thee pluviam escatilem & petram aquatilem as Tertulian phraseth it, where I gave thee bread from heaven, set the flint abroad, kept thy clothes whole and fit, kept back thine enemies, led thee by a pillar of cloud, sent thee in flesh at Even, and bread in the Morning, served thee as never Prince was served in his greatest pomp. And wilt thou yet kisse the calf, qui te nec servat, nec satiat, ut ego? who neither saveth thee, nor satisfieth thee, as I have done? not suffering thee to lack any thing, Deut. 2. 7? but crowning thee with loving kindnesse, and tender mercies: inasmuch as Moses stands amazed at it, and cries out, Happy art thou O Israel! who is like unto thee, O people saved of the Lord, &c. Deut. 33. 29.

Verse 6. According to their pasture so were they filled: ] Saturity bred security; fulnesse, forgetfulness. This was a foul fault, and is much complained of, Deut. 32. 13, 14, &c. Psal. 78. 10, 11, &c. God had brought them out of a place of great drought into large and fat pastures, a land flowing with milk and honey, where he filled their hearts with food and gladnesse, where he fed them among the lillies, daily and daintily. But they, as if God had hired them to be wicked, basely abused his bounty to luxury, and having fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idlenesse, grew proud as Sodom, and out of measure sinfull; forgetting God and his will, themselves and their duties, and running out into all excessse of riot, though they had been fairly warned, and commanded to the contrary, Deut. 8. 10, &c. Their heart grew fat as grease, and became as a foul stomach, which the more you fill it, the more you spill it: or like fed horses, they grew fierce and filthy, Jer. 5. 7, 8. there was no hoc with them. See Ezek. 34. 16, 18, 20. Whiles they were in the wilderness God knew them, yea he knew their souls in adversity; They both knew God, and were known of him. But now, God neither knew them so much, nor they him: they lived not upon him now, as once in the wilderness; but being filled, yea filled (you have the word here twice together) to note how they fell upon those allowed delights, and even glutted themselves, gorg'd themselves, they flew upon them, as those in Sauls time did upon the spoil of the Philistines: they fed without fear, as those Pseudo-Christians in Jude vers. 12. they gormandized as those flesh-mongers afore the flood, more like beasts then men, as the Greek word signifieth, Luke 17. 27. And hereupon their hearts were exalted, ] Prosperity and plenty will easily blow up such a blab as pride, in the best hearts, if care be not taken to the contrary, as Aguir knew, and therefore prayed, Give me a mediocrity, lest I be full and deny, and proudly ask, Who is the Lord? and as Solomon felt, whose wealth did him more hurt then his wildome did him good, Eccles. 2. and as Hezekiah experimented to his cost, Ej. 39. indeed of Iehosaphat it is noted, 2 Chron. 17. 3. that he walked in the first ways of David his father. (for the truth is, David's first ways were his best ways: neither was he ever so good and tender,

Verse 7. Therefore will I be unto them as a lion, as a leopard, &c.] Thus still God proceedeth to use similitudes by the ministry of his Prophets, as he did before verse 3. He here compareth himself (who otherwhere is compared to an Eagle, bearing her young upon her wings; to a Hen hovering over chickens, to a father cherishing his children, &c.) to a lion, yea to an old lion, which taketh the prey but seldom, and therefore is more ravenous of it, when taken; (See chap. 5. 14.) to a leopard, or panther, that diligently observeth by the way, and lieth in wait for his prey, and useth subtilty, as not being so swift of foot: confer Ier. 5. 6. To a Bear robbed of her whelps, which are very dear to her. To any other cruell creature, verse 8. as the Tiger that flieth upon the very picture of a man, and teareth it, or if he cannot come at it, teareth himself for anger. Neither is it for nothing (saith River) that God compareth himself here to all these together: but to shew that there was no hope of escape, neither could he that had avoided one danger, be safe from another. So dreadfull a thing is it to fall into the punishing hands of the living God. Oh consider this ye that forget God: least he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you.

Verse 8. I will meet them as a Bear bereaved of her whelps,] Surgit hic oratio. The Bear is more cruell then the Lion: for the Lion is said to spare the prostrate: but the Bear falleth foul upon all, yea upon dead carcases. See Amos 5. 9. and confer 2 Sam. 17. 8. Prov. 17. 12. See also what work the two Bears made upon the two and fourty children, 2 King. 2.

Let us therefore have grace, whereby we may serve God with reverence and godly fear: for even our God (and not the God of the Jews onely) is a consuming fire, is a devouring Lion, is a furious Leopard, a raging Bear: yea put all the dreadfulnesse of all the creatures in the world together, it is all to be found in the wrath of God, even the quintessence of all. Hence that of the Psalmist, Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath, Psal. 90. 11. as who should say, Let a man fear thy displeasure never so much, he is sure to feel thee much more, if once he fall into thy fingers. Now a fearfull man can fancy vast and terrible fears, as ramping lions, ravenous leopards, fire, sword, racks, scalding lead, burning pitch, running bell-mettle, all this in extremity, and that to all eternity: and yet all these are but as a painted fire, in comparisn of the unconceivable and unsupportable wrath of God.

Verse

Verse 9. O Israel thou hast destroyed thy self, ] Heb. He, or, It hath marred thee; O Israel: that is, either thy sin of self-exaltation, and forgetfulness of me, as verse 6. Or thy King, in whom thou trustedst, as verse 10. Or thy Calf, whom thou worshippedst, hath been the cause of thy confusion. Or thy fained comforts, as Aben-Ezra will have it; thy soothing up thy self in sinfull practises. Or, One hath destroyed thee: Or, Somewhat hath undone thee, but not without thee. Whatever it is that hath done it, it is not I, what hard thoughts soever thou mayest have of me, because I appear thus dreadful to thee, as in the former verse. Fury is not in me, but thou mayest thank thy self, and fault thy sinne as the mother of thy misery, as the cause of thy calamity; thou hast destroyed thy self, and thine own heart may say to thee, as the heart of Apollodorus seemed in a dream, to say to him, when he was tortured by the Scythians; It is I that have drawn thee to all this. It is the observance of a great Politian; England is a mighty Animal, which can never die except it kill it self. Answerable whereunto was the speech of the Lord Rich, to the Justices in the reigne of Edward 6. Never forraigne power could yet hurt, or in any part prevail in this Realm, but by disobedience, and misorder among our selves: that is the way wherewith God will plague us, if he minde to punish us, &c. We use to say, No man is hurt but by himself: Te have not injured me at all, saith S. Paul to the Galathians: you cannot do it, unlesse I will. The devil can do nothing at us, if we give not way to him. And though there were no devil, yet our corrupt Nature would act Satans part against it self; it would have a supply of wickednesse (as a serpent hath of poyson) from it self; it hath a spring of its own to feed it. Nemo igitur sibi palpet de suo: quisque sibi Satan est, saith an Ancient. And it was no ill wish of him, that begged of God, to deliver him from that naughty man, Himself: for he knew, that as in that first Chaos, Gen. 1. 2. were the seeds of all creatures: so in mans heart, of all finnes, and miseries that follow thereupon. God made man upright: but they have sought out many inventions, Ecclesi. 7. 29. many shifts and sharking tricks. Sinne and shifting came into the world together, Gen. 3. 12. The woman whom thou gavest me, &c. God must bear the blame of Adams sin: so must his Decree of Reprobation, still be alledged as the cause of mans perdition. But this covering is too short: for no man is destroyed because he is reprobated, but because he is a sinner: neither are any damned because they cannot do better, but because they will do no better. If there were no will, there would be no hell: and this indeed will be the very hell of hell, that they have been self-destroyers. The worme of conscience (say Divines) that never-dying worme, is nothing else but a continuall remorse, and furious reflection of the soul upon its own willfull folly, and now wofull misery.

but in me is thy help. ] Heb. In me, in thy help, that is, (saith Drusius) I am in thy help, and thy help is in me: whatsoever help thou hast, I am in it. We can easily undo our selves; as a childe can easily break a glasse, that all the men in the country cannot piece up again. But God both can and will help his, though never so shattered: and repair that image of his, lost in Adam, that One that destroyed Israel. Lord, saith Augustine, Ego admisi unde tu damnare potes me: sed tu non amisisti unde salutare potes me: that is, I have done enough to undo my self for ever, but with thee there is enough for my safety here, and salvation hereafter. God as he both can and will help his, that cry, Give us help from trouble; for vain is the help of man: so he will then chiefly do it, when they seem to themselves and others, to be in an undone condition. Thou hast destroyed thy self, in me is thy help: His holy hand is reserved for a dead lift.

Verse 10. I will be thy king, ] Thine eternall king, so Pagnine. As I have been thy Prophet, verse 4. 5. so I will be thy king; I will also be thy Priest, and thy Redeemer, verse 14, that so thou mayest hear my voice, submit to my scepter, and apply my death for thy deliverance from deaths dominion. Or, I will be thy king, and not be born down by thy boysterousnesse, who callest for another king, and repinest against my righteous regiment. Thou wouldst cast off mine authority, but I will maintain it. The Lord is king, be the people never so unquiet, Psal. 99. 1. he will raigne over rebels in spite of their hearts: and those that will not be his subjects, his willing people, shall be his slaves, his footstool. The Geneva Bible reads it thus, I am: Where is the King that should help thee in all thy cities? R. Aben-Ezra, Calvin, Oecolampadius, and others go the same way: onely they render it, Ero, I will be one and the same (according to that name of mine, I am that I am, Exod. 3. 14. and before Abraham was, I am, Ioh. 8. 58.) though you be off and on with me, though you change often, yet I am Jehovah, I change not. I will be: What will he be? The same that I said, I would be, thy Saviour, thine Helper: Or, I will be a stander-by, to see what will become of thee, and how thy king (in whom thou trustest) will help thee: this last is R. Solomon Jarchi's interpretation. Parvus will have it run thus, I will be, what? a lion, a leopard, a bear, &c. and nothing shall alter my resolution.

Where is any other that may save thee in all thy cities? ] Thou sayest (but they are but vain words) I have counsell, and strength for warre; I have a King, and Princes, and strong cities. But alas, where are they? Let them encrease their Army, and come forth as he once said, Judg. 9. 29. Ubi est Rex tuus? ubinam? nunc servit te, &c. Where is the king? where is he? let him now save thee in all thy cities, so Polanus rendreth it. Can they save thee, who cannot save themselves? It is a Sarcasticall concession. See the like Deut. 32. 37, 38. Judg. 10. 4. Am. 4. 4. And observe that Gods to deride and insult over men in their carnall confidence; and his people are licenced to do so too, so it be out of pure zeal, Psal. 52. 6, 7. and not out of private revenge.

Give me a king and princes. ] It was partly their ambition, and partly discontent with the present government (as the present is alwayes grievous) that prompted them to this request; and they had it, but for a mischief. It is not alwayes in mercy that prayers are answered: for Deus saepe dat iratus, quod negat propitius, God oft throwes that to his enemies, when they are over-importunate, which he denies to his friends, in great mercy to their souls. They do best, that acknowledging him the onely wise God, pray, Not our, but thy will be done, &c.

Verse 11. I gave thee a king in mine anger, ] As once before he gave them Quails to choak them. A king, that is, all those kings they had since they fell off from the house of David. These were Gods gifts, but giftlesse-gifts, which hee cast upon them in his anger, for a punishment both of the finnes of David's house, and likewise of the peoples rebellion. It was ab irato potius quam ab exorato Deo. Take him, (saith He, sith you will needs have him) with all that shall follow after. The hypocrite shall raigne, that the people may ensnared, Job 34. 30. Set thou a wicked man over him, (saith the Psalmist) and let Satan stand at his right hand, Psal. 109. 6. See Dan. 8. 23 Saul was an hypocrite, Ieroboam a wicked man, so were all his successours in that Throne. Levit. 26. 17. it is written as an heavy curse of God; If you still trespass against me, I will set Princes over you that shall hate you, mischievous, odious princes: odious to God, malignant to the people.

and took him away in my wrath, ] Heb. In mine immoderate wrath, that passed the bounds. This is spoken of God after the manner of men; for he cannot exceed or over-do: fury is not in him, Esay 27. 4. but here he threateneth to take away king and kingdome together: as he did Hosea, by the Assyrian that carried them all captive. Observe here, that better a bad Magistrate then none, for this latter is the fruit of Gods utter indignation. Those Anabaptists that from this Text inferred, that no Christian can with a good conscience take upon him kingly dignity, should have observed, that as an evil king is reckoned as a plague to a people, so a good king is to be held a speciall blessing to them.

Verse 12. The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up, ] sc. in a bundle, or fardle, or fagot, as the French hath it. And like as all fardles are opened on a Fair-day, so shall Ephraim's iniquities be brought to light, and punished at the last day: As the householder bindeth up the tares in bundles at harvest and burneth them: so shall it be in the end of the world. The Son of man shall send forth his Angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all scandals, and them which do iniquity: and shall shall cast them into a furnace of fire, &c. Matth. 13. 30, 41, 42. As the Clark of Assizes bindes up the inditeiments of malefactours in bundles, or seals them up in a bag for more surety: and at the Assizes, brings his bag, takes them out, and reads them: so will it be at that last and great day. My transgression is sealed up in a bag, saith Iob: and thou sowest up mine iniquity, viz. as the writings, or informations of a proceffe, which is ready to be sentenced. See Deut. 32. 34. Ier. 17. 1. Hof. 9. 9. Sinners shall one day know, that Gods forbearance is no quittance; and that however he is silent for a season, and thereupon they are apt fondly to conceit him to be such another as themselves, yet He will confute them, and set their sins in order before their eyes, Psal. 50. 21. Their actions are already in print in heaven; and God will one day read them aloud in the ears of all the world. And then though their sinne be hid for present, all shall out to their utter shame and everlasting contempt, Dan. 12. 2. that last light of the day of wrath shall reveal all, Rom. 2. 5. punish all, Hof. 9. 9. Whatever God hath threatned, shall then be inflicted: whatever arrows are in the bow-string, shall then flee, and hit, and stick deep. And the longer the Lord is in drawing, the heavier they will light: Mora dispendium fœnoris duplo pensabitur, the longer He forbeareth, the heavier He punisheth: So that there shall be no cause, why sinners should say, Where is the God of judgement? Mal. 2. 17. See the Note. God will enquire after their iniquity, and search after their sin, Iob 10. 6.

Verse 13. The sorrows of a travailing woman shall come upon him, ] This Commonwealth was before compared to a mother, chap. 1. & 3. And as a woman that hath conceived, is not for a while discerned to be with child, till she biggen, and burnish, and grow near her time: so is it with sinners: see it elegantly set forth by S. James, chap. 1. 14, 15. The sorrows of a travailing woman are known to be unexpected, exquisite, and inevitable: so shall Gods judgements be upon the workers of iniquity, such as they shall never be able to avert, to avoid, or to abide. This is set forth by an apt similitude, ordinary in holy Scripture, Mic. 4. 9, 10. Psal. 48. 7. Ier. 49. 29. and 50. 43, &c. And whereas some might say, A travailing woman is soon delivered; her pain is sharp, but short: she hath hope, not onely of an end but of a birth; the joy whereof maketh her remember her anguish no more, Iob. 16. 21. The Prophet replieth, that it is otherwise with Ephraim.

he is an unwise sonne, ] that will be the death both of his mother and of himself, He hath no list to help himself, and to get free of the straightens and perils of the birth, by passing thorow the narrow womb of Repentance; and being born anew, God stands over him, stretching out his hands all the day long, to do a midwives office, to take him out of the womb, as Psal. 22. 9. to cut his navell, and wash off his blood, to salt him, and swaddle him, as Ezek. 16. 4. but he hath no minde to come out of the filth of his sins, or to be washed from his wickednesse. Rather then be regenerated (without which there is no heaven to be had, Iob. 3. 5. or freedom from deadly dangers upon earth) he will venture to stay a while at least (as the Text here hath it) in the mouth of the matrix. ] though it cost him a choaking. Such Ephraims we have not a few, that proceed no further then to conviction; debarring themselves of the benefit of a thorow conversion. These go as far as Kadesh-barnea, they are nigh to Gods kingdom, they are almost perswaded to be true Christians, they are come as far as the place of the breaking forth of children, but there they stick and are stifled: they are never brought forth from darknesse to light, and from the power of Satan to God, that they may receive remission of sinnes, and inheritance among the saints and sonnes of God, Acts 26. 18. Oh make much of the least beginnings of grace (saith a Reverend man) even those called repressing: since they prepare the heart for conversion. There is a faith in the true convert, of no better perfection then that in the Temporary, though he stay not there, as the other (being an unwise son) doth. &c. And although we bring forth good things (saith Another) as Sarah's dead womb brought forth a child; it was not a child of natures, but of the meer promise, yet it cannot be denied, that a naturall man (though he be Theologically dead, yet he) is Ethically alive, being to be wrought upon by arguments; and that grace doth for the most part prepare naturals, before it bring in supernaturals: and if we hide our talent, we are not allowed to expect the Spirit of Regeneration; As if we die in the wilderness of preparatory antecedaneous works, we never get to Canaan.

Verse 14. I will ransom them from the power of the grave, &c. ] Some read it thus, I would have ransomed them, &c. I would have redeemed them, &c. had they been wise, or oughts, (as we say) had not their incurable hardnesse and obstinacy hindered; had they put forth into my hands, as unto a midwife, &c. But (alas) it is no such matter: therefore that that will die, let it die.

repentance shall be hid from mine eyes. ] I am unchangeably resolved to ruine them: Or, repentance should have been hid from mine eyes, my goodnesse toward them should never have altered, &c. But let us rather look upon the words as a most sweet and comfortable promise of a mighty redemption, and glorious resurrection to the Remnant, according to the election of grace, whom God would not have to want comfort, I will ransom them. Here therefore he telleth his Heirs of the promises, that he will bring them back out of captivity wherein they lay for dead, as it were: and that this their deliverance should be an evident argument and sure pledge of their resurrection to life eternall. To which purpose the Apostle doth aptly and properly alledge it, 1 Cor. 15. and thereupon rings in Deaths ears (out of this Text, and Eſay 25.8.) the shrillest, and sharpest Note, the boldest and bravest challenge, that ever was heard from the mouth of a mortall; Death, where is thy sting? Hell where's thy victory, &c? Oh thanks be to God, who hath given us victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, and thereby hath made us more than conquerours, that is, Triumphers, 2 Cor. 2. 14. But to return to the Text. Be it, saith the Prophet, that the Common-wealth of Israel, both mother and child must perish for want of wisdom, as was threatned in the foregoing verse: yet let not the penitent among them despair: for I the Lord Christ, will ransom them, by laying down a valuable price (so the word signifieth) from the power, ] Heb. band: of the grave, or of hell, that though hell had laid hands on them, yea closed her mouth upon them, as once the Whale had upon Jonas, yet I would open the doors of that Leviathan, and fetch them thence with a strong hand.

Ephdem.

I will redeem them from death, ] by becoming their near kinsman according to the flesh, whereby I shall have the next right of redemption. But how shall all this be done? After a wonderfull manner.

O death I will be thy plagues, ] Not one, but many plagues, even so many, as shall certainly do thee to death. The Vulgar rendreth it, Ero mors tua, O mors, morsus tuus, O inferne. The Apostle for plagues hath sting: for the plague hath a deadly sting, and so hath sinne much more; the guilt thereof is by Solomon said to bite like a serpent, and sting like a cockatrice, Prov. 23.32. Now Christ by dying put sinne to death, Rom. 1. 25. Ephes. 1. 7. Heb. 2. 14. We read of a certain Cappadocean, whom when a Viper had bitten, and sucked his blood, the Viper herself died, by the venomous blood that she had sucked. But Christ (being life essential) prevailed over death: and swallowed it up in victory, as Moses his serpent swallowed up the forcerers serpents, or as Fire swalloweth up the fuel that is cast upon it: yea by death, he destroyed him that had the power of death, the devil; whose practise it was to kill men with death, Rev. 2. 23. this is the second death.

Sphinx. Phil.

O grave (or, O hell) I will be thy destruction, ] thy deadly stinging disease, joyned with the pestilence, Psal. 91. 6. Death to a beleever is neither totall, nor perpetuall, Rom. 8. 10, 11. Christ hath made it to him, of a curse a blessing, of an enemy a friend, of a punishment an emolument, of the gate of hell the portall of heaven, a postern to let out temporall, but a street-door to let in eternall life. And to assure all this; Repentance shall be hid from mine eyes, ] i. e. there shall be no such thing as repentance in me, for all things that are at all are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do, Heb. 4. 13. The meaning is, I will never change my minde for this matter, my covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Confer Psal. 110. 4. Rom. 11. 29. Some render it (but not so well) Consolation is hid from mine eyes, and so make them to be the words of the Church, q. d. I see not this promise with mine eyes, but I receive it, and accept of it by my faith.

Psal. 89. 34.

Verse 15. Though he be fruitfull among his brethren, ] In allusion to his name Ephraim, which signifieth fruitfull and flourishing, Gen. 41. 52. Confer Gen. 48. 16, 19, 20, &c. & 49. 22. See the like allusions, Am. 5. 5. Mic. 1. 10.

An

An East-winde shall come, ] which is violent and hurtfull to the fruits of the earth. the winde of the Lord, ] a mighty strong winde: meaning that most mercifull and impetuous enemy the Assyrian, sent by the Lord to avenge the quarrell of his Covenant.

shall come up from the wilderness, ] where the winds blow most fiercely, because they meet with no resistance.

he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels. ] He, that is, the Assyrian, not Christ (as Hierom, Mercer, and Ribera will have it) who shall take away from Death and Hell all matter of glorying. Not the fire of the last day, as Lyra. No, nor Ephraim, as Pareus, and Tarnonius carry it: as if it were a promise of their conquest in Christ over all their enemies, corporall, and spirituall, dividing the spoil of the converted Gentiles, who shall come in to them with all their desireable things, as some read that Text, Hag. 2. 7. Confer Am. 9. 11, 12. Obad. 18. Zech. 14. 14, 16, 20, 21. That this whole verse containeth a promise of Ephraim's reduction to the Church of God, I could easily yeeld; reading it especially, as many good Interpreters do. For he shall fructifie among his brethren, after that an East-wind coming, a wind of Jehovah coming up from the desert, his spring shall become dry, and his fountain shall dry up: the same shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels. This is a similitude (say they) from a piece of ground all dried up and parched, that nothing is able to grow: notably expressing the miserable and distressed estate of this people; that as an easterly wind, and a tempestuous storm, hath dried them quite, and spoiled all their delightfull treasures, made them the vilest, and most contemptible of the earth. (Marcellinus tells of an Emperour, that meeting with some of this Nation, and annoyed with the sight and stench of them, cryed out, o Marcommiani, o Quadi, o Sarmatae, &c. O Marcoman's, Quades, and Sarmatians, I have found at length a more loathsome and sordid people then you.) All which notwithstanding, Ephraim shall flourish again, and hold up their heads among their brethren, &c. by the merit and spirit of Him who ransometh them from the power of the grave, from the dint of death. This sense of the words, is confirmed by that which followes in the next Chapter vers. 5, 6, 7.

Verse 16. Samaria shall become desolate, ] Here many begin the fourteenth Chapter, but not so well: for this verse evidently coliereth with the former, and sheweth that Ephraim shall not onely be plundered, but butchered by the Assyrian by their own default. Samaria shall become desolate, or be found guilty (as the Chaldees hath it, and the words may bear.) How can she be otherwise, when as she hath rebelled against her God, ] she hath embittered him, or bitterly provoked him to wrath, (as chap. 12. 15. See the Note there) who therefore sent in the Assyrian to desolate her: that bitter and hasty Nation to march thorow the breadth of the land, to possesse the dwelling places that were not theirs. This was a bitter affliction, but behold a worse:

they shall fall by the sword, ] they shall lose not their land onely, and the treasures of all their pleasant vessels, as verse 15. but their dearest lives, which to save a man will gladly part with all that he hath, Job 3. 4. or submit to any servile employment, as the Gibeonites in Ioshuah's dayes did; who were willing to take hard on as slaves and underlings, rather then to be cut off with the rest of the Canaanites.

their infants shall be dashed in pieces, ] Sept. τὰ νήπια αὐτῶν, their sucklings, that are ordinarily spared for their innocencie, ignoscency, &c. See chap. 10. 14. with the Note: and consider that infants are not so innocent (though they have yet done neither good nor evil) but that God may justly inflict upon them all torments here, and tortures in hell, for the guilt of originall sinne that cleaveth to their natures. Howbeit this excuseth not the barbarous cruelty of his executioners, who shall be surely and suitably punished, Psal. 137. 8.

and their women with childe shall be ripped up. ] Of this kinde of savage inhumanity, see Am. 1. 13. 2 King. 8. 11. & 15. 16. where you shall finde that the tyrant Menabem ripped the infants of Tiphshah out of their mothers bellies, because their fathers opened not the gates unto him. The like cruelty was exercised in the

Sicilian

CHAP. XIV.

Ezr. 10. 2.

Verse 1. O Israel, return unto the Lord, ] Usque ad Dominum, as far as to the Lord: give not the half but the whole turn; and take it for a mercy that you are yet called upon to return, and may be received; that yet there is hope in Israel concerning this thing. All the former part of the Prophecie had been (most-what) Comminatory: this last Chapter is wholly Consolatory: the Sun of righteousnesse loves not to set in a cloud.

return unto the Lord thy God; ] He is yet thy God: no such argument for our turning to God as his turning to us, Zach. 1. 3. See the Note there. Tantum velis & Deus tibi praecurreret. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat, &c. The Fathers plenty brought home the Prodigall: he had but a purpose to return, and his father met him, Esay 65. 24. See Joel 2. 12, 13. Esay 55. 6, 7. Jer. 31. 18. Hos. 3. 5. Acts 2. 38. This is the use we should make of mercy. Say not, He is my God, therefore I may presume upon him: but, He is mine, therefore I must return unto him: Argue from mercy to duty, and not to liberty, for that's the Devils Logick, which the Apostle holds unreasonable, yea to a good heart impossible, Rom. 6. 1, 2. His mercy is bounded with his truth, with which it therefore goes commonly coupled in Scripture. It is a sanctuary for the penitent; but not for the presumptuous.

for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. ] i. e. Consumption is decreed, yet a remnant reserved, Esay 10. 22, 23. Thou hast fallen into great calamity, and that by thine iniquity, which puts a sting into thy misery. This it is fit thou shouldst be sensible of: for conviction is the first step to conversion. But if thou art fallen, wilt thou there lie and not rise again by repentance, and return to him that smiteth thee? wilt thou not submit to his justice, and implore his mercy? Here then is another motive to conversion; as indeed this verse abounds with arguments to that purpose, as Pareus well observeth. First, thou art Israel, a Prince of God, who hath greatly graced thee above all people: Return to him therefore. 2 Thou hast run away from him by thine iniquity: and turned upon him the back, and not the face: Return therefore. 3 He is Iehovah, the Authour of thy being, and well-being. 4 He is God, to whom thou must either turn, or burn for ever: aut penitendum, aut pereundum: he can fetch in his rebels. 5 He is thy God in covenant with thee, and will accept of pence for pounds, desires for deeds, sincerity for perfection. 6 Thou hast fallen by thine iniquity: and yet wilt fall further, and never rise again, as Am. 8. 14. if thou stop not, step not back by repentance, and stir up thy self to take hold of God.

Verse 2. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord, ] Confesse your sins, beg pardon, and promise amendment. Sue to God to give you those words that he bids you Take: go to him in his own words, put his promises in suit: crave the help of his holy Spirit, without which what can we do, Rom. 8. 26. Say to God as Job 37. 19. Teach us what we shall say unto thee: for we cannot order our words, by reason of darknesse. David promisseth not onely to pray, but to marshal up his prayers, to put them in good array, so the word signifieth, Psal. 5. 3. In the morning will I direct my prayer, order it in the best manner: his words should be, nec lecta, nec neglecta, neither curious, nor carelesse, but such as are humble, earnest, and direct to the point, avoiding vain babblings. Here's a form prescribed in the Text (forms of prayer therefore are not so unlawfull, as some conceive them) words put into their mouths (as the phrase is 2 Sam. 14. 3.) that they might not misse. Men must as well look to their words, as to their feet, when they come before God: and see that their affections in prayer be not without answerable expressions. Take with you such words, as may testifie that ye turn heartily to the Lord, and not from the teeth outward, outward, as they in the Psalmist, Psal. 78. 36, 37. Turn before ye begin to pray : for God heareth not sinners ; sith their incense smels of the hand that offereth it, Esay 1.

Say unto him, ] Mentally and vocally : with spirit and speech. True it is, that prayer is not the labour of the lips, but the travell of the heart : and God hath promised to answer his people before they call, Esay 65. 24. By calling upon his Name, we neither inform him of what he knoweth not ; nor move him to shew us more mercy then he intendeth. But yet prayers are necessary, as means which God will have used, that we may receive what he of free mercy giveth. Besides, it prepareth us holily to enjoy the things received ; and makes us ready, either to wait for them, or to want them : and to be content that he may be glorified, though we be not gratified. And although God knoweth our thoughts, and understands the mind of the spirit, as being the searcher of hearts, Rom. 8. 27. yet he calls for the calves of our lips, the service of our tongues, 1am. 3. 9. guiding them now and then in a wonderfull manner, farre beyond all naturall apprehension : and strangely enabling his praying servants, who do also finde no small benefit by this practise of pouring out their hearts before him, both for the preventing of distractions, and kindling affections, and discerning their profiting in holy desires ; for the more worthy effect followeth, where more fervent affection went before.

Take away all iniquity, ] Few words, but full of matter : O quam multa, quam paucis ! What a short, but pithy prayer is this ! Such was that of the Publican, Luke 18. 13. that of our Saviour in his agony, when yet he is said to pray more fervently : that also which he taught us to pray, Mat. 6. 7, 8, &c. set in flat opposition to Paganish battologies. This in the Text is not much unlike that perfect pattern : for here they are taught to beg, Ut auferantur sua maleficia, conferantur Dei beneficia : Take away all evil, and give good : and then to restitute thanks. So will we render, &c. Take away from us, as an unsupportable burden, such as we cannot stand under, All iniquity, stain and sting, crime and curse, power and punishment : that there be no after reckonings : crosse out the black lines of our sinnes, with the red lines of thy Sons blood, that Lamb of God, that taketh away the finnes of the world by his Merit and Spirit, by his Value and Vertue ; that true scape-goat, that carrieth the sins of his people into the wilderness.

and receive us graciously, ] Heb. Receive good, that is, (as some interpret it) Accept, out of thy fatherly favour, the true witnesses and effects of our thorough conversion : But better they that thus fence it, Take good, to wit, to bestow upon us, as Psal. 68. 19. with Ephes. 4. 8. And it is not improbable (saith a Reverend Writer) that the Prophet here secretly leadeth us to Christ the Mediatour, who first receiveth gifts from his Father, and then poureth them forth upon his Church, Act. 2. 23.

So will we render the calves of our lips, ] Thy benefits shall not be cast away upon unthankfull persons : but we will present unto thee a sacrifice that will please thee better then an ox or bullock, that hath horns and hoofs, Psal. 69. 31. This cannot be done but by a sound Convert : for the Lepers lips must be covered according to the Law : and the sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord. To the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to take my Name into thy mouth, &c. hee liketh not a good motion from an ill mouth, as that State in the Story : The lip of excellency becommeth not a fool, (Prov. 17. 7.) no more then lying doth a worthy man, that is renowned for his wisdom. It well becommeth the Saints to be thankfull, to cover Gods Altar with the calves of their lips. This expression implieth (saith One) That Gods people should not offer their thankfulness to God of that which cost them nothing ; but bring, 1. A calf, do something to further Gods worship, or relieve the necessities of others. 2. It must be a dead calf, that is, it must proceed from humble and mortified mindes. 3. A sacrificed calf : where is required, 1. An Altar, our praises must be tendred in the mediation of Christ. 2. Fire, for the bare throwing out of words, though in the name of Christ, will not serve without feeling, ardency, and zeal. 3. We must lay our hands on the head of the calf ; that is, in all humility, confesse our unworthinesse of the blessings we give thanks for, as being lesse then the least, Gen. 32. 19.

Verse 3. Altho' shall not save us, &c. ] q. d. He cannot if he would : he shall not, if he could. The two great sinnes of this people were Creature-confidence, and Idolatry: both these they do here abrenounce and abandon. The best repentance, saith Luther, is a reformed life. It is true say they, we have gone to the Assyrian, (wherein we have dealt as the silly bird flying to the snare, or as fishes, which to avoyd the powler wherewith the water is troubled, swim into the net.) We have taken our horses instead of our prayers, and gone about to finde out good. We have been so foolish, as to think that dumb Idols, that cannot help themselves, should help us. But now we are otherwise resolved, experientia edocet & penitentia docet: we finde at length (that which we should have beleevd sooner, without trying conclusions) that men of high degree are but a lie, that horses are but a vanity, that an Idol is nothing, and can give nothing. That power belongeth unto thee, none else can do it: that mercy belongeth unto thee, none else will do it: therefore since in thee onely, the fatherlesse, that is, the friendlesse and shiftelesse finde mercy, O be thou pleased to do us good.

For in thee the fatherlesse findeth mercy. ] The poor pupil, the forlorne orphan, that's left to the wide world, and lost in himself, cries out, Lord, I am hell, but thou art heaven, &c. I am an abject, oh make me an object of thy pity, Ier. 39. 17. Because they call thee an outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after, therefore I will restore health unto thee, &c. The proud Assyrian, and other enemies, would be apt to insult over Israel: as afterwards Cicero did: The Jewish Nation, saith he, shew how God regards them, that have been so oft overcome by Pompey, Craffus, &c. But let Gods people be but fatherlesse enough, let them withdraw their confidence from men and means, and cast it wholly upon God, making him their Tutor and Protectour, and they shall be both preserved, and provided for. Deo confisi nunquam confusi. I will not leave you orphans, saith Christ, Iob. 16. Hence the Church resteth on God, in the fail of other comforts, Psal. 118. 14, 17, 18. Psal. 27. 10. Hab. 3. 17. Psal. 102. 13. The prayer of the destitute he regards. Verse 4. I will heal their back-slidings, ] Relapses, we know, are dangerous: and Apostasie little lesse then incurable, 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21. Heb. 6. 6. Bishop Latimer, in a sermon afore King Edw. 6. tells of one notorious back-slider that repented: but beware of this sinne, saith he, for I have known no more but one that did so. To fall forward is nothing so dangerous, as to fall backward with old Eli. Hence Paul so thundreth against the Galatians; and Peter against apostatizing Libertines, 2 Epist. 2. 22. But if Iehovah the Physician, (as he is called, Exod. 15. 26.) undertake the cure, and say, I will heal their back-slidings, what can hinder? Christ in the Gospel, cured the most desperate diseases: such as all the Physicians in the countrey might have cast their caps at, Matt. 4. 23, 24. and 8. 16. He refused none that came to him, Matt. 12. 15. no not his enemies, as Malchus. Will he then reject his Ephraim, a child, bemoaning himself, though not a pleasant childe, a towardly sonne, Ier. 31. 18, 20. a back-slider indeed, but such an one, as crieth now, that God bindeth him, Iob 36. 13. No sooner doth God cry, Return ye back-sliding children, and I will heal your back-slidings, I will love you freely: but Ephraim, melted with such a love, replieth, Behold we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God, Ier. 3. 22. O most happy compliance! See the like, Zach. 13. 9. with the Note there. They shall return even to the Lord (from whom they had deeply revolted) and he shall be intreated of them, and shall heal them, Esay 19. 22. They had beg'd of him to take away all iniquity, verse 2. And He here (in answer) promiseth to heal their back-slidings, that compound of all iniquities, that falling-sickness, that oft hales hell at the heels of it, Heb. 10. 38.

I will love them freely: ] Ephraim might remember, and Satan would be sure to suggest, that the Prophet had said before, Ephraim is smitten, or wounded, My God will cast them away, or hate them. Mine anger is kindled against them, Chap. 8. 5. and 9. 16, 17. Here therefore, upon their repentance, all this is graciously taken off in one breath, and Satan silenced. Be it that they are back-sliden, and fore wounded by their fall; I will heal their back-slidings, and make their broken bones to rejoyce. Be it that there is nothing at all in them that is laudable, or love-worthy, yet I will love them freely, ex mero motu, of mine own free, absolute, and independent grace, and favour, out of pure and unexcited love, without any the least respect respect to their merit, which is nothing better then hell. Be it that they have bitterly provoked me to anger, and (as angry people use to do) I have both threatened them, and punished them: yet now mine anger is turned away from them. ] I am fully reconciled unto them in Christ, will clear up my countenance toward them, and remove mine heavy judgements from them. Gods favour is no empty favour. It is not like the Winter-Sun, that casts a goodly countenance when it shineth, but gives little heat or comfort. If he love a man freely, and out of the good-pleasure of his will, cum spontaneitate (as he doth all His, Ephes. 2. 8. making them accepted in the Beloved, Ephes. 1. 6.) such a man may promise himself all the blessings of this and a better life. Excellent is that of Bernard; He that sent his Son for thee, poured his Spirit into thee, promised to clear up his countenance upon thee, quid tandem tibi negaturus est? What can he deny thee? He that inviteth thee to feed upon the fatted-calf, will not onely take away all iniquity, but give good. That was the second Petition they preferred, and they have it answered in the next verse, ad cardinem desiderij God not onely grants their prayer, but fulfills their counsell.

Verse 5. I will be as the dew unto Israel, ] I will give good in abundance: and and this is sweetly set forth in a seven-fold Metaphor, all answering to the name of Ephraim, (which signifieth fruitfull) and to the ancient promises made unto him: and all again opposite to the many contrary curses, threatened in the former parts of the Prophecie, under Metaphors of a contrary importance, as Parens and (out of him) Tarnomus have well observed. As First, of solid and fruit-causing dew, in opposition to that vanishing and barren dew, chap. 6. 4. and 13. 3. Secondly, of the flourishing lilly, contrary to those nettles, thorns, and thistles, chap. 9. 16. and 10. 8. Thirdly, of the well-rooted and durable trees of Libanus, contrary to dry-roots, chap. 9. 16. Fourthly, of spreading and growing branches, instead of branches consumed, chap. 11. 6. and 9. 16. and 10. 8. Fifthly, of trees yeelding pleasant shade and repose, contrary to chap. 9. 3, 6. Sixthly, of corn to satisfy hunger, contrary to chap. 8. 7. Lastly, of a Vine bringing forth excellent wine, contrary to chap. 9. 16. and 10. 1. And all these fruits, the fruits of Libanon, a most fertile mountain, the valleys whereof were most rich grounds for pasture, corn, and vineyards.

as the dew unto Israel, he shall blossom as the lilly, ] Quot verba tot lumina imo flumina orationis. This Prophet aboundeth with similitudes, as is before noted, (See chap. 12. 10. with the Note there.) He beginneth here with a Simile drawn from the dew of heaven; a mercy very much set by, in those hotter countreys especially, where from May to October they had no rain. The Chaldee Paraphrase, and Hebrew Doctours, understand this Text concerning Christ, and his benefits. Truly, He is good to Israel, to the pure in heart. Peace and mercy, sanctity and safety, all spirituall benedictions in heavenly things in Christ, shall be upon the Israel of God. What the dew is to the herbs, fields, fruits, that is Christ to his Israel. 1. The dew comes when the air is clear: so doth Christ by his blessing, when the light of his countenance is lift up upon us. 2. As the dew refresheth, and cherisheth the dry and fady fields, (hence it is called the dew of herbs, Esay 26. 19. which thereby recover life and beauty) so doth Christ our hearts, scorcht with the sense of sinne, and fear of wrath. 3. As the dew allayeth great heats, and moisteneth, and mollifieth the earth, that it may fructifie: so Christ cooleth the Devils fiery darts, and filleth his people with the fruits of righteousness. He is unto them as a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest, Esay 18. 4. and maketh their souls as so many watered gardens, Jer. 31. 12. / 4. As the dew falls in a narrow compasse, without noise, and is felt onely by those (in the force of it) on whom it descends: so the grace of Christ watereth his faithfull onely; secretly and sweetly insinuating into their hearts: the stranger medleth not with their comforts. See Joh. 14. 17. The cock on the dunghill knows them not.

he shall grow as the lilly. ] which hath its name in the Hebrew, from its six leaves, and serves here, and elsewhere to set forth the great comeliness, sweet odour and true humility of the Church: for the lilly groweth in vallies (as Theophylact upon this Text noteth) sweet it is but not great, and the more it blossometh, the more it shooteth upwards: to teach us heavenly-mindednesse. It is also of a perfect whitenesse,

The lilly ( with its six white leaves, and seven golden-coloured grains within it ) soon fadeth, and loseth both beauty and sweetness : but so doth not Christ and his People. *Verse 6. Es. 25. 4. Why art thou cast down, trust in God, trust in an angry God, in a killing God, as Job, beleieve him upon his bare word; and that against sense, in things invisible; and against reason, in things incredible. This is Faiths triumph, and this is the Saints safety.

Prov. 18. 10.

They shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine,] The Seventy and Latine render it, They shall live with corn; that is, they shall have great plenty of all things necessary, as Psal. 87. and 142. 14. But the other reading is better; They shall revive as the corn, which suffering much from frost, hail, snow, tempest, lieth for dead, as it were, in Winter; but at the return of the Sun in Springtide reviveth, and yeeldeth a great increase. In like sort, the Vine when pruned and lopped spreads again, and is the more fruitfull: So those that are viti vite inserti, set into the true Vine, though lopped and harrowed with sore and sharp afflictions, yet can truly and triumphantly say, As dying, and behold we live, as chastened, and not killed, &c. Their bodies also by death are not so much rotted as refined, and shall be conformed to Christs most glorious body the standard, Phil. 3. ult.

Verse 8. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do, &c. Heb. Ephraim, what have I to do, &c. This some make to be the speech of God to Ephraim: as if Ephraim here were the Vocative case, and God were brought in abhorring the motion of parting stakes with idols, of sharing his glory with another. But because this, God never did, (for what communion hath light with darkness, Christ with Belial?) and because the Chaldee Paraphrast, and from him the best Interpreters supply [shall say] I take this latter to be the better translation. Here then God promiset, first, what Ephraim shall do, or rather, what he by his grace will cause him to do: he shall utterly abominate and abandon his idols, whereunto his heart had been joyned, or glewed, chap. 14. 17. Secondly, what he will thereupon do for Ephraim: what speciall favour he will shew him, and what a gracious compensation he will make him, I have heard him, and observed him, &c. Ephraim now grown penitent, shall say, (See the like ellipsis supplied, Esay 5. 9.) with utmost indignation and averfation, with greatest heat of anger, and height of hatred, shall he utter it. See the like, 2 Sam. 16. 10. 2 King. 3. 13. Matth. 8. 29.

What then should we rather do, then pollute those images that we had perfumed, cast them away with detestation, as a menstruous clout, and say unto them, Get ye hence, Esay 30. 22. Then will God soon say, I have heard him thus bemoaning and befooling himself. without any monitour, aid and accomodate them. He is oft-times better to them then their prayers: for why? The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, as well as his ears are open to their cry, Psal. 34. 15. I am like a green firre tree, ] green all the yeer about, and of so large branches, and broad leaves thick set, that neither Sun nor rain can easily come at the wearied passenger, reposing himself under them. In me is thy fruit found, ] q. d. The fir-tree is indeed green, and shady, but withall barren: it bears no fruit, either ad esum, or ad usum. It boweth it self down to the earth, so that a man may easily lay hold upon the branches, saith Rabbi David, and other Hebrews. But what shall he get by that more then a green bowre, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, &c? As an Ancient speaking of Ahab, describeth him sitting in his ivory Palace in Samaria, in the time of the three yeers famine: He had every thing else, but wanted bread: So Ephraim here, hath shade, but can he live by that? what shall he do for food? He shall not want for that, saith God-Alsufficient: for

From me is thy fruit found, ] Præsto est, (so some render it) Here it is ready, and mouth-meet: yea satis est (so others render it) it is enough of it, satisfactory, and proportionable to thy necessity. Yea I would thou shouldst know, that what fruit soever thou hast, or shalt bear as an Olive or Vine, verse 6. and 7. it is found in me, proceeds from me, the root of the matter is in me, as Job speaketh in another case.

Verse 9. Who is wise and he shall understand these things, ] A pathetically perclose, whereby the Prophet (Oratour-like) would leave a sting in the hearts of his hearers, and so seal up, and set on all that he had said before. Who is wise, ] q. d. I could wish there were more: but I see there are not many. Store there are of fools, Stultorum plena sunt omnia, such dust-heaps there are in every corner to be found, not a few, that either know not the will of God, or stumble at it. But who hath known the mind of the Lord? Who amongst you will give ear to this? Who hath believed our report? or to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? Who is the wise man that may understand this? Lucerna accensa hominem quarebat A. Sops. Jerem was bidden run to and fro to finde a man that sought the truth, chap. 5. 1. Rari quippe boni. Not many wise, wise I mean to salvation, 2 Tim. 3. 15. that make sure work for their souls, and draw their wisdom from Gods holy word, from the Mine of the Mystery of Christ. All others are foolish people, sottish children: they have no understanding, be they never so shrewd and of deep reach for the world, be they never so wise in their generation; the fox is so in his, and the devil in his, for when he was but young, he out-witted our first Parents, who yet were no babies, simple and weak in understanding, as the Socinians affirm them to have been, or else they would not (say they) have so sinned. A fond conceit, and without footing in Gods holy word; where we finde, that they were created in Gods image, which consisteth in knowledge, righteousness and holiness, as saith the Apostle.

And he shall understand these things, ] which none of the Princes of this world know, because their learning hangs in their light; and like Moles, they dig dexterously under ground, but are blinde above ground. Sapiens est cures sapiens prout sunt, saith Bernard. He is the wise man that savoureth things as they are. And herein lieth the whole wisdom of a man, saith Lactantius, ut Deum cognoscas, & colas, that he know and worship God aright, that with a practically judgement, he ponder the word and wayes of God, in order to salvation. This is that wisdom that dwelleth with prudence, Prov. 8. 12. Aristotle in many places of his works, distinguisheth between Wisdom and Prudence. Wisdom he maketh to be a right apprehending of truths in generall: Prudence, an applying them to particular cases, and uses. But Socrates said, that there was no such difference: sith He that knoweth good things to do them, and evil things to avoid them, is to be held a wise man, and none else. They may seem here, to be put for one and the same: sith sith the wise man is said, not to know, but to understand, judge, and poulder, and the prudent to know: teaching us, that God calls for a prudent wisdom, and a wife prudence, directing the ioul to an orderly carriage, and an holy care, that godlinesse, (which is the onely wisdom) may run thorow our whole lives, as the woof doth thorow the web.

For the wayes of the Lord are right, ] Understand it not so much of the wayes of Predestination, providence, &c. wherein God walks toward us (which yet are all right and equall) as of those wayes of his Will, Word, and Worship, wherein he requireth us to walk towards Him. These are called the way of God, Matth. 22. 16. and the way of salvation, Acts 16. 17. and the way of truth, 2 Pet. 2. 2. and the right way, verse 15. and the way of righteousness, verse 21. Right these wayes are called, or strait. First, because they are conform to the Will of a righteous God, which is the mensura mensurans, the first rule of right, the standard. Secondly, because the matter of it is holy, and just, and good, a doctrine of righteousness, that teacheth us to give God his due, and men theirs. It is also pat for every purpose, Psal. 19. 7, 8. Prov. 30. 5. Of the Book of Psalms, Athenasius hath observed, that they are so penned, that every man may well think they speak de se, in re sua, of himself, and to his own particular necessities. Thirdly, because it rectifieth us, and transformeth us into the same image: it maketh such as deliver up themselves thereunto, to walk as patterns of the rule, as a transcript of the word, that dwelleth richly in them, and worketh effectually, as a seed of immortality. Fourthly, because it carrieth us on in a strait line unto a right end, without crooking, or compassing about, Psal. 19. 8. and 25. 4. Has vias qui teris, non teris. Pray therefore as David did, Psal. 13. 29. lest breaking out into by-wayes (all which are high-wayes to hell) or but stepping over the hedge, to avoid a piece of foul way, we bruise and bruise our selves to get in again, break our bones with David, &c.

And the just shall walk in them: ] Such as are just with a double righteousness, Imputed, and imparted; that of Justification, and this of Sanctification: these will choose the way of truth, Psal. 119. 30. and 25. 12. and be willing to walk honestly, Heb. 13. 18. orderly and by rule, Gal. 5. 25. accurately, and to the utmost, Ephes. 5. 15. directly, and distinctly, eyeing the mark, and propounding to themselves the highest pitch, and the best patterns: often comparing themselves with the rule, laying their lives by the line, and reforming their out-straies, Psal. 119. 59, 60. making it the main of their endeavour, that all their deeds may be wrought in God, Joh 3. 21. Lo this is the just mans practise: and it is here propounded for a president.

But the transgressours shall fall therein. ] They perish from the way, Psal. 2. 12. they stumble at the word and fall into perdition, as the Chaldee here hath it: and so shew themselves to be transgressours, traytours, rebels, yea reprobates. See 1 Pet. 2. 8. they stumble at the word, being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed. O fearfull! "A bridge is made (saith a Reverend Divine) "to give us a safe passage over a river, but he who stumbleth on the bridge "is in danger to fall into the river. The Word is given us as a means to carry "us over hell to heaven: but he who stumbleth and quarrelleth at this means, shall "fall in thither, from whence otherwise he had been delivered by it. Neither may we think the worse of the Word for this accidentall effect of it upon transgressours; sith the fault is meerly in themselves: As when a lame man stumbleth in a plain path, the fault is not in the way, but in the foot. Blear eyes cannot abide the light; nor children endure honey, when they have sore mouthes. The same Sun makes flowers smell sweet, but carrions stink loathsomely. Moses saved the Israelite; killed the Egyptian: and Abigail's voice, pacified David, but made Nabal's heart die within him as a stone. Oecumenius telleth us, that the fragraney of precious ointments is wholesome for Doves, but kills the Beetle. And Aristotle affirmeth, that oyl of roses is deadly to Vultures, who hunt after onely dead mens carcasses. Christ himself, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, was set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a signe to be spoken against, Luke 2. 34. for a But-mark, against whom his enemies should

For if any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, he is Anathema Maranatha, 1 Cor. 16. 22. Behold they have rejected the word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in them? Jer. 8. 9.

THE Word of the Lord that came, &c. ] See the Note on Hosea 1. 1. with whom, Hierom and ſome other Interpreters, make this Prophet a Contemporary, for the likeſneſſe of Argument: and that common Canon of the Jew-Doctours, that the Prophet who ſets not down his time, is to be held of the ſame time, with him that is placed before him.

The Seventy ſet him not onely after Hosea, but alſo after Amos and Micah: and the ancient Hebrew Chronicle, called Sedar-Olam affirmeth, that Joel prophieſied together with Nabum and Habakkuk, in the dayes of king Manaſſeh: which Druiſts would prove out of Joel 3. 5. Others, with more ſhew of reaſon, out of 2 King. 21. 10. and 23. 26. Joel might very well be one of thoſe Prophets that denounced Gods heavy judgements againſt Judah, for the finnes and abominations of Manaſſeh, whom ſome make to be his convert. For although at firſt the Lord ſpake to Manaſſeh, and to his people, but they would not hearken ( 2 Chron. 23. 10 ) yet the rod might ſet the word awork afterwards: for Manaſſeh when he was in affliction beſought the Lord, and humbled himſelf greatly ( verſe 12. ) and Joel might very well be to him a ſonne of Pethuel, or of Gods perſwaſion: God, by his miniſtery might ſpeak to his heart, Hof. 2. 14. ſet before him an open door, ( another Etymon of the name Pethuel ) Rev. 3. 8. miniſter unto him an entrance further and further into Chriſts everlaſting kingdom, 2 Pet. 1. 11. If any think it more likely that Joel prophieſied under Joſiah king of Judah, when that great famine fell out which is deſcribed in like termes by Ieremy, chap. 14. 1, 2. compared with 2 King. 23. 26. I ſhall not ſtrive with him. But that this Joel was the ſonne of Samuel ( here called Pethuel ) a perſwader of God, becauſe what he asked of God he obtained ) as R. Salomon would carry it, I cannot imagine: for that Joel was not a Prophet, but a corrupt Judge.

Verse 2. Hear this ye old men, ] Who, as ye are fittest to hear serious discourses (Aristotle excludeth young men from his Ethick-Lectures, because raw, and rash: green wood is ever shrinking, and warping) so ye are more experienced; and yet not so wise, but that, by hearing, ye may become wiser, Prov. 1. 5. Solon said, he could never be too old to learn. Julianus the Lawyer said, that when he had one foot in the grave, yet he would have the other in the school. David Chytrius, when he lay a dying, lifted up himself to hear the divine discourses of his friends, that sat by him; and said, that he should die with better cheer, if he might die, learning something.

and give ear all, &c. ] Hear and give ear: draw up the ears of your mindes to the ears of your bodies, that one sound may pierce both. When these two words are joyned together, as they are often, the matter propounded, is either very dark, or very remarkable, and commands attention, as Deut. 1. 45. Esay 1. 2, 10. Jer. 13. 15. Hof. 5. 1.

Hath this been in your dayes, or even in the dayes of your fathers? ] Was there ever such havock made by severall sorts of vermine successively, for four yeeres together? This was the very finger of God, Exod. 8. 19. all whose works (by how small instruments soever) are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein, Psal. 111. 2. His extraordinary works especially, are to be noted and noticed; the memory of them is to be transmitted to all posterity. This shall be written for the generation to come, Psal. 102. 18. They shall come and shall declare his righteousness, unto a people that shall be born, that he hath done this, Psal. 22. 31. Sed va stupori nostro. There is a wo to such as regard not the works of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands, Esay 5. 12. that make of them but a nine dayes wonderment at best, and so passe them over. Whereas every judgement of God should be a warning-peal to repentance. We be like the Smiths dog, (saith One) who the harder the Anvil is beaten on, lyes by, and sleeps the foundler. Like the hen (saith Another) which loseth her chickens one after another by the devouring kite; and yet still continues to pick up what lies before her: such a deep drowsinesse and drossinesse of spirit, there is upon most of us.

Verse 3. Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, ] Heb. Cipher them up diligently, after the manner of Arithmeticians: reckon up the severall years, with the severall calamities thereof to your children and nephews; that they may hear, and fear, and do no more so. Let your woes be their warnings, your sufferings their standing-sermons; your corrections their instructions. See 1 Cor. 10. 5, to 12. Ruina majorum sit cautela minorum. Hast thou marked the old-way (saith Eliphaz to Job, Chap. 22. 15, 16.) which wicked men have trodden, which were cut down out of time: whose foundation was overflowen with a flood, (Heb. a flood was poured upon their foundation) which said unto God, Depart from us, &c? He speaketh of those Antediluvian Atheists, buried in one universall grave of waters. See Isai. 22. 20. Neh. 13. 26. Jude 5, 6, 7. and learn to keep a Catalogue of Gods great works, whether of mercy or judgement; yea to polish and garnish them for the use of posterity, not with vain affectation of wit, nor with pedantick pomp of words, but with sobriety, and holy gravity, as here: such as may stick by our children, and leave impression.

In Chaldee from creeping: In Greek from crookning: In Latine from gnawing. The Locust hath its name in Hebrew from multitudo, where-with the very Sun is darkened: In Latine from burning places, where it spoileth: In Greek from cropping the tops of corne, and plants, which as they fled, they fed upon. The Canker-worm hath its name in Hebrew from licking: In Chaldee from fleeing: In Greek and Latine from feeding upon the flowers of apples and other fruits. Comester some render it. Flemings call it, The preacher, a bombo quem

polando edit from the noise it maketh as it flies. The Caterpillar hath its name Chafil, from wasting, because it utterly consumeth all; not onely fruits and leaves; but tender boughes and branches: Ut ita crescat oratio sicut ipsum malum, to show that as their sinne increased, so did their punishment. The Lord of Hosts cannot possibly want a weapon wherewith to beat a rebel: neither may wicked men expect that He should lay down the bucklers first. To that bold question of Pharaoh, Who is the Lord that I should obey him? God made a large reply, by his armies of locusts, lice, flies, &c. till Pharaoh was forced to answer himself, The Lord is righteous. What spoil hath been made by these despicable creatures here mentioned in other countreys, Pliny recordeth. Pierius testifieth that the Egyptians made the Locust an Hieroglyphick of Famine. And although we finde not expressly set down in the holy History, when this particular plague was executed, yet we need not doubt but it was done according to Deut. 28. 38, 39. See 1 King. 8. 37.

Verse 5. Awake ye drunkards, ] ye Ale-stakes, and Suckers (Heb. Shiccorim) that pour in heady and intoxicating drinks, such as soon lay you to sleep; and (besides) take away your heart, Hos. 4. 11. rob you of your selves, and lay a beast in your room. Portentosum sane potioris genus, saith Pliny concerning ale, that excessively drunk, maketh men more sleepy then dormise: besides that worse sleep of carnall security, Eph. 5. 14. Rom. 13. 11. These therefore are here called upon to be sober and watch, (See 1 Thess. 5. 6. 1 Pet. 5. 8. 1 Pet. 4. 7.) ye to weep and howl, to turn their laughter into mourning, and their joy into heaviness. And why? For their sinne they should have done (as that drunkard in the Ecclesiasticall History, that, toucht with a sense of his sin, wept himself blind) but here they are sarcastically called upon to weep for their great losse, as they esteem it.

Lib. 14. cap. ult.

Because of the new-wine for it is cut off from your mouth, ] As many things fall out betwixt the chin and the chalice, the cup and the lip: You made account to have munched it, to have swilled your souls, as they say, and to have swallowed it down your wide gullets. But behold, it falls out somewhat otherwise: the caterpillar hath been before you, and left you nothing better then Adams-ale to tipple. This is cold comfort to the drunkard, whose Word is that of the Viñe in Josahs parable, Non possum relinquere vinum meum, Take away my liquor, you take away my life. Austin brings him in saying, Malle se vitam quam vinum eripi, He had rather lose his life then his wine. And Ambrose tells of one Theoristus, that being told by his Physicians, that much quaffing would make him blinde, Vale lumen amicum, said he, Farewell sweet eyes; if ye will not bear wine, ye are no eyes for me: This drunkard would rather lose his sight then his sin; his soul then his lust. Such kinde of persons are like the Panther, which is said to love the dung of man so much, as if it be hang'd on high from it, it will skip and leap up, and never leave till it have burst it self in pieces to get it: and this is the way they take that creature. God will take these naturall brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, 2 Pet. 2. 14. after another manner. He will not onely cut them short enough here; but turn a cup of fire and brimstone down their throats, Psal. 11. 6. which will be worse to them then that ladle full of boyling lead, poured down the throat of a drunken Turk, by the command of a Bashaw.

See the like Prov. 30. 25, 26. Is come, ] that is, shortly shall come. Upon my land, ] this glorious and goodly land, as it is called Dan. 11. 16. Tarnonius makes this by a mimêsis to be the drunkards lamentation A nation is come up, &c. Strong and without number. ] yea therefore strong, because without number: insuperable, because innumerable. Feeble they are, and yet formidable; because set on by God Almighty, whose warriors they are, as the Roman spoylers are called, Matt. 22. 7. And perhaps the Assyrians may here be hinted at. I doubt not but the literal sense is chiefly intended: Neither can I concur with Oecolampadius, who holdeth it to be Propheta indignum, unbecoming the Prophet, to preach thus concerning worms and locusts: For concerning such poor creatures deal the Prophets by the instinct of the Holy Ghost, in sundry other places, Prov. 6. 6. Am. 4. 9. and 7. 1. Nahum. 3. 15. Whose teeth are the teeth of a lion. ] that is, they devour all that is in their way; as there is no standing before a lion, no not before a moth, that hath commission to crush a man, Jeb. 4. 19.

Verse.

Verse 7. He hath laid my vine wast] The Prophet proceeds in aggravating the calamity, that he might make the people the more sensible. There is nothing in the world more stupid and more stubborn then a drunkard. Of such it is that that saying of an Ancient is often verified, Ablatus est à peccantibus timor, ne possit esse cautela, Feare is taken away from offendours, that there should be no caution against it. Here therefore let the words of the wise be as goads and as nailes fastened by the Masters of the assemblies. Let them so preach with Peter, that their hearers may be prickt at heart Act. 2, 37. may be galled and sawed as it were Act. 7, 54. may startle and tremble, as Act. 24, 25. may awaken out of that dead lathergy, whereinto Satan hath cast them, and recover out of his snare, who are taken captive by him at his pleasure. True it is, we can hardly get men to believe that hell is so hot, or sin so heavie, or the devill so black, or God so unmerciful as the Preachers make him. The Lion, say they, is not so terrible as he is painted; nor is our case so dangerous as is born us in hand. Sed nos pergamus exaggerare, saith Pareus here. Let Gods Ministers lay load upon mens sins, and set forth to the full the miseries that will fall upon them. The Prophets did so for temporal (as here most graphically and to the life) shall not we much more for eternal punishments? Oh (saith One) that I could get words to gore your very hearts with smarting pain: that this doctrine might be written in your flesh!

and barked my fig-tree] Take away the bark from the tree, and the sap can never find the way to the boughes. These Vermine had barked the trees with their teeth, cast the bark out of their mouths upon the ground, and made the branches naked and all white as froth; so that the drunkards, deprived of their sweet draughts, were brought ad efflationem animæ (as the Calde here expoundeth Chetsephab) to an yielding up of the ghost, yea, ad laqueum & restim, as the Latines, to the very halter.

Verse 8. Lament like a Virgin] Our Prophet hath done with his drunkards: and now applyeth himself to the soberer sort, whom also he calleth to deep and down-right mourning, in this case of common calamity; there being not any so innocent and holy, but had some hand, if not upon the greater cart-ropes yet surely upon the smaller cords that drew down dearth and judgment upon the land.

Lament therefore like a Virgin] betrothed, but bereft of her espoused husband, before she was married to him; So Piscator. Others understand it of her that (lately a virgin, but now new-married) passionately loved her husband and bitterly bewaileth his death; which some young women have taken so grievously, that they have refused to live any longer; but have chosen to put an end to their life and grief together, as historians testify.

girded with Sackcloth] Sacco non serico, with mourning weeds as a testimony of help to your humiliation. The dead we see, may be lawfully lamented: indeed it is one of the dues of the dead. It is fit that the body, when sown in corruption, should be watered by the tears of those that plant it in the earth. Only we must not mourn in this case as heathens Without hope. 1 Thes. 4, 13. Our grief must not be excessive, either for measure or continuance; Neither must we mourn so much for our friends departed, as for our sins against God. In the former case baldness is forbidden: in the later it is required Isa. 22, 12. And Zach. 12, 10. 11, 13. One poor woman weeping over Christ shall be as deeply affected as all the people were in that unspeakable losse of their good king Josiah, at Hadadrimmon in the vally of Megiddo, where Jeremiah lamented, and all the singing men and singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentation, and made them an ordinance &c. 2. Chron. 35, 24, 25.

Verse 9. The meat-offering and the drink-offering is cut off] Periit libatio & oblatio. This was the godly mans greatest grief, that there wanted matter of testifying their thankfulness to God in his commanded worships: and that God was so deeply displeased, as that he had deprived Himself and his Ministers of the due allowance; so that they also mourned, and could not chreefully execute their office, for lack of maintenance; for they were not of the Camelion-kind.

Verse 10. The field is wasted the land mourneth] The sacrifices are not only cut off for present, but little hopes left for the future: for the field, that common store-house, that horreum unde hauriatur, is wasted: Shuddad Sadeh, there is an elegant gant allusion in the Original: as in the following words a Prosopopœia not inferi-our to those of the Poets, as Luther and Varatius here note.

The land mourneth] By an ordinary Metaphor among the Hebrewes, those things are said to mourn that are wasted, desolated, corrupted and changed for the worse. Lam. 2. 8. the rampart and the wall are said to lament, and to languish together. When Ephraim died, Alexander not only clypped his Plutarch.
horses and mules hair, but plucked down also the battlements of the walles of the city: because it should appear that the walls and ramparts did mourn for his death: So Esay 24. 7. The new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth: all the merry-hearted do sigh. It is fit that if the land mourn, and faile of her increase, men should much more mourn and be moved with a sense of their sins, the cause of such calamities. The earth lies under a curse of barrennesse, at its best Gen. 3.
17. and was never so beautiful and cheerfull since the Fall of Adam. At this day it lyeth bed-rid, as it were, waiting for the coming of the Son of God, that it may be delivered from the bondage of corruption Rom. 8. 20. But in times of dearth, it seemeth to mourn more then ordinary, yea to blush and bleed.

the new wine is dried up] Or is abated: as loth to look men in the face, because not answerable to their expectation, See Esay. 33. 9.

the oyl languisheth] Or, is sick, Corn, wine, and oyle, are the maine supports of mans life: all's gone.

Verse 11. Be ye ashamed O ye husbandmen] This Repetition of his former exhortation is not needlesse: for man is a stout and stubborn creature: neither goeth any thing more against the hair and the heart with him, then to come downward, and to be so soundly sensible of Gods judgements, as seriously to repent. Hence St. James his extraordinary importunity in pressing this most needfull but much neglected duty, chap. 4. 9, 10. He knew, & so did our Prophet, that this work must be done, or else men are undone. Hence that heap of words. Nunquam satis dicitur quod nunquam satis discitur. That can never be too much taught, that is never enough learned. Seneca.

Verse 12. The Vine is dried up, and the Figtree languisheth] God cutteth you short of all things both for necessity and delight: and this is so much inculcated, and iterated, that you may not slight it as a common occurence: but be deeply affected with it, as a sore affliction. Verba toties repetita viva sunt, vera sunt, sana sunt, plana sunt. Let no man think that this is a superfluous tautologie, or an idlerepetition of the same thing. For, in sacred scripture there is not a tittle in vain: there is not an apex whereon there hangs not a mountain of sense, as the Rabbines use to say. By one and the same thing repeated, memory is helped, affection is excited, and matters of moment are better minded, Phil. 3. 16. Besides, Repetitio confirmatio est, saith Ambrose, The repeating of a matter implyeth 1 The infallible truth of it. 2 The inexpressible excellency of it. 3 The profitable use of it.
4 The absolute necessity of it. Auf faciendum, aut patiendum.

Verse 13. Gird your selves and lament ye Priests] Be you Prest, and first in the practise of humiliation: Be you an example of the believers in word in conversation &c. 1 Tim. 4. 12. a patern of piety. Si vis no flere &c. If others shall lament, you must begin to them: and say as Abimelech did to his souldiers; What ye have seen me do, make hast and do likewise: and as St. Paul doth to his Philippians, Those things which ye have both learned and received, and heard and seen in me, do;
and the God of peace shall be with you. Tom.

for the meat-offering and the drink-offering &c.] your maintenance is substracted, and so the glory is departed, the dayly sacrifice is neglected, which the Jewes counted and called The abomination of desolation. Phineas his wife was not without natural affection 1 Sam. 4. 21. but her spiritual affections prevailed. Therefore in the declaration of her sorrow, that of her father in law and husband is but once named: but twice it came in, The glory is departed, The glory is departed. All comforts are but Ichabods to a good heart without the ordinances: without the sincere milk of the word Gods new-born babes cannot be quitted. I could not live

others. That's the best sermon that's digged out of a mans own brest. Sanctify your selves first, and then prepare your brethren, saith Iosiah to the Priests of his time 2 Cron. 35. 6. A religious fast (for that the Prophet intends here by Sanctify) rightly observed and referred to religious ends, is both a testimony of true repentance, and a furtherance thereunto: for it tames the rebell flesh 1 Cor. 9. ult. which else will wantonize, and overtop the Spirit Dent. 32. 15. And it giveth wings to our prayers, which before grovelled on the ground, as it were. Fasting inflameth prayer; and prayer sanctifieth fasting.

Sanctify therefore a fast, call a solemn assembly] Heb. a day of restraint separating your selves as Zech. 8. 19. from all fleshly delights; amercing and punishing your selves in that sort by an holy revenge, as Psal. 35. 13. and afflicting your soules with voluntary sorrowes for your sins and miseries.

gather the Elders] both those qui canis & annus sunt tales, who are full of dayes and so of sins; and alio those, that are in place of authority: whose offences have forced higher on the wings of Example, and Scandal.

and all the inhabitants of the land] For as all are sin-guilty, so your unanimity and charity will further the service. All should get together in this case, and bring their buckets to quench a common fire: the more publike and general the humiliation is, the more pleasing and prevalent, Judg. 20. 26. 2 Chron. 30. 3, 13. Jon. 3. 5, 7, 8.

And cry unto the Lord] with the heart at least as Moses did at the red sea, when yet none heard him but the ear of heaven only; and as Hannah did when she uttered no audible voyce, and yet poured forth her soul to the Lord with such a strange and unwonted writing of her lips, that Eli thought she had been drnk.

Verse 15 Alas for the day &c.] Cr. Alas, Alas, Alas; the Vulgar Latine A, A, A, which a Lupide makes much adoe about, to little purpose.

for the day of the Lord] that is, the day of the greatest evils and miseries then ever hitherto they had suffered, if repentance prevent not. That they had suffered much already appeareth chap. 2. 25. but those were but the b-ginnings of their sorrowes, if they yet went on in their sins.

for as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come] An Elegant Agnomination there is in the Original: together with an allusion to that tremend title of God Shaddai. The Jewes (probably) boasted much and bare themselves over-bold upon their interest in God almighty. The Prophet therefore tel's them that Gods greatest power should be little to their profit whiles impenitent: for that it should be put forth and exercised for their utter destruction. Aben-Ezra interpreteth Shaddai a Conqueror, Others a Destroyer, which a Conqueror must needs be. And hereto this text and that Esa. 13. 6. do allude, when they say Shod shall come from Shaddai, Destruction from the Almighty. Here also we may learn when we are under affliction, to ascend to the first cause thereof Am. 3. 6. as David did in that three years famine 2 Sam. 21. 1. See 1am. 3. 38.

Verse 16 Is not the meat cut off before your eyes?] Heb. before your eyes: and so it appeareth to be the Prophets speech, and not a form prescribed by him to the people, by adding the word (saying) to the end of the fourteenth verse Cry to the Lord, saying, Alas for the day &c. And it is as if the Prophet should say; Doe ye not yet see what case you are in? Are ye so stupid and so stout or sturdy, as not to stoop though starved almost? should not Vexation give understanding; Are not the fiercest creatures tamed with hard hunger? Will not men in such case buy or beg food of their deadly enemies? O brawny breasts! O horny heart-strings!

yea joy and gladnesse from the house of our God?] All Gods services were to be performed with joy: but now, for want of corn and wine (which cheareth God and man Judg. 9. 13.) the dayly sacrifice ceased, and all good hearts were thereby sadded. See vers. 9 with the Note.

Verse 17 The seed is rotten under their clods] It lieth buried or drowned with excessive excessive rain and moisture, corrupting the seed soon after it was sown: and that which was not so marred, was afterwards, when it came to be corn, dried up with excessive heat.

The corn is withered. ] So that the garner was desolated, the barns broken down for want of stuffing, and for that there was no use of them, sith they sowed, but reaped not, Mic. 6. 15. The husbandman was called to mourning, Amos 5. 16, for a three-fold calamity that lay upon his tillage. First, Immoderate rain; in or about seeding. Secondly, Locusts and other vermine at spring. Thirdly, extreme drought after all, verse 19, 20. Thus God followeth sinners with big plague in the neck of another; (as he did Pharaoh, that sturdy rebell) till he have made his foes his footstools. To multiply sin, is to multiply sorrow, Psal. 16. 4. to heap up wickedness, is to heap up wrath, Rom. 2. 5. I will heap mischiefs upon them, saith God, I will spend mine arrows upon them, Deut. 32. 23. which yet cannot be all spent up, as the Poet feared of his Jupiter, that if he should punish men for every offence, his store of thunder-bolts would be soon spent and exhausted.

mittat Jupiter,

Verse 18. How do the beasts groan? ] The wilde beasts groan in their kinde. The herds of cattell ] home and tame beasts, as oxen, &c. are perplexed, ] as not knowing what to do: 'tis the same word with that, Esth. 3. 15. God had hid his face, (withdrawn his hand) and they were troubled; he took away their breath; (for lack of pasture) they die and return to their dust, as David setteth us in his Physicks, Psal. 104. 29. Epiphanius his Physiologer reporteth of the bird called Charadrius, that being brought where a sick man lieth, if he look upon the sick with a fixed and unremoved eye, there is hopes of recovery: but if he look another way, the disease is deadly. Sure it is, that if God look in mercy upon man and beast, they are cared and catered for, Psal. 36. 7. and 104. 27. and 145. 15, 16, &c. and the contrary. yea the flocks of sheep, &c. which yet can bite upon the bare, live with a little, and get pasture, where the bigger creatures cannot come.

Verse 19. O Lord to thee will I cry, ] I will, though others will not. I have called upon others to cry mightily unto thee, and to meet thee by repentance: but they tantum monstra marina, as so many Sea-monsters, passe by my words with a deaff ear, they refuse to return: thy hand is lifted up in threatening, and will fall down in punishing, but they will not see, Esay. 26. 11. they will not search, they will not have their eyes (like the windowes in Salomons Temple) broad inward: the eyes of their mindes are as ill set (for this matter) as the eyes of their bodies, they see not what's within. But whatever they do, my soul shall weep in secret for their pride, and mine eyes shall weep sore, &c. (Jer. 13. 17.) for their insensibleness of their misery.

For the fire hath devoured the pastures, ] that is, the immoderate scorching heat of the season. See Psal. 83. 14. Jer. 17. 6. Or the blasting winde, as Lyra expounds it; or the locusts, as Drusius, or God, (who is a consuming fire) by any, or all these instruments of his wrath, as Tarnovius.

And the flame hath burnt all the trees of the field. ] This was dreadfull; but yet nothing to that conflagratio mundi, spoken of by St. Peter, 2 Epist. 3. 12. when the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements melt with fervent heat on the heads of the wicked: who shall give a terrible account, with the world all on alight fire about their ears.

Verse 20. The beasts of the field cry also unto thee, ] Glocitant, a term taken from Deer: they cry as they can, they cry by implication, imploring thine help, each for himself. See Psal. 149. 9. Job 39. 3. Psal. 104. 27. And should men be silent?

For the rivers of the Waters are dried up, ] This maketh the Hart bray after the water-brooks, yea shed tears as hunters say the Hart will, when hot and hard-be-stead for water. Hereto David seems to allude, Psal. 42. 5. My tears have been my meat, &c.

And the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness. ] This had been said before verse 19. The reason of such repetitions, see above in the Notes on verses 11, 12. Neither let this last exaggeration of the common calamity, by that which befell the bruit beasts, seem superfluous. For whereas the security and obstinacy of most men is such, that they take little notice of present pressures, but promise themselves peace and and safety, whatsoever God by his servants shall say to the contrary: it is but need-full surely, that their danger should be inculcated, and their calamity set out, and

C H A P. II.

Verse 1. Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, ] Idem aliis verbis repetit, saith Mercer here. The Prophet repeateth the same as in the former Chapter; one-ly in other words, more at large, and after another manner: pressing the people further to the practise of repentance by many sweet promises of the blessings of this, and a better life. Our Prophet may seem to bee of the same mind with Tertullian, who said that he was nulli rei natus nisi penitentia, born for no other end, but to repent, and to call upon others so to do. Tot autem verbis & figuris nititur, saith Luther, he useth so many words, & figures, because he had to do with a people that were harder then rocks, Jer. 5. 3. as also, because there is an absolute necessity of repentance. Aut penitendum, aut pereundum, as our Saviour tells his Disciples twice in a breath, Luke 13. 2, 5. The Prophet had urged them hereunto from the evils they felt, or feared, chap. 1. Pain and penitency are words of one derivation: God plagueth men that he may make them cry Peccavi: not Perij onely, I am undone, as Cain; but peccavi, I have done very foolishly, as David. The seventeen first verses of this Chapter, are Hortatory; the rest Consolatory. The day of the Lord cometh; therefore Repent. This is the summe of the exhortation.
It cometh, and that instantly; Give warning therefore: God loveth to foresignifie; (saith the Heathen Historian) and to premonish, before he punish. He dealt so with Cain, to whom he read the first lecture of Repentance, Gen. 4. as he had done of Faith, to his father Adam, in the Chapter before. He dealt so with the old world, with the Sodomites, Ninevites, &c.

Sound an alarm in my holy Mountain, ] Ring the bells backwards, (as amongst us they do) the house is on fire; the enemy is at hand.

Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble, ] and take course to prevent, or mitigate the ensuing mischief; to cut the cart-ropes of sin, that pull down wrath upon the land.

for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand. ] An end is come, is come, is come, as Ezekiel hath it, chap. 7. 6, 7. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, as the same Prophet hath it elsewhere. Should we then make mirth? as it is in the same Chapter: should we sleep upon a mast-pole, dance upon a weather-cock? go hallowing and hooping to the place of execution?

Ezek. 21. 27.
and 10.

Verse 2. A day of darknesse, and of gloominesse, ] Left they should imagine it to be some light matter, that hath been, and is still threatned, he sets forth to the life, the bitterness of that day, so lowring and lightlesse, that it can hardly be called a day: a dark and dolefull doomsday it will be to the impenitent, infansus & infe-lix, dismall and dreadfull. What better can be expected by those Tenebriones, that delight in the deeds of darknesse, and are acted by those Rulers of the darknesse of this world, the Devils, whom they follow as they are led, 1 Cor. 12. 2. till they fall into outer darknesse, even that darknesse beyond a darknesse, (as the dungeon is beyond, or below the prison) where they shall never see the light againe, till they see all the world on a light fire. Let those Lucifuge look to it, that love darknesse better then light: for, besides what they meet with here, they shall one day have their bellies full of it in that dungeon of darknesse.

Verse 3. A fire devoureth before them, and behinde them a flame burneth,] Such waste these vermine shall make: like as it is said of the great Turk, that where-ever he sets his foot, there never growes grasse again; he doth so eat up the countreys where he comes with his huge armies. And the late Lord Brook, in his discourse of Episcopacy noteth, that that unhappy proverbe amongst us was not for nought, The Bishops foot hath troden here. In Biscay, a Province of Spain, they admit no Bishops to come amongst them: and when Ferdinand the Catholike K. came in progresse hither, accompanied amongst others by the Bishop of Pampelune, the people arose in armes, drove back the Bishop, and gathering all the dust, on the which they thought he had troden, flung it into the Sea. What fires they kindled here in Queen Maries dayes, devouring six or seven hundred at least of Gods faithfull witnesses in five yeers space: And what work they made in our remembrance thoroughout the three Kingdoms, to the imbroyling of all, and their own utter ruine, I need not relate. That renowned Authour afore-cited, had told them time enough, (but that they were destined to destruction) that if they forbore to touch the supreme Authority of the Land, which they affected, it was but as once Mercury spared Jupiters thunderbolts, which he durst not steal, lest they should roar too loud, or, at least, burn his fingers.

and behind them a desolate wilderness.] Not such a wilderness as yeelded pastures, and habitations for shepherds, chap. 1. 19, 20. but utterly desolate, and therefore uninhabitable, as under the Torrid Zone. No place can be so pleasant, but sinne can lay it waste. A fruitfull land turneth the Lord into barrennesse, for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein. There is no foot-step left at this day of that gallant Garden, planted by God himself: or if any, cecidit rosa, sit spina; the place remains in the upper part of Chaldea, but not the pleasantnesse of the place. The like we may say of Sodom, of Jerusalem, of Greece, of Asia the lesse, of Germany, Ireland, &c. England hath hitherto subsisted meerly by a miracle of Gods mercy, and by a prop of his extraordinary patience: The Lord continue it to the glory of his Name, and the good of his poor people. Fiat, fiat.

Verse 4. The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses: and as horsemen,] i. e. the Locusts, and other Insects come on amain: they march with much nimblenesse and swiftnesse. An horse is a warlike creature, full of terror: so swift in service, that the Persians dedicated him to their god, the Sun, as the swiftest creature to the swiftest god. See Job 41. 20. Prov. 21. 31. In Persia they do all, almost on horseback: they buy, sell, confer, but especially fight on horseback to this day. So they did of old; and so did the Chaldeans, from whom they took the Monarchy. These were horsemen, and not as horsemen: this place therefore is properly and principally to be understood of the locusts. Confer Rev. 9. 7.

Verse 5. Like the noise of charrets on the tops of mountains,] Not onely on the tops of standing-corn, (as other Locusts, which therence also have their name Axelists) but as the hurry of charrets in stony places, Rev. 9. 9. For in that book of the Revelation, the Pen-mar. borrows all the elegancies and flowers of the old Testament, thereby to set out the story of the New in succeeding ages: as hereence the Popish Priests are fitly called Locusts for their numerosity and voracity, Rev. 9. 3.

They are also likened unto horses (verse 7.) fed and fierce to run, and rush into the battle, not without noise: Like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, Ecclef. 7. 6. Or the rattling of the jumping charet-wheels, Nahum 3. 2.

as a strong people set in battle array,] In a bloody fight between Amurath the third, King of Turkey, and Lazarus Despot of Servia, many thousands fell on both sides. The brightnesse of the armour, and weapons, was as it had been the lightning: the multitude of lances, and other horsemens-staves shadowed the light of the Sun: arrows and darts fell so fast, that a man would have thought they had poured down from heaven. The noise of the instruments of warre, with the neighing of horses, and out-cries of men, was so terrible and great, that the wild-beasts in the mountains stood astonied therewith: and the Turkish Histories, to expresse the terrour of the day, vainly say, that the Angels in heaven, amazed with that hideous noise, for that time forgot the heavenly hymns, wherewith they always glorifie God.

Verse 6. Before their face, the people shall be much pained,] This is a confirmation of the former assertion: the people when they shall see those swarms of Locusts, &c. mustering and marching in the air, they shall be much pained. (as a travelling woman is) pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them, their faces shall be as flames, Esay 13. 8. for fear lest they should light on their country, and lay all waste.

(the Originall here is, bath gathered a pot, that is by a metonymy, a pot-like-blacknesse). See Nab. 3. 10. Jer. 30. 6. Psal. 68. 13. where, by blacknesse (such as slaves and scullions contract by lying among the pots, and smoky, and sooty chimney-corners) is set forth the exceeding great fear, and affliction that Gods people are oft in: and from whence he graciously promiseth to deliver them that trust in him. Such shall not be afraid--whose heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. It was fear that now caused (the naturall heat and the blood retiring to the heart, to receive it, as in a sudden surprize, the souldiers run to the Castle) palenesse and blacknesse of face. It was hunger afterwards, that burnt them, Dent. 32. 24. and made their visages blacker then a cole, (as Lam. 4. 8.) or darker then blacknesse, as the Originall hath it.

*Verse 7. Strong souldiers have strong sinews: and thence their speedy marches, and quick dispatch. Asahel was light of foot as a wild-Roe. Achilles is every where by Hommer called Swift-footed. Alexander the Great, being asked how he so quickly conquered so many countreys? answered, Μηδὲν ἀνὰ κράτος. By my nimblenesse. Caesar, in omnia preceps, saith Lucan, he passed the Alpes, and was at Rome with a trice, as they say. His Word was, Veni, vidi, vici, I no sooner came, but I overcame. He is said to have taken a thousand Towns, conquered three hundred Nations, took prisoner one million of men, and to have slain as many. What a deal was done by Joshua in a short space at the conquest of Canaan? Charles the fifth, Emperour of Germany, is reported to have won in the Indies, by his Captains and Commanders there, 28. Kingdoms, in 28. Battles. Bajazet the Great Turk, for his swiftnesse and fiercenesse, was surnamed Gilderun, or lightning. To such worthy Warriours, ready and speedy, prompt and present, are these Locusts, Gods armed souldiers, here compared, They shall run like mighty men, they shall climb the wall like men of war, that cannot be kept out, that will not be worsted.

they shall not break their ranks] Or, writh and pervert their paths, as Aben-Ezra out of the Arabick idiom rendreth it. Hierom testifieth that He and others saw in Judea troopes of Locusts flying in so even an order, ut ne puncto quidem aut ungue transverso declinant ad alteram, that you could not say they brake rank at all; tanto ordine & dispositione jubentis Dei volitant, saith He, so strict and beautifull discipline there is in Gods whole army, to whom belong the shields of the earth, the Militia of the whole world.

Verse 8 Neither shall one thrust another] Or straiten another. The Greek word δύω to presse and persecute, seemes to come from this Hebrew word Dakag. The Prophet still alludeth to the manner of marshalling armies in such sort, as that neither may the souldiers hinder one another, nor the enemy have any advantage to break in upon them. Exercitus pulchre dispositus, & amicis pulcherrimus videtur, & hostibus inexpugnabilis, saith Zenophon; that is, A well-ordered army seemeth both beautifull to their friends, and invincible to their enemies.

They shall walk every one] Heb. Man, Mighty man q. d. Each locust shall walk and stalk, as a strong lusty man in his trodden track, in the path that God hath put him into, and shall hold to it.

and when they fall upon the sword] Heb. the long sword, or javelin, they shall not be wounded: as if they were unwoundable, or shot-free, as the Poet fabled of Achilles, and as the Persians, vanquished by the Athenians at the field of Marathon, cried out

*We fell them, yet they fall not: We them wound,
And think them dead, but they are safe and sound.*

Verse 9 They shall run to and fro] As souldiers do when they have taken a town by assault, and have leave to plunder. En victoriam & hostilem insultationem, saith Mercer here. See the lively portraiture of Victory and Triumph.

they shall run upon the wall] After they have scaled it (as afore) they shall walk or run upon it as Conquerors, without feare of an enemy: Alexander the great would do so.

they shall climb up upon the houses] No longer now the owners castles: for they shall be ferrited out of their retiring roomes, or forced to do as Sardanapalus the Assyrian Monarch did; who, straighted by the enemy, sacrificed himself with his wealth and wench to Vulcan in a wood-pile, (as One phraseth it) in his royall pallace.

they shall enter in at the windowes, as a thief] whose property is 1. to climb up some other way, and not to enter in by the dore Iob. 10. 1. death also getteth in by the windowes and that way entreth into palaces Jer. 9. 21. so doth Satan (that thief of the truth, as Basil calleth him) wind himself into the soul by the eyes. those windowes of wickednesse and loop-holes of lust 2. to rife and ransack, and leave little enough behind him. What clean-work these infets made, see before chap. 1. 4. and take notice what great matters God Almighty can do by the most contemptible creatures. Quid ciniphe vilius, saith Philo the Jew, what can be safer then a louse? and yet all the strenght of Egypt was brought down by that despicable vermine? Pliny in his eight book and twenty fourth chapter tel's us out of Mr. Varro, that a great town in Spain was undermined and overturned by conyes; another in Thessaly by Moles: a third in France undone by Froggs: a fourth in Africa by Locusts: a fift in Italy by Serpents &c. Who hath not heard of Hatro, that mercilesse Archbishop of Ments devoured by Mice, though he had motted up himself against their invasion in an Iland? God cannot possibly want a weapon wherewith to beat his Rebels.

Verse 10 The earth shall quake before them &c.] Tragicis figuris calamitatem amplificat, saith Luther here. By such tragical tearmes the Prophets use to set forth an horrible desolation, such as first the Assyrians and afterwards the Romanes brought upon the Jewes: the Turks and Saracens upon the Christian churches whether there were any such earthquake or stupendious concussions of the heavenly bodies as is here described, is uncertain. Strange forerunners there were both in heaven and earth of the last destruction of Ierusalem, as Christ also had foretold. In the dayes of Iustinian the Emperour, the Sun for the greatest part of an yeare, gave so little light, that it was but equall to the light of the Moon, the sky being clear without clouds or any thing to shadow it: after which, there followed a great famine, and much war and bloodshed.

Mr. Clark in the life of Iustinian pag. 67.

the Sun and the moon shall be dark] Wondrous expressions to meet with their wondrous stupidity. The Hebrew Doctors (and Oecolampadius much disliketh it not) allegorize the text; and by the earth understand the common people, by the heavens the Grandees, by the Sun and Moon the king and kingdome, as by the Starres those of indifferent rank, all which are woe begone (as they say) by reason of the present calamities: as when upon the death of Prince Henry, Great Brittain was said to be all in black; and as Demades was wont to say of the Athenians, nunquam eos sapere nisi pullis vestibus indutos that they were never so wise, as when they were in mourning weeds.

Plutarch.

Verse 11 And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army] In the head of his army, as Generals use to do for encouraging the souldiers. A General should be like Quintilians Orator, Vir bonus, dicendi peritus, both valiant and eloquent, as was Cato Censorius, Optimus Orator, Optimus etiam Imperator saith Pliny: and Julius Caesar, and Hunniades, who were Masters of speech as well as men of their hands: So was Joab Davids General, of whose speech to the army 2 Sam 10. 12. Pellican saith, Non potuit vox Duce dignior cogitari, A braver speech could not have been uttered by the mouth of a mortal. But here God himself uttereth his voyce before his army: for the Lord is a man of war Exod. 15. 3. a Victor of warres (as the Chalde there hath it) and what wonder sith the voice of the Lord is powerfull, the voice of the Lord is full of Majesty. Psal. 29. 4. he sets on and gives the signal of the battel to these Locusts, he puts spirit into them and cries Conrage, my hearts: and thence it is, that they are so valorous and victorious.

for his camp is very great] His camp these Locusts are called, though they knew it not. He hisseth for the Flie of Egypt and for the Bee, that is in the land of Assyria. And they shall come and rest all of them in the desolate vallies, &c. Esa. 7. 18, 19. The Assyrian, is the rod of Gods anger, and the staf in his hand. I will send him saith the Lord, against an hypocriticall nation, to avenge the quarrel of my covenant. Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so &c. Esay. 10. 5, 6, 7. But it is here, as when in applying of horse-leeches, the Physician seeketh the health of his patient, the leech only the filling of his gorge. Almighty God as he disposeth and ordereth membra culicis & pulicis, as Austin hath it, the members of the meanest creatures: so by the same power and providence, he over-ruleth all their motions, to his own glory.

for he is strong that executeth his word] Or, that thing is strong, that weak Locust, set a work by God, shall do his will vigorously (and not faintly as Jer. 48. 10.) shall go through stich with it, and none shall hinder it.

for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible] Tremble therefore and humble under this mighty hand of God: let this earthquake worke in you an heart-quake, these horrible commotions and calamities draw from you a shower of teares, or at least a storm of sighs for your sins: unlesse ye hold it better to be carnally secured then soundly comforted.

Dr. Reynolds

Who can abide it?] Or else avoid it, otherwise then by repentance? Am. 8. 12. Fly, saith a Reverend man, from Gods anger to Gods grace. Blood-letting is a cure of bleeding: and a burn a cure against a burn. Running to God is the way to escape him: as to close, and get in with him that would strike you, doth avoid the blow.

Verse 12 Therefore also now saith the Lord] Now though it be late first, and, as you may think, too late. Now, though the dreadfull day of the Lord be very neer at hand: yea though the Locusts be already come, as Kimchi senseth it. Oh that ye would know at the last in this your day of grace, the things that belong to your peace, before the gate be shut, the draw-bridg taken up, the taper burnt out &c. Behold now is the accepted time: behold now is the day of salvation, 2 Cor. 6. 2.

The Apostle (after the Prophet Esay) purposely beateth upon the τὸ νῦν, as if he should say, Now, or never; sith thou mayest, the very next minute, be cut off by the stroke of death from all further time of repentance and acceptation. Up therefore and be doing: It is the Lord himself that thus saith,

Turn ye even to me, ] Usque ad me, altogether as far as to me: give not the half turn onely: begin not to repēt, and then give over the work. Some are ever about to repent, but they can never finde time; and hearts to set seriously about it, to do it in good earnest. Some wambles they have as I may say, and some short-winded wishes, some kinde of willingnesse and velleity, but it doth not boyl up to the full height of resolution to return. The Prodigall changed many places, ere he came home. Many came out of Egypt, that yet never came into Canaan.

and with fasting, weeping, and with mourning. ] with deep, and down-right humiliation, futable to your sins as Ezr. 9. 6. ye have inveterate stains; such as will not be gotten out, till the cloth be almost rubb'd to pieces. Satan hath intrenched himself in your hearts, and will not be gotten out, but by fasting and prayer. Fasting, is of it self but a bodily exercise, and meriteth nothing; for religion consisteth not in meat and drink in the belly full or empty, Rom. 14. 17. Col. 2. 23. But fasting is a singular furtherance to the practise of repentance, and the enforcing of our prayers. See Ezr. 8. 21. As full feeding increaseth corruption, Jer. 5. 7, 8. so religious Abstinence macerath, tameth, and subdueth the Rebell Flesh, 1 Cor. 9. 27. giving it the blew-eye, as there, and 2 Cor. 7. 11. so that not the body so much, as the soul is made more active by emptinesse. Fasting dayes are soul-fasting dayes, they fit men for conversion as here, and make much to the humbling of the spirit; hence they are called dayes of humiliation, and of self affliction, Levit. 16. 31. and 23. 37.

and with weeping, ] Drown your sins in a deluge of tears; cleanse your wounds by washing in this precious water: quench hell-fire with it, kill the wo-m, fetch out sins venome: there's a healing property in these troubled waters. Tears of vine-branches are said to cure the leprosie, and the Olive is reported to be most fruitfull, when it most distill eth. These April showers bring on May flowers, and make the heart as a watered garden; or as some faces appear most oriently beautifull, when most bedewed with tears. Peter never lookt so sweetly as when he wept bitterly. David never sang more pathetically then when his heart was broken most penitentially, Psal. 6. and 51. when tears in stead of gemmes were the ornament of his bed, as Chrysostom speaketh. Mary Magdalen (that great weeper) as she made her eyes a fountain to wash Christs feet in, so she had his wounds as a fountain to bath her soul in; yea she had afterwards the first sight of the revived Plinius, whom she held fast by those feet, that had lately trod upon the lion, and the adder, &c.

and with mourning. ] This is added, as a degree beyond the former. Men may fast, and yet find their pleasures, Esay 58. 13. weep out of stomack as Esan, or complement, as Phryne the harlot, who was surnamed κλαυθρον, weep-laugh, because she could easily do either: and as among the Brasilians, tears are for a present salutation, and as soon gone, as if they had said, How do ye? What is an humbling day, without an humbled heart? not onely a religious incongruity, but an high provocation; like Zimri's act, when all the Congregation were weeping, before the door of the Tabernacle. Here therefore the Lord calleth to mourning, funerall-mourning, as the word signifieth: with tabring upon the breast, Nab. 2. 7. smiting on the thigh, Jer. 31. 19. beating on the head, face, and other parts, sicut mulier- cula in puerperio facere solent, saith Luther there. See Esay 32. 11. and 22. 12. Sorrow for sin must not be slight and sudden, but sad and soaking: the heart must be turned into an Hadadrimmon, Zech. 12. 10, 11. where the Prophet seems in a sort, to be at a stand, for comparisons fit enough, and full enough, to set forth their sorrow, who looking upon Christ whom they had pierced, felt the very nails sticking in their own hearts, as so many sharp daggers, or stings of scorpions. The good soul (say the School-men) seeth more cause of grief for sinning, then for the death of Christ: because therein was aliquid placens, something that pleaseth: but sinne is simpliciter displicens, simply displeasing. So that Gods mourners need not send for mourning women to teach them to mourn, as Jer. 19. 17. but rather have need to be comforted, lest they should be swallowed up with overmuch grief, 2 Cor. 2. 7. and lest Satan get an advantage against them, verse 11. by mixing the detestable darnell of desperation, with the godly sorrow of a pure penitent heart, as Mr. Philpot Martyr speaketh.

Verse 13. And rend your heart and not your garments, ] i. e. not your garments onely, which was gestus perturbations, among the Jews, a gesture usuall with them, to set forth the greatnesse of their grief and displeasure; as 1. At funerals, and losse of friends, as Gen. 37. 2. In case of blasphemy, as 2 King. 18. 3. In time of common calamity, Esth. 4. 1. Godly sorrow for sinne should exceed all other sorrows whatsoever, both in intention, and extension: the whole soul tending continuall streams into it out of every faculty. And hence it is that the Prophet here calleth upon them to Rent, and as it were to discontinue their hearts, Cor integrum, cor scissum, the broken heart is the onely sound heart: and to rent the garment, and not the heart, is as very a juggle as that of Players, who seem to wound themselves, but do not; and make a shew of thrusting themselves thorow their bodies, but the sword passeth onely thorow their clothes. Stage-players can act to the life those whom they personate; yea out-strip them in outward actions: so do hypocrites the true Christian. Doth good Josiah melt at the menaces of the law, and weep, and rend his clothes, and humble himself? wicked Ahab will, also in like case, rend his clothes, put sackcloth upon his flesh, fast, lie in sack cloth, and go softly and heavily, as sorrowfull men and mourners use to do. Doth the Publican fix his eyes on the ground? those hypocrites in Esay will hang down their heads as bulrushes. Doth holy Timothy weaken his constitution with religious abstinence? the false Pharisee will not onely weaken his constitution, but wither and disfigure his complexion, that he may appear to men to fast, Matth. 6. 16. Such pains men will be at for applause, for a little stinking breath; which yet cannot blow one cold blast upon them, when they shall be frying in hell for their seemingnesse. Rent therefore your hearts, saith the Prophet: break up your fallow-ground, circumsise your selves to the Lord, and take away the filthy fore-skin of your hearts, Jer. 4. 3; 4. wash them from wickednesse that ye may be saved, verse 14. Be ye active, and voluntaries in your sorrows for sinne. Virtus nolentium nulla est; Fained and forced grief is nothing worth. Judas grieved, confessed, restored, and yet miscarried. He went not forth, as Peter, to weep bitterly: he did not cast himself into heaviness, as Jam. 4. 9, 10. It was fired out of him, as sweet-water out of roses. It was squeezed out of him, as Verjuice out of crabs. Gods people are commanded to afflict themselves with voluntary sorrows, Lev. 16. to loath themselves for all their abominations, Ezek. 16. to mortifie the deeds of the body by the spirit, to do it with their own hands: and not to give over the practise of it, till they feel their hearts to ake, and quake within them, yea to fall asunder in their bosomes, like drops of water. See all this done by David; after he had numbred the people, 2 Sam. 24. 10. Some shadow of it we have in the example of Epaminondas the Theban Generall, who the next day after the Victory and Triumph, went drooping and hanging down his head: and being asked, why he did so? he answered, Yesterday I felt my self too much tickled with vain-glory: therefore I correct myself for it to day. But we have a better example in holy David, whose heart smote him, saith the Text, and made him smart inwardly. He was not yet smitten, either by by Gods hand, or the Prophets reproof (as afterwards) but his sanctified conscience did its office of a faithfull Monitour, and household Chaplain: his heart misgave him. Bee-masters tell us, that those are the best hives, that make the greatest noise. Sure it is that that's the best conscience, that suffers not a man to sleep in sin. Davids heart smote him. But for what? for numbring the people. It was for his own sin, for a small, for a secret sin, for a failing in the manner only. David knew that a man may dye as well of an inward bleeding, as of an outward hurt. The good soul is oft afflicted for saylings in that holy duty which others applaud and extol. And David said unto the Lord: he could not rest till he had opened his mind unto him by confession and supplication, and so got a vent to his troubled spirit: as when a sore is opened, there is ease immediately. To God therefore he addresseth himself, not to men (as Judas did and Papists do, and many amongst us being in pain of conscience will rather shirk for ease, then sue for pardon,) and acknowledgeth with aggravation the iniquity of his sin, the sinfulness of it as Pauls expression is Rom. 7. 13. (for sin is so vile that he could call it no worse then by its own name) I have sinned greatly in that I have done: his sin swelled like a toad in his eyes, and he spat it out of his mouth with utmost indignation. He confesseth sorrowfully, but not desperately, as Judas: for he both cries for pardon. Take away the iniquity (for as for the punishment how he stood affected see verse. 17. Let thine hand, I pray thee, be against me, and my fathers house) and concludeth himself Gods servant, yea proveth himself so, (as some godly learned think,) by those following words, For I have done foolishly; q. d. If I deserve not to be called Gods servant in regard of my late sin (and indeed God calls him but plain David verse. 12. Goe and say to David, not to my servant David, as at other times) yet at least in regard of my later service of confession joynd with Reformation; for now I see I have done very foolishly, who once thought I had done wondrous wisely and politickly.

and turn unto the Lord your God.] Of turning to God see at large, the Note on Zach. 1. 3. Here it is prescribed as a remedy against Gods wrath, and pressed again and again, to shew the necessity of doing it, or we are utterly undone. So elsewhere, Turn you, turn you, why will you dye? except ye repent, ye must needs perish. Aut paenitendum aut pereundum. Either you must turn on earth, or burn in hell: be born again, or ye cannot see the kingdome of God. Heaven was too hot to hold the Apostate-Angels. And although the devill could get into paradise: yet no unclean thing ever gat into heaven. No dirty dog may trample on that golden pavement. The pure in heart only can see God, as whole eyes can look upon the Sun-beames, and as transparent bodies receive the light. Turn you therefore unto the Lord. If a man see a Lion or a burning fire before him, he will make some shift to turn another way. So here: bialse, for there is no safety in going forward: sith our God is a consuming fire: and as a roaring lion will tear, and rent the cawle of our hearts in sunder Hos. 13. 8. if we rent not our hearts, and turn unto him. By turning may well be here meant Reformation, that Repentance from sin (as Humiliation before required, is in scripture called Repentance for sin) for it is not enough to mourne, unlesse we mend also, to bewail our wickednesse, but we must embrace better courses, Jer. 26. 13. Esa. 1. 16. Mat. 3. 8. Rom. 12. 9, & 13. 11. Eps. 4. 22. God for this cause gives us the light of Nature and Scripture, besides other meanes, and time enough. Had he given us but one Prophet onely, and but forty dayes, as he dealt by Nineveh, we should have done it as they did. How much more now that we abound with leisure (read Jezebels sin and sentence Rev. 2. 21.) and have so many Prophets rising up early and speaking to us, Turn ye again now every one from his evil way Jer. 25. 4, 5. what will become of us if we refuse to be reclaimed, hate to be healed. This one Prophet here fills his mouth with arguments. First, it is not to a tyrant or a stranger that you are exhorted to turn, but to the Lord your God, to him that is your head, husband, father, who hates putting away, having once betrothed you to himself in righteousness and in judgement, and in loving kindnesse, and in tender mercies Hos. 2. 19. Next, This Lord our God is, for his sweet and patient nature here set forth to be Gracious, and will therefore love you freely Hos. 14. 4. Merciful, and will therefore pitty your misery: Slow to anger, or not apt to snuff, but a master of his wrath Nab. 1. 26. and

and repenteth him of the evil] A little punishment being enough to a father for a great fault. Where note, that Gods repentance is not a change of his will, but of his work only: and so he repents for his people, when he seeth their power is gone, Deut. 32. 36. when there is dignus vindice nolus, an extremity fit for divine power to interpose: when the enemies are ready to devour the church or Satan to swallow down Gods child in despair, his bowels work, he can hold no longer, but cries Save my child, save my church &c Jer. 31. 20. then he sends out his Mandamus for deliverance, Psal. 44. 4. then he comes with his Non obstante as Psal. 106. 8. Ilay. 57. 15 Now who would not return to such a God? and what heart can resist such powerfull Rhetorick? An heape of words we have here (taken for most part out of Exod. 34. 6.) and all to draw out faith, and encourage those that have any mind to look toward God. It is no such easie thing to beleeye, as fond folk conceit; and to comfort a conscience cast down in the sense of sin and fear of wrath is no lesse difficult, faith Luther, then to raise the dead from the grave. If men fear they shall fail of mercy upon their return to God. Either they will fall into dedolency or despair. But perswade them once of the goodnesse of God, and it will lead them to repentance; Rom. 2. 4. Let them see that in their fathers house is bread enough, and they will home immediatly: that God will abundantly pardon, and he shall have suitors great store. Eja. 55. 7. The sweet and gracious nature of God should be as a perpetuall picture in our hearts; and an effectuall motive to make men turn unto him.

Verse 14 Who knoweth if he will return and repent &c. ] Hitherto the Prophet had argued from Gods gracious disposition: now here from his curteous and bounteous dealing with his converts.

Who knoweth if &c. ] This is not the speech of one that doubteth and is uncertain (as was that of D. vid' i Sam. 12. 22. who can tell whether God will have mercy on me; that the child may live?) but of one earnestly affirming and avouching, as was that of Mordecai Esth. 4. 14. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdome for such a time as this? q. d. 'I is sure thou art. And it is no lesse sure that if men Turn to God, he will turn to them Zach. 1. 3. and that whithersoever he comes, he leaves a blessing behind him. His favour is no empty favour: it is not like the winter-Sun, that casts a goodly countenance on the earth, but gives little heat and comfort. God ever comes with his Cornu-copia in his hand: and his steps drop fatnesse. Then shall the earth yield her increase, and God even our own God shall bless us, faith the church Psal. 67. 6. He will do it the rather, faith our Prophet, that his people may the more cherefully serve him, when they shall have a meat-offering and a drink offering, et sic maneat int' ger cultus ipsius, and so he may have his dayly service duely performed: for of this the saints are most solicitous: it is their desire that God should be glorified, rather then that themselves should be gratified, and their own turns served.

Verse 15 Blw the trumpet in Zion ] that all may hear, and convene: those of Jerusalem in the Temple, and the rest in their severall Synagogues Lev. 23. 31. for that yearly fast was standard to the rest, kept upon extraordinary and emergent occasions, as here, for the preventing of the fore threatened judgment. Papists appoint set fasting-dayes as Lent, and Friday, in every week, Eves of holly-dayes &c. whether the times be clear or cloudy. A Lapide, also the Jesuite keeps a coyle against Luther and the Centurists, for decrying their Popish processions and publike Letanies, which he thinks to be here and elsewhere authorised. A discourse he giveth us here too, about the use and original of bells among christians, answerable to trumpets amongst the Jewes. A Symmist of his, Cenalis Bishop of Auranches, to prove their Pope-holy Church the true Church, maketh no mention at all either of Preaching or Sacraments: but produceth bells for a sufficient mark of the Catholike true church: we have bells, faith he, whereby our Assemblies are ordinarily called together: but the Lutherans have claps of harquebuzes and pissolers for signes whereby they congregate: betwixt which and bells he maketh a long Antithesis: and therefore inferreth, that the church of Rome is the true church. proper argument: and yet the man pleaseth himself as much in it, as the second-Councell of Nice did in their profound proofs for idolatry, which (as One well saith of them) were such as that the Images themselves (if they were sensible) would blush to hear repeated.

Sanctify a fast] See the Note on chap. 1. 14. Proclaime a religious abstinence from all kind of sustenance (2 Sam. 12. 17. Iohn. 3.) for a season, either from morning till evening, as Judg. 20. 26. 2 Sam. 3. 35. or from evening till evening Lev. 23. 32. or longer as Esth. 4. 16. Act. 9. 9. as the hand and wrath of God is more or lesse felt or feared. But the least time that may be, is a whole day: there is an old Canon, that our fasts should continue usque dum stelle in caelo appareant till the stars appear in the sky. The very Turks in their solemn fasts eate nothing all the day till night: yea so precise they are, that upon their fasting dayes they will not so much as wash their mouths with water, till the stars appear: which maketh their fasts (especially in the Summer, when the dayes be long and hot,) to be unto them very tedious. Christians hold and teach that nature is by fasting to be chastised, and not disabled for service: and that such as cannot fast so long but they shall either indanger health, or be unfitted for the spiritual duties of the day, may eat: provided, that they abuse not this liberty to the satisfying of the flesh. Coloss. 2. 23. 1 Tim. 5. 23.

Vers. 16. Gather the people, Sanctifie the Congregation &c.] Let the Priests Gods ministers see to it, that the people come together: and for the better too, as much as in them lies. For they are to the people in place of watchmen, of Centinels, of Embassadors, and in Christs own stead, who seemes to say unto them as Psal. 50. 5. Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a Covenant with me by sacrifice, that they may meet me with intreaties of peace, disarme mine indignation conceived against them, and quench the flame thereof with their tears; not quench the spirit in their teachers by their crossnesse, and backwardnesse to businesse of this nature.

assemble the Elders] Whether for age as Job. 15. 10. or for place of authority as Josh. 7. 6. 1 Sam. 15. 30. Ruth. 4. 4. These must be chief doers and most forward at fasts, as was Josuah, Jehosapat, the King of Niniveh, Ezra &c. For 1 they are most guilty in regard of their years and their office which either addeth two wings to their sins viz. Example, and Scandal, whereby facile volant, non facile violant they soare much higher, and fly much further. 2 Their presence, counsel, and countenance may be a great furtherance to the work. See Ezek. 46. 10. The Prince in the midst of the people, when they go in, shall go in: and when they goe forth, shall go forth. A Lapid saith, that the Elder fort are to meet, because they are least lustfull, and more prayerfull. It should be so I confesse: but how many old goats are there abroad, that even hang over hell, which gapeth for them? and as the canker soonest entreth into the white rose, so doth corruption easily creep into the white head. He was a rare old man of whom we read, that being tempted to sin said, Nay: lest he should stain his white head.

A Lapid in locum.

Gather the children and those that suck the breasts] For they are church-members, and to them also pertain the publike dangers and calamities: out of which times and cases, children and Novices are not to be tied to these austerities of religion, (as our Saviour sheweth Mat. 9. 17.) as little, as new wine is to be put into old vessels. Add hereunto, that the parents might by the sight of their poor children (subject to Gods wrath by their default,) be brought to a further sense of their own sinfulness; and moved by their cries and laments ut ferventius orent, & plorant, to cry and pray more earnestly.

Should men eat, and drink, and marry, and be merry, when to morrow they may look to die, and are already stumbling in the valley of the shadow of death? Such a thing the old world may do, buried in security, and to be shortly therefore buried in one universall grave of waters. But holy Noah was vexed at it: and Ambrose thinks (not without reason.) that during the time of the deluge, all the while that he was in the Ark, hee came as little at his wife, as Uriah did, while the Ark, and Judah, and Israel abode in Tents, and Joab, and the Hoste encamped in the fields, 2 Sam. 11. 11. Nehemiah, though a great Courtier, and the Kings Cup-bearer, could not but be sad, when it went ill with the Church: all comforts then were but chabods to him, hee had no joy of them. Sorrow at such a time is better then laughter: for by the sadnesse of the countenance the heart is made better, Eccles. 7. 3. The mad world is a perfect stranger to the truth of this sacred Position, as having so far banished sadnesse, that they are profest enemies to seriousness; and stick not to light a candle at the devil (as they say) for sinfull lightsomnesse. But wo be to such mad Mirth-mongers, faith our Saviour, Luke 6. 25. and after him, St. James chap. 5. 1, 5. and before them both, the Prophet Esay chap. 22. 12, 13, 14. and the Prophet Amos chap. 6. 4, 5, 6. What so lawfull as the use of the marriage-bed, Heb. 13. 4? and for whom more lawfull, then for the bride-groom, and bride? Yet in a common calamity, and in a day of restraint (as a fast-day is called, Joel 2. 15.) married couples must abstain, 1 Cor. 7. 5. where the Apostle speaketh of a publike fast, as Peter Martyr observeth. Hence Zech. 8. 19. they separated themselves, at such a time. And it is spoken of as a foul sinne, Esay 58. 3. behold in the day of your fast, ye finde pleasure. All sensuall delights, though never so lawfull at other times, must bee then suspended and laid aside: As musick, mirth, perfumes, Dan. 6. 18. brave apparrell, Exod. 33. 4, &c. all ornaments of the body, soft-lying, 2 Sam. 12. 16. all cheerfulness and outward joy, Judg. 20. 26. 1 Sam. 7. 8. The Roman Censor punished one that shewed himself out of a window, with a garland upon his head, in the time of the second Punick war.

Verse 17. Let the Priests, the Ministers of the Lord, ] Let not them be either dull, or dumb, (as Popish Masse-priests with their dumb-shews at divine Service) but as (for their dignity) they are the Lords Ministers, (as likewise the good Angels are, and their fellow-servants) so (according to their duty) they must be first in holy exercises: going in and out before Gods people in the performance of their trust, and that worthy work of theirs, 1 Tim. 3. 1. for the which they are to be very highly esteemed in love, 1 Thess. 5. 13. Let Ministers therefore pray hard for their people, as did Aaron, Samuel, Paul, &c. Let their prayers (at fasts especially) be well watered with teares (those effectuall Oratours, that cry to God for mercy, Psal. 39. 12. as blood doth for vengeance, Gen. 4. 16.) as theirs were Judg. 20. 23. and Judges 2. 5. and 1 Sam. 7. 6. and as Ezra, chap. 10. 1. and Jeremy, chap. 9. 1. and 13. 17. and why? but for corruption in Magistrates, Ministers, All sorts; a generall defection drawing on a generall desolation. Oh let Gods two faithfull witnesses be clothed in sack-cloth, Rev. 11. 3. teaching Gods people with many tears and temptations, both publikely and from house to house: yea, not ceasing to warn them night and day with tears, to redeem their own sorrows by sound repentance. It is said of Athanasius, that by his tears, as by the bleeding of a chaste Vine, he cured the leprosie of that tainted Age. And of Luther, that by his prayers and tears he had prevailed with God, that Popery should not over-run his country, during his dayes. When I am dead, said He, let those pray that can pray. Melancton, his Colleague, writeth, that he constantly prayed with abundance of teares: for he knew, that as Musick upon the waters, sounds farther, and more harmoniously then upon the land: so prayers joyn'd with tears, finde much respect with Christ; who could not but look back upon the weeping women, and comfort them, though he was then going to his death.

between the porch and the altar, ] This was that void place; where the Priests prayed after the sacrifices were offered, Ezek. 8. 16. As in man, there is Body, Soul,

Soul, and Spirit, 1 Thess. 5. 23. so in the Temple at Jerusalem, 1. between Solomons Porch, Alt. 3. 11. and the Altar of burnt-offering, was the outer great Court, 2 Chron. 4. 9. where the people met for preaching and prayer. Next, there was the second Court, for the Priests onely: and here was the Altar of incense, Luke 1. 9, 10. Thirdly, the most Holy place, for the High-priest to enter once a year, Num. 17. 10. The first is here spoken of, the outer Court, where the priests might bee best heard to pray, and seen to weep; and the people might comport, and say Amen; the want whereof St. Paul counts no small losse, 1 Cor. 14. 16.

and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, &c.] Other exercises there were usually performed at publike fasts; as Reading the Scriptures, Jer. 36. 5, 27. expounding and preaching, Neh. 8. 4, 8. examining, censuring, and punishing such finnes as then most rained, Neh. 9. 2. Ezr. 9. 2. Josb. 7. and 22. Binding themselves to God by a Covenant of better obedience, Nehem. 10. 18, 29, 30. Contributing to good uses, Esay 58. 7. and 2 Chron. 31. 3, 4. But the chief businesse and duty of the day was, as here, Prayer to God for pardon of sinne, and removall of shame, and other punishment: whence also it was called, A day of Atonement, or Expiation.

Spare thy people, O Lord, &c. Brevi oratio, sed tota affectibus ardens, saith Mercer, A short prayer, but very affectionate: So are all Scripture-forms: they have fulnesse of matter, in fewnesse of words. Quam multa, quam paucis! How much in a little! as Tully said of Brutus his Laconicall Epistle. See Numb. 6. 24, 25, 26. Hof. 14. 2. Luke 18. 13. Matt. 6. 9, 10, &c. which is both a prayer, and a pattern: as the standard is the exactest measure. Why then should any man fall out with forms, and call them idols, odious as swines-flesh, &c? Why should they say, that the use of the Lords Prayer is the Note of a formalist? Is not this to speak evil of good, &c.

and give not thine heritage to reproach:] Suffer us not, for our finnes, to be forced by famine, to beg bread of our enemies the Ammonites, and Moabites: for that will reflect upon thee Lord, and turn to thy dishonour, as if thou hadst no care of thine heritage, couldst not maintain thy servants. See a like prayer to this, Numb. 14. 11, 12, 16, 17, &c. and Deut. 9. 26, 27, 28. and learn to deprecate shame and reproach as a fruit of sinne, and a piece of the curse, Deut. 28. Lev. 26. 1 Sam. 2. 30. Beg of God; 1. To keep thee from reproachfull courses, such as may expose thee to the scandall of the weak, and scorn of the wicked. David is much in this petition. 2. To hide thee in a pavilion from the strife of tongues, Psal. 31. 20. either to preserve thee from aspersions, or so to oil thy name, that they may not stick. 3. To give thee good repute and report among the best. 'Twas God gave Solomon honour; and he promiseth it to all his, as a reward of religion, Prov. 22. 4.

They are bloody in their positions, and dispositions. See Rom. 1. 31. their government is tyrannicall, such as the Spaniards is over the poor Indians, the Turks over Greece, the Rebels over the English in Ireland, &c. The Saints also are, 1. Consciencious, and cannot yeeld to their unlawfull commands, as the three children. 2. Zealous, and cannot but contest, as Steven, Paul at Athens, the Martyrs. 3. Friendlesse, and destitute, Matt. 10. 16. as Paul afore Nero, Christ afore Pilate, forsaken of all. Pray therefore as here, and prevent such a mischief, by shunning *Jerusalem*s finnes of ignorance, ingratitude, incorrigiblenesse, formality, &c. and by putting our necks under the yoke of Christs obedience, observing from the heart that form of doctrine which he hath delivered unto us, Rom. 6. 17.

wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God? ] q. d. Why should they cast our religion in our dish? why should they twit us with thy neglect of us? why should thy name be blasphemed, and thy power traduced, as it were on a publike theatre? This was that which most galled these good souls, (as it had oft done David before them) that God, with whom they quartered armes, should be reproached for their sakes, and thorow their sides; and his glory defaced. This was as a murthering-knife in Dauids bones, Psal. 42. 10. and worfe to him then all the

the evil that he had suffered from his youth up. Our nature is most impatient of reproach: for there is none so mean but thinks himself worthy of some regard: and a reproachfull scorne shewes an utter disrespect which flowes from the very superfluity of malice. You shall find some (saith Erasmus) that if death be threatened can despise it: but to be belied or reproached, they cannot brook, nor from revenge contain. Gods people can bear wrongs best of any: compell them to go a mile, they'll be content, if it may do good, to go two, yea as farr as the shooes of the preparation of the Gospell of peace will carry them. But if wrong be offered to God, if he be any way dishonored, or his Name bored through by blasphemies, O what a stomach they have presently, and how blessedly blown up are they, with a zeale of Gods glory, which even eateth them up.

Verse 18. Then will the Lord be jealous (or, Zealous) for his land] Then discit straight upon't; no sooner shall you repent (as is prescribed,) but the Lord will be jealous &c. Of Gods jealousy for his people, see the Note on Zech. 1. 14. and 8. 2. And of the happy effect of fasting turned to feasting, see the Note on Zach. 8. 19. See also Judg. 20. 23. Ezra. 9. 6. Dan. 9. 20. 2 Chron. 20. Bacah turned into Berachah: besides the constant experience of these and former times, of the happy successe and unmiscarrying returns of holy fasting and prayer: no instance to the contrary. God usually answers his humbling people, as here, according to the desire of their hearts: neither so only, but according to the request of their lips also. Psal. 21. 2. he fits his mercy ad cardinem desiderii: and lets it be to his, even as they will. They say Spare thy people, and accordingly he will pitty or spare his people, saith the Prophet. They would not have God to give his heritage to reproach by inflicting famine upon them, as if they served an hard master that would affamish them. To this God gives a full answer in the next verse, Behold I will send you corn &c. Again, they desire God to take care of his own great name, and to vindicate it. I will, saith God, by doing greatest things for you Verse. 20. and by causing the blasphemers to return and discern that their Rock is not as your Rock, themselves being judges: and that to ask, where is now their God? is as great folly, as if one should say, betwixt the space of the new and old moon, Where is now the Moon? when as it is never neerer the Sun, then at that time. There are some Interpreters of good note, that read this verse not in the Future, but in the Preter tense, thus, Then was the Lord zealous for his land, and pittied his people, &c. when once he saw them seriously to repent, he did all this that followeth for them. Neither maketh it any thing against this interpretation, that the repentance of this people, their assembling and fasting &c. is not recorded. For no more is it that Moses went to Pharaoh according to Gods command, to threaten those swarmes of flies Exod. 8. 20. or that Esay took his son Shear-iasub, and went to Ahaz to confirme and comfort him; as God had commanded Esay. 7. which yet we doubt not but the Prophet did. This is an ordinary Aposiopesis.

and pitty his people] Or, spare them, pardon them. The word signifies to shew mercy to him whom by all right thou mayest justly destroy Ezek. 5. 11. 1 Sam. 15. 3. Oh the divine Rhetorick, and omnipotent efficacy of Repentance! This is the rainbow, which if God seeth shining in our hearts, he will never drown our soules. Dat pœnitentiam & postea indulgentiam, He gives his people to repent, and then spareth them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. But it is otherwise with those that partake not of the divine nature: they are fierce, and implacable, as is the devill, who workes effectually in them, as a smith doth in his forge. Henry the fourth Emperour of Germany came in the midst of a fore winter upon his bare feet, to the gates of the castle of Canussum, and stood there fasting from morning to night for three dayes together, waiting for the judicial sentence of the Pope, and craving pardon of him; which yet he could not obtaine by his own or others tears, or by the intercession of any Saint, save only of a certain harlot, with whom the Pope was then taking his filthy pleasure. The Emperour mistooke, who thought that the Pope could be pacified by fasting and prayer. This God required another kind of sacrifice, then these.

Verse 19. Yea the Lord will answer and say unto his people] He will say it in answer to their prayers (see the Note on verse 18.) Fear not my people, that ye shall be a reproach among the Heathen:

Little do we consider or understand from how many deaths and dangers we are dayly and hourly delivered. It is good to keep a catalogue of Gods providences, and to transmit them to posteritie, such as was that of the Gun-powder-plot; and before that, of the Reformation begun by Henry the eight, and carried on by his son, to the ridding of the land of those popish Locusts; Which Reformation how imperfect soever, to be done by so weak and simple meanes, yea by casual and cross meanes, against the force of so puissant and politick an adversary, is that miracle, which we are in these times to look for. An out-lander speaketh thus of it, Ecclesie Anglicana reformationem desperasset aevi praterita, admiratur presens, obstupescet futura. This was the Lords own work; and it is marvelous in our eyes. Oh that the same Lord would be both Author and Finisher! and as he hath in good part cut off the names of the idols out of the land, so that they shall be no more remembered; so he would cause the Prophets and the unclean spirit to passe out of the land, that he would send all false doctrine and heresy packing to hell from whence they came. Fiat, Fiat.

The old Hebrewes understood this text concerning the destruction of the devill in the dayes of the Messias. Oh that God would once destroy that first-born of the devill, that King of Locusts, Abaddon, the Pope, and dung his vineyard with the dead carcasses of his incurable complices, that their stink might ascend, and their ill savour come up into all mens nostrills. Matthew Paris (an ingenuous Papist) speaking of the court of Rome long since, laid, Hujus fator usque ad nubes fumum terribimum exhalabat, Her filthinesse hath sent up a most noysome stench to the very clouds of heaven, as Sodom did. gentea ferream, ex ferrea terream, superesse ut in sterco abires, of gold silver, of silver iron, of iron earth, and that she would next become of earth dung, &c. She is so already, and stinks alive worse then any carrion, rotting in its slime. Oh that God would once put into the hearts of the kings of the earth to loath her, and burn her, for an old stinking baud, as is prophecyed they shall, Rev. 17. 16.

because he hath done great things. ] Heb. he hath magnified to do, he hath made great spoil and havock, he hath revelled in the ruines of Gods poor people, and so hath hastened his own destruction, and their deliverance. The Saints are many times more beholden to their enemies outrages then to their own deserts, or duties for deliverance. Some Interpreters, as Castalio, Leveley, &c. understand the Text, of God: and render it, Quia magnificè ager, for the Lord shall do great things, as it is also in the following verse: there being here the same anomaly, or change of person, as is Esa. 22. 19. And I will drive thee from thy station, from thy state shall he pull thee down.

Thine inhabitants are Penitents, and Repentance hath turned their crosses into comforts; as scarlet pulls out the teeth of a serpent; as wine draweth a nourishing vertue from the flesh of vipers, as the Philosophers-stone, they say, turns all into gold. See 1 Pet. 1. 7. God will turn all thy sadness into gladness: neither shalt thou any more lye to those that manure thee, (as the Scripture phrase is, Habak. 3. 17.) that is, disappoint, and frustrate their expectation: but thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, Deut. 33. 29.

It shall be said of Judea, as Solinus saith of Spain, In Hispania nihil infructuosum, nihil sterile, that there is no unfruitfulness in any part of it: or, as it is said of Campania in Italy, that it is the most fruitfull Plat of earth that is in the Universe.

Verse 23. Be glad then ye children of Zion, ] ye righteous Ones, Pfal. 32. 11. and none else: for joy is the Just mans portion, and none have any reason to rejoyce but such: nay they are flatly forbidden it, Hof. 9. 1. See the Note there. Let Israel rejoyce in him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyfull in their king. Let the Saints be joyfull in glory. Gaudeant in re, gaudeant in spe, gaudent de possessione, gaudeant de promissione, saith Bernard. If Plato could tell the Musicians, Philosophers knew how to dine and sup without them, they could bee merry without a fidler: how much more may Zions children? Be it that there is a cord in the sinne of the wicked. (to strangle their joy with) yet the righteous sing and are merry, Prov. 29. 6. In the greatest fail of all outward comforts, they can rejoyce in the Lord their God, as here, and as David at the sack of Ziklag, 1 Sam. 30. 6. and Habakkuk, amidst all the miseries of the world, and malice of Satan, Habak. 3. 17. It is in the Lord their God that they rejoyce; it is an holy and spirituall joy, not profane and carnall, as is the worldlings, who feedeth upon ashes, &c. Esay 44. 20. rejoyceth in a thing of nought, Am. 6. 13. his joy is no better then a little counterfeit complexion, crackling of thorns, &c.

True it is that no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them Ecclef. 9. 1. becauſe all things come alike to all verſe. 2. But yet from this text we may comfortably conclude, that if the good things of this life make us more cheerfull, thankfull, hopefull: if Mercy excite us to duty, and the ſenſe of Gods love makes us love God, his wayes, and people, with a deſire to love them more, then we are loved of God, who is in us of a truth 1 Ioh. 4. 10, 19. and we may know it too. For if inſtinct of nature teach dammes to know their young ones, and the young their dammes: ſhall not Gods ſpirit teach us to know him, that he is in the middeſt of us; not by his omnipreſence only, but by his gracious preſence? yea that he is the Lord our God, and none elſe; and that, while we hold us to this anchor-hold of the faithfull ſoul, we ſhall never be aſhamed Pſal. 31. 1. The scope of the text is (as Mercer well noteth,) to shew that ut gratitudo & commune Christi beneficium, sic & spiritus, as the benefits of Christ are free and common to all his people, so is the Spirit. And surely, next to the love of Christ in dwelling in our nature, we may well wonder at the love of the holy Ghost, that will dwell in our defiled soules, and act in them, as he doth. For there are diversity of gifts, but the same Spirit 1 Cor. 11. 4. as the divers smells of flowers come from the same influence: and the diverse sounds in the organ, from the same breath.

And had he looked a little higher into those chapters, and taken in all the troubles that befell the Church from our Saviours ascension to his second coming, together with those horrible calamities and confusions that shall befall the wicked, for contempt of the Gospell, and persecution of the professors thereof, he had done right, in mine opinion. It is ordinary with the Prophets to set forth horrible commotions by such figurative expressions, See Ier. 4. 23. &c. Isay. 13. 10. Rev. 6. 12. Those that have received the Spirit of Adoption, must not dream of a delicacy, but expect persecution. Christ came to send fire on the earth Luk. 12. 49. Neither may Persecutors hope to escape unpunished, but look to be pursued by divine justice. See the Note on Rev. 6. 15. How heave was the hand of God upon Jerusalem that slaughter-house of the Saints; and afterwards upon the Ten Persecutors of Rome? 1. Nero (whom Tertullian rightly calleth Dedicatorum damnationis Christianorum, quippe qui orientem fidem primus Roma cruentavit, the first bloody Persecutor of the Christian religion) lost thirty thousand of his subjects by the pestilence, had his army utterly routed and cut off in Britanny: both the Armenia's revolted from him: the Senators rose up against him, and compelled him to be his own deaths-man. 2. Domitian was butchered by his souldiers. 3. Trajan dyed of a dropsie. 4. Severus dyed miserably here at York. 5. Maximinus, with his sonn, was cut in peeces. 6. Decius dyed in a farre country. 7. Valerian was steald, by Sapores king of Persia, who took him prisoner. 8. Aurelian was slain by his own men. 9. Dioclesian poisoned himself. 10. Maximian hang'd himself. What should I speak of Julian, Anastasius, Heraclius &c. The French persecutors, Francis the second, Charles the ninth, Henry the third, the Guises &c. Philip the second of Spain, who returning out of the Low countries, fell into a storm, and suffered shipwrack to the great danger of his life? He said he was delivered by the singular providence of God to root out Lutheranism, which he presently began to do, with all his might. He afterwards died miserably of the lousie disease. Q. Mary died of a tympany, or else of grief of heart for K. Philip's unkind departure, forraine losses, Callice surrendred, hurt done by thunders from heaven, and by fire in the royal navie, extream dearths raging, her conceptions fayling &c. Such there were to be seen (as I have heard from eye-witnesses) on that very night wherein the Powder-plot was detected and defeated, in a very terrible manner. And such were those Meteors in the likenesse of fiery serpents, that fell here Anno 788. before the Invasion of the Danes: whereunto we may adde the new-starre that appeared in Cassiopeia in November 1572. and continued sixteen moneths: soon after which Charles the 9 of France (Author of the Parisian Massacre) died of exceeding bleeding at severall parts of his body, inter horribilium blasphemiarum diras, saith the Historian, cursing and swearing. I will also gather all nations* ] that are adverse to my Church, that I may have my peniworths of them, and do execution upon them with ease (troubling those troublers of his Israel, 2 Theff. 1. 6. licet videantur plures & potiores) as he dealt by Jehosaphats enemies, 2 Chron. 20. and leaving them no more place to escape, then those have who are environed in a valley by a potent enemy, who hath gotten them into a pound, as the proverb is. And this God will do in the valley of Jehosaphat, (a valley, saith Lyra, Adrichomius, and Montanus; betwixt Jerusalem and Mount Olivet) in the very view of the Church, that the righteous may rejoyce, when he seeth the vengeance, and wash his feet in the blood of the wicked. So that a man shall say, Verily there is a reward for the righteous, (see verse 4.) verily, he is a God that judgeth in the earth, as in the valley of divine judgement, (so some render Jehosaphat here, as if it were an appellative) called verse 14. the valley of decision, and the words that next follow seem to favour, and I will plead with them (judicio agam) judicially plead with them there, for my people: which word also God useth when he foretellet the destruction of Gog, and Magog in Ezekiel. So that the valley of Jehosaphat (saith Mercer) is the place whereof ever God shall please to punish the enemies of his people. As for that conceit of Lyra and others: who gather out of this Text, that this valley neer Jerusalem, shall be the very place where Christ shall sit to judge the world at the last day: and for confirmation, alledge Acts 1. 11. Mercer judgeth it to be a childish conceit: and Luther asketh where all mankind shall have room to stand in so small a valley? Though others judge it not unlikely that it shall be thereabouts, because Jerusalem is in the middle and about the center of the earth: and besides, it will be the more for the glory of Christ, to sit there as Judge where himself was judged. But it is probable he will sit in the air, (neer the earth) whither the Elect shall be rapt up to meet the Lord, 1 Thess. 4. 17. that the devils may be subdued and sentenced in the air, where they have ruled and played Rex, Ephes. 2. 2. and that the wicked may be doomed on the earth, where they have offended.

for my people, and for my heritage Israel, ] All was His: and the wrongs done to them, were done to Gods self: as the injury done to the Subject, is said to be done to the Sovereigne, his crown and dignity. See Acts 9. 4. Matth. 25. 45. So that ye cannot tread upon the least toe, in Christs mysticall body, but the head cries out from heaven, Why hurtest thou me? The Saints sufferings are his, Col. 1. 24. their reproach his, Heb. 13. 13. Manet compassio, etiam cum impassibilitate, Christ retaineth still compassion, though free from personall passion: and though without feeling, yet not without fellow-feeling. He doth condolere proportionate ad miseriam, as Parens rendreth the Apostle, Heb. 5. 2. condole, and that proportionably to his peoples misery.

and for mine heritage Israel, ] Israel, Ἰσραηλῆς, saith Mercer, the people of Gods purchase, that comprehend all his gettings, and are much more dear to him than Nabobs inheritance was to him: He sets them before his face for ever, Psal. 41. 12. as loving to look upon them; yea, upon the very walls of the houses where they dwell, Esay 49. 16. They are his portion, Dent. 32. 9. his inheritance, Esay 19. 25. the dearly beloved of his soul, Jer. 12. 7. his glory, Esay 46. 13. dear to God, though despised of, and dispersed in the world. He may suffer them to be Anathema secundum dici (as Bucholcer said) but not secundum esse.

Whom they have scattered among the nations, ] The Jew-Doctours referre this to Titus and Adrian the Roman Emperours. The first carried 97000 of them captives, saith Iosephus. The second drove them utterly out of Jewry; and by Proclamation commanded them, not so much as look toward that land, from any tower or high mountain. But all this was for their sedition and other wickednesses. And ever since they have continued a disiected and despised people, exiled out of the world, as it were by a common consent of Nations, specially for their inexpressible guilt in murdering Christ, and persecuting his people: Concerning whom therefore, this Text is to be understood. See how Christians were soon scattered abroad thorowout the regions, Acts 8. 1. Iam. 1. 1. 1 Pet. 1. 1. where they are called Strangers of the dispersion. Afterwards the Heathen Persecutours relegated and confined them to Isles, and mines: and scattered them into corners. So did the Pope and his Agents: forcing them to flee for their lives, &c.

and parted my land] As Salmaneser did to his new colonies: as Senacherib also designed to do, had not God prevented him: as the Pope taketh upon him to do, those countries whom he counteth hereticall. He gave this land (in Hen. 8. his time) Primo occupaturo to him that could first seise it. He declared Iohn King of Navarre, a schismatick, an heretick, an enemy to the sea Apostolick, and gave his kingdom to the Spaniard, because he took part with the French, and would not suffer the Spaniard to march through his kingdom against the French. And what work he hath lately made in the Palatinate and other parts of Germany, who knowes not?

Verse 3. And they have cast lots for my people] Impiously and imperiously domineering over them: as those rude souldiers that cast the dice upon our Saviours Coat, at his passion. It was ordinary to divide by lot the enemies they had taken in fight Nah. 3. 10. Obad. 11. Lam. 3. 53. Judg. 5. 30. but at base rates thus to sell Gods people ignominiously, and that to satisfie their lewd lusts, this was unsufferable.

and have given a boy for an harlot,] Heb. that boy, as afterwards, that girl, with an emphasis; a son and daughter of Israel, those earthly angels, Angli quasi Angeli, as Gregory the Great once said of the English-boys presented to him. Thou hast slain my children and delivered them, to cause them to passe thorow the fire, said God, not without very great indignation, to their idolatrous parents, Ezech. 16. 21. His they were more then theirs: by vertue of the covenant he had made with that people. Hence Deut. 14. 1. Ye are the children of the Lord your God: and can he bear with your misusages? Should he deal with our sister as an harlot? said they with a courage (as the great Zaijn in Zonab importeth) Gen. 34. 31. So here, should they give a boy, (such a boy) for an harlot? that is, for the hire of an harlot, and to gratifie such abhorred filths? In the reigne of Henry 2. of France, Anno 1554 many precious sonnes of Zion were burned there for religion, not without the indignation of honest men, who knew that the diligence used against those poor people was not for any piety or religion, but to satiate the covetousness of Diana Valentina the Kings Mistresse, to whom he had given all the confiscations of goods, made in the kingdom, for cause of Heresie.

God will turn a worse cup down their wide gullets one day, Quorum vivere est bibere, and whose profane proverb it is, Bibere & sudare, est vita Cardiaci: But what an heathenish baseness is that of the Papists (besides an horrible abuse of Gods holy ordinance) that at Rome, a Jewish maid may not be admitted into the stews of whoredome, unlesse she will first be baptized. Essensaus (a modest Papist) writeth it, not without detestation.

Psal. 11:

lib. 3. cap. 4.

Verse 4. Yea, and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, &c.] Or, what are ye to me? I value you not, but look upon you as vile persons, how great soever in the world? See Dan. 11. 21. Or, what have I to do with you? what wrong have I done you, that ye invade my land, and molest my subjects? It is an idle misprision to sever the fence of an injury done to any of his members, from the head? and it was a malapert demand of the devil, What have I to do with thee, O Jesus the Son of the living God? whilst he vexed a servant of his. But there is an old enmity betwixt them and their seed, Gen. 3. 15. and it will never be extinct, while the world stands. Israel had given Tyre and Zidon as little cause to quarrell them, as once they had done Moab, whom they had assured, that they would not meddle nor molest them. Howbeit, Moab was distressed, or irked, fretted, vexed at them, Numb. 22. 3. carried with Satanicall malice against Gods people, because of a different religion; and sought their ruine. Lo this was the case of Tyre, Zidon, and Palestine, near neighbours, but bitter enemies to the Church. Bats flie against the light: malice breaks all bonds: and vents it self by utmost inhumanity. Mercer understandeth by those nations, verse 2, 3. the open and professed enemies of the Church: and by these neighbouring peoples here mentioned, those more subtle adversaries, that pretend love, and can draw a fair glove upon a foul hand: but will take the first opportunity to do the Saints a mischief, and to spet their poyson at them. This an old stratagem of the Devil, full practised by the Renegado Jesuites amongst us.

Will ye render me a recompense? and if ye recompense me, &c. ] Num meriti mihi refertis, an etiam infertis? so some render it. Whilest ye afflict my people, is it to be avenged on me; for an old injury I have done you? or is it rather to pick a quarrell with me, who have done you no wrong? Surely, whether it be this, or the other, I shall handle you according to your deserts.

swiftly and speedily will I return your recompense. ] Repente à vestigio, while you'll say, what's this? I will execute my fierce wrath upon you, and you shall soon feel what it is despitefully to spit in the face of heaven, and to wrestle a fall with the Almighty. See Obad. 15. God cannot bear long with sins of this high nature. He resisteth the proud persecutors.

Verse 5. Because ye have taken my silver, &c. ] Sacriledge is a second sinne they here stand charged with. Ye have taken, that is, taken away, (by which observation, ye shall easily reconcile the Psalmist, Psal. 68. 19. with the Apostle, Eph. 4. 8. saith Tarnovius here) my silver and my gold, vessels consecrated to mine use and service: or mine, that is, my peoples, whom ye have robbed: but it shall not thrive with you; it shall prove as the gold of Tholouse, fatal to them that had any part of it: or as Achans wedge, that cleft his body and fould asunder

these ye have carried into your Temples, ] or Palaces, even my goodly pleasant things. ] my desireable goods, either to adorne your houses, or your idols, to your own bane, as Belsazzar. It is surely a snare to a man, who devoureth dedicated things: that bowseth in the bowles of the Sanctuary. And it was a sad complaint of Luther, that even in the reformed Churches, Parishes and Schools were robbed of their due maintenance: as if they meant to starve us all. The like saith Gualther in his Homily upon this Text: Non desunt pseudo-evangelici, saith He, There want not such false-Gospellers amongst us, who restore not the Church her wealth, pulled out of the Papists fingers: but make good that saying of One, Possidebant Papista, possident Rapista; Papists had Church-livings, and now Rapists have gotten them: like as a good Authour observeth upon the battle of Monleclerye, that some lost their livings for running away, and they were given to those that ran ten miles further.

have ye sold unto the Grecians. ] that is, to the Gentiles in generall, for so Saint Paul oft useth the word Grecians, as contradistinct to Jews; who were barbarously sold, as if they had been brut beasts, and that into the farthest countries, that they might never ransom themselves, nor return to their native soil again. This was singular, yea savage cruelty, which the mercifull God cannot abide, but will severely punish, Lam. 2. 13, 14. Esay 47. 6. thou didst shew them no mercy; upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid the yoke. See the Babylonian cruelty graphically described, and accordingly recompensed, Ier. 51. 34, 35, &c. The Spanish cruelty to the poor Indians is unspeakable. They have made away 50 Millions of them in 42 years, as Acosta the Jesuite testifieth; and that under pretence of converting them to the faith. They suppose they shew the wretches great favour, when they do not (for their pleasure) whip them with cords, and day by day drop their naked bodies with burning bacon. Such a devil is one man to another, when set awork by the devil, and spur'd on by him. But shall they thus escape by iniquity? In thine anger cast down the people, O God. He will do it: for those words are not more a prayer, then a prophecy.

Verse 7. Behold I will raise them out of the place, &c. ] Seem it never so improbable, or impossible, He do it, saith God, and you shall see it. Behold, He fetch home my banished, though they may seem to be as water spilt on the ground. He make those dead bones live: and raise my self a name and a praise, by out-bidding their hopes; and marring your designe of utter extermination. Rabert understands the words concerning the resurrection of the dead at the last day: because the Hebrew word properly signifieth, to raise one out of sleep. Some think it is meant of the the Apostles and Martyrs, fetcht out of banishment; as was John out of Pachmos, Athanasius, Chrysostom, (who yet in his last banishment, by reason of the barbarous usage of the souldiers that led him along, hired for that purpose, sweetly and blessedly breathed out his last) the English Exiles in Queen Maries time, whereof many returned and did excellent service here. But I doubt not, saith judicious Calvin, but God intends here a spiritual gathering together of his people into one body, by the bond of faith: and this was principally fulfilled after the death of Christ, who died for that Nation: And not for that Nation onely, but that also wee should gather together into one the children of God, that were scattered abroad, Job. 11. 51, 52. so that those whom God hath gathered together and caused to return (non pedibus vel navigio, for that needs not, to Hiernsalem which is above, which is the mother of us all) from the lands of the East, of the West, of the North, and of the South, shall praise the Lord together, as the Psalmist hath it.

and will return your recompense upon your own head, ] God delights to retaliate, to bloody and deceitfull men especially; as were easie to instance in the Egyptians; Adonibezek, Agag, Attilius Regulus, the Roman Generall, who dealt most cruelly with the Carthaginians, and was shortly after as cruelly dealt with by them, when fallen into their hands. Here at home in K. Edw. the sixths time, the remembrance of Somerfet much moved the people to fall from Northumberland (who had wrought his death) in his greatest attempts, and to leave him to his fatal fall: whereat also they openly rejoyced, and presented to him handkerchiefs dipt in the blood of Somerfet, for whom they thought he suffered rather late, then undeserved punishment. So certain it is (saith the Historian) that the debts both of cruelty and mercy go never unpaid.

Verse 8. And I will sell your sonnes and your daughters, ] And so the scene shall be soon altered, and a strange vicissitude easily observed. But when was this done? or was it ever done? Ego putarim factum, etsi scriptura non dicat quando, saith Tarnovius: I suppose it was done, though the Scripture say not when. Others flie to Allegories, and understand the Text of the conversion of the Gentiles. I like their way best, that say. That which God did for the Churches sake, the Church it self is said to do it. For their cruelties to the Jewes, God delivered these Nations up into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar first, (who had a hard tug of it, and had therefore Egypt given him for his wages) and afterwards by Alexander the Great, who took Tyre, and rased it. And this was that great service spoken of, Ezek. 29. 18. wherein every head was made bald, and every shoulder bare, in filling up that strait of the Sea, which separated it from the Continent, before it could be taken. But taken it was, together with Sidon, and Philistia; and their children sold as far as Sabea, which was then counted the utmost part of the known earth, Mat. 12. 42. Luke 11. 31. being part of Arabia the Happy, or, (as some will) the Desert. All this was done for the Jewes sake, though the world little considereth it. It was enough for them, that they knew it to be so, according to this Prophecy: and that God did hereby shew his high esteem of them, by avenging them of their enemies, and by thus giving men for them, and people for their life, Esay 43. 4.

for the Lord hath spoken it. ] And will therefore surely do it: neither could their Apollo deliver them out of Gods hands; though, to prevent his forsaking of them, when besieged by Alexander, the Tyrians chained and nailed that Idoll of theirs to a post, that they might be sure of it. But all would not do.

Verse 9. Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, ] Oratio tota est figurata, saith Parentius: All this following discourse is figurative; Hortatio sarcasmon habens, saith Mercer. It is an Ironical challenge to all Gods enemies, to do their worst to Christ and his Church: Somewhat like that Judg. 9. 29. Increase thine Army and come out (which seems to be the challenge that Gaal sent to Abimelech, by some messenger) Or that of Rabshakeb, Esay 36. 8. I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders on them: Or that, Esay 8. 9. 10.

prepare warre, ] Heb. sanctifie warre: that is, laying aside all other businesse, give your selves wholly to it: (like as at holy services they were called upon, Hoc agere, to minde the businesse in hand, and nothing else) as Scanderbeg did; out of whose lips, whiles he was fighting, the very blood would start; so earnest he was at it.

It is the ancient and manfull fashion (saith our Chronicler) of the English (who are naturally most impatient of lingering mischiefs) to put their publike quarrels quickly to the trial of the sword. Prestat semel quam semper was Cæsars motto: and his property was let the weak say I am strong] Come forth full and whole, yong and old, weak and strong, all that are able to bear armes, without excuse. It is an ancient custome in Scotland, in cases of importance, to command the fire-crosse to be carried, that is, two fire-brands set in fashion of a crosse, and pitched upon the point of a speare, and proclamation is thereupon made that all men above 16 yeares of age, and under 60 shall come into the field to oppose the enemy. Those were desperate boyes in Kets conspiracie, that at the battel nere Norwich pulled the arrowes out of their own flesh, and delivered them to be shot againe by the archers on their side: and those other wounded and weakned, no less desperately resolved, who being disabled almost to hold up their weapons, would strive what they could to strike their enemies: others being thrust thorough the body with a speare, would run themselves further on, to reach those that wounded them deadly. The enemies of the truth will make hard shift but they will bear armes against Christ: and, though feeble, yet will say I am strong, à Satana impulsus & armatus, saith Mercer here, as being pricked on, armed and agitated by the devill, that old manslayer: according to that of Bernard, Seest thou thy persecutor outrageous, marvel not: but know, that the devil rides him, makes him run.

The heathen, though at ease Zach. 1. 11. and fast asleep, must be arrowed and assembled to the valley of Jehosaphat, where God the righteous Judge (at the Prophets request reminding him of his promise, I am come for thy words, saith He to Daniel, chap. 11. 12. ) gets up to the Tribunall, and there sits to judge all the heathen round about. Let not us doubt of the like successe of our suites: but, when wronged, run to the Judge of heaven and earth. who will do us right, so we pray over the promises, as here, and not faint, though he beare long with us. This, our Saviour hath taught us, by that famous parable of the unjust Judge and the importunate widdow Luk. 18. 2, 3. &c. wherein we may take notice of many excellent encouragements to pray down our enemies. 1. He was a Judge onely; but God is our Father also. 2. He was an unrighteous Judge: But, is there unrighteousnesse with God. Rom. 9. 14, 3. He, as he feared not God, so he cared not for man: but God is φιλάνθρωπος properly and peculiarly loving to man above other creatures, Tit. 3. 4. 4. He avenged the widdow, as wearied out with her; and meerly to be rid of her: And shall not God do as much for us, out of his love to righteousness and hatred of wickednesse? 5. It was troublesome to him to be sued unto: but God is displeased with us for nothing more, then for our backwardnesse and bashfulnesse, Ioh. 16. 24. Quid est cur nihil petis? what meanest thou to ask me nothing? said Severus to his favourite. 6. the unjust Judge had no care of his credit: but God is most tender of his glory; and delights much in that title of his, O thou that bearest prayers.

Verse 13. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe] It even hangs for mowing, as we say: the enemies are ready ripe for ruine: down with them therefore that they may not shed in the field, and seed again: let this vally of decision be unto them a vally of excision: let it be as a wine-presse to those bunches and branches of the grapes lopt off the vine. Lacus iste locus cadis See Rev. 14. 18, 19. Mat. 13. 39. There is a stint set to mens sins Gen. 15. 16. Zech. 5. 8, 11. Mat. 23. 32. with the Note there. What more beautifull to behold then a field afore harvest, then a vineyard afore the vintage? and yet how sudden an alteration, when workmen once take it in hand.

for the wickednesse is great] Here is that plainly, that before was expressed parabolically. The scripture oft expounds it self in the same text: and is every where its own best Interpreter.

Verse 14. Multitudes, Multitudes in the vally of decision] Or Concision, (as Hierom and Tremellius) or of threshing, as Piscator, in reference to Iehosaphat, who once threshed the Moabites and Ammonites there. These multitudes are either summoned (Turba, Turba adeste) or are there lay'd dead, even heapes upon heapes, with those Philistines Judg. 15. 16. So Aben-Ezra senseth it, and thence the name of the valley of Concision or decision: to shew that there God, having passed a definitive sentence upon the Churches enemies, and a very severe one too, such as was that kind of punishment, to put men under harrowes of iron &c. 2 Sam. 12. 31. Am. 1. 3. would now finish the work and cut it short in righteousness. Rom. 9. 28. idque citò & certò, as sure and as soon, as if that day of slaughter were at next doore by.

Verse 16. The Lord also shall roare out of Zion] Out of his church he shall terrify his enemies as the Lion doth the rest of the creatures by his dreadful roare: so that they are amazed thereat, and have no power to stirr from the place. Lyra interpreteth it of that terrible Discedite Goe ye cursed that shall be uttered by Christ at the last day. A sentence that breatheth out nothing better then fire and brimstone, stings and sorrowes, woe, and alas, torments without end, and past imagination.

Horat.

O the force of a lively faith! and the privy armour of proof that beleivers have about their hearts! O the dignity and safety of Gods people in the worst of times, Hab. 3. 18, 19. Happy art thou o Israel: who is like unto thee, O people! saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, the sword of thine excellency: and thine enemies shall be found lyars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places Dent. 33. 29.

Verse 17. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God] you shall experient that, which, during your deep afflictions, ye made some doubt of: and were ready to say as Gideon did to the Angell, If the Lord be for us, why is it thus with us? or, as your unbeleiving forefathers in the wilderness, Is God amongst us? as if that could not be, and they athirst.

dwelling in Zion] Defending my people, and dispensing my best blessings to them. The Lord that made heaven and earth blesse thee out of Zion. The blessings that come out of Zion, are farr beyond those that otherwise come out of heaven and earth.

then shall Ierusalem be holy] with a double holinesse, Imputed and Imparted: the profane being purged out here in part, but hereafter in all perfection. This our Saviour sweetly sets forth in those 2. parables of the rares, and of the draw-net. Mat. 13. Or, It shall be holy, that is deare to God, and under his care, favour and protection from the dominion, direption, and possession of profane Heathens.

and there shall no strangers passe through her any more] either to subdue her and prejudice her (as the proverb runs of the great Turk, that wherever he sets his foot, no grasse growes any more, such havock he makes) or to fasten any filth or contagion upon her See Rev. 21. 27. where St. Iohn alludeth to this text: as all along that book he borroweth the elegancies and flowers of the old Testament to set out the state of the New, in succeeding ages. If this promise be not so fully performed to us as we could wish, we must lay the blame upon our sins; whereby the Reformation is ensnarled, and our prosperity hindered. Behold, the Lords hand is not shortned that it cannot save: neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear. But your iniquities have separated betwixt you and your God: and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear Esay. 59. 1, 2. Nothing intricates our actions more then sin: this is that devill in the ayre, that hinders our happinesse: this is that Make-bate Hell-bag, Trouble-town: charme this devill, and make him fall from his heaven (which is to do hurt) and we shall inherit the promises. The godly man only prospers. Psal. 1. 3.

Verse 18. The mountains shall drop down new wine] By these hyperbolically expressions is promised plenty of all things, pertayning to life and godlinesse; such a golden age, as the Poet describeth.

Flavaque de viridi stillabant ilice mella;*

Ou Meian.

Where it must be observed, that spirituall good things are promised under the notion of temporall, as of Must, Milk, &c. Ob populi infantiam, by reason of the infancy of that people of that time. The mountaines, i. e. the most barren places: shall drop down new wine, without our labour, shall yeild plentifully, New wine strong consolations and Scripture-comforts for strong Christians. And the hills shall flow with milk, that unadulterated sincere milk of Gods word for his babes 1 Cor. 2. 2. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

And all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, ] Sanctuary-waters, wholesome doctrines, such as have a healing, cooling, quenching, quickning property in them, *Esa*y 44. 3. and a fountain shall come forth, ] viz. Baptisme, that laver of regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. that fountain opened, Zach. 13. 1. that pure river of water of life, clear as chrystal, that washeth away sin, Rev. 22. 1. Acts 22. 16.

and shall water the the valley of Shittim. ] That dry valley in the borders of Moab, neer to Jordan, and not far from the dead Sea. Here it was that the Israelites defiled themselves with the daughters of Moab (as Jarchi noteth) but shall bee purified and sanctified with the washing of water, by the word, Ephes. 5. 26. Tarnovius renders the Text, Qui irrigabit vallem cedrorum, which shall water the valley of cedars, those choicest trees planted in the paradise of God, Psal. 92. 13. For (saith He) as the Tabernacle was built and garnished of old with Shittim-wood, for the most part, Exod. 25. 5. & 26. 15. & 27. 1. & 30. 1. so is the spirituall temple, with these spirituall cedars.

Verse 19. Egypt shall be a desolation, ] By Egypt and Edom, are meant all Christs adversaries, whether they be professed open enemies as were the Egyptians, or false brethren as the Edomites. Romists have been both, and shall therefore be desolated, Rev. 17. 16. with 11. 8.

For the violence against the children of Judah, ] From the very cradle of the Church, Exod. 1. yea sooner: for *Esa*u in the very womb justled his brother Jacob, and offered violence against him, that he might lose no time.

because they have shed innocent blood in the land. ] The Saints blood is called, innocent blood; 1. Because their sinnes are remitted. 2. Because they are causelessly killed. And this is a land-desolating sinne. The innocent blood spilt by Manassah, brought the captivity: the Marian times, our late troubles. The blood of the Martyrs, shed by Turk and Pope (whom the Jew-Doctors understand by Egypt and Edom here) shall be the ruine of them both.

Verse 20. But Judah shall dwell for ever, ] Perpetuitas Ecclesie declaratur, saith Mercer: The perpetuity of the Church is declared, and assured. The blood of Martyrs is the seed of the Church. Christ is with his to the end of the world: and those Roman persecutours who sought to root out Christian Religion, and erected pillars in memory of what they had done, or rather attempted that way, what got they thereby but perpetuall ignominy, besides the irreparable losse of their souls, bodie, and fortunes?

The Church as the Palm-tree, spreadeth and springeth up the more it is oppressed: as the bottle or bladder, that may be dipt, not drowned: as the oak that taketh heart to grace from the maims and wounds given it, and sprouts out thicker: as Fennegreek, which the worse it is handled, the better it growes, as Pliny saith. No fowl is more preyed upon then the pigeon; no creature more killed up then sheep: yet are there more pigeons then birds of prey, more sheep then slaughter-men, &c.

Verse 21. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed, ] i. e. I will clear their consciences from dead works, from the stain and tinge of all sinne, that they may not question their right to these precious promises; but boldly take the comfort of them: I will say unto them, Such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are justified, but ye are sanctified. Be of good cheer therefore, fish your sinnes, your bloody sinnes are forgiven you. Or thus, I will cleanse their blood, that is, I will declare that the blood of the godly which the world thought to have been justly spilt, was indeed innocent blood, and that they were slain without cause. This I will do, partly by rooting out and damning their enemies, and partly by clearing their innocencie, and crowning their constancy. Thus Mercer, Levely, &c.

for the Lord dwelleth in Zion. ] This is the last promise, but not the least. It referreth, saith Danaus, to Christ taking our flesh; by the which he dwelt among us, being God manifest in the flesh, 1 Tim. 3. 16. and Joh. 1. 14. The word was made flesh, and dwelt amongst us, and we saw the glory thereof, &c. This is reserved to the last place, as the canſa & cumulus felicitatis: especially since he dwelleth with his Church for ever, as it is in the precedent verse, and maketh her a true Jehovah Shammah, as she is called, Ezech. 48. 35.

Verse 1.

THE words of Amos,] Not of that Amos who was father to Iſaiah, (as ſome Ancients, for want of Hebrew, miſtook it) but a man of meaner rank: rude in ſpeech, but not in knowledge, tam ſenſuum nomine quam ſimplicitate verborum clarus, as Hierom ſaith of Didymus. The Jews ſurname him, ἄλλος, The Stammerer: as if he had been a man, not onely of a low, but of a leſſe language; one that had an impediment in his ſpeech, as Mark 7. 32. and this they gather from his name Amos, which ſignifieth a burthen, as if this herds-man had had bovem in lingua, a clog upon his tongue: and could not utter himſelf freely. But let this paſſe for a Jewish tradition. True it is, that Amos is by interpretation a burthen: and no leſſe true, that the words of Amos are onerous propheta, the burthen of the word of the Lord to Iſrael by Him, (See the Note on Mal. 1. 1.) who is a vehement Prophet laden with reproofs and threatnings, (as Luther ſaith of him) ſuch as the land was not able to bear, ſaid that Malecontent Amaziah, who had ſel in aure, his gall in his ears, as they write of ſome creatures. But truth muſt be ſpoken, however it be taken: neither may Gods Miniſters meddle with toothleſſe truths onely, (as Balaam bid, Neither curſe nor bleſſe at all) but bind heavy burdens, if need be, upon the ſhoulders of obſtinate ſinners, that may cripple their iron ſinewes, and make them buckle under the ſenſe of Gods unſupportable diſpleaſure.

1 Cor. 1. 27.

Who was among the herdmen of Tekoah,] He was no Prophet, neither was hee a Prophets ſonne; but an herdman and a gatherer of Sycomore fruit, chap. 7. 14. and extraordinarily called to this high office, by Him who chooſeth the fooliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe: and the weak things of the world, to confound the mighty, who enabled the dumb Aſſe to forbid his Maſters madneſſe; 2 Pet. 2. 16.

and sent this down-right Net-herd to deal with a brutish people, worse then the Ox and Ass that have no understanding, Psal. 32. Esay 1. 3. Iob 10. 4. and who had changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into a four-footed calf, and creeping things, Rom. 1. 23. Tekeah is said to be six miles from Bethlehem, twelve from Jerusalem, situate in the tribe of Judah, 2 Chron. 11. 6. Quinquins that learned Hebrew, therefore is utterly out, in saying that Tekeah was a great town in the tribe of Asher.

which he saw concerning Israel, ] He not onely heard these words, but saw them in a vision: he had them by revelation from God. See the Note on, Hof. 1. 1.

concerning Israel, ] Or, against Israel, that is, the ten revolted tribes, who had many Prophets sent them, to foretell their captivity. God loves to foresignifie.

In the dayes of Uzziah, &c. At the same time with Hosea, and Isaiah, and Micah, when Procus Sylvius was king of the Latines, and Sardanapalus of the Assyrians, as Hierom saith.

and in the dayes of Ieroboam, ] the second; not that funestum Indae caput, that Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, who caused Israel to sinne. Under the reign of these two kings Judah and Israel were in great prosperity: and, bewicht therewith, applauded themselves in their impiety, as Psal. 73. 5. 6. This Prophet therefore is sent to rouse them and rub them up, to tell them their own, and what they should trust to.

Two years before the earthquake. ] That notable earth-quake, famous and fresh in most mens memories. Whether it fell out just then when Uzziah attempted to offer incense, and was therefore smitten with leprosie, 2 King. 15. 5. as some Ancients affirme: or whether at that instant, when Esay in a vision saw the Lord in his glory, and the posts of the door mooved, Esay 6. 4. as some Rabbins tell us, I have not to say. It seems to be foretold, chap. 3. 5. and so terrible it was, that people fled from it, Zach. 14. 5. See the Note there. Iosephus maketh mention of it, in the ninth Book of his Antiquities, chap. 11. and telleth us, that half a great hill was removed by it out of its place, and carried four furlongs another way: so that the high-way was obstructed; and the kings gardens utterly marred. God, by such extraordinary works of his, sheweth his justice and displeasure against sinne, Psal. 18. 8. Esay 13. 23. as also his special mercy to his praying people, as at Antioch, in the yeer 529, and at Bern Anno 1584; near unto which city a certain hill, carried violently beyond and over other hills, is reported by Polanus (who lived in those parts) to have covered a whole village that had 90 families in it; one half house onely excepted, wherein the master of the family with his wife and children were earnestly calling upon God. Oh the terrour of the Lord! and oh the power of prayer!

Verse 2. And he said, The Lord will roar, ] This is spoken for the terrour of the wicked, as the like was Isaiah 3. 16. for the comfort of the godly. See the Note there. The word, as Moses, saves the Israelite, slayes the Egyptian; and is, as the fragrancy of precious ointment: of which Oecumenius tells us, that it refresheth the Dove, but killeth the Beetle. See 2 Cor. 2. 16. with the Note. The Prophet here tells Idolatrous Israel to their teeth, that God will no longer deal fairly with them as a shepherd, but fiercely as a lion: he will not onely roar upon them, but rent the caul of their hearts: as the lion, together with his roar, layes his pawes upon the prey. And that ye may know that these are not bug-bear termes, devised on purpose to affright silly people, and that I shoot not Pot-guns at you.

the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, &c. ] That is, all your bravery shall down: all your wealth and wordly greatnesse shall wither: the top of your Carmel, the Zenith of your prosperity shall be blasted, and the scene soon altered. All this the Prophet used to shepherdly, expresseth accordingly, Artis sue usus sermonibus (as it is naturall for all Artists to do) but with a great deal of life and boldnesse. Verbis vivis, animatis sententiis, & spiritus fervore flagrantissimis, as One saith of Savonarolas Meditations upon Psal. 51.

Verse 3. For three transgressions of Damascus and for four, ] For their seven, that is, severall sinnes, not a few: for their many and bony provocations, for their progresse in sinne, without mean, or measure. The Jews here note, that for three faults God will pardon a man, but let him beware of the fourth: God will not alwayes serve man for a sinning-stock, but break off his abused patience, and proceed to punishment. Lo all these things worketh God twice and thrice with man, Iob 33. 29. but let him not thereupon grow over-bold: lest he pay for his presumption. Sin iterated is greatly aggravated; as cyphers added increase the summe: and though it may sleep a long time, yet it is but as a sleeping-debt not called for of many yeers, required at length: as Sauls sinne in slaying the Gibeonites, was not punished till forty yeers after: as Ioabs killing of Abner, slept all Dauids dayes, &c. Now, lest Israel looking upon Syria yet flourishing, should promise themselves like impunity, they are here thus threatned.

I will not turn away the punishment thereof, ] but pay them home for the new and the old; yea, for the old by occasion of the new; for their obstinate and incurable wickednesse, I will punish them seven-times more, and seven-times more, and seven to that, Lev. 26. 24. &c. and so hang them up, as it were, in gibbets, for a warning to Israel, that they may wash their feet in the blood of these Heathens, and redeem their own sorrows.

because they have threshed Gilead, ] i. e. the Gileadites whom they had taken captive, and thus cruelly intreated. See 2 King. 13. 7. and 10. 32. where it appeareth, that all this was done, not without the Lord: which yet is no excuse to Hazaels cruelty. That Conquerours were wont to use this kinde of torment and punishment, see 2 Sam. 12. 31. But that David should do so, is some wonder: hee was hardly recovered of his late foul fall: and thence haply, so much harshnesse. Certain it is, that the mercifull God abhorreth cruelty toward his creature; and severely punisheth it: such as was this of Hazael toward Israel, foretold by Elisba, 2 King. 8. 12. and afterwards of Ptolemy Lathurus King of Egypt, who slew 30000. Jews at once: and forced the rest to eat up their dead carcases. So that barbarous Duke of Alva, roasted some of his prisoners to death, starved others, and that even after quarter: saying, though he promised to give them their lives, he did not promise to finde them meat. Dio telleth us of the Jews that dwelt about Cyrene, in the dayes of Trajan; that they slaughtered a great sort of Romans and Greeks after a miserable manner; sawing them down the middle from the crown of the head, tearing their flesh with their teeth, smearing themselves with their blood, and wearing their skins for coverings, &c. so that 200000 people perished there: and besides in Egypt, and Cyprus, 240000, by the like abhorrid cruelty, and about the same time, by the same hands. Beware of men, Mat. 10.

Verse 4. But I will send a fire into the house of Hazael, ] Sin doth as naturally draw judgements, to it, as the load-stone doth iron, or turpentine fire: and hainous sinnes, heaviest judgements, devouring plagues: Such as are the fire of warre, Psal. 78. 63. pestilence, Lev. 10. 3. forreigne enemies, Num. 21. 28. Jer. 48. 45. homebred conspiracies, Judg. 9. 15, 20. besides the fire of hell, whereof all miseries here are but typical. Let men kisse the Son therefore, lest Gods anger be kindled: and get the spirit of judgement, and of burning, that they may dwell with everlasting burnings. For even our God is a consuming fire, Heb. 12. 29.

Verse 5. I will break also the barre of Damascus, ] i. e. their power and might, all strength defensive, or offensive, and so make way for the enemy into the city, give him a fair entrance without resistance. It is God that orders the battle, and renders mens attempts vain, or prosperous, Esay 54. ult. Jer. 50. 9. whencesoever the sword comes, it is bathed in heaven, Esa. 34. 5.

and cut off the inhabitant from the plain of Aven. ] Campus idoli, the plain, or valley of idols (so Mercer rendreth it) that is, of Syria given to idolatry; or Damascus, a very Poneropolis, and therefore ripe for ruine.

and him that holdeth the scepter, ] A plain periphrasis of a king, (called oft by Homer, σκηπτωχός, Scepter-bearer) or of him that was to succeed in the kingdom. The French call him Dolphin, the Spaniards, Infant, &c. Our Henry the second, crowned his eldest sonne Henry, while he was yet alive, and put the Scepter into his hand: which made his ambition quite turn off his obedience.

Luk. 16. 25. which text Gregory the great could never read, but his heart ached with feare, lest it should be his own case. It is well observed, that Philedoni Lovers of pleasures are set as last and worst of those wicked ones, 2 Tim. 3. 4. Solomon is blamed for spending thirteen yeares in building his house, and planting those paradises about it, Eccle. 2. 5.

of Gaza] One of the five chief cities or Satrapies of the Philistines; an ancient name, Gen. 10. 19. Deut. 2. 23. 1 Sam. 6. 17. and not so first called by Cambyses, making it his Magazine, when he marched against Egypt, as Mela would persuade us.

I will not turn away] Or I will not convert them, as some render it (so verse 2. 9. &c.) i. e. non reducam ad misericordiam suam, I will shew them no mercy: but they shall have an evil, an only evil Ezek. 7. 5. without mixture of mercy. This is punishment enough.

because they carried away captive the whole captivity] This cruelty God singled out (as before) as a singular sin that shall be surely punished. Now that is called a whole or perfect deportation, when none escapeth; but all of all sorts, sexes, and sizes, are carried away, as by a sweeping raine, or universall deluge. Ier. 13. 19. Judah shall be carried away captive all of it: it shall be wholly carried away captive. Whether this were Judah or Israel that was so inhumanely dealt with by the Philistines, we find not. Something like it we read 2 Chron. 21. 16, 17. Iosh. 3. 6. See the Note there.

to deliver them up to Edom] Or to shut them up in Edom, their most inveterate deadly enemy; to whom the Philistines delivered or sold them on this condition or bargain, that they should hold them there in perpetuall and irrevocable slavery.

Verse 7. But I will send a fire] i. e. an enemy, saith Drusus, which, as a fire, shall consume all. This was fulfilled by Uzziah 2 Chron. 26. 6. whence it was afterward called Gaza which is desert, Act. 8. 26.

which shall devour the palaces thereof] built likely in the blood of the poor afflicted, and having sinne at the bottome, which blew up all at length, as the voyce from heaven said to Phocas, who likewise laid his foundation in blood. See the Note on verse 4.

Verse 8. And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod] These other foure Satrapies of the Philistines (Gath is not mentioned, because haply Time had now triumphed over it, so that it lived by fame only) were the worse likely, and fared the worse for Gaza's ill neighbourhood: like as Hamath did for Damascus Zech. 9. 2.

and I will turn mine hand] Not in mercy as Zech. 13. 7. but for further mischief; I will have a double blow at Ekron, where Beelzebub the Grandiabolus is worshipped, Iterabo plagam: and when I have done with the rest, I will begin againe with Ekron; Acheronta movebo.

and the remnant of the Philistines] This is dreadfull, but due to them, and just upon them for their savage dealing with Israel verse 6. This was fulfilled by Hezekiah conquering all that countrey 2 King. 18. 8. See Iosephus lib. 9. cap. 13.

Verse 9. For three transgressions of Tyrus] That crown of the sea Esay. 23. 8. mediâ insuperabilis undâ, till Alexanders time, who joyned it to Continent, and afterwards ruined it. Charged it is here, as those before, 1. with incurable obstinacy. 2. with extreame cruelty.

because they delivered up the whole captivity] which either themselves had taken, or that had fled to them for refuge in some common calamity: but were betrayed by them into the hands of their bitterest enemies. See verse 6. and acknowledge the

and have not remembred the brotherly covenant] that passed of old betwixt David, Solomon, and Hiram their king. Or rather, that between Jacob and Esau and their respective posterity, which the Tyrians should have promoted by labouring a reconciliation betwixt these dissenting brethren: but they contrariwise blew up the coales, and rather stirred up more strife then stinted it. They called not to mind what unity and amity ought to be between people so neer allyed: and what good offices they should therefore have done for them.

Horat.

Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother. This is Gods argument to Israel Deut. 23. 8. Should not the Tyrians have said the like to the Edomites, and so sought to have pacified them, rather then gratified them in their hereditary hatred, and deadly feud &c. they put themselves amongst those worst of men, which, given over of God, though they know the law, how that they which commit such things are worthy of death, yet not only do the same, but also take pleasure in those that do them Rom. 1. ult.

Verse 10. Therefore I will send a fire upon the wallles of Tyrim] This was fulfilled shortly after in the warr that Salmanasar waged against the Tyrians, whereof see Ioseph: lib. 9. chap. 14. Or in Nebuchadnezzars warr with them, whereof read Ezech. 29. 18. Jer. 27. 3. and 47. 4. Ioseph: cont. Appion. lib. 2. Or Alexanders, Curt: lib. 4. Iustin. lib. 11. It is good for men to tremble at Gods judgments whiles they hang in the threatenings, as Josiah did: and not to tempt the Spirit of the Lord, as Ananias and Sapphira did Act. 5. 9. by putting it to the proof, whether he will be dicti sui Dominus as good as his word.

Verse 11. For three transgressions of Edom &c.] i. e. of the Edomites, the Rabbines understand the Romists those false-brethren the Popes blood-hounds. See the parallel made by D. Taylor in his sermon called the Romish Edomite.

because he did pursue his brother with the sword] First when he drove him from house and home for fear of his life, which he threatened to take from him Gen. 27: and afterwards came against him (returning home-wards) with foure hundred cut-throates at his heels Gen. 32. 6, 8. to smite the mother with the children, ver. 11. Next in his posterity, those sworn swordmen of the devill: that denied Gods Israel passage in the wilderness, comming out against him with much people, and with a strong hand Num. 20. 26. to his great discouragement: Num. 21. 4. And ever after, bore him an aking tooth, and waited him a shrewd turn; joyning with the enemy, and taking all advantages of mischief. See 2 Chron. 28. 17. Psal. 137. 7. Obad. 10. 11. Malice is commonly hereditary, and runs in the blood. And (as we use to say of Runnet) the older it is, the stronger.

and did cast off all pity] Heb. corrupted his compassions, forgot his brotherhood, banished naturall affection out of his bosome, and put off all humanity. The Rabbines tell us, that out of the profanenesse of his Spirit Esau put away his circumcision, by drawing up againe the foreskin with a Chirurgeons instrument. Whether this were so or not, I have not to say: but that he corrupted his compassions (if any ever he had) violated the law of nature, and abolished the bowels of a brother, the brotherly covenant, this text assureth us; even all the affections, duties, and respects of blood and nature by which he was bound. His grandfather Abraham could say to his nephew Lor. Let there be no difference between thee and me; for we are brethren, Gen. 13. 8. This one consideration was retentive enough, cooler sufficient to his choler: it was even as the Angel that stayd his hand when the blow was comming, Gen. 22. It should have been so with Edom: good blood would not have belyed it self: But he had lost his brotherly bowels, and even put off manhood: he had wiped out all stirrings of good nature, as a man wipeeth a dish, wiping it and turning it upside down, as the scripture speaketh in another case: or as when a man emptieth wine out of a cup, the sides are yet moist: but when it is rinsed and wiped, there remaines not the least taste or tincture.

and his anger did teare perpetually] i. e. He in his anger did teare, as a beast of prey, and rage without intermission. The enemies of the Church do so still: such is their implacable hatred against God and his truth: they eat up Gods people as they eat bread, yea they tread down and teare in peeces, as if there were none to deliver. At the Town of Barre in France, when it was taken by the Papists, all kind of cruelty was used, saith Mr. Fox: children were cut up, and the guts of some of them and hearts pulled out, which in rage they tare and gnawed with their teeth. The Italians likewise which served the king there did for hatred of religion break forth into such fury, that they did rip up a living child, and took his liver being as yet red hot, and eat it as meat. Erasmus tells of an Augustine friar, who openly in the pulpit at Antwerp wished, that Luther were there, that he might bite out his throat with his teeth. And Friar Brusierd in a conference with Bilney brake out into these angry words: But that I belevee and know that God and all his saints will take revengement everlasting on thee, I would surely with these nailes of mine be thy death. Pray therefore with David, Deliver not the soul of thy turtle down to these destroyers &c. Cursed be their anger, for it is fierce: and their wrath for it is cruel.

and kept his wrath for ever] Though himself was mortal, yet his wrath, might seem to be immortal: as was Hanibals against the Romanes, and our Edward the first against the Scots: against whom being about to march, he adjured his son and Nobles, that, that if he died in his journey into Scotland, they should carry his corpes with them about Scotland, and not suffer it to be entered, till they had absolutely subdued the country. Anger may rust into a wife mans boosome, but should not rest there. Eccle. 7. 9. for it corrupteth the heart, as vineger doth the vessel wherein it long continueth; Of the Athenians it was said, that their anger was ἀειμνός everlasting; but that was but small to their condemnation. Thou shalt neither revenge nor remember ill turns Lev. 19. 18. where servare is put for servare iram to keep, for to keep ones anger: to shew that there is nothing that a man is more ready to keep; as beeing a vindictive creature; Aristotle saith (but absurdly) that it is more manly to be revenged, then to be reconciled: and thus the world calleth manhood: but indeed it is doghood rather. The manlier any man is, the milder and more mercifull, as David 2 Sam. 1. 12. And Julius Cesar, when he had Pompey's head presented to him, wept, and said, Non mihi placet vindicta sed victoria, I seek not revenge but victory. And the Apostle purposely disgraceth revenge of injury by a word that signifieth disgrace, losse of victory, or impotency of mind. Thunder, haile, tempest, neither trouble nor hurt celestiall bodies: no more doth anger, great minds. Edom was short-spirited, soon kindled, and not easily appeased; his wrath kept no bounds, as the word here used importeth: his coales were coales of Juniper, fierce and long lasting: his fire not elementary, but culinary; nourished by low and unworthy considerations: a fruit of the flesh, and such as excludes out of heaven Gal. 5. 20, 21. It was not the passion, but the habit of hatred which St. James calleth the devill Jam. 4. 7. and St. Paul counselleth men not to give place to that devill: and for that end, not to let the Sun go down upon their wrath Eph. 6. 26. See Ezech. 35. 5. where Edom is charged with a perpetuall hatred, and therefore threatened with blood, and desolation, as here.

Verse 12. But I will send a fire] A fierce enemy, ut supra. The inhabitants of Teman and Bozra, together with other the posterity of Esau, were famous for power and policy Obad. 8. 9. Ier. 49. 7. Esa. 34. 6. But there is no wisdom, might nor counsell against the Lord Prov. 21. 30, 31. He can make fooles and babies of the Churches enemies: he can fire out their malice &c.

Verse 13. I will not turn away the punishment thereof] Or I will not turn and reduce him to my self by repentance, that I may shew him mercy, as Lam. 5. 22. Ier. 31. 18. but harden his heart, and hasten his destruction.

because they have ript up the women with child] Immane facinus, & vicinis indignum, saith Mercer, A cruell fact, and the worse, because done by so neere neighbours, and allies; thus to kill two at one blow, and those also innocent and impotent, and such as they ought to have spared by the law of nature, and of nations: and all this, meerely out of covetousnesse and ambition.

That

That they might enlarge their border] but first root out the little ones, that else might hereafter claime and recover their fathers possessions. So at the Sicilian vespers they ript up their own women that were with child by the French: that no French blood might remain amongst them. See the Note on Hof. 13. 16. and learn to detest covetousnesse, that root of all evill, 1 Tim. 6. 10. Better converse with a Canibal, then with a truly covetous caytiffe: and more curtesie you may expect.

Verse 14. But I will kindle a fire &c.] with mine own hands (not only send a fire, as before verse. 10. 12.) as Charles 5. Emperour of Germany, (when it was told him how that Farnesius the Popes Generall had ravished certain Ladies) brake out into these hot words: If I had the villaine here, I would kill him with mine own hands: neither was he ever heard to speak any thing with so great anger, in all his dayes.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. For three transgressions &c.] Or malicious wickednesses with an high hand committed, and heaped up to that height. See chap. 1. 3.

because he burnt the bones of the king of Edom] A wicked man, but yet a man: and God (who is a lover of mankind) shewes himself sensible of the injuries and indignities done but to his dead body: such an enemy he is to cruelty to his creatures. That Mesa king of Moab bore a speciall edge against the king of Edom, fought to break thorough the army to him but could not, and afterwards sacrificed his son and heir whom he had taken in that sally made upon the king of *Edom*s quarters, we read 2 King. 3. 26, 27. There are some that think that at another time, overcoming the Edomites, he dig'd up the bones of that king out of his sepulcher, he burnt them to lime, that is prorsus, perfectissimè & absolutissimè as some sence it, to ashes and cinders as Esay. 33. 12. or (for greater revenge, and contempt,) he whitelimed the walles of his pallace therewith, as Gen. 11. 3. Psal. 69. 23. Esay. 22. 21. Thus, in that horrid massacre of Paris, they cut of the Admirall's head (whom before they had murdered) and presented it to the Q. mother; who, balmig it, sent it for a present to the Pope, who thereupon caused the Massacre to be pictured in the Vatican hall: under one side is Colignij & sociorum cades, On the other, Rex Colignij cadem probat. The king himself (viz Charles 9.) beholding the bloody bodies of those then massacred: and feeding his eye on so wofull a spectacle, breathed out this bloody speech Quam bonus est odor hostis mortui. How sweet is the smell of a slain enemy: another hel-hag said upon a like occasion, that she never beheld so goodly a peece of tapestry, as the faces of those butchered Saints. This insulting over the dead is, that peece of cruelty which the church complaineth of Psal. 79. 2. Cornelius a Lapide upon this text cries out of it as an inhumane and shamefull thing both because the honour of sepulture sepulture is the last dues of the dead ; and also because this is to fight with dead carcases. Yet this hath been practised by one Pope against another, and by many of the Popes Champions here in England, who unburied and burnt the bodies of Paulus Phagius, Peter Martyrs wife, and many others : Cardinal Wolfey had a purpose ( had he not been prevented by death ) to have taken up King Henries body at Windsor, and to have burnt it. How much better Charles the fifth ( yet no friend to the Reformation, but a prudent Prince ) who entering Wittenberg as a Conquerour, and being importuned to dig up the dead bodies of Luther, and other Reformers, refused to violate their graves, and sent away Melancthon, Pomeran, and some other eminent Preachers unhurt, not so much as once forbidding them to publish openly the doctrine that they professed ? Cambyfes heareth ill among all men for his digging up the dead body of Amasis King of Egypt, and causing it to be whipt and bricked ; and Sylla for the like cruelty to C. Marins. Of all fowl we most hate and detest the Crows ; and of all beasts, the Jackals, ( a kinde of Foxes in Barbarie ) because the one digs up the graves, and devours the flesh, and the other picks out the eyes of the dead. Hinc moraliter disce, saith a Lapide, Learn hence also what a baseness it is to tear and deface the good names of those that are dead : to fly-blow their names is worse then to burn their bones to lime. And yet among many other men of mark that might bee instanced ; Melancthon mortuus tantum non ut blasphemus in Deum cruci affigitur, saith Zanchius : not Papists, but Lutherans laid blasphemy to his charge after his death, whom all Christendome worthily honoured for his learning and piety.

They shall be stormed, and have no quarter given them. Here Osiander noteth, that it is one of the many punishments of sin, for a man not to die in his bed, but in battel. It was promised to Iosiah, he should die in peace. True it is, he died in battel : but he died before that generall desolation that followed shortly after. ( for indeed, with him died all the prosperity of that people ) And besides, his weeping and humiliation had altered the very nature of the trouble, and made warre to be peace to him.

Beset they were with enemies round about, who dealt cruelly with them : and this should have made them to cleave more close to God : these hornes pushing and scattering them, should have pushed them home to him : but it proved otherwise. For Judah also is found to be incorrigibly flagitious, guilty, as the former, of three transgressions and of four, &c. worse in them then in others, because in Judah was God known, and to them were committed the Oracles of God, whom they might hear eftsoons screeking out unto them, when they were putting forth their hands to wickednesse,*

Oh

Oh do not this abominable thing. But they tauguan monstra maris, as One saith, like so many Sea-Monsters passed by Gods words with a deaf ear. Jer. 44. 4.

They despised the law of the Lord. ] They would none of his counsell: they liked well to live in Gods good land, but not to live by Gods good lawes: like those in the Gospel, they rejected the counsel of God within themselves, and that with scorn and disdain, as the word here used signifieth. See the Note on Hos. 8. 6. Luk. 7. 30.

and have not kept his commandments. ] though holie, just, and good, though such, as if a man keep them, (be it but Evangelically, si faciat, etiam non perficiat) he shall live in them, by a life of grace, as the flame lives in the oyle, or the creature by his food: Though in keeping thereof (how much more for keeping thereof?) there is great reward, Psal. 19. 11. Liv. 18. 5.

and their lies caused them. ] that is, their idols (as the Vulgar well rendereth it) and their will-worships: their new inventions, and good intentions, thereby to serve and please God. These are properly called lies: because contrary to the law of truth (whereto they are here opposed) and to Davids practise, who did the truth, 1 Iob. 1. 6. and could safely say, I hate and abhorre lying: but thy law do I love, Psal. 119. 163. and ver. 104. Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way.

after the which their fathers have walked. ] So that they are a race of Rebels, a seed of evil-doers, and do fill up the measure of their fathers sins, till wrath come upon them to the utmost. This is no small aggravation, Ezek. 20. 30. Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredoms after their abominations. See Acts 7. 51. Must I bee provoked by you from one generation to another.

Verf. 5. But I will send a fire upon Judah. ] They shall also bear the punishment of their iniquities, yet is it not said as ver. 2: that Judah shall die with tumult, &c. God will make a difference in his dealings with his own and others, his sonnes and his slaves, these shall totally and finally be consumed at once, Nah. 1. 9. not so the Saints. The remnant of the Philistines shall perish, Am. 1. 8. But of Judah a remnant shall be still reserved, for royall use, Isai. 11. 11, 16.

Ver. 6. For three transgressions of Israel, &c. ] The ten Tribes come in last: lest they (with whom his main business lay, and to whom he will hence-forth apply himself) should conceit themselves privileged: because for present prospered: lest they should read, or hear the menaces of Gods mouth, as men do the old stories of forrein wars, that nothing concern them.

because they sold the righteous for silver. ] Even Gods own pasture-sheep, that had golden-sheeces, precious souls: these they made sale of for a little money, which ever was, and still is a common medler; and drives the bargain, and business to an upshot. Money, saith One, is the worlds great Monarch, and bears most Mastery: whence it is, that the Hebrew word Adarcon, used for money; 1 Chron. 29. 7. Esay 8. 27. comes of Adar, strong, or mighty, and Con, to prepare: to shew that a moneyed man is a mighty man, as this world goes. Unless we may say of money, as one doth wittily of Sardanapalus, the last of the Assyrian Monarchs: Sardanapalus, saith He, had a terrible name. Sar noteth a Prince; Dan a Judge, Niphal an overthrower, or Conquerour: no otherwise applicable to him, but that his Luxury was the overthrow of both Sovereignty and Judgement. So is money mighty and well prepared, but it is to blind the eyes of the wise, and to pervert the matters of the righteous, Prov. 16. 16. who because not so well underlaid as his adversary, lies long languishing many times at Hopes hospital; as that lame man did at the pool of Bethesda, but might not be sped, because (for want, belike, of stirring Angels) he could get none to put him into the Pool immediately after the Angel had stirred it. That was a sad complaint made by the Prophet Habakkuk, chap. 1. 4. Behold the law is slacke, and judgement doth never go forth: for the wicked doth circumvent the righteous, viz. by his bribery and baseness, therefore wrong judgement proceedeth. A Judge is to retain the decency and gravity of the Law; yea of the Law-maker, with whom there is none iniquity, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts, 2 Chron. 19. 7. Nec prece, nec precio, should be the Magistrate's Motto: he should be above all price or sale.

and the poor for a pair of shoes. ] For a cup of wine, Joel 3. 3. for handfulls of barley, barley, or peeces of bread, Ezek. 13. 19. for a thing of nothing, to bafe they were grown at length: a very small deal of gain would win them over. See chap. 8. 6. At first, a little matter would not hire them: it must bee silver, and a considerable summe too; as an harlot, that requires at first no small reward: but afterwards prostituteth her self light-cheap to all commers. Sinne seemeth modest and maidenly at first: but meddle not, for it sooneth woadeth an impudency in mens foreheads, and debaucheth them.

Anhelans.

Vers. 7. That pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor: ] Covetousnesse is craving, and cruel: it rides without reins, as Balaam did after the wages of wickednesse; and cares not whose head it rides over, to compasse commodity. Yea it panteth after the dust of the earth, on the head of the poor, as desirous not onely to lay them in the dust, but to lay them a-bleeding, and a-dying there. They gape over the head (or life) of the poor, in the dust of the earth (so some read the words) as devising to destroy them. A poor mans lively hood is his life, Mar. 12. ult. Luke 8. 43. for a poor man in his house is like a snail in a shell; crush that, and you kill him. These cormorants earnestly desired, and indeavoured to bring dunt upon poor mens heads (the garb of those that were in heaviness, Iob 2. 12. Ezek. 27. 30. Lam. 2. 20.) by their oppressions and injustice; yea to bring them down to the dust of death, to set them as farre under ground, as now they were above. Lo this they do as greedily, and as greatly desire, as serpents and other hot creatures covet the fresh air, to cool their scorched entrails. See Ier. 14. 6. Job 5. 5. and 7. 2. It is said of Saul the persecutour, that he breathed out threatnings against the Church, Acts 9. 1. as a tired Wolf, that wearied with worrying the flock, lieth panting for breath. So Bonner whipt the poor Martyrs, till he was breathlesse. Some Interpreters note out of Joseph Ben Gorion, that there was an old custom, that those that were accused before the Judges, should be arrayed in black, and have their heads covered with dust. And hence they conceive the fence to be this. That pant, i. e. that earnestly desire that such poor men may be accused by the rich, of whom they may receive gifts to pervert judgement. And this they think to be confirmed by the following words.

Maries dayes, that came to complaine of the Carver for making them an ugly Crucifix) Next they drink wine in the house of their God, besides their drink-offerings (which *David*s soule hated Psal. 16. 4.) they had their drunken comotations in their Idoll-temple, as now they say in the Isle of Sardinia after masse done, they fall to drinking and dancing in the midst of the Church: singing in the mean time songs too immodest for an Ale-house. Lastly,

There are that here understand that wine that was wont to be given to malefactors led to execution Prov. 31. 6. to cheer them up: but these wretches drank it off from them. The former sense is the better.

Then indeed people shall hear of what they have had; and be taught the worth of good turns by the want of them. Good turns aggravate unkindnesses: and our offences are not a little increatd by our obligations. Hence this approbation; and it is as if God should say: This people hath not only done the evils afore-mentioned, but also after the receipt of mercies without measure and many miraculous deliverances; as if I had even hired them to be wicked: and as if that were to pass for truth which the snake in the fable said to the country man, that had shewed it kindness, Summum premium pro summo beneficio est Ingratitudo. In the yeere 1245. the Pope was denied entrance into England: it being said that the Pope was but like a mouse in a sackell, or a snake in ones bosome, who did but ill repay their hostels for their lodging. God had done exceeding much for this perverse people: and this they now heare of with stomach enough, as well they deserved. At Athens, if a servant proved ungratefull, for his manumission, his master had an action Agrosuon against him: and might recover him again into bondage. Lycurgus the Lacedemonian law-giver would not make a law against Ingratitude: as holding it monstrous not to requite a kindness, not to acknowledge a good turn. The old Romanes decreed that such as were found guilty of this fault, should be cast alive to the Cormorant, to be pulled in peeces and devoured. Our Saviour fully yokes together the evil, and the unthankfull Luk. 6. 35. and God here summs up all this peoples sins in this One, as the Epitome of all the rest.

Iosh. 6. 21.* (Behold the severity of God,) as if he had forgotten that forepart of his back-parts Jehovah, Jehovah, gracious, mercifull &c. and had taken up that Emperours Motto, Fiat justitia, pereat mundus, Let Justice be done, though never so many be undone.

Verse 10. Also I brought you up from the land of Egypt] which lies lower then Judea: as doth also mytticall Egypt then Ierusalem, which is above, which is the mother of us all. To what great preferments and priviledges Gods people are now brought up by Christ, See Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. and cry out with that noble Athenian ἄνθρωπος from how great miseries to what great mercies are we advanced? Even from darknesse to light, from the power of Satan to God: that we may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among the Saints &c. And shall we then againe break Gods commandements? Ezra. 9. 14. Or say, We are delivered to do all these abominations Ier. 7. 10. Would not the heaven sweate over us, and the earth cleave under us, yea hell gape for us upon such an entertainment of divine bounty.

and led you forty yeares through the wilderness] led you all along in my hand as an horse in the wilderness, that ye should not stumble I say. 63. 13. Led you, and fed you, dayly and daintily, sending you in Angels food, and then setting the flint abroach that you might not pine and perish in that vast howling wilderness Deut. 32. 10. Besides that, I there bore with your evill manners, Act. 13. 18. as a mother beares with her childs frowardness, or as an husband beares with his wives crossness, which he knowes he must either tollere, or tolerare, cure or cover.

to possesse the land of the Amorite] to fit you for such a mercy, to humble you, to prove you, and to do you good at the latter end, Deut. 8. 16. God knowes the height of our spirits, and the naughtinesse of our natures &c. how ill able mens braines are to beare a cup of prosperity: and how soon their hearts are lifted up with their estates, as a boat that riseth with the rising of the water. God therefore usually brings his people into the wilderness, and there speaketh to their hearts: he holds them first to hard meate, and then puts them into full possession.

Verse 11. And I raised up your sons for Prophets] The Ministry is worthily instanced, as a singular mercy Psal. 147. 19, 20. Other nations had their Prophets such as they were Tis. 1. 12. Tragedians and Comedians were said ἱερογῶνται to labour in teaching the people, and were highly esteemed of the Athenians: intomuch as that after their discomfit in Sicily, they were relieved out of the publike stock, who could repeate somewhat of Euripides. But what were these to Israels Prophets, those holy men of God who spake as they were moved, acted, and as it were carried out of themselves by the holy Ghost, to say and to do what God would have them? yea those holy children, such as Samuel and Jeremy (for of them especially the Rabbines understand this text) who devoted themselves to the work betimes, being more forwardly then either Athanasius the boy-bishop, or Cornelius Mus, who (if we may beleve Sixtus Senensis) was a Preacher at twelve yeare old: and such one as with whome all Italy was in admiration.

and of your young men for Nazarites] The Chalde hath it Doctours or Teachers: it being the office of these holy Votaries, to teach the people. Heathens also had a kind of Nazarites, as Lucian setteth forth in his Dea Syria (Habent & vesta favos, simia imitantur homines) and the Turks at this day have their Dermistars, and their Imailers, whom they call the religious brothers of love: Epicurus his hogg they they might better tearme them, saith the Historian. The Papiſts would prove their Monkes to be Christian Nazarites: but the abolishing of that order is declared Act. 21. 25. and Monks are so farr from the abſtinenſe of the Nazarites, that they eat of the beſt, and drink of the ſweeteſt that Sea and Land can afford. So farr alſo from the ſingular ſanctimony of the Nazarites, whereof ſee Lam. 4. 7. that the Poet ſung truly of them,

They may better profeſſe themſelves ſucceſſors to the Scribes & Pharifees, whomay ſeem (ſaith One) to have fled and hid themſelves in the Monks and friers. Now the Pharifees pretended to ſucceed the ancient Nazarites, as their very name imports, but they were (as likewiſe the Popiſh Monks) a generation never inſtituted by God nor brought in by the Prophets, but only a humane invention, and through their own boldneſſe: whence Cheremitus upon the tenth of Iohn takes theeves there to be the Pharifees. An Interpreter here ſheweth, how God hath now made all his people Nazarites i. e. ſeparated and ſanctified unto himſelf by making them paterns of piety, as the Rechabites, holy, harmeleſſe, undefiled of dead works, and evill works, from whom they are bid to ſtand off, 1 Tim. 6. 5. as alſo not to be drunk with wine where-in is exceſſe, but to be filled with the Spirit: abſtaining from all appearance of evill, hating the garment ſpotted with the fleſh &c. A cunning carver can cut the ſimilitude of any creature, but not on a rotten ſtick. What could God do more to his Vineyard then he had done (Eſ. 5. How oft would I have gathered thy children, as an hen her chickens &c. Mat. 23. 27. How long ſhall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? Ier. 4. 14. God is ſo farr from being guilty of Iſraels miſery as that (beſides other undeniable arguments of his love, as bringing them out of Egypt, deſtroying the Amorite &c.) he had raiſed them up Prophets and Nazarites, given them his word, Sacraments, all good helps to mollify their hearts; and then appealeth to their conſciences by this Rhetoricall interrogation, Is it not even thus? ſo to wring from them a confeſſion of the truth, in ſpite of their teeth.

Verſe 12. But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink ] Opponit jam Propheta peſſimam gratiam &c. ſaith Gualther. Here was the ill requitall they made the Lord for all his benefits; they corrupted his young Nazarites (as Buzzards ſnatch up yong lapwings) and ſilenced his Prophets, or enjoyed them at leaſt to meddle with toothleſſe truths only, to preach placencia: threatening them if they did otherwiſe (for ſo the Original importeth) that ſo they might ſin without controule, and go to hell without hinderance. This God heavily here complains of, as an horrible Ingratitude. To render good for evill is divine, good for good is humane: evill for evill is brutiſh, but evill for good is diveliſh.

Verſe 13. Behold I am preſſed under you &c. ] A countrey comparison (ſuch as this Prophet is full of) plaine but pithy; to ſhew how God is preſſed and oppreſſed with peoples ſins, wearied as it were Eſay. 43. 24. and his patience even worn out; ſo that he can forbear them no longer, Iſay. 42. 14. but like a travelling woman, that bites in her paine, as long as ſhe is able, at length cryes out; ſo here, God hath much adoe to forbear killing men in their ſins: as he was ready to have a blow at Moses, when he met him in the Inne, and could hardly hold his hands; he even grones under the preſſure as a cart ſeemes to do under an extraordinary load laid on it, till it creak and crack againe: He ſeemes, to ſcreeke out to ſinners as Ier. 44. 4. Oh doe not this abominable thing? And (when he cannot be heard) to ſigh out, Ab ſinfull nation, a people laden with iniquity &c. Eſay. 1. 4. as Fasciculus temporum Anno. 884. bitterly bewailing the iniquities of thoſe times cries out, Heu, heu, Domine Deus &c. That ninth age is much complained of by many Waters. God hath as much, nay more cause to complaine of ours, considering his paines with us and patience towards us, to so little purpose and profit. See the Note on Mal. 1. 1. many Interpreters make these words not a complaint, but a communication; rendring it thus, I will presse or straighten your place as a cart full of sheaves presseth, sc. either the ground whereon it goeth, or the corn which it thresheth out of the husk Esa. 28. 27, 28. or as the creature that lieth under the wheelles of it is crusht in peeces. It was a memorable saying of Mr. Bradford Martyr, He that will not tremble in threatening, shall be crusht in peeces in feeling. These perverse Israelites would not be warned by any threatening, therefore they were pressed to some purpose in that fore famine, and straight siege of Samaria. Obsidione vos premam saith the Chaldee here, I will so beleaguer your city, that there shall be no escaping. Look how a laden cart onustum sibi, so laden that another sheaf can hardly be laid on, so sticks in straight places, that it can neither go forward nor backward: so will I bring you into those distresses, that you shall not know how to avoid or abide them. (Confer Psal. 4. 2. Prov. 4. 12. 2 Cor. 4. 8.) I will distresse my distressers: and presse with such piercing afflictions, as shall make you sigh and screech out another while, Oh it is an evil thing and a bitter to forsake the Lord &c. Jer. 2. 19. Oh he is worse then mad, that would buy the sweetest sip, at so deare a rate.

Verse 14. Therefore the swift shall perish from the swift] men are apt to blesse themselves when God curseth Deut. 29. 19. and to bind upon impurity in a common calamity; to make faire weather when such a tempest is up, as shall never be blown over. Or, if worse come, then, as all creatures run to their refuges Prov. 30. 25. Psal. 104. 18. Prov. 18. 11. Dan. 4. 14. 11. Judg. 9. 50, 51. (the hunted hare runs to the forme, to the bushes that she formerly haunted, but now those cannot save her) so men in misery bethink themselves of and betake themselves to creature-comforts, and refuges, either naturall or artificiall as here, but these all serve them as Aboloms mule did her master, hanging betwixt heaven and earth, but rejected of both. Let a man be as swift as Asabel, God can easily overtake him; his sin will find him out, and he shall but in running from his death run to it: as the Historian speaketh of those Scots defeated by the English at Muscleborough fled, that they so strained themselves in running for their lives, that they fell down breathlesse and dead. Surely as the coney that flies to the holes in the rocks doth easily avoyd the dogs that persue her: when the hare that trusts in the swiftnesse of her legs is at length overtaken and torne in peeces: So those that trust in God shall be secured: whereas those that confide in themselves or the creature, shall be surprized, and come to an ill end. David ran to God in distresse and was releevd. Saul goes to the witch, and from thence to the sword-point, Judas to the Pharisees, and thence to the halter.

of the disloyalty and treachery that is therein. Other mens finnes are rebellions against God : but the faines sins are treacheries, because against the covenant. Let such therefore look to themselves, and walk accurately, or they shall be sure to rue it. God will be sure to plow his own ground, whatsoever becomes of the waite : and to weed his own garden, though the rest of the world should bee let alone to grow wild. His own he will not fail to punish. 1. In case of scandal, as David. 2. For sins unrepented of, though not scandalous. Oh the bloody wails that God hath left upon the backs of his own dear children for such sins ! Bastards may scape scot-free : but sonnes shall pay for it. Ingentia beneficio, flagitia, supplicia. The punishing Angel is bidden begin at Gods Sanctuary, Ezek. 9. He will be sanctified in all that draw neer unto him, Levit. 10. 3. Sanctified I say, either actively, or passively : either in the sincerity of mens conversation, or in the severity of their visitation : at which time, his Articles of enquiry will be very strict and criticall against his own professed people, who are therefore worse then others, ( and shall therefore speed worse ) because they ought to be better.

Verse 3. Can two walk together, except they be agreed ? ] God permits his people to walk together with him in an humble familiarity : but then they must take care that familiarity breed not contempt : and that they conceit not that hee will connive at their iniquities, or that their holy services will bear them out in any known sinne. He is just and jealous of his glory, wherein he should be no small loser, if he did wink at any besides involuntary failings, and unavoydable infirmities ; for which there is a pardon of course, if sued out. If I shall walk with you, saith God, as a father, friend, husband, you must agree with me, consent, and conform to me, idem velle, & idem nolle, will and nill the same that I do : or else I shall walk with you no otherwise then as a severe judge, or cruel enemy, Levit. 26. 24. as a lion, with the prey that he hath taken, as the fowler with the bird hee hath caught, or the hunter with the wild beast he hath gotten into his snare.

Verse 4. Will a lion roar in the Forrest, when, &c. ] It is said of the Lion, that he sets up a double roar : first, when he descrieth his prey, next when he seizeth it. Then, saith Plutarch, he roareth, or rather belloweth like a bull, that other beasts may come to him, and take part with him. It is not for nothing that the lion uttereth his voice : much lesse that Almighty God thundereth, and threatneth by his Prophets, your sins without repentance will be your ruine, according to those threatnings : though you are so sturdy, or at least so stupid, as to fear them no more, then Behemoth doth the iron weapons, which are esteemed by him as straws, or bull-rushes. Shall the wrath of a King be as the roaring of a lion, Prov. 19. 12. and as the messengers of death, Prov. 16. 14. and shall Gods menaces be slighted ? will vile men imagine him a God of clouts ? One that howsoever he speaketh heave words, will not do as he saith ? intends them no otherwise, then in terrorem, for fray-bugs ? Surely they will finde it far otherwise : and it must be concluded, that being already sentenced, either their beds are very soft, or their hearts very hard, that can sleep securely in so deplorable a condition : Surely Gods predictions shall have their accomplishment, 1 Sam. 3. 19. & 15. 29. Beleeve them therefore : Stand in awe and sin not, sith he that despiseth the word, shall be destroyed : but hee that feareth the commandement, shall be rewarded, Prov. 13. 13. See the Note there.

Will a young lion cry out of his den ? ] q. d. Is it for nothing that God so terribly threatneth ? Is there not a cause ? as David said in another case, 1 Sam. 17. 29. Surely, as in the Revelation we never read that heaven opened, but some great matter followed : so here ; Hath the Lord spoken it, and shall he not do it ? Never think it. Oh think of God as of one not to be thought of : as One, whose wisdom is his justice, whose justice is his power, whose power is his Truth, and all himself. He is the God of Amen, Psal. 31. 6. faithfull, and true : he can as soon die as lie : neither can he be hindered or resisted, as Angels, men, and devils may. In the creature there is an essence, and a faculty, whereby they work : as in fire is the substance and the quality of heat. Now between these, God can separate, and so hinder their working ; as in the Babylonish fire. In the Angels there is an essence, and an executive power : God comes between these off, and hinders them from doing what they would. Not so in God ; who is most simple, and entire, armed with power irresistible to tame his rebels : Every morning doth he bring his judgement to light, he

faileth not: but the unjust knoweth no shame, Zeph. 3. 5. the fool passeth on and is punished, Prov. 22. 3.

Verse 5. Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, &c? Think you, that all things are carried here by blind fortune, and not by a particular providence, as if

— mundo nullus inisset, Rellor, & inderto fluereut mortalia casu?

Will you say of the evils you have suffered, in the language of Ashdod; It is a chance? Is that Heathen-Idol Fortune any thing in the world, more then a blasphemie, spued out by the devil against the divine providence? Can a sparrow fall to the ground, or any the least bird into a snare upon the earth, without your heavenly Father, Matth. 10. 29. Birds flying seeme to be at liberty; yet are guided by an over-ruling hand. They fall sometimes into a gin: and do not you thereupon conclude, that some fowlers hand is in it? Lo you are insnared, and insnared by your enemies: and can you not discern that it is the Lord who hath done it? Lam. 3. 37, 38. Aët. 17. 25, 28. Eccles. 9. 12. For man knoweth not his time (nor his chance, ver. 11.) as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare, so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly (but providentially) upon them.

Or shall one take up a snare from the earth, &c. ] No wise fowler will take up his nets, till he have gotten his prey: No more will God withdraw his hand, or call off the enemy and the avenger, till he have his designe: till he hath either reformed or ruined you.

Verse 6. Shall a trumpet be blowen, ] sc. out of a watch-tower in time of war, to sound an alarme, and to say, Hannibal ad portas, the enemy is at hand, the Philistines are upon you.

and the people not be afraid, ] or run together to make resistance? Will ye not then tremble at my threats, saith the Lord? Tremble thou earth at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob. Fear is an affection of the soul, shrinking in it self from some imminent evil. God is the proper object of it, whence hee is called Fear in the abstract, Psal. 76. 11. and those that come on his errand should bee received with reverence, yea with fear and trembling, as was Titus, 2 Cor. 7. 15. and before him Samuel, by those Elders of Bethlehem, 1 Sam. 16. 4. as suspecting it was the purpose of some judgement that brought him thither. Commeest thou peaceably? said they. It is a good thing to stand in awe of Gods Messengers, and to tremble at his judgements, whilest they yet hang in the threatnings. It appeareth by this Prophet, that carnall security was grown epidemically, and had over-spread the land, chap. 6. 2, 3. Some there were that said, God had not sent the Prophets to denounce those evils, but that they had done it of their own heads, as we say. Others doubted of the certainty of those evils denounced, chap. 6. 3. against whom He here disputeth by these fore-going similitudes; and in the next words plainly asserteth the Divine providence, and the authority of the Prophets, Gods privy-Counsellours.

and the Lord hath not done it? ] Although God doth it not but onely as it is bonum iustitia, good in order to his glory. That which we are here advertised is, that it is not Luck and Fortune that doth toss and tumble things here below: but that God sits at the stern, and steers the affairs of the world. The Gentiles indeed, held Fortune as a goddess: representing her by a Woman sitting upon a Ball, as if the whole world were at her command; having with her a razor, as if she could at her pleasure cut off and end mans happinesse; bearing in her right hand the stern of a ship, as if she could turn about all things at her pleasure, and in her left hand the horn of abundance, as though all plenty came from her. This was abominable idolatry, to be shunned by Christians: yea the very name of Luck or Fortune, is to be spet out of their mouthes with utmost detestation. It repented Austin that ever he had used that wicked word, Fortuna.

Verse 7. Surely the Lord God will do nothing, ] i.e. Hardly any thing. He loveth to fore signifie, to warn before he wound: and this meerly out of his Philanthropie. Howbeit sometimes, and in some cases, he is more sudden and still in his revenges: that he may thereby, First maintain his honour and glory, the eyes whereof are by some sinnes extraordinarily provoked, as Acts 12. 23. And secondly, to teach men not to continue in sinne, no not for a moment: sith they may bee presently cut off from all further time of repentance, acceptation, and grace for ever: This made Austin say, that he would not be an Atheist, no not one half hour, to gain all the world. See Luke 17. 32. and 12. 20. Pharaoh had warning of the first and second plagues, not so of the third: and again, of the fourth and fifth, but not of the sixth: and yet again, of the seventh and eight, but not of the ninth. And when neither warning, nor no-warning would do good, then came that sweeping plague;

But he revealeth his secret to his servants the Prophets. ] Gods Prophets then are his meniall servants: not his underlings, or inferior hinds, but of noblest employment about him. Every faithfull Minister is servant to the king of heaven (Act 27. 23. whose I am, and whom I serve: this the Devil denied not, Act 16. 16, 17.) yea his Steward, Embassadour, Herald (as here) by whom he proclaims warre, but first proffers pardon, and proposes conditions of peace. A practise usuall, not onely among the people of God, by his appointment, Deut. 20. 10. but also among the Heathens, as Histories informe us. The Romans had their Lex Facialis: by their Heralds they sent to such as had wronged them, Caduceum & Hastam, as Ensignes of peace and warre, that within thirty dayes they might take their choice: within which time, if they did them not right, the Herald presently denounced warre against them, casting forth a dart in token thereof. Alexanders course was; when he sat down before a city, to set up a torch: to shew that if they would come in, and submit before that torch were burnt out, they should have hearing. Tamerlan hang'd out first a white flag, then a red, and lastly a black. And the Turks at this day, first make to their enemies some offer of peace; how unreasonable soever it matters not. Gods offers in this kinde are all of grace, and for our good. If it were otherwise, what need he give warning? and why doth he not as Abalom did; when, intending to murther Amnon, hee spake neither good nor evil to him? Well might the Lord say, Fury is not in me, O Israel, thou hast destroyed thy self. As I live, I desire not the death of a sinner, &c. If he did, why might he not rush suddenly upon such and confound them at once, as he did the reprobate Angels, even in the very act and first moment of their sinne? Why comes he first in a soft still voyce, when he might justly thunder-strike us? and why sendeth hee his Heralds to proclaime warre, but yet with articles of peace and reconciliation open in their hands? Why was He but six dayes in making the world, and yet seven dayes in unmaking and destroying one city, Jericho? Was it not to shew that the Lord is mercifull and gracious, slow to anger, and of great kindnesse? And this he hath commanded his Prophets to make known, that the goodnesse of God may lead men to repentance. As, if they turn his grace into wantounesse, and pervert his patience to presumption, their commission is to declaim against such practises with all authority, Tis. 2. 15. and to proclaim hell-fire, in case men amend not. Necessity is laid upon them so to do, and wo be to them if they preach not law as well as Gospel; that when they return up their commission, they may report the matter, saying, Behold we have done as thou hast commanded us, Ezek. 9. 11. True it is, that perverse people question the Prophets, and quarrell them for this plain-dealing: as Abab did Eliab for a troubler of Israel, and Amaziah our Prophet Amos, for a trumpet of rebellion. But this is as great folly, as if some fond people should accuse the herald, or the trumpet as the cause of their warre: or as, if some ignorant peasant, when he seeth his fowls bathing in his pond, should cry out of them, as the causes of foul weather.

Verse 8. The lion hath roared, who will not fear? the Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesie? ] Who that knoweth the terrour of the Lord, can dare to do otherwise, otherwise, when he commandeth it? Shall men fear fire, water, bears, lions, &c. and not the great and terrible God? If he roar upon his servants, and say as to Jeremy he once did. Thou therefore, gird up the loynes of thy minde, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee; be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them: We must roar against mens sinnes; and bee instant, though they roar against us for so doing, and threaten never so much. Micah will not budge for a Kings authority, when once he had seen the Lord in his Majestie; nor Paul for an Angels, Gal. 1. the rest of the Apostles for the Sanhedrims, Act. 4. 19. & 5. 25, &c. When the Emperour threatned Basil with imprisonment, banishment, death, he answered; Let him threaten boyes with such fray-bugs: I am resolved: neither menaces nor flatteries shall silence me, or draw me to betray a good cause or conscience. If I deal not plainly and faithfully with your souls, said Bernard, Vobis erit damnosum, mihi periculosum. Timeo itaque damnatum vestrum, timeo damnationem meam si tacerem. i. e. it will be ill for you, and worse for mee. The truth is, you would be betrayed, and I should be damned, if I should hold my peace. Let me be accounted proud, pragmaticall, any thing, rather then found guilty of sinfull silence, when the Lord calleth me to speak, saith Luther. These were men whose hearts were fraught with the reverentiall fear of God; and therefore found themselves necessitated to bee faithfull: besides the love of Christ constrained them, 2 Cor. 5. 14. so that they could do no lesse, they could not but speak, Act. 4. 19.

Publish in the palaces at Ashdod, &c.]* that is, in the courts of the Philistin-princes, and of the Egyptian kings, who are here attested and invited, to judge betwixt God and his vineyard, to passe an impartiall sentence, and to say whether Israels sinnes deserved not all the judgements that God by his Prophets had denounced, yea and greater too. Holy Ezra acknowledgeth as much, chap. 9. 13. But because that many were ready to say, as those in Jeremy, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me: behold I will plead with thee, (saith the Lord) because thou sayest, I have not sinned. Yea thy sworn-enemies shall give true evidence against thee, and judge of the justice of my proceedings with thee, that I may be justified, and every mouth stopped.

Assemble your selves upon the mountains of Samaria,] that there-hence ye may be eye-witnesses, and have a full prospect of their leudnesse; which will be to you a pleasant spectacle; that out of their tragedies you may frame comedies. Samaria was a city set upon an hill: and as it self, so its wickednesse could not be hid. Carnall people are very inquisitive into the miscarriages of professours: and ready to search more narrowly thereinto then Laban did into Jacobs stuff. What a year made Amnianus Marcellinus of the pride and luxury of some of the primitive Bishops? Averroes, of the Papists Breaden-god? the Turks, of the Papists Affons palmaris? the Jews, of their clipping the crucifix, and weeping over it in the Pulpit? as also the swearing that is so common amongst Protestants; together with that mad conceit of some, that he that cannot swear with a grace, wanteth his tropes and figures befitting a Gentleman? This and such like unchristian practises, made learned Lincker when he read Christs Sermon in the Mount, cry out; Certainly, either this is not Gospel, or we are but bad Gospellers: It is a lamentable thing, that it should be commonly reported that there be such abominations found in the Church as are hardly heard of among the Heathen, 1 Cor. 5. 1.

Verse 10. For they know not to do right] They have done wrong so long together, against knowledge and conscience, that now they are given up to a reprobate sense, to an injudicious minde, having sinned away that light they had, and lost that little knowledge they had learned out of the law of Moses concerning good works: this they have wickedly blotted out of their own minds; as also those common notions of good and evil, that glimmering of divine light left in the naturall man; this in a defiled conscience is wholly extinct. Have the workers of iniquity no knowledge? No, not they, as appears by what followes, they eat up my people as they eat bread Psal. 14. 4. These Cannibals, like pickrels in a pond, or sherkes in the sea, devour the poorer as they the lesser fishes. And though they cannot but know this to be evil, condemned by the light of nature, and much more of scripture, yet they do it, and will do it: their eyes being put out with the dust of covetousnesse, and their hearts so exercised therewith 2 Pet. 2. 14. that they can say as that wretched fellow did, We are masters of our consciences, we can do what we will, for all them: and as Balaam resolved at length, to curse, whatever came of it.

who store up violence and robbery in their palaces] Till the screech-owles of woe cry aloud from the wals, and the beames out of the timber make answer Hab. 2. 11. 12. till their cursed hoards of evil-gotten goods witnesse against them, and eat their flesh as it were fire Jam. 5. 3. till very Philistines and Egyptians cry shame on them, and say as the Indians did of the cruel Spaniards, that they carried themselves neither like Christians nor men, but like devils; that it had been better the Indies had been given to the devils of hell, then to them; and that if the Spaniards went to heaven when they were dead, they would never come there. Let no man think to thrive violentiâ & vastitate, by rapine and robbery: to treasure up sin is to treasure up wrath Rom. 2. 5. which, as a fire, will devour their palaces, and it shall not be quenched, Ier. 17. 27.

thy strength] Thy strong-holds, or thy riches, those treasures of wickednesse wherein thou trustest Prov. 10. 2. and verse 15. The rich mans wealth is his strong city. It is called his strength because he confideth in it, 1 Tim. 6. 17. and because he is enabled by it, to bring about his designs.

and thy palaces shall be spoiled] They shall be blown up, because their foundation was laid upon fire-works, their mortar mixt with blood, their materials raked together by rapine and robbery, their furniture, and those ill-gotten goods therein hid and hoarded, shall be given hosti non heredi, not to thine heire but to thine enemy for a booty. An inheritance may be hastily gotten at the beginning: but the end thereof shall not be blessed Prov. 20. 21. As the partridge sitteth on egges and

Verse 12. As the Shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the Lion] by a countrey-comparison (as before oft) the Prophet sets forth the fewnesse of such as shall escape the enemies hands. Is it but a little that a shepherd dare pull out of the jaws of a Lion. Few Dauids or Lyfsmachusses, that dare look such fierce creatures in the face. Something a shepheard in this case may adventure to do, that he may not be made to stand to the loss Exod. 22. 13. Gen 31. 39. But it is not much: neither are they many, that shall make escape, and those few shall be of the poorer sort too, that have scarce a corner of a bed to lye on: or such as are sick-bed and not cared for by the enemy, not counted worth the killing. Or such as are in good health, but glad to hide themselves for feare of the enemy under any bed or bench-hole, as is usuall in the sack of a city.

What cruel persecutions raised the Q. Mother of Scotland about the beginning of the Reformation there? the Q. Mother of France Katherine de Medices, for thirty yeares together? Q. Mary here, being wholly possessed by the Bishops, as Alexandra was by the Pharisees, of whom Iosephus testifieth that she had the name, but they had all the power of the kingdome? Oh these kine of Basban, these wanton and wicked women (for so I understand the text after the Jew-Doctors Varablas, Lyra, Lively &c.) when once they get the reins in their hands, there is no hoe with them: when once the devill gets passage per costam ad cor (as Gregory speaketh) by the rib to the heart, what may he not effect? when the hen is suffered to crow, what hope is there of good? David complaines of strong buls of Basban Psal. 22. 12. but those he might better deale with, then with these crst cowes of Basban that thrust with side and shoulder, and push the diseased with their hornes, till they had scattered them abroad, Ezek. 34. 21.

Or, ye shall be led into captivity, after the taking and dismantling of your cities. See Ezek. 12. 5, 12.

And ye shall cast them into the palace. ] Or, ye shall cast away the things of the palace. Ye shall cast them, that is, your children and nephews, (vers. 2.) into the palace: either that ye may not see their destruction, as Gen. 21. 16. or that they might with greater celerity, provide for their own safety. That was a singular example of the Vindelisi (now called Suevians) subdued by Drusus the Roman General under Augustus, but not without great resistance: the women throwing their young children at the Romans instead of darts. These were monstrous mothers, mad-cows indeed.

Verse 4. Come to Bethel and transgresse, ] Do so, if you think good: and sith you are so set upon it, go on, despair, die and be damned: That that will perish, lee it perish, quoniam vobis stat sententia, sith you are resolved, and there's no removing of you, take your own course, at your own perill. Here then we have a most bitter sarcasme, wherein God in seeming to command sin, sheweth his utmost dislike of it: for he is not a God that loveth wickednesse, neither shall evil dwell with him, Psal. 5. 4. See the like Ironical expressions, Jer. 7. 21. Ezech. 20. 39. Eccles. 11. 9. Numb. 22. 30. Ejay 29. 1. and 8. 9. and 47. 12. Judg. 10. 14. 1 King. 18. 27.

At Gilgal multiply transgressions, ] that your madnesse may appear to all men. 1 Tim. 4. 15. See Hof. 4. 15. with the Note.

and bring your sacrifices every morning, ] Like Apes imitate the daily sacrifice: and do those self-same things to your idols, which I have commanded to be done to my self alone; and in other places, that should be done at Jerusalem onely. Do all this, and try what will come of it: will you try a fall with God? will you despitefully spet in the face of heaven? Do ye provoke me to anger, saith the Lord? do ye not provoke your selves to the confusion of your own faces? Jer. 7. 19.

and your tithes after three years. ] that so ye may seem to keep my Law exactly, Dent. 14. 28. and to be wanting in no duty, either of piety, or charity. Wasps also have their honey-combs: idolaters a form of devotion,

Verse 5. And offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven, ] which I have flatly forbidden to be done, Lev. 2. 11. Neither leaven nor honey (which hath a leavening property in it) might be burnt in any offering made by fire: to shew how God hateth hypocrisie; which, as leaven, sowreth, sweileth, impureth, both us and our services. Out with it therefore, 1 Cor. 5. 7. God indeed permitted his people to offer leavened bread with the peace-offerings, Lev. 7. 13. ut offenderetur, Deum ferre nostram infirmitatem, saith Alsted, to shew that God beareth with our infirmities. But those leavened loaves were not to be burnt upon the altar: they were onely for food to be eaten.

and proclaim and publish the free-offerings, ] that you may not seem in any thing to come short of my most forward worshippers: nor to be without your holy convocations solemnly proclaimed. Atque ita omnino in capta idololatria strenue pergit, and so shew your selves thorow-idolaters: as the Historian saith of our Rich. 3. that knowing it was no good policie to play the villain by half-deal, he resolved to suffer never a rub to lie in his way, that might hinder the true running of his bowles.

for this liketh you. ] Heb. so ye love. Idolatry is marvellous pleasing to corrupt nature: as is to be seen in little ones delighting in babies. The whole world wondered after the beast. The Papacie with its pomp and pleasure is an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion. The great whore with her cup of fornications may easily boast, as that harlot in Ælian did, that she could soon get scholars from Socrates; not he from her. But what an odde or rather sad thing is it, that men should so like that which will be their bane? and that God should be put to complain, as here, and Jer. 5. 31. My people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof? Polybius saith, that whereas man is counted the wisest of all creatures here below, to him he seemeth to be the foolishlest: for other things love and seek their own preservation, Solus homo ab avo ad avum peccat ferè in iisdem & puniunt. Man onely persisteth in sin, and is punished, as if he were ambitious of destruction.

Verse 6. And I have also given you cleanness of teeth, ] so that you need not spend time in picking them, as those that are full-fed: for I have cut you short enough, and held you to hard allowance: as those that would tame wild creatures, keep them empty and waking: but you have been, and so continue, untamed and untractable, incorrigibly flagitious, incapable of repentance. Your diseases are complicate, yea they are so ingrained, that they are not easily stirred, much lesse destroyed by any potion I have yet given you. In vain have I smitten your children: they received no correction, Jer. 2. 30.

In all your cities. ] One as well as other, lest you should say as those Philistines, It was a chance, and as the Rabbines tell us, that the idolatrous priests told Jeroboam, that the drying up of his hand fell out meereley by accident.

and want of bread in all your places, ] Thus the Scripture oft interpreteth it self, and is ever its own best glosse. Some think that by want of bread here, is meant dearth dearth of corn; as by cleanness of teeth, scarcity of flesh: and that by all your places, we are to understand, all your houses. This fell out in the times of Elias and Elisha, 1 King. 17. and 2 King. 6. 21. and 8. 1. and God would not have it to be forgotten, but is justly angry that they remained so irreformable. That dearth in Elias his dayes, lasted above three yeers: and might (likely) be as extreme, as that here in England, (about the year 700.) of three yeers continuance: and so violent it was, that not onely many died daily for hunger, but great numbers joyning hand in hand, forty or fifty in a company, threw themselves headlong into the Sea. A like three-yeers famine also wee read to have been in Bohemia and Polonia, Anno 1312. so great, that children devoured their parents, and parents their children: some fed upon the dead carcases that hang'd in gibbets, &c. Wolves also were so famished, that they fell upon all they met, and fed upon them.

yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord. ] Ye have lost the fruit of your afflictions, and all mine hammers hitherto have but beat cold iron. When there were yet three months, &c. ] When you could worst of all want it (see Joel 2. 23. with the Note) for the watering of the seed, and opening of the earth.

And I caused it to rain upon one city, ] It rains not then by hap-hazard: neither are the seasons of the year (whether barren or fruitfull) ruled by the course of nature, or influence of the stars, but by God, Ael. 14. 17. It is he that giveth rain from heaven, and fruitfull seasons. He covereth the heaven with clouds, he prepareth rain for the earth, he maketh grasse to grow upon the mountains, and standing corn in the fields, Psal. 147. 8. He weighes these waters by measure: so that not a drop falls in vain, or in a wrong place; but by Divine decree, Job 28. 26. for the fatning of the earth, allaying the heat, nourishing the herb and tree, Deut. 32. 2. Esay 44. 14. producing unto us the appointed weeks of harvest, Jer. 5. 24. that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, Esay 55. 10. This the poor Pagans ascribed to their god Jupiter, whom they therefore stiled Νεφελιγενής. Him they confessed the greatest of all, calling him ὤντωρ: the Overseer of their trading, hence Αγορευτής: the keeper of their houses, hence Jupiter Hercens, &c. This they did to the great shame of many Atheists amongst us, who hold that all things come either by benigne nature, or blinde adventure.

In the year of grace 1551. a great multitude of men and cattle in Germany were drowned and destroyed; decidensibus subito nubibus, accessus certatim aquis, saith Bartholinus; by excessive shewres and immoderate waters, pouring down upon people as by spoutes. This was the very finger of God, who will one day rain upon the wicked, snares, fire, and brimstone, and an horrible tempest. of the earth, astonishing the world with the fearfull noyse of that eruption, withered] It must needs do so: and so must Gods own Vineyard the Church, when he shall command the clouds that they raine no raine upon it, Esay. 5. 6. that is, his ministers, that they drop no doctrine upon it, Dem. 32. 2. Ezek. 21. 2. Am. 7. 16. fitly resembled to raine in regard 1. of cooling heat, 2. quenching thirst, 3. cleansing the ayre, 4. allaying the windes, 5. mollifying and mellowing the parched and heat-hardened earth, 6. causing all things to grow and fructify. This raine of righteousness goes sometimes by coasts, as here: God tying up the tongues of his faithfullest labourers, and withholding their showres, though they be clouds thick, and full, and likely enough to drop down in abundance. See *Ezek. 3. 26, 27. Hos. 9. 7. This is our happiness for present. Oh that we knew but this gift of God, and were answerably thankfull and fruitfull: Oh how cursed a generation are those that repine at it saying, Never was merry world, since so much preaching &c. How shall such miscreants one day wish to have but one drop fall from these full clouds to coole the heat and horrors of their consciences, but shall not obtaine it.

Verse 8. So two or three cities wanded] Necessity is an hard weapon: and want of water will make men wander far, and part with any thing for it: as Lyfimachus did with his kingdome, sacrificing his estate to the service of his life. Oh that we were as solicitous for our soules &c. Those good soules Psal. 84. 7. went from strength to strength, travelled many a mile, to see Gods face though but in that dark glasse of the ceremonies. The good Sunamite went every sabbath and new-moon to the Prophet. Our forefathers were unwearable in making out after the meanes, which we vilipend, and make no reckoning of &c.

to drink water] raine-water: for in those countries (as Hierome testifieth who lived there many yeares, and therefore knew the scituation and nature thereof) they have but few springs, and no considerable rivers, but only Jordan: and are therefore glad to keep raine-water in cisterns for all uses: being much afflicted with thirst and drought, if it raine not.

but they were not satisfied] either because there was not enough to be had: or by a singular curse of unsatisfiability, See Hag. 1. 6. with the Note.

yet have ye not returned unto me] usque ad me, so far as me. You have made some faint overtures and essayes of returning, but they have not reacht out unto me: they have not amounted to the full measure of a sound conversion. Plestimur, may you well say, nec tamen flectimur: corripimur, sed non corrigimur &c. God rained not upon us that we might return unto him, and learn righteousness Esay. 26. 10. that we might powre out a prayer when his chastening was upon us verse. 16. 18. But we, alas, have done nothing lesse: We have turned every one to his own way: and done what in us lies to defeat God and undo our selves by our incorrigibility and uncureability.

Salvian.

Verse 9. I have smitten you with blasting and mildews &c.] This, by immoderate raine: that, by drought caused by an East-wind, that ventus vrens & exsiccans. God cannot possibly want a weapon to tame a rebell.

when your gardens and your vineyards increased] Or were trimmed and tricked up. Taxat nimium eorum studium saith Mercer. The Prophet here taxeth their overmuch paines taken, and cost cast away in multiplying and dressing their hort-yards, and Vineyards: when in the meane while, they neglected the sincere service of God: and suffered their own hearts to lie like the sluggards field, that was all grown over with thornes and briars, Prov. 24. 31. that is, with lusts and sins, under which lurketh that old serpent.

the palmer-worme] which is worse then the locust, as Hierom noteth: for the locust locust feeds only on the tops of the eares of corne as he flies ( and thence hath his name in Greek ) but palmer-wormes stick close to the fruits or flowers they light on : and will not off, till all be consumed. It is the last and worst of evils, saith He : and leaves nothing behind it : omnia corradi & converrit, makes cleane work. See Joel. 1. 3, 10, 11, 12. &c. with the Notes.

yet have ye not returned unto me] No not yet : but have rejected the remedy of your recovery : see verse 8.

Verse 10. I have sent among you the pestilence] that evill angell Psal. 78. 49. that adversus eminent hand of God, as Hippocrates calleth it : that destruction that walketh in darknesse, and wasteth at noon day, as the Psalmist stileth it. This God sent : for it is a messenger of his sending, an arrow of his shooting 2 Sam. 24. 15. and may better be called morbis sacer, then the falling sicknesse ; as being an extraordinary hand of God, such as was that Sudor Anglicus in the dayes of Edward the sixth, the sweating sicknesse that raged very violently for forty yeares together here in England ( as Sennertus testifieth ) and slew so many, that strangers wondred how this Island could be so populous as to beare and bury such incredible multitudes. No stranger in England was touched with this disease : and yet the English were chased therewith, not only here but in other countries abroad : which made them like tyrants both feared and avoyded, where ever they came. So long as the ferventnesse of this plague lasted, there was crying Peccavi Peccavi : and some pretences of turning to the Lord. The Ministers were sought for in every corner ( saith Mr. Bradford ) oh you must come to my Lord, you must come to my Lady &c. Thus, when he slew them, then they sought him : and they returned and enquired early after God. Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and lied unto him with their tongues. As the fox, when taken in a snare, lookes pittingly ; but 'tis only that he may get out : as Ice melts in the day and hardeneth againe in the night ; or as Iron is very soft and malleable whiles in the fire, but soon after returneth to its former hardnesse.

after the manner of Egypt] In the way to Egypt ( so some reade it ) as you were trudging down to Egypt for help against enemies, or for corn in time of famine ( for Egypt was the worlds granary ) I have stretcht my net over you : Egypt hath gathered you up, Memphis hath buried you, Hos. 9. 6. But taking the words as we translate them, After the manner of Egypt, i. e. so as I plagued the Egyptians, when you were amongst them ( See Exod. 12. 29. ) with mortality of men and murraine of cattel. The plague of Athens is graphically described by Thucydides : whence Ovid and Virgil are thought to have borrowed their descriptions of the pestilence. The plague of Italy is set forth in lively colours by Dionys : Halycarnass : lib. 11. Antiq. That of Constantinople, by Nicephorus and Sigebertus.

your young men have I slaine with the sword] Juvenes à juvando saith Varro : because they are able and apt by armes to defend the commonwealth, and to help it at a dead lift. In Hebrew they have their name à delectu : because they are chosen to fight and do businesse, as fittest for the purpose Exod. 17. 9. 2 Sam. 6. 1. These God had slaine with the sword which cutteth its way thorough a wood of men, and heweth down the youngest and strongest ; spareth neither Lord nor losell, as they say : is dispatched with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood Esay. 9. 5.

and I have made the stink of your camps] by meanes of the slaine, both men and horses that lye unburied, and poyson the ayre ; See Joel. 2. 20. Esay 34. 3.

and yet have ye not returned] Nec sicutamen : Vide contumaciam, saith Mercer here. Obstinat men will sooner break, then bend. Monoceros interimi potest, non capi.

Verse 11. I have overthrown some of you] Some and not all : thus, in the midst of judgement he remembred mercy, he did not stir up all his wrath Psal. 78. 38. he let fall some drops, but would not shed the whole shewre of it : for he remembred that they were but flesh &c. Some he hang'd up in gibbets, as it were, for example to the rest : as St. Jude saith he dealt by Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, thrown forth for an instance of divine vengeance to all succeeding ages Jude. 7. and as Herodotus telleth us, that the sparkles and ashes of burnt Troy served as God overthrew Sodom] As Jehovah from Jehovah rained hell out of heaven upon them Gen. 14. 24. that is, God the Son from God the Father: and so Eusebius observeth that the Father here saith of the Son, that he overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah: he condemned them with an overthrow 2 Pet. 2. 6. he overthrew them and repented not Jer. 20. 16 he overthrew them in a moment, and no hand stayed on them Lam. 4. 6. And yet worse shall be the condition of those that despise the grace of the Gospell, which is the great sin of these last times Mat. 11. 24. yea the devils will keep holy-day as it were, in hell, in respect of such sinners against their own soules.

It is as if God should say: There are not many of you that are left, and have your lives for a prey: howbeit they are ill bestowed upon you, for any good use you have made of my forbearance. Let favour be shewed to the wicked, yet will he not learne righteousnesse, Esay. 26. 10. and if thou deliver him once, yet thou must do it againe: and when all's done that can be done. and yet ye have not returned &c.] O prorsus obstinati! saith Tarnovius here: Prorsus indurati et contumaces, saith Mercer. Ye stifnecked and uncircumcised in heart and eares, do ye thus alwayes resist the holy Ghost: will ye needs be like horse and mule uncounsellable, untractable? will ye, after conviction, needes run away with the bit in your mouths and take your swinge in sin &c. If so resolved, yet stay saith the Psalmist, and take this along with you, Many sorrowes shall be to the wicked: your preservation from one evill shall be but a reservation to seven worse Lev. 26. as it fared with Pharaoh, Senacherib and others: God will surely subdue, or subvert you.

Psal. 32. 9. 10.

Verse 12. Therefore thus will I do unto thee O Israel] Thus? how? Non nominat mala ut omnia timeant saith Ribera. He tells them not how, that they may feare the worst: even all that is written and unwritten. It was the very policy of Julius Caesar never to extenuate or deny to his souldiers the danger of an enemy, but rather to raise up thoughts of valour by aggravating the contrary forces: and this way he did (not seldome) hyperbolically rhetoricate, saith the story. Now the Lord need not do so: sith his judgements are a great deep, neither can any man know the power of his anger: let a man feare it never so much, he is sure to feel it a great deale more, if he once fall into his fingers. Is it nothing to drink the dregs of Gods displeasure, when it is eternity unto the bottome? Is it nothing to launch into an infinite Ocean of scalding leade, and to swim naked in it for ever? Oh do any thing rather then be damned, and as Lewis King of France cast the Popes bulls into the fire saying, he had rather they should burn then himself fry in hell for obeying them: Or as Mary Q. of England restored againe all the Ecclesiasticall livings assumed to the crown, saying that she set more by the salvation of her own soule, then she did by ten kingdomes: So let the wicked forsake his wayes, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to the Lord that he may have mercy upon him, and to our God, that he may multiply pardon. Esay

And Guicciardin tells us, that Lewis 12. of France (when he entred Genoa in his triumphant charret with his sword naked) resolved to make a prey of their riches, and an example of many of the chief amongst them, and to leave the rest to his souldiers mercies. But beeing met first by the chief, afterward by the multitude, making great lamentation for their folly, with abundance of teares and cryes, his wrath was appeased toward them. So in Egypt Exod. 10. 22. so in Jury at Christs death Mat. 27. 45. Let this learne us to blesse God for the light both naturall Gen. 1. 4. and supernaturall 2 Cor. 4. 4. 5. and to pray; that our Gospell-sun may not set at noon-tide, nor our light be put out in obscure darknesse: but rather that he would make our darknesse, morning (for so the words may be read here) by clearing up those trutthes to us, that yet lye in part undiscovered: Oh cry after Christ, as the poor man in the Gospell, Lord, that mine eyes might be opened! Oh that thou wouldest give me sight and light! Sun of righteousness shine upon my dark soul.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Hear ye this word ] A new sermon, as appeareth by this new Oyer:

not unlike that of S. Paul, Act. 13. 16. Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience: or rather, that of Diogenes, who cried out at Atheus, Ακούετε ἀνδρες, Hear O ye men. And when as (thereupon) a great sort of people resorted to him, expecting some great matter, he looked about him, and said, Ἀνδρες ἐγγέλτου, ἡμεδαυματα, I called men, and not varlets. They were no better surely that our Prophet had to deal with; Ah sinfull nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that were corrupters: they had forsaken the Lord, provoked the Holy One of Israel, they had increased revolt. Hence this onerous prophesie, this word, this weighty word, this burdensome prophecy.

which I take up against you, ] Heb. lift up, being scarce able to stand under the burden of it. See the Note on Mal. 1. 1. And it is against you, not for you: but that's your own fault: for do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? Mic. 2. 7. Excellently Austin, Adversarius est nobis, quandiu sumus & ipsi nobis, &c. The word of God is adversary to none, but such as are adversaries to themselves: neither doth it condemne any, but those that shall be assuredly condemned by the Lord, except they repent. But we have in a readinesse to revenge all disobedience, saith the Apostle, 2 Cor. 10. 6. and if any man will hurt Gods faithfull witnesses, for discharging their duties, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed, Rev. 11. 5. for Elisba hath his sword as well as Jehu and Hazael, 1 King. 19. 17. And when Elisba unsheatheth and brandisheth his sword, it is a fair warning that the sword of Jehu and Hazael are at hand. See Hof. 6. 5. Jer. 1. 18.

even a lamentation. ] Heb. a very bitter lamentation, Ezek. 19. 14. like those of Jeremy for Judah, or of the mourners in Jerusalem, Ezek. 9. 4. or of Christ weeping over that city, Luke 19. 41, 42. Or of Paul bewailing his wretched countrymen, Rom. 9. 3. and 10. 1. or of the two witnesses clothed in sackcloth, Rev. 11. 3. the habit of mourners: or of Athanasius, who by his tears (as by the bleeding of a chaff vine) sought to cure the leprosie, and prevent the misery of that tainted age. Heu, heu, Domine Deus, was the cry of the ancient Christians. Flete nefas magnum, nam toto flebitis orbe. Their books are like that in Ezekiel written on both sides, and there was written therein, lamentations, and mourning, and wo, Ezek. 2. 10. This of Amos was a sad song, a dolefull ditty, a lamentable prophesie of Israels utter destruction, as it followeth in the second verse, where (Prophet-like) hee speaketh of it as already done, notwithstanding their present prosperity and tranquillity. And have not Englands Turtles groaned out for a great while, the sad and lamentable tunes of wo and misery to this sinfull nation: and plainly foretold what we have felt already, and have yet cause enough to fear. Ah! great be the plagues that hang over England, (said Mr. Philpot Martyr long since) Happy shall that person be, whom the Lord shall take out of this world, not to see them, &c. And the like said Rogers our proto-martyr, Bradford, Ridley, Lever, &c. besides the concurrent predictions of Gods faithfull servants a-late, whose hearts and tongues he hath so guided, as that they all, as one man, have denounced heavie judgements, and taken up loud lamentations against us. Now, as before great stormes, cocks crow loud and thick: so is it here; and so it should be, Exod. 32. 31, 32. Jer. 18. 20. Joel 2. 17. else God will be displeased, Ezek. 13. 5. & 22. 30, 31.

Verse 2. The virgin of Israel is fallen, ] i. e. Though of the spouse of God, the be become the devils adulteresse, Jer. 3. 1. Hof. 1. 2. yet shee will needs be counted and and called a virgin still: as Sardis, she hath a name to live, but is dead: as the Romish crew cry themselves up the onely Church Catholike, and therein (like Oyster-wives) do much out-cry us. But what saith the Lord by his Prophet Jeremy, chap. 18. 13? Ask ye now among the Heathen; who hath heard such things? The Virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing. And the Virgin of Rome may well say as Quartilla the strumpet in Petrarch's doth, Innonem meam iratam habeam, si unquam me meminerim virginem fuisse. I can hardly remember my self a maid. Israel may also be called a virgin, because she yet subsisted and flourished in her first liberty and splendour, till taken and desloured, as it were, by the Assyrian. And in this sence we read of the virgin of Babylon, Esay 47. 1. of Egypt, Jer 46. 12. of Zidon, Esay 23. 12., and now of Venice, whose Motto is, Inacta maneo, I am still a maid: as having never yet fallen into the enemies power. Tournay, a town in France, was ever counted so invincible, that this sentence was engraven over one of the gates, Iannes ton me perdu ton pucelage, Thou hast never lost thy maiden-head. Yet was it yeilded up to our King Henry 8. with 10000. pound sterling, for the citizens redemption. The Virgin of Israel sped not so well.

Shee is fallen, ] That is, shee shall fall, surely, suddenly, utterly.

She is forsaken upon her land, ] Prostrata est, prostrata jacet, she is thrown hard upon her ground, and as it were dashed against it, like an earthen pot against a rock: and all this, because she had left off righteousness in the earth, Verse 7. Those that forsake God, shall be forsaken of him, 2 Chron. 15. 2.

there is none to raise her up. ] God will not; and then, man cannot. Behold, saith Bildad, God will not cast away a perfect man; neither will he take the ungodly by the hand, Job 8. 20. he will bring them into trouble, and there leave them, Ezek. 22. 20. & 29. 5. His own he will not leave: or if he do, yet forsake them he will not, Heb. 13. 5. and if men do, he will relieve them the rather. Because they called thee an out-cast saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after; therefore I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord, Jer. 30. 17.

Verse 3. The city that went out by a thousand, ] i. e. that had a thousand inhabitants passing to and fro thorow the gates (See Gen. 34. 24. and 23. 10. for men love not to bee cooped up, or confined to a place, as the Duke of Venice is, but to be travelling and trading.) Or, that can send out a thousand, fit to bear arms.

Shall leave an hundred, ] Here's a wofull decimation, purporting a very great paucity of people: such as was threatned, Deut. 28. 62. a tenth man onely shall be left, if that. Behold the severity of God, and betray not the lives of others, by an impenitent continuance in sinne. Turn to God, if but for your poor brethrens sake, that are in danger, or in durance. Hézekiah's reason to repent is very remarkable, 2 Chron. 30. 9. For if ye turn again to the Lord, your brethren and your children shall finde compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the Lord your God is gracious and mercifull, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

Shall leave ten. ] Not take ten in an hundred and leave the rest, as the Roman Generals used to do in the Army, in case of a mutiny. This was fulfilled in that three yeers siege of Samaria, 2 King. 18. 10. as afterwards the like fell out at Jerusalem, which could hardly be re-peopled in Nehemiah's time, and at this day is but thinly inhabited: there being not an hundred households of Jews to be found there. In our Countries, of the abundance of people commeth dearth, which maketh many male-contents to mutter: but in many parts of Turkey, for want of men to manure the ground: most of the poor being enforced with victuals and other necessaries to follow their great Armies, in their long expeditions: of whom scarce one of ten (saith mine Authour) ever return home again, there by the way perishing, if not by the enemies sword; yet by the wants, intemperance of the air, or immoderate pains-taking.

All Gods threatnings (for most part) are conditionall, Ier. 18. 7. and 26. 2. sc. if men repent not. As if they do, they may live in his sight, and be accounted worthy (such is Gods great goodnesse) to escape all those things, that shall befall the impenitent, Luke 21. 36. The Gospel is post naufragium tabula, and hath its reward too, Heb. 11. 6. sc. of grace and mercy. Do this and live, saith the Law. Seek the Lord, and live, saith the Gospel. He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, (and that is the force of the Hebrew word here used, which signifieth to enquire, to make serious search, and scrutiny, to seek him out, (as the Seventy have it) when he is with-drawn; to seek him as a Student doth sciences, a worldling gold, a hungry man meat, &c. as a man studiously turns over a Commentary, to finde out the sence of a Text, Esay 34. 16. Do this, saith God, and ye shall live: not onely have your lives for a prey, but live merrily, happily. Now we live, saith the Apostle: that is, we rejoyce; and Thus shall ye say to him that liveth: that is, hath a comfortable life, and a confluence of blessings. But besides all this, yee shall live for ever: and eterna vita, vera vita, eternal life is the onely life properly so called. Life (in what sence soever taken) is a sweet mercy: A living dog is better then a dead Lion, saith Solomon: and Ioseph is yet alive, saith Iacob, (he doth not say, Ioseph is Lord of Egypt) I will get down, and see him before I die. But eternal life is (by a specialty and with an accent) the gift of God through Iesus Christ our Lord: and this gift he will freely bestow on all that so seek him as not to be satisfied without him: as Moses, who would not be put off with an Angel, but said, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence, Exod. 33. 15. and as Luther, who when great gifts were sent him, refused them, and said, Valde protestatus sum, me nolle sic satiari à Deo. I deeply protested, that I would not be satisfied with these low things; but that I would have God, or nothing. This was one of those brave Apophthegmes of his, concerning which One well saith; A man would fetch them upon his knees from Rome, or Jerusalem, rather then be without them.

Verse 5. But seek not Bethel, &c. ] Make not lies your refuge, idols your Oracles: they that observe lying vanities, do (by their own election) forsake their own mercies (Jon. 2. 8.) But I (saith the Prophet, who had now paid for his learning, and was yet under the lash) will sacrifice to thee alone, will seek thy face and favour, not at Bethel, or Gilgal, but in the place where thine honour dwelleth: not at Hull, Sichem, or Loretto, but in the true Reformed Churches, in the beauties of holinesse, in the midst of those seven golden candlesticks, in the hearts and houses of his faithfull people; concerning whom He hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, &c. 2 Cor. 6. 16. and when they walk within their houses with a perfect heart, I will come unto them, Psal. 101. 2. I will there command my blessing, even life for evermore, Psal. 133. 3. See chap. 4. 4. and Hof. 4. 15. with the Notes.

For Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, ] An elegant agnomination in the Original, such as the Prophets are full of, and this plain Prophet, among the rest. See chap. 8. 2. Ministers may sometimes rhetoricate: and it had need to be an elaborate speech, that shall work upon the conscience.

and Bethel shall come to nought. ] Heb. shall be Aven, as elsewhere it is called Beth-aven, Hof. 4. 11. and 10. 5. Against Beer-sheba he saith nothing: because that name afforded him not the like elegancy, as Mercer thinketh: or because that city belonged to Judah, and so was not destroyed with the ten tribes, as Hieron holdeth. Seek not these places saith the Prophet for help and succour in distresse: but say as Jer. 3. 23. Truely in vain is salvation hoped for from these hills: truely in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel.

Verse 6 Seek ye the Lord, and ye shall live. ] See verse 4. Sic eadem saepe surdis & obstinatis inculcantur. The old pressing of a duty imports; 1. The excellency. 2. The necessity. 3. The difficulty of doing it: else what need so many words?

Perquam

Perquam durum est, sed ira lex scripta est, saith the Civilian. Hard or not hard, it must be done, or men are undone. left he breake out like fire ] Left he go through you and burn you together Esay. 27. 4. left ye be utterly burnt with fire in the same place 2. Sams. 23. 7. that is in hell (as some expound it) which the Prophet calleth tormenting Tophet, Esay. 30. 33. and Plato calleth νεκροταφειν a fierylake: so terrible, saith Belharmin, that one glimpse of it were enough to make a man not onely turn Christian and sober, but Anchorite and Monk: to live after the strictest rule that may be.

Verse 7. Ye who turn judgement to wormwood ] Ye Grandees and governours of the people, that turne the sweetest thing into the sowrest, (as corruptio optimi pessima) right into wrong-dealing; that follow the administration of Justice as a trade only, with an unquenchable, and unconscionable desire of gaine; not caring what becomes of righteousnesse, but leaving it off in the earth, or rather not leaving it at all upon earth (Terras Astrae reliquit) but chasing it out of the world as much as in you lyeth: whiles you cast it down to the ground, and tread it under foot Dan. 8. 12. whilist you oppresse the just, crush the needy &c. chap. 4. 1. See the Note there. Some read the text by way of exclamation thus; O ye that turn judgement &c. q. d. What strange creatures are you? what monsters of men? what publike scourges? what scabs? Esay. 5. 7. God looked for judgement, but beheld oppression (In the Originall it is, behold a scab) for righteousness, but behold a cry: such a cry, as entrench into the eares of the Lord of sabbath.

Verse 8. Seek him that maketh the seven starrs ] Once againe, seek him: that is, Returne to him by true repentance: and by faith take hold of his strength, that ye may make peace, and ye shall make peace with him Esay. 27. 5. To stand out it bootes not: sith it is He that made Bootes and Orion &c. that is, of infinite power; and doth whatsoever he will in heaven and earth; who only doth wondrous things Psal. 72. 18. See chap. 4. 12. 13. Chimah and Chesil, that is Pleiades and Orion are twice mentioned together in Iob. Noted starrs they are, and known to shepherds and such like; Amos, likely, was but such an Astronomer, as heardsmen use to be. Those that writ of these starrs tell us, that Chimah comes of Chamah, to love ardently; because of the fellowship and working together that appears in them. They be seven starrs that have all one name: because they all help one another in their work, which is to bring the spring; and like seven sisters or lovers, so are they joyned together in one constellation, and in one company. We see (saith One) that God will have the sweetest works in nature to be performed by mutuall help. The best time of the yeare commeth with these seven starrs (hence we read of their sweet influence Iob. 38. 31.) and the best time of our life commeth, when we enter into true love and fellowship. As for Orion, it is the starr (saith the same Author) that brings winter: and his bonds cannot be loosed. It binds the earth with frost and cold, that the fruits thereof might be seasoned and made kindly against the Spring: neither can the Spring come till Orion have prepared the way. God will have us suffer before we raigne. The word Chesil here used signifies in the Chaldee, to perfect: because by suffering and offering violence to our selves we enter into perfection. Luk. 13. 32. If we would have a pleasant Spring of graces in our hearts, we must first have a nipping winter: the spirit of mortification must be like the cold starr Orion to nip our quick motions in the head, and to bind all our uncleane desires, and burning lusts that they stir not in us: and unlesse we do thus, the seven starrs of Comfort shall never appeare to us.

We are to mark the countenance of the skie, and to discern the face of heaven: that every day and night winketh at us, and beckneth to us, to remember the wisdom, power, justice, and mercy of God lined out unto us in the browes of the firmament. The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handy work. scriptura, the first Bible that God made for the instruction of man. Antonius Eremita told a Philosopher (who objected to him his want of bookes) that the Universe was to him instead of a well-furnisht library, every where ready at hand. Hugo affirmeth, that every thing uttereth these three words, Accipe, Redde, Fuge. Receive mercy, Return duty, Shun sin, together with that bell that it hales at the heels of it. Much a man may learn out of the book of Nature, with its three leaves Heaven, Earth, and Sea: but there he must not rest. For, as where the Naturalist ends, the Physician begins: so where Nature failes and can go no further, there Scripture succeeds and gives more grace Iam. 4. 6. Psal. 19. 1, 2, 7, 8. The Caldee Paraphrast takes this text allegorically: as if the sense were; God changeth his hand towards the sons of men at his pleasure, prospering them one while, crossing them another: so that they walk in darknesse and have no light Esay. 50. 10. yea they walk through the vale of the shadow of death Psal. 23. 4. Not through a dark entry or church-yard in the night time, but a vally, a large, long vast place: not of darknesse onely but of death; and not bare death, but the shadow of death, that is the darkest and most dismall side of death, in its most hideous and horrid representations. And yet if God be with his Davids in this sad condition, no hurt shall befall them, but much good.

That calleth for the waters of the sea] that is, for great armyes, saith the Chaldee. But better take it literally, of the generation of raine, the chief author whereof is God: the materiall cause is the sea sending up vapours: The Instrumentall cause is the Sun, by the beames whereof God drawes the vapours upwards, sends for them, as it were, into the middle region of the ayre, there thickeneth them into clouds, and then resolveth them into raine. This Kimchi illustrateth by the simile of a boyling pot whereout vapours and fumes ascending to the colder pot-lid are turned into drops of water. See Gen. 2. 6.

The Waters of the sea] 1 Kigg. 18. 44. A little cloud arose out of the sea like a mans hand. And presently the Prophet said to Ahab, Prepare thy charet and get thee down, that the raine stop thee not. And it came to passe in the meane while that the heaven was black with cloudes &c.

Verse 9. That strengtheneth the spoiled against the strong] Victorem à victo superari sepe videmus. God can quickly change the scene, turn the scales Ier. 37. 10. though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire. In a bloody fight between Amurath the third King of Turks, and Lazarus Despot of Servia many thousands fell on both sides. In conclusion the Turks had the victory, and Lazarus was slaine. Amurath, after that great victory with some few of his chief captaines, taking view of the dead bodies, which without number lay on heapes in the field like mountaines, a Christian souldier sore wounded and all blood seeing him, in staggering manner arose (as if it had been from death) out of an heape of slaine men, and making toward him, for want of strength fell down diverse times by the way as he came, as if he had been a drunken man. At length drawing nigh unto him, when they which guarded the kings person would have stayed him, he was by Amurath himself commended to come neerer, supposing that he would have craved his life of him. Thus this half-dead Christian pressing neerer unto him, as if he would, for honour sake, have kissed his feet, suddenly stabbed him in the bottome of his belly with a short dagger dagger which he had under his coat; of which wound that great king and conqueror presently died. The name of this man was Miles Cohelute, who, before fore wounded, was shortly after in the presence of Bajazer (Amuraths son) cut into small peeces: So in that memorable fight between the Swissers and the Dolphins neare to Basile, when Burcardus monk a noble man and a great souldier, grew proud of the victory, and put up his helmet that he might behold what a slaughter they had made: one of the half-dead Swissers rising up upon his knees, threw a stone at him, which hitting right gave him his deaths-wound. At the battle of Agincourt, where our Henry 5. won the day, the French were so confident of a victory, that they sent to king Henry, to know what ranfome he would give, and &c. Henry comforting his army with a speech, resolved to open his way over the enemies bosome, or else to die. After which, such was the courage of the English, notwithstanding their great wants, as he that ere while could scarcely bend his bow, is able now to draw his yard-long arrow to the very head.

Thus Abah hated Micaiab, the Sodomites Lot, the Jewes Jeremy, their successors Christ, the Baptist Steven, Paul, &c. Thus those of Geneva hated Farellus their faithfull minister, tryed him for his life, banished him out of their territories: Thus afterwards some of them hated Calvin, calling him Cain: yea calling their dogs Calvin, in derision and detestation of him. And thus Bishop Ridly lamenting the state of England, even of thy greatest Magistrates saith He, some (the Kings highnesse excepted) evermore unkindly and ungently against those that went about most busily and wholesomely to cure their sore backs, spurned privily, and would not spare to speak evill of them, even to the Prince himself: and yet would they toward the same preachers outwardly beare a jolly countenance, and faire face. As for Latimer, Lever, Bradford, Knox, their tongues were so sharp, they ripped in so deep in their galled backs to have purged them, no doubt, of their filthy matter, that was festered in their hearts, of insatiable covetousnesse, of filthy carnality and voluptuousnesse, of intollerable ambition and pride, of ungodly lothomenesse to heare poore mens cases, and to heare Gods word. And these men, of all others, these Magistrates then could never abide &c. Thus He, and much more to the same purpose. They were then sick of a Noli me tangere, and so (alasse) they are still. How few Vespasians to be found, of whom Quintilian testifieth, that he was patientissimus veri, One that would patiently heare the naked truth of things: not toothlesse truths onely, but such as touched to the quick? How few Dauids that loved Nathan the better ever after (for dealing so plainly and faithfully with him) and made him of his cabinet-councell? How few Q. Elisabeths, who called oft for her Deering by whom she was barely told of her faults: though the Bishops (those Court-parasites) would never suffer him to preach more before her? The Q. of Navarre would not harken to such ministers as disliked that fatall French match (that gave opportunity afterwards to the Parisian Massacre) in regard of the diversity of religions: but inclined rather to those that smoothed her up, and told her that it would lay the foundation of a lasting and most happy peace. And generally of those French Reformed churches it was observed, that for some yeares before that bloody massacre, they affected a frothy flashy kind of Preaching: and cared not for that that came home to the conscience. See my common place of Admonition.

[and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly] Auges orationem, saith Drusius: The Prophet groweth in his expreision of their wickednesse: for to abhor is more then to hate; See Prov. 6. 16. Hatred (as they say of the Crocodile) groweth as long as it liveth: Sin is of an encroaching nature. If a Serpent devour a Serpent (saith the Proverbe) he becommeth a Dragon. Hatred of the truth, as runner the elder it is the stronger: the Pharisees for instance; who did not onely inwardly swell and boil with hellish hatred of Christ, his works, and doctrine: but also outwardly belched out against him the basest blasphemies: and in their pertinacious working, constantly persecuted him, even to the most reproachfull death of the crosse. This is merces mundi, the worlds wages to Gods faithfull witnesses. They make a man an offender for a word, (yea for speaking uprightly) and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought, Esay 29. 21. An expectas ut Quintilianus ametur? said He: Dost thou think that plain-dealing Quintilian should be loved? It is not likely. To preach, saith Luther, the truth, which is according to godlinesse, is nothing else but to derive the rage of the whole world upon a mans self.

Verse 11. Forasmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, ] Panting after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, Chap. 2. 7. See there, and Psal. 109. 16. Some render, Ye fire the poor; others, ye plunder them: so the Chaldee, and Hierom. The Seventy have it, Ye smite them with fists. But better, Ye foot it upon them, and make them sell their commodities under-foot (as we phrase it) to pay your heavy taxes, and satisfie your greedy covetousnesse.

Ye have planted pleasant vineyards, ] As He in the History, that having a cup of new-wine in his hand, expressed out of the grapes of his new-planted vineyard, was set upon and flaine by a wild-boar, before he could drink it, and gave occasion to that proverb, Multa cadunt inter calicem supremaque labra; Many things fall betwixt the cup and the lip, betwixt the chin and the chalice. Hereunto agreeth that story in Mr. Burroughs upon Hosea. I had, saith he, certain information, from a reverend Minister, that in his own town there was a wretched worldling, who had a great crop of corn. A good honest neighbour of his walking by his field, saith, Neighbour you have a very fine crop of corn if God blesse it: yea, saith he, I will have a good crop, speaking contemptuously: and before he could come to get it into the barn, it was so blasted, that the corn of the whole crop was not worth fixe pence. God hath many wayes to defeat the wicked mans expectation, and the hope of unjust men perisheth, Prov. 11. 7. Etiā spes valentissima perit, so some render that text, he shall die or miscarry, in the very height of his hopes and expectations.

All these I know, saith God, they are all in Print in heaven, and I will one day read them aloud in the ears of all the world. Fac ergo confitendo propitium, quem taciendo non facis nescium, saith Austin. Make therefore God thy friend, by confessing thy sins to him, which thou canst not by any means conceal from him.

they take a bribe, ] A ransom to blinde their eyes, as 1 Sam. 12. 3. or a pacification of their pretended displeasure against heinous crimes brought before them. Olim didici quid sint munera, said a worthy man, Once I have learned long since, how dangerous a thing it is for men in place to meddle with gifts. A publike person as he should have nothing to lose, so nothing to get: he should be above all price, or sale, &c.

they turn aside the poor in the gate. ] that is, in the place of Judicature : This makes many that go to law, to be at length of Themistocles his minde ; who professed that if two wayes were shewed him, one to hell, and the other to the barre, he would chuse that which went to hell, and forsake the other. Another said, that hee wondered much at two sorts of men : viz. those that go to sea, and those that go to law : not so much that they did so at first, but that, after triall, they would ever go a second time.

Verse 13. Therefore the prudent shall keep silence, ] According to that old and good rule, Either keep silence, or speak that which is better then silence. There is a time to keep silence, and a time to speak, Eccles. 3. 7. and it is a singular skill to time a word, Esay 50. 4. to set it upon its circumferences, Prov. 25. 11. so to speak, and so to do, as those that shall be judged by the law of liberty, Iam. 2. 12. He that would be able to speak right and forcible words, must first learn how and when to keep silence. It is not good casting pearls before swine : nor pulling a Bear, or mad dog by the ear. 'Tis the true ambition of a Christian, to study to be quiet, to meddle with his own businesse, to affect rather quietnesse from the wicked world, then acquaintance with it, and to passe thorow it with as little noise and notice as he can. Not but that Gods faithfull servants must cry aloud, and not spare ; lifting up their voyces like a trumpet, &c. Esay 58. 1. and casting away the inverse trumpets of Furius Fulvus, which sounded a retreat, when they should have sounded an alarme. But this must be done with godly discretion. Zeal should eat us up, but not eat up our wisdom, ( faith One ) nor should policie eat up our zeal. The Apostles professed that they could not but speak the things that they had heard and seen : they must either vent or burst. And yet holy Paul, ( who was full of the spirit of judgement and of burning, Esay 4. 4. ) though he preached at Ephesus ( where hee lived two yeeres and more together ) that they be no gods that are made with hands : yet he made no particular invective against their great goddesse Diana, whereon they so impotently doated, Ath. 19. 26, 37. He that hath a good mixture of zeal and prudence, is like a ship well ballasted, that sails with a prosperous gale : but zeal without discretion, is like fire on the chimney-top ; or like mettles in a blinde horse ; or the devil in the demoniack, that cast him sometimes into the fire, and sometimes into the water. What a storm of persecution raised Bishop Abdias in Persepolis, by his intemperate zeal, not bridled with discretion ; as the Poets fable that Minerva put a golden bridle upon Pegasus, lest he should flie too fast ? And it was some disadvantage to Paul, when in the Councel ( though provoked and unjustly smitten ) he called the high-priest Whited wall : he was glad to excuse it by his ignorance. We may not be too bold, or too forward to speak in a good matter, to such as hate him that rebuketh in the gate : and abhor him that speaketh uprightly, verse 10.

for it is an evil time. ] by reason of an evil and adulterous generation, that make it so. It is a day of evil, as Psal. 41. 1. that is, of difficulty and danger, to those that dare speak out : Such as were Tiberius his times. That Tyger laid hold with his teeth on all the brave spirits that could speak their minds freely, and durst do it freely. He put to death a certain Poet, which in a Tragedie had inveighed against Agamemnon ; suspecting himself to be intended. Freedom of speech used by the Waldenses in blaming and reprovng the vices, dissolute manners, life, and actions of great ones, made them looked upon and persecuted as hereticks, and enemies to the Sea Apostolike, as Manichees, Catharists, what not ?

Verse 14. Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live, ] See verse 4. and 6. Oh Seek, seek, seek, faith our Prophet : as some of the Martyrs cryed out, Pray, pray, pray ; Mr. Sanders, and Mrs. Askew, repeated those words two severall times together, Mr. Marsh once, adding, Never more need. To seek God, is to seek good, and to finde life : for with him is the fountain of life, Psal. 36. 9. To seek evil, is to seek the devil, who is that evil one : it is as Solomon saith in a like case, a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death, Prov. 21. 6.

and so the Lord the God of Hosts shall be with you, ] to assist and accept you in seeking good : to protect and provide for you in shunning evil. Deal courageously therefore, and God shall be with the good, 2 Chron. 19. ult. as your seven-fold shield, and exceeding great reward, Gen. 15. 1. See the note there.

All Gods people, as they partake of the Divine nature, so they live the life of God, Ephes. 4. and have the same both sympathies and antipathies (as I may so speak) abhorring that which is evil, cleaving to that which is good, Rom. 12. 9. God, they know, hateth evil worse then he hateth the devil: for he hateth the devil for sinnes sake, and not sinne for the devils sake: so do they, looking upon sinne as the most loathsome thing in the world, the very vomit of the devil, which (so farre as they are regenerate) they do infinitely loath to lick up. And for that which is good, whether things or persons, these they heartily love: not onely with a love of Desire, as Psal. 42. 1, 2. but also of Complacencie, as Psal. 73. 25, 26. herein resembling Almighty God; not as an image doth a man, in outward lineaments onely, but as a sonne doth his father, in nature and disposition; being daily more and more conformed to the heavenly pattern, and transformed into the same image from glory, to glory, by his Spirit.

and establish judgement in the gate. ] which hitherto ye have not done, vers. 10, 12. Perform the duties of your own particular places: be good Iusticers as well as good men. It is said of Galba and of our Rich. 3. that they were bad men, but good Princes: but I hardly think it. Some good parts they might have, and some good acts they might do; but good Princes they could not be, unlesse they did hate the evil and love the good: but so doth not any bad man, for want of better principles. Make the tree good and the fruits will be good: and the contrary; Evil men may be some way usefull to the Publike, and do good offices for the Church, and yet perish, because not in a good manner, upon a good motive, and for a good end, Rev. 12. 16. the earth helped the Woman: and yet, chap. 16. 1. the vials of Gods wrath were poured out upon the earth. A good Magistrate, as he sits in Gods place, (the judgement-seat is called the Holy place, Eccles. 8. 10.) so hee loving what God loveth, and hating where God hateth, can boldly write over it, that Distich, that is said to bee written over the Tribunall in Zant, in letters of gold;

It may be that the Lord. ] Or, out of doubt, the Lord God of Hosts will be gracious, &c. He is surely ready, were men but ripe, and right for mercy: it sticks onely on their part, and not on his: he waiteth to be gracious, Esay 30. 18. Oh unworthy we, that cause him so to do. Currat paenitentia, ne praecurrat sententia. They are but a remnant that shall have mercy: a few that shall finde favour: Oh labour to be of those few that shall enter into life, Luke 13. 24.

Verse 16. Therefore the Lord God of Hosts, the Lord, saith thus, ] Therefore? wherefore? because neither promises of mercy, nor menaces of misery, will work upon you, stand forth, and hear your doom, your sentence of condemnation, and it Ali & Mon. beginneth, as is usuall, In nomine Dei: neither can you say, as that Martyr did, when when wrongfully sentenced, ye begin in a wrong name. To assure the matter, the Prophet here heapeth up three Majestical names of God: that they might tremble and turn, considering the greatnesse of Him with whom they here have to do, being glorious in holinesse, fearefull in prayes, doing wonders Exod. 15. 11.

Wailing shall be in all streets &c.] A generall outcry, as once in Egypt, when in every house there was a dead corps: or, as at the taking and sacking of Troy there was

And they shall say in all the high-ways, Alas, Alas,] Man is a creature apt to overgrieve for crosses: and to fill the ayre with moanes and complaints of his misery. The latine word Eger for a sick person, is judged to come from Al, al the dolefull expression of his grief. The Greek word ai is as much as ai an, Not ever. We are soon weary of suffering, and would faine see an end of it: and therefore cry out for help. The Hebrew word here used Ho, Ho, is the same with our Oh, Oh; it is dolentis particula, it is ejulantis, the broken speech of one in great dolour and durance. Nature need not to be taught to tell her own tale, when in distresse, then men are apt to be eloquent, even beyond truth: they add, they multiply, they rise in their discourse, like him in the Poet, I am thrice miserable, nay ten times, nay an hundred, ten hundred times: whereas they should correct their excessive complaint; with that other Οἷμ' ἵδ' ἔμ, Alas, Alas: but why Alas? Nothing hath befallen us but what is humane, common to men, and our betters.

and they shall call the husbandman to mourning] For the marring of his corn by the enemy, or by the vermine. Others read it thus, The husbandmen shall send for those that are skilfull in lamentation, to mourning, and wayling.

and such as are skilfull of lamentation] An ordinary practise in those Easterne parts (as now also in Ireland) to hire artificiall mourners at funerals to sing dolefull ditties. Ut qui conducti plorant in funere. See Jer. 9. 17. Mat. 9. 23. with the Note. Of the lawfulness of this custome the Prophet speaketh not. Many things are mentioned in scripture and made use of, but not approved, as Usury Mat. 25. 27. dancing Mat. 11. 17. Theft, 1 Thess. 5. 2. injustice Luk. 16. 1. the Isthmian games, 1 Cor. 9. 24. &c.

for I will pass through thee saith the Lord] as a fire in a thick wood Iam. 3. 5. or dry stubble Isa. 2. 5. Nah. 1. 10. I will go thorough them, I will burn them together Esa. 27. 4. make a short work with them Rom. 9. 28. So fearefull a thing it is to fall into the punishing hands of the living God Heb. 10. 31. to stand in his way, when his sword is in commission, and He saith to it, Sword go thorough the land, cut off man and beast from it Ezek. 14. 17. Let this be thought on by those secure ones that live, as if they were out of the reach of Gods rod: for what if the sword contemne even the rod? and be drenched in the gall of these sturdy rebels? what then?

Verse 18. Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord] The day of his visitation when he will go thorough us, as you Prophets would make beleieve. Where is the promise of his coming? Let him make speed and hasten his work, that we may see it. Let him increase his army and come down Judg. 9. 29. Such jeering and daring spirits there are still abroad. But do they provoke the Lord to anger? are they stronger then he? The great and terrible day of the Lord will come time enough to their cost; they need not accelerate it. Can they stand to his triall? or abide the thunder of his power?

to what end is it for you] when God shall answer you, as he did a far better man, out of the whirlwind and say, Who is this that darkneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up now thy loynes like a man &c. Where then shall the ungodly and the wicked appeare? what hills will they call upon to fall on them, when the elements shall fall upon them like scalding lead, or burning bell-mettall; and yet the day of the Lord is darknesse and not light] No interchange of light: an evil, an onely evil, without mixture of mercy Ezech. 7. 5. a black and dismal day of one mischief upon another, in a continued series. Affliction shall not rise up the second time Nah. 1. 9. but ye shall totally and finally be destroyed: wrath shall come upon you to the utmost, 2 Thes. 2. This is illustrated in the next verse by an apt Similitude.

Verse 19. As if a man did fly from a lion &c.] And so by running from his death, should run to it: by seeking to shun the shelves should split against a rock, Incident in Scyllam &c. as Nicodemus Frischline (that famous Poet, Orator, and Philosopher) endeavouring to escape out of close prison, by casting himself out at a window, the rope broke, and he perished by falling headlong upon a rock: So fareth it with those that feare not God. Aliud ex alio malum, One mischief treadeth on the heeles of another, as Iob's messengers. The clouds returne after the raine Eccle. 12. 2. as in April-weather, one showre is unburthened, another is brewed: and deep calleth upon deep at the noise of the water-spouts Psal. 42. 7. Evil shall hunt the violent man to destroy him Psal. 140. 11. your sins shall find out, out as a blood-hound, Num. 32. 23. as it did that Popish Priest in London, who having escaped the fall of Black-friers Anno. 1623. (where Drury had his braines knockt out of his head, together with his sermon) and taking water, with a purpose to saile into Flanders, was cast away (together with some others) under London-bridge; the boat being overturned. And as Philip the second King of Spaine, who going from the Low-countries into Spaine by sea, fell into a storme in which almost all the Fleet was wracked, his household stuff of very great value lost, and himself hardly escaped: He said he was delivered by the singular providence of God to root out Lutheranisme, which he presently began to do. But the hand of God was upon him in an extraordinary manner: for beside the invincible Armado here defeated, to his great heart-break (for his pretended patience was but as the fever called Epialis wherein men are cold without, but hot as fire within) he fell into that most lothsome lowsy disease, called Phthiriasis, whereof at length he dyed.

and a Beare met him] A Beare robbed of her whelpes (which she licketh into forme, and loveth above measure) is a very fierce and fell creature. To meet her in such a rage is to meet death in the very face: and yet that danger may be sooner shifted and shunned, then the heavy wrath of God avoyded or averted, without true and timely repentance: there is no way to run from him but by running penitently to him: as in a tempest at Sea, it is very dangerous to strike to the shore: the safest way is to have sea-room, and to keep in the Maine still.

and leaned his hand on the walles] As being breathlesse in running, and glad to stay himself on what he can next lay hold on. Man, like the vine, must have some-what to leane on: if it be but a broken reed, or bulging wall Psal. 62. 3. he shifts and shanks in every by-corner for comfort, as the Papists (stung by the Friers sermons) do by pardons and pennances, which are but palliate cures.

for a serpent bites them] the guilt of sin abiding, biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.

Verse 20. Shall not the day of the Lord be darknesse &c.] q. d. How say ye now: when thus beset with mischief on all hands, such as ye can neither avoyd nor abide, must ye not needes subscribe to the truth of what I said verse 18. and do here againe repeate (that you may the better observe it) with greater emphasis, and earnestnesse: you shall not have the least glimmering of comfort, ease, direction or good counsel. To what end then should you desire this dreadfull day of the Lord? Are you in hast to be undone.

Verse 21. I hate, I despise your feast-dayes] wherewith ye think to stop my mouth, and to make me your debter: saying as that Romane Emperour when his enemy came against him, Non sic Deos colimus ut ille nos vinceret, we have not so so served the Gods, that they should serve us no better, then to give the enemy the better of us. The feast-dayes, and solemne assemblies you so much bind upon are yours and not mine: I never commanded them (viz as you now use them) neither came they ever into my mind. So far am I therefore from accepting your sacrifices, as that I hate, I despise, I will not smell: an elegant Asyndeton, importing Gods utter distaste of what they did (The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination: how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind? Prov. 21. 27.) and assuring a sudden vengeance, as in that quick and smart passage, Go, preach, baptise, He that beleeveeth not shall be damned, Mark. 16. 16. Will worship and out-sidenesse in religion is very odious to the Almighty: and stinks worse in his nostrils, then any ill vapour from the vilest dunghill doth in ours: or as those poisonous smells that ascended up once from the five cities of the plaine, and brought down from him a counterpoison of fire and brimstone. Rome also (that spirituall Sodom) shall be destroyed in like sort, with a terrible fire Rev. 17. 16. and 18. 8. 9. for her detestable will-worships, superstitions and Idolatries, which no other nitre can possibly purge. Rev. 13. 18. the whole number of the Beast, whatsoever is numbred to belong unto him, is but the number of a man, humane inventions and will-wisdome; men will have it so: and this is the summ of all Popish religion. When the wit of man will be over-pleasing God with better devises then his own, will needs despite him with seeming honours, it turnes to madnesse, and ends in mischief.

Verse 22. Though ye offer me burnt offerings &c.] So long as ye stick in the bark, please your selves in the externall performance, rest in the work done, think to expiate your sins by your duties, and to sett off with God for your bad deedes by your good, and to get a license thereby to live as you list: though ye offer me burnt-offerings (which were wholly burnt in sacrifice to God, and so were ordinarily most acceptable.)

I will not accept them] Nor shall you be a button the better for them, but the worse. Esay. 66. 3. yea though ye added wine, oyle, and incense, that there might be a favour of rest in it. The very Heathens could say, that Gods favour is not to be gained by multitude of sacrifices, but by the integrity of those that offer them.

neither will I regard (or look at) the peace-offerings of your fat beasts] whether sheep or oxen, or another distinct creature, bigger then an ox called in the Arabick dialect gamus, as Aben-Ezra affirmeth, the French call it Buffe, and we the Buffe or wild-Oxe: All would not do; God would neither see nor heare, as it followeth.

Verse 23. Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs] No more pleasing to me then the grunting of an hog, or the braying of an asse, because hatelesse, heartlesse: for as every sound is not musick, so neither is ever musickall sound melodious to God. The voice which is made in the mouth is nothing so sweet to our eares, as that which comes from the depth of the brest. Sing with grace in your hearts, is the best tune to all the Psalmes: which are therefore called spirituall songs Col. 3. 16. both because they are indited by the Spirit, that are to be sung with the Spirit, 1 Cor. 14. 15. and because they being so sung, do mak us more spirituall in the use of them: whilst we sing Davids Psalmes with Davids heart.

for I will not heare the melody of thy viol] Or of thine organe, harp, citterne, lute, bag-pipe, for so some render it, with respect to the Etymologie of the word Nebel. The Greek rendereth it Of the Psalteries: what need we trouble our selves much about those things whereof we can neither have proof nor profit: at least not profit enough to pay for the paines? God will not heare either their voyce or instrument-musick, because the heart was wanting. Non vox sed votum, non Musica chordula, sed Cor. The deeper and hollower the belly of the lute or viol is, the pleasanter is the sound: the fleeter, the more grating and harsh in our eares: think the same of God: and see how exceeding offensive to all his senses, yea to his very soule hypocrisy is Esay. 1. 11, 12, 13. &c.

Verse 24. But let judgement run down] Heb. roule down freely, plentifully, and plainly, ut devolutus monte precipitiis torrens, as the great billowes of the sea, or as waves rowling over rocks, so let judgement and equity be constantly and vigorously administred and executed.

and righteousness as a mighty streame] that comes with a force, and beares down all before it. Fiat justitia, ruat orbis, Let justice be done what ever come of it. The Sun might as soon be turned out of his course, as Fabricius out of the track of Truth and Justice, saith the Historian. How much better might this have been said of Job, Moses, Phineas, Nehemias, &c. famous in their generations for brandishing the sword of justice against the friends of Baal, Balaam, and Bacchus, for turning the wheel over all such roaring monsters, such lewd and lawlesse Belialists, as, hardened with impunity, dare oppose with crest and brest whosoever or whatsoever standeth in the way of their wicked lusts and practises. Oh this was better then burnt-offerings without this: this was that Actuall, Magisteriall, and Majesticall kind of devotion, that pleased God farr better then an axe that hath horns and hooves.

See 1 King. 11. 5. that the Israelites should do thus in the wilderness (where they had Gods tabernacle erected) carrying about them privily some portable chapels or pictures of these Idols (as some hold they did, and Josephus seemes to say as much) was monstrous wickednesse, and the guise of men given up to a reprobate sense.

never be in adversity, Psal. 10. 5, 6. To these sleepers in Zion, God here sends forth his summons (the word Hoi signifieth as well Hens as Ye, Ho, as Wo, Esay 55. 1. Zach. 2. 6. Ho, ho, come forth) that were quiet and still, Zach. 1. 11. lulled asleep by Satan, or rather cast into a dead lethargy: Sampson-like their enemies are upon them, and they fast-asleep the while: Isbosheth-like they stretch themselves upon their beds of ivory, till they lose, not their precious lives onely, but their immortall souls. Security ushereth in destruction: those that are at ease in Zion, shall be raised by a dreadfull Woe rung in their ears, that shall make their hearts fall down, and their hairs stand upright. In the froth of carnall security and sensuall delights is bred that worm of conscience that never dieth, Mar. 9. and here begins to grub and gnaw: like as while the Crocodile sleepeth with open mouth, the Ichneumon, or Indian Rat shoots himself into his bowels: after which he never is at ease, as having his entrails daily devoured: so that one while he will be in the water, and anon after on the land, till life fails him.

The best are apt by rest, to contract rust: and being full-fed to wax wanton, Deut. 32. 15. To affect more mundi delicias quam Christi divitiis, as One saith, the worlds dainties then Christs comforts: to trust in uncertain riches, then to rely upon the living God, who giveth them all things richly to enjoy. This must be lookt to: for it hath a woe hanging at the heels of it, Jer. 17. 5, 6. Psal. 52. 7, 9.

To whom the house of Israel came. ] The whole house of Israel, viz. the two tribes to Zion, the ten to Samaria, Vel sacrorum causæ, vel judiciorum, saith Dru-sius, as to places of worship, and besides, courts of justice. Others fence it thus, The house of Israel came unto them, that is, the Israelites invaded those nations, that once held Zion and Samaria, and succeeded them therein: not by any strength of their own, but by Gods mighty hand and out-stretched arm, which they (ungratefull wretches) acknowledge not: but came in for themselves, so Ribba rendreth it, Quasi sibi tantum nati, se solos esse aliquid, as if they were the onely proprietaries, the sole owners of all; and owed no service to any chief-Lord. Such insolency grows from security. See Jeb. 21. 23.

Then go down Southward to Gath of the Philistines, which was of all the five satrapies potissima & potentissima, and is therefore called Methog-Ammah, 2 Sam. 8. 1. with 1 Chron. 18. 1. because, being a town of great strength, it was, as it were, the bridle, whereby the whole countrey about was kept in awe: It was afterwards known by the name of Diocæsarea. Away to these neighbouring cities, and see in them, as in so many Oprick-glasses, how much more God hath done for you then for them in every respect; the greater is your guilt, and the deeper will be your judgement in the end, for abuse of these rich mercies (of a fertile soil, a large Empire, &c.) to security, oppression, and other detestable vices and villanies.

Observe then saith the Prophet, the great things that God hath done for you above other Nations, and walk accordingly: or else take lessons out of their losses, and damages, and know that the case will be your own, Aliorum perditio vestra sit cautio: Learn by other mens harms, to beware.

*Verse 3. See Prov. 7. 19, 20. Matth. 24. 48. with the Notes. It is a sad thing when men shall say, as Ezek. 12. 27. The vision that he seeth is for many dayes to come: and he prophesieth of the times that are farre off. This they shall have of Gods hand, they shall lie down in sorrow: yea many sorrowes shall be to these wicked ones, Psal. 32. 10. these mercilesse men shall not have the least mercy shewed them, Iam. 2. 13. God will surely set off all hearts from such (as he did from Haman, for whom in his misery not one man openeth his mouth once to intercede) and he will punish magnum luxum magno luctu, as One saith, great luxury with great necessity.

and the banquet of them that stretched themselves] They shall neither have mind nor mony to make feasts, that were wont to lay on in all sorts of superfluities. That prodigall above-mentioned was by a just hand of God reduced to extreme penury, and cast off by all his former acquaintance. That luxurious Roman Apicius (the expences of whose kitchen amounted to more then two millions of gold,) having eaten up his estate, and fearing poverty poysoned himself: leaving behind him ten bookes, of direction how to furnish and set forth a feast with all manner of varieties, which now he could sooner talk of then take of. The word here rendred banquet is taken for a funerall feast Jer. 16. 5. and so some think the sense here is; they shall be carried captive into a farr country, and there be deprived of the honour of burials; which is a judgement elsewhere threatened Jer. 22. 18, 19. Ahen-Ezra rendreth it, faceffer canticum the song of the wanton shall be set packing: and for this he alledgeth, that in the Arabick dialect, the root-word here used, signifieth to lift up the voyce, either for joy or grief: The Seventy render it, the neighing of horses: as noting their immoderate lust according to Jer. 5. 8. And this sense Ribera commendeth.

Verse 8. The Lord God hath sworn by himself] Heb. by his soul, which is himself: sith whatsoever is in God, is God. So chap. 4. 2. Gen. 22. 16. Heb. 6. 16, 17. I abhorre the excellency (or, the pomp and pride) of Jacob] So Basil speaking of the Western Church, Odi fastum istius Ecclesie saith He, I hate their pride. This he elsewhere calleth oppor durind the Western brow (from the fore-head, that seat of pride and arrogance) which at length occasioned that lamentable separation of the Easterne or Greek church from communion with the Latine: the other foure Patriarks dividing themselves from the bishop of Rome. Pride is an odious evill; fitly compared by One to a great swelling in the body, which unfits it for any good service: and is apt to putrify, and break, and run with loathsome and foule matter: so doth Pride disable the soule from doing duty, and at last breaks forth into odious deeds, abominable to God and Man. There are that by Excellency or Glory here understand their glorious Temple, and other priviledges, wherein they so much gloried. See Psal. 47. 5. But Mercer thinks it rather meant of the ten tribes then of the two, whose crown of pride is elsewhere taxed Esay. 28. 1. Hof. 7. 10. The pride of Israel testifieth to his face, it breaketh out in his forehead, as a great master-pock, dinalls meet to chuse a Pope, they make a vow, whosoever is chosen, he shall swear to such Articles as they make. And Sleydan telleth us, that the Pope is no sooner chosen, but he breaks them all, and checks their insolencies, as if they went about to limit his power, to whom all power is given both in heaven and earth, both in spirituals and temporals. And indeed, he is called the Beast, in respect of his civil power, and the false-prophet in respect of his spiritual: and the Starre, Wormwood, because being himself in the gall of bitterness, and bond of perdition, he turneth all judgement into gall, and the fruit of righteousness into wormwood. See Chap. 5. 7.

Verse 13. Te which rejoyce in a thing of nought ] In the creature, saith à Lapide, which is a meer Nothing: in your wealth and strength (called horns in the next clause) which are an uncertainty, an obscurity, as the Apostle deemed them 1 Tim. 6. 17. and have no solid subsistence, saith Solomon, Prov. 23. 5. though the foolish world call them substance, and good: Indeed it is onely opinion that sets the price upon them, as when gold is raised from twenty shillings to two and twenty, the gold is the same: estimation only raiseth it. It is said of the people of the East-Indies in the Isle Zeylon that having an apes tooth got from them, which was a consecrated thing by them, they offered an incredible masse of treasure to recover it. Such things of nought, are highly prized and pursued by the worlds ἐπίδουλοι by worthless persons, such as Antiochus was in all his state Dan. 11. 21. and Agrippa in all his pomp (or as the Greek hath it, in all his phantasy or vaine shew) and as these voluptuaries in the text, who had their wine and their musick, fat calves, and choicest oyntments wherein they held themselves happy verse. 4. 5. 6. but the Prophet telleth them that in rejoycing in these low things, they rejoyced in a thing of nought: they fed altogether upon ashes, a deceived heart had turned them aside, so that they could not deliver themselves from these empty vanities, nor say (as wise men would have done, ) Is there not a lie in my right hand. Esay 44. 20.

But what an arrogant brag is here? Have we not taken? and to us? and horns? and by our own strength? Hic Deus nihil fecit, Here God did nothing; they were all the doers: so small a winde blowes up a bubble,

It is a notable witty expression of Luther; By mens boasting of what they have done, saith He, Hac ego feci, hac ego feci, This and that I have done, they become nothing else but faces, that is idregs: if themselves were any thing, they would not thus rejoyce in a thing of nothing: they would not crack in this sort.

Verse 14. But behold, I will raise up against you a nation, &c. ] which shall be a cooler to your courage, a rebater to your swelth, a meanes to take you a link lower, and to stain the glory of your pride. I tell you not what a nation it is, that you may imagine the worst: but you will finde their quiver is an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men, and no lesse mercilesse, Jer. 5. 16, 17.

and they shall afflict you (or crush you) from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of the wilderness ] from one end of your land to the other; that as ye have filled it from corner to corner with your uncleanneses Ezra. 9. 11. so there may passe over it an overflowing scourge to wash the foul face of it, as once the old world. Hamath was before noted to be Antiochia, which was one of the bounds of the land of Israel to the North-East.

CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. THus hath the Lord God shewed unto me, ] sc. in a Prophetical vision : this being the first of those five that follow, to the end of the Prophesic: all foretelling the evils that should befall this people, to whom Amos is again sent, as Abijah was to Jeroboams wife with heave tidings, and as Ezekiel was afterwards to his rebellious countrymen, with a roll written full of lamentations, Ezech. 2. 10. and mourning, and we.

and behold he formed grasshoppers, ] Or, locusts, fore-runners of famine, Joel
 1. 4. ( See the Note there ) or, ( as some will ) of the Assyrians, whom the divine justice made a scorpion to Israel, as Israel had been a scourge to Judah. When the Israelites were in their flourish, as the grasse or wheat is in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter groweth, they had been first mowed by Benhadad, king of Syria : but, growing up again under Jeroboam their king, they were devoured by Pul and his Army, as by so many greedy locusts.

In the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth, ] For in those fat and

Luxuriam segetum tener à depascere in herba.

Now if the latter growth were eaten up too, what else could follow but extreme famine ?

It was the latter growth after the kings mowings. ] Or, sheep-shearings, as some read it : but the former is better : and Diodate here noteth, that it is thought that the kings did take the first crop, in esum & usum iumentorum, to keep their warre horses, and for other services : leaving the latter mowings for other cattle, who were taught to say, After your Majestie, is good manners.

Verse 2. When they had made an end of eating, ] Not the corn onely, but the grasse, to the very roots ; besides a pestilent stench left behinde them ; when, I say, they had done their worst. Prayer is the best lever at a dead list : as is to be seen, Jam. 5. 18. upon the prayer of Elias the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit, after three years and a halfe drought ; when it might well have been thought that root, and fruits, and all had been dried up, and that prayer had come too late. But that's seldome seen : as all Gods people can say experimentally.
Lib. 5. cap. 27. But what shall we think of Jamblicus, a Heathen Authour, who hath such a commendation of prayer, which might well beseem an experienced Christian ? He calleth it, Rerum divinarum ducem & lucem, copulam, qua homines cum Deo conjun-
guntur, the guide and light of divine duties : the band whereby men are united to God. Nay he proceedeth and saith, that prayer is clavis instar, qua Dei penetra- lia aperiuntur, instead of a key, wherewith Gods cabinet is opened : and much more to the same purpose : All this the Prophet knew full well, and therefore sets to work in good earnest : and as when a cart is in a quagmire, if the horses feel it coming, they'll pull the harder, till they have it out : so He.

Then I said, O Lord God forgive, I beseech thee, ] Sin, he knew, was their greatest enemy ; the mother of all their misery. Of that therefore hee prayes for pardon, and then hee knew all should be well : as when the sore is healed, the plaister falleth off. Of Christ it is said, that He shall save his people from their sinnes, Mat.
1. 21. as the greatest of evils : and the Church in Hosea chap. 14. 2. cries, Take away all iniquity. Feri Domine, feri, saith Luther, nam à peccatis absolutus sum.
 Smite me as much as thou pleasest, now that thou hast forgiven my sins.

By whom shall Jacob arise ? for he is small. ] Here is much in few. It is Jacob, thy confederate : and he is down upon all four : and he is but small, low and little, and ( as some render it ) Quis stabit Jacobo ? Behold, He whom thou lovest is sick, Ioh. 11. 3. They that are thine by covenant, are at a very great under : trodden on by the buls of Basan, as a poor shrub of the wilderness, so the Psalmists word imports, Psal. 102. 17. Why shouldest thou be as a man astonished, ( that knowes not whether

whether he had best help or not ? ) or as a mighty man that cannot save ? Yet then, O Jer. 14. 9.
 Lord, art in the midst of us ; and we are called by thy Name : leave us not. Thus the Prophets indeed prayed for their unkind countrey-men : so did Paul, Athanasius, Luther. I have obtained of God, said He, that never whilst I live shall the Pope prevail against my countrey : when I am gone, let those pray that can pray.
 And indeed, he was no sooner gone, but all Germany was on a flame : as when Austins head was laid, Hippo was soon surprized by the enemy ; and when Parents, Heidelberg.

Verse 3. The Lord repented for this : it shall not be, saith the Lord. ] Here was mutatio rei, non Dei : facti, non consilij : a change not of Gods will, but of his work ; therefore ( by way of explication ) it followeth, it shall not be saith the Lord. To speak properly, there can be no repentance in God, 1 Sam. 15. 20. but this is spoken after the manner of men ; and it notably setteth forth the power of faithfull prayer, able after a sort, to alter Gods minde, and to transfuse a dead Palsie into the hands of Omnipotence, Exod. 32. 10. where God is said to be-speak his own freedom : and Moses is represented as the great Chancellor of heaven.

Verse 4. And behold the Lord God, ] whose Asterisk, or starry Note this behold is, saith Tarnovius, stirring up to attention. Another compareth it to an hand in the margin of a book, pointing to some notable thing. Another to the sounding of a trumpet before some proclamation : or to the ringing of a bell before the sermon of some famous Preacher.

the Lord God called to contend by fire, ] that is, by parching heat and drought, causing dearth, as Joel 1. 19. For which purpose, God called his Angels, those ministring spirits that execute his judgements upon the wicked ( as they did once upon Sodom ) to contend for him ( a metaphor from civil courts ) to plead for him by fire, to destroy the perverse Israelites by fire and brimstone, as they had done Sodom and Gomorrah ( so some interpret it according to the letter ) or by the woe of warre, compared to fire, 2 King. 14. 26. Esay 26. 11. as being a misery which all words ( how wide soever ) want compasse to expresse ; Or, by immoderate heat and drought, as afore : so great, that it devoured the great deep, ] as that fire of the Lord in Eliah's time licked up the water that was in the trench, 1 King. 18. 38. See Esay 51. 10.

Esay 66. 16.
Ezech. 33. 22.

and did eat up a part. ] Or, it devoured also the field : Not onely the waters, in and under the earth, that serve to make it fruitfull, but a part of the earth it self ; which was altogether above and against the common course of nature. Some render it, and did eat up that part, or that field, sc. that mentioned verse 1. the Kings field ; that as the King had chiefly offended, so he should be principally punished.
 Other, interpret it by chap. 4. 7. One piece was rained upon, and the piece whereon it rained not, withered.

8, 9. and with all humility to acknowledge that it is of the Lords mercies that we are not consumed : because his compassions fail not, Lam. 3. 22.

Verse 6. The Lord repented for this, ] As he is gracious, Exod. 22. 27. and quickly repenteth him of the evil, Joel 2. 13. Redire nos, non perire desiderat. I said, I would scatter them into corners, &c. Deut. 32. 26, 27. Mercy could not behold

The Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, &c. ] Here he was set, or stood firme, ( as the word signifieth ) as not to be removed from his purpose, by any in-treaties : he was fully resolved upon their ruine, and it should be done exactly, ad amissim, by line and by rule, as it were, and with so much justice, and most exquisite diligence, that against it should lie no manner of exception. It is said of the

Arcopagites

Areopagites in Athens, that their sentence was so upright, that none could ever say he was unjustly condemned of them. How much more true is this of the righteous judgement of God, who must needs therefore be justified and every mouth stopped? Mat. 22. 12. And he was speechlesse, because self-condemned Tit. 3. 11. and had not what to request.

With a plumb-line in his hand] To shew that he would accurately examine their actions, and punish their pravitie. (See Lam. 2. 8. and 2 King. 21. 13.) nor sparing them as heretofore. A heavy sentence surely Psal. 130. 3.

Verse 8. Behold I will set a plumb-line] I will call them to a strict account and shew them no favour Jer. 16. 13. I will now actually execute my justice which I have hitherto suspended; and pay them home for the new and the old; bringing upon them an evill, an onely evill, without mixture of mercy Ezech. 7. 5.

I will not againe passe by them any more] A metaphor from men that passe by such things as they slight and count inconsiderable: winking at small faults as not worthy to be reckoned upon. Hence Mic. 7. 18. God is said to pardon iniquity and passe by transgression: as elsewhere he is said to bind them up in a bundle, to seale them up in a bag, to cast them behind his back, to remove them as far as the East is from the West, so that he beholdeth no sin in Jacob, nor perverseness in Israel Num. 23. 21. The Church, privy to her own infirmities, calleth her self black Cant. 1. 5. but Christ calleth her faire all over chap. 4. 7. She saith, God hath punished us lesse then our sins, Ezra 9. 13. He saith, She hath received double for her sins Isa. 40. 1. Too much saith God; too little, saith She. O beautifull contention? But this is a priviledge proper to the communion of Saints, with whom God will not deale according to the rigour of his law (as he doth with the wicked) but according to his prerogative.

Verse 9. And the high places of Isaac shall be desolate] The Edomites also came of Isaac: but by a Synechdoche the Israelites only are here and ver. 16. to be understood. Like as elsewhere Heber is put for the Israelites only Num. 24. 24. and Ioseph, for Ephraims Rev. 7. 8. Some think that the high places of Isaac are here mentioned, to shew that they were erected by the people in an apish imitation either of Beersheba where Isaac worshipped, or of mount Moriah where Isaac should have been offered: And that Isaac is here written with Sin and not Isadi to shew that God held himself not adored, but derided by those high-places of irrisiōn, or those ridiculous altars, which therefore he threatneth to desolate, and lay wast.

See this fulfilled 2 King. 15. 10. and chap. 17. Jeroboam was very prosperous and victorious: yet determined to destruction. It is said of wicked men, that scena quadam felicitate temporaliter florent, they flourish to day as grasse, and to morrow are cast into the oven: and as the mettle wherewith men make glasse is nearest melting when it shineth brightest, so are gracelesse persons nearest destruction, when at greatest lustre. The Turks observing that few of their Visiers die in their beds, have this proverb amongst them, that the greatest man is but as a statue of glasse.

Verse 10. Then Amaziah the Priest of Beth-el] Observing that the prophet had foretold a desolation, and not prayed as before that it might be averted: because he saw God was fully resolved, and their destruction determined.

Amos hath conspired against thee in the land] Thus Eliab was the Troubler of Israel, Jeremy a seedsmā of sedition, Christ an enemy to Cesar, Luther a trumpet of rebellion, all Contra-remonstrants, antimagistraticall. As Atbaliah cryed Treason, Treason, when her self was the greatest traytour: and as in Nero's dayes Sedition was unicum crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant, laid ordinarily to the charge of those that were most free from it, so was it here. Amos hath conspired &c. "whereas Amos might well have said as Latimer did, As for sedition, for ought "that I know, methinks I should not need Christ, if I might so say. Religion is an utter enemy to rebellion: and as there are few conscionable Christians, (Prophets especially) that have not passed under this calumination: so he cannot be rightly esteemed such an one, that deserveth it. But Amazias honour and incomes were now at stake: as he well perceived when he heard Amos say, Go not up to Bethe-el &c. the high-places of Isaac shall be destroyed: and hence, his zeale against the Prophet, like as Erasmus told the Electour of Saxony, that the Pope and his shavelings were therefore so sharp set against Luther, because he lifted at the triple crown; and sought to bring down the monks fat paunches.

the land is not able to beare all his words] his burdensome prophesies (See Mat. 1. 1. with the Note) much lesse can I endure them, or any faithfull servant of thine, true to his trust. Such a lying accusation we read of Esth. 3. 8. made by haughty Haman against the innocent Jewes, that they kept not the kings lawes, and that therefore it were good policy to weed them out, as not to be longer endured. So Francis King of France, desiring to excuse to the Protestant-Princes of Germany his cruell persecution of the Lutherans in his Kingdome, wrot to them that he looked upon them all as Anabaptists, and as enemies to civil government: and therefore used such severity against them. This gave occasion to Calvin to write his admirable Institutions, to vindicate our religion from that foule aspersion: The like diabolish policy was afterwards used to blanch over that horrid French massacre. For it was given out, that the Protestants had conspired against the King, the Queen-mother, the kings brethren, the king of Navarre, and the Princes of the blood. There was also coynes stamped in memory of the matter, in the forepart whereof with the kings picture was this inscription, Virtus in rebelles: and on the other side, Pietas excitavit justitiam: Piety hath stirred up justice. Here was a faire glove drawn upon a foule hand: and this they learned of the devill, who was first a slanderer and then a murtheter: as those that have a mind to kill another mans dog, make the world beleeve he was mad first, that they may do it with the better pretext.

fab. 163.

Verse 11. For thus Amos saith, Jereboam shall die by the sword &c.] When did Amos say so? he said indeed that the house of Jereboam should be smitten with the sword ver. 9. and this Amaziah maliciously transferreth to the person of Jereboam, the more to enrage him against the Prophet: whom therefore he nameth once and againe, to create him the more displeasure. That Jereboam died by the sword, we read not, but that his son Zechary was slaine, and his house destroyed in the next generation we find 2 King. 15. according to Amos his Prophecy. But to colour this calumny, some truth shall be admingled.

and Israel shall surely be led away captive] This indeed the Prophet had oft affirmed, (though not in any of those three last visions) and it proved too true: but because Amos saith so, he must passe for a traytour against the majesty both of the king and of the people. What an impudent sycophant was this? The king and people are pretended: and what good subject can endure it? but that which irked him was, that his own authority was by this plain-dealing Prophet impaired, and his gaine like to be lessened, if the superstition of Bethel were thus decried. It is said of Phlugius and Sidonius (authours of the Interim in Germany) that among other points of Popery therein defended, they spake much for Chrisme and extreame unction, ut ipsi discederent unctores, that thereby they might hold fat bishopricks. Such arguments prevailed much with all self-seekers, whose covetousnesse and ambition usually ride without reines, and over whose neck it mattereth not.

Verse 12. Also Amaziah said unto Amos] After he had maliciously misinformed the king, but prevailed not; so God would have it, in whose heart is the kings hand, & who rebuketh even kings for their sakes, saying, Doe my Prophets no harme. O thou Seer] Faire words; the better to insinuate.

Fel in corde, fraus in factis.

Some think he calleth the Prophet thus by way of jeare, quasi fatidicum aut fanaticum, as a fortune-teller or distracted. Others, that he giveth the Prophet good words, and seemeth to give him good counsel, as fearing the people, with whom Amos was in some credit: and therefore the king was told of a conspiracy against him in the midst of the house of Israel, verse. 10.

Which after he had done, he paused a while looking very sadly: and foddainely brake out into these words. Surely I have done amisse: why so? quoth the knight: for I have drunk, said He, in that place where Gods word offered hath been refused: whereas if I had remembred my duty, I had departed immediately and shaken off the dust of my shooes; for a testimony against this house. These words were by the said Bishop spoken with such a vehemency, that some of the hearers afterwards confessed the haire to stand upright on their heades.

but I was an beardman, and a gatherer of Sicomore fruit] Of meane condition, and hardly bred; so that I could live with a little, and needed not to turn Prophet ventris causa, for food sake. When one said to the Philosopher, If you will but please Dionysius, you need not feed upon green herbes, he presently replied, And if you can feed upon green herbes, you need not please Dionysius. Nature is content with a little, grace with lesse. It is not for a servant of God to be a slave to his palate: Luther made many a meale of a herring.

Verse 15. And the Lord took me, as I followed the flock] As he took Elisba from the plow-taile, the Apostles from casting and mending their nets &c. Afinos elegit Christus

Christus & idiotas, sed oculorum in prudentes: simulque dona dedit, & ministeria, he called them to the office, and withall he gifted them. He called also learned Nathaneel, and Nicodemus, a Master in Israel: left, if he had called none but such as were simple, (saith Job. de Turresemata) it should have been thought, they had been deceived, through their simplicity. But it is Gods way to chuse the foolish things of the world, to confound the wise; and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence, 1 Cor. 1. 27, 28, 29.

and the Lord said unto me, ] He often inculcates the Name of the Lord, to shew that there was a necessity of his prophesying: for who can safely disobey such a commander. See chap. 3. 8. Ans faciendum, ans patiendum. The Philosopher could tell the Emperour, who challenged him to dispute, that there was no contesting with Him that had twenty Legions at his command.

Go prophesie unto my people Israel. ] Keep within my precincts, and thou shalt be sure of my protection: be true to thy trust, and I will see to thy safety. If thou have not fine manchet (as Bucer said to Bradford, encouraging him to bestow his talent in preaching) yet give the poor people barley-bread, or what ever else the Lord hath committed unto thee. Having therefore such a call from heaven to this work, with what face canst thou hinder me therein? with what countenance will ye appear before the judgement-seat of Christ (said Dr. Taylour Martyr to Stephen Gardiner, Lord Chancellour, who had thus saluted him, Art thou come, thou villain? how darrest thou look me in the face for shame? knowest thou not who I am, &c?) How dare ye for shame look any Christian man in the face, seeing you have forsaken the truth, denied our Saviour Christ and his word, and done contrary to your own oath and writing. And, if I should be afraid of your Lordly looks, why fear you not God, the Lord of us all? who hath sent us on his errand, which we must deliver, and truth be spoken, however it be taken, 1 Cor. 9. 16.

Verse 16. Now therefore hear thou the word of the Lord, ] Hear, thou despiser and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in thy dayes, a work which thou wilt in no wise beleve, though a man declare it unto thee, Acts 13. 41. But whether thou wilt hear, or forbeare, beleve or otherwise, thy doom is determined, and shall be pronounced. Hear, therefore, and give ear: be not proud, for the Lord hath spoken it. Oh that thou wouldst give glory to the Lord, and confesse thy sinne! Oh that thou wouldst submit to Divine justice, implore his mercy, and putting thy mouth in the dust, say as once that good man did, Veniat, veniat, verbum Domini, & submittemus: ei sexcenti sinobus essent colla. Let the Lord speak, for his servant heareth! But because there is little hopes of that, stand forth and hear thy sentence, and the evil that shall befall thee, as sure as the coat is on thy back, or the heart in thy body. For hath the Lord spoken, and shall he not do it?

Thou sayest prophesie not, ] By a bold countermand to that of God in the former vers. Go, prophesie, &c. But woe to him that striveth with his maker: let the word strive with the postbards of the earth, let men meddle with their matches, and not with him that is mightier then they.

against the house of Isaac. ] though commanded so to do verse 9. Toothlesse truths would be better digested.

Verse 17. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Thy wife, &c. ] Thou shalt be sure of thy share in the common calamity, which thou wilt not hear of; but thou shalt hear and be ashamed, &c. Ez. 26. 11. So little is gotten by thwarting with God, and seeking to frustrate his counsell. With these froward pieces, God will shew himself froward: and if they walk contrary to him, he will also walk as crosse to them: he will tame such sturdy rebels, as he did Pharaoh, and that way raise him a name: all they shall get by him is but more weight of punishment; as when Jabob had burnt Jeremias roul of curses, all that he gained, was that the roul was renewed, and there were added besides thereunto, many like words, Jer. 36. 32. See the like, Jer. 20. 2. 1 King. 13. 4. and 22. 25. Acts 5. 38, 39. The counsel of God (saith Gregory) whiles shunned, is executed: the wisdom of man may wriggle, but cannot escape.

Verse 1. THus hath the Lord God shewed unto me, ] viz. in this fourth vision, whereby (for better assurance, and to shake them out of their desperate security) Israels utter ruine is again foretold, by a lively type, which is here, 1. propounded; 2. expounded, verse 3, 5. that he may run that readeth it, and none may fall, but with open eyes.

And behold a basket ] made up haply in the form of a dog, as the word Calub seemeth to import.

of Summer-fruits, ] Heb. of Summer; that is, of that which the summer affordeth: toward the end of it especially, when fruits ripen, and even fall into the hand of the gatherer. The summer it self hath its denomination from a root that signifieth to awaken: because then the fruits and flowers, that seemed to be asleep all winter-long, do awake, as it were, and shew themselves.

Verse 2. Amos, what seest thou? ] This the Lord asketh, to stir up attention and affection in the Propther; who might haply need as much to be aroused, as Zachary in like case did, chap. 4. 1. with whom it fared as with a drowsie person, who though awaked and set to work, is ready to sleep at it.

and I said, A basket of Summer-fruit, ] Apples, saith Jerome, figs, say others: and why not as well grapes ripened in the Summer-sun-shine? Whereby the Holy Ghost in the Revelation, describeth such as are ready ripe for the wine-press of Gods wrath? Nahum compareth them to stubble, laid out in the Sun a-drying, that it may burn the better, Nah. 1. 10.

The end is come upon my people, ] An elegancy in the Originall beyond Englishing: the Latine Interpreters have (some of them) assayed the like, but they fall farre short of it. The Old Testament is full of such Agnominations; and God seemeth delighted with them. See Jer. 1. 11, 12. & 48. 2. & 47. 43, 44. Lam. 3. 47. Amos 5. 5. Mic. 1. 10, 14. Zeph. 2. 4. Exod. 2. 10. Gen. 3. 20. & 4. 1, 25. & 5. 29 & 17. 5. & 21. 5, 6, &c. There is a pedantique stile, and a majestick: an effeminate eloquence, and a manly. This latter is lawfull, and may very well become the man of God; who yet must not wit-wanton it in weightiest matters; but shun those more gay and lighter flashes, and flourishes, wherewith the emptiest Celles affect to become most most fraught : as they, who for want of wares in their shops, set up painted blocks to fill up vacant shelves, as One well expresseth it.

The end is come upon my people, ] Exitus & exitium. As the summer is the end of the year, and the time of ripening fruits : so now that this people are ripe for ruine, An end is come, is come, is come, it watcheth for them, behold it is come, Ezek. 7. 6, 7. even the precise time and terme of their finall overthrow.

I will not again passe by them any more. ] See chap. 7. 8. God can passe by, that is, pardon his people better then any other, Mic. 7. 18. (like as they that are born Ephel. 6. of God; and partake of the Divine nature, can bear wrongs best of any : compell them to go a mile, they'l be content, if it may do good, to go two : yea as farre as the shoes of the preparation of the Gospel of peace will carry them.) But as the Saints of God may not be therefore injured (which was Julians jeering cruelty) because they are meek : so must not God be presumed upon and provoked; because he is mercifull. There is mercy with him, that he may be feared, saith the Psalmist: for abused mercy turneth into fury : and opportunities of grace are oft so headlong, that if once past, they are irrecoverable. Wo be to that people, or person, to whom God shall say, I will not again passe by you any more.

Verse 3. And the songs of the temple shall be howlings, ] Heb. shall howle, shall be turned into the black-santis, as they call it, (cantus in planctum laticus in lachrymas) such as I hate, chap. 5. 23. and 'feel it grating mine ears, as an harmonia discors.

there shall bee many dead bodies in every place. ] Either through pestilence, or sword. Others read it thus. In every place it shall bee said, Proijce, fite, Out with them! Make no words: an earnest Aposiopesis (See chap. 6. 10. with the Note.) q. d. Patiently acquiesce in the just judgement of so mighty a God. Or, throw these dead bodies into pits, and say nothing : lest we be sequestred as unclean by the law. It is no small misery to be under hard and heavy crosses, and yet to be forced to dissemble and suppress them : to bite in pain, and to digest grief, as horses do their choler, by biting on the bridle. I was dumb with silence, saith David, I held my peace even from good, that is, from just defence, but my sorrow was stirred thereby ; my sore was exulcerate, renewed, (as the Greek there saith) and increased, Psal. 39. 2. Give sorrow a vent, and it will wear away.

Verse 4. Hear this, ye that swallow up the needy, ] that soop them up, as drink, (our word soop, seems to come of the Hebrew Shuaph) that would make but a breakfast, nay but a bit of them : that would swallow them at once down their wide gullets, and do, for that purpose, pant and even faint, as well-nigh windlesse, after them, to devour them. Hence they are called, Man-eaters, Cannibals, Psal. 14. 4. See chap. 2. 7. with the Note.

even to make the poor of the land to fail. ] Heb. the meek of the land. Poverty should meeken and tame mens spirits : howbeit some are bumbled, but not humble : low, but not lowly. Those that are both, are oft oppressed by the Great Ones of the earth : and even devoured, as the lesser fish are by the bigger. Ye have condemned and killed the just, saith St. James to the wicked rich men of his time, and he doth not resist you, chap. 5. 6. He onely committeth his cause to him that judgeth righteously, 1 Pet. 2. 23. and indeed he need do no more then so : for God is the poor-mans king, as James the fifth of Scotland was termed for his charity : yea, he is the worlds refuge, Adrian Penauigh, as the great Turk vaingloriously stileteth himself, and would have the world to take notice, that such poor people as lament to him, shall be relieved by him, although his ministers fail them, or abuse them, through their injustice, to make the poor of the land fail. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord. I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him, Psal. 12. 5. Neither doth God say it onely, (though that were sufficient) but swear it too in this chapter, yea in this text (the two next following verses are put in as by a parenthesis) and these Cormorants are called upon to hear it, and not to passe it by with a deaf ear, tanquam monstra marina, as such kind of creatures use to do.

Verse 5. Saying, when will the New-moon be gone, &c. ] O, what a wearinesse it is ! and ye have snuffed at it, Mal. 1. 13. See the Note there. This ye have said, or thought at least : and God knoweth the language of your hearts. He presseth upon no man; neither will he accept of that service that is pressed, out of people, as verjuice out of a crab. All his saints are free-hearted Psal. 110. 3. all his souldiers volunteers: they welcome the sabbath, as that holy man did, who went forth to meet and salute it with Veni sponsa mea, Come my sweet sponse, I have dearly longed for thee. They also passe it over with singular delight, Esa. 58. 13. walking into Christs garden of spirituall duties, whereof there is so great variety for the good soule to breath it self in and not be sated: and then are taken into Christs wine-cellar, and (after an holy manner) inebriated with divine consolations: such as the cock on the dunghil knowes not, such as pass all carnall mens understanding. They find no more relish in holy dayes and duties, then they do in the white of an egge or in a dry chip: the work they do at such times, for fashion-sake or feare of law &c. is dead work, as the Apostle calleth it: they sit in the stocks when they are at prayers, and come out of the Church when the tedious sermon runs somewhat beyond the houre, as prisoners do out of a jayle &c. they cannot tell how to weare out the sabbath, which therefore they wish over, and constantly violate either by corporall labour, or else (which is as bad, or worse) by spirituall idleness. Full ill would these men addere de profano ad sacrum, (as the Jewes say we should do,) pronouncing those happy, that begin the sabbath with those of Tiberias, and end it with those of Tsepphore (the former began it sooner then others, the later continued it longer. Full ill would they have liked our King Edgars law, that Sunday should be solemnized from Saturday nine of the clock till Monday morning. Full loth would these men be to beg Dauids office out of his hand, of being a doore-keeper in Gods house: that is, to be first in and last out. And what would they do to keep an everlasting sabbath in heaven, that are so troubled, and even tired out with so short an attendance on the Lords-day: not without a world of wilfull distractions, such as spoyle and fly-blow their performances, so that they sink in the nostrils of the Almighty.

and the sabbath] Not the sabbath of the seventh year (called Shemittah Remission Levit. 25.) as some would have it meant: but the weekly sabbath, which the unrighteous Mammonists here cry out of, as if on that day the Sun proceeded a slower pace then on others: and they greatly grutch lucellum suum Dei cultui cedere that God should be served, to their disadvantage. Their fingers therefore itch to be setting out corn: and they as dearly desire it as David did once to come and appeare before the Lord. As He had his, when shall I come, by way of wish Psal. 42. 3. so they had their When shall we sell corn? when shall we set forth wheat? Surely as Dauids soule longed sore to go forth unto Abisalom 2 Sam. 13. 39. so that he could have found in his heart, but for stark shame, to have gone himself and fetched him home: so was it with these gripple corn-masters, these frumenti corraſores & voluti corraſores Prov. 11. 26. They had a good mind to have been doing on the New-moons and sabbaths; but that they were flatly forbidden by the law, made on purpose for these lawlesse and disobedient, 1 Tim. 1. 9. these masterles monsters, these yokeles Belialists, to be to them as chaines and shackles, to confine them (as Solomons command did Shimei, that they may not leape over the pale after profit and pleasure, or if they do, they may dye for it,) Esa. 66. 23. it is prophesied that, in the restitution of the church from one new-moon to another, and from one sabbath to another (as oft as they come) without tire-someneſſe, all flesh shall come to worship before the Lord, they shall call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable, Esa. 58. 13. be rapt and ravished in spirit Rev. 1. 10. be in the feare of the Lord and in the comfort of the holy Ghost all the day long, Πνευματικῶς οὐρανοῦ χαίροντας, as Ignatius hath it. Sabbatize spirituallly, rejoycing in divine meditations. This well practised would take men off from the worlds tastelesse fooleries (as his mouth will not water after homely provisions, that hath lately tasted of delicate sustenance) It would also blessedly free them from those many foolish and hurtfull lusts 1 Tim. 6. 9. those heavy sorrowes and self-created miseries, wherewith coverops caytiffes pierce them selves thorough, gall and gore their own hearts and trouble their own houses verse. 10. taking no more rest, then if upon a rack, or bed of thornes.

making the Ephah small and the shekel great] Selling by small measures, but for great great rates: which was directly against the law Deut. 25. 13, 14. and that golden Rule of right, the standard of equity, the royall law of liberty Mat. 7. 12. Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the Law and the Prophets: this is the sum of what they have said, for duties of the second table.

and falsifying the balances by deceit] Heb. preverting the ballances of deceit, that is (by a metonymic as Job. 22. 6.) making those that were right, deceitfull. See Prov. 20. 10, 23. with the Notes there. Such falsifiers are counted no better then Canaanites Hos. 12. 7. and shall have small joy of their cursed hoards of evil gotten goods.

Verse 6. That we may buy the poore for silver &c.] Thus the poore alwayes pay for it: the modest and mild poore, especially as ver. 4. Hence Poore and afflicted are put for one and the same Zeph. 3. 12. and to want, and to be abased Philip. 4. 12. they that want shall be sure to be abased and abused by the wretched rich, who will ever go over the hedge where it is lowest, and catch the poore by drawing him into the nets Psal. 10. 9. that is into their debts, bonds, and mortgages, and at length making such their bondmen, by abuse of that permission Lev. 25. 39. See chap. 2. 3.

yea and sell the refuse of the wheat] Quisquilias, the husks, more fit for pigs or poultry; hardly mans meate, and yet held good enough for the poore: although their flesh was as the flesh of their brethren, and their children, as their children Neh. 5. 5. however they used them. How farr were these rich wretches from considering the poore as Dauids blessed man Psal. 41. 1. and as Dr. Taylor the Martyr did; whose custome was once in a fortnight at least to go to poore mens houses, look into their cupboards, see how they fared, and what they lacked: that he might either make or procure them a supply from such as were better able?

Verse 7. The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob] i. e. by himself the matter of Jacobs chief boasting, there being no God like unto their God (their enemies themselves being judges Deut. 32. 31.) neither any nation so great as to have God so nigh unto them as Israel had, in all things that they called upon him for, Deut. 4. 7. So that this oath of God grates upon their Ingratitude for such imparalllel priviledges, and it is uttered in great wrath, as appeareth by the following angry Apostrophe (wherein the Apodosis is not set down but understood.)

If I ever forget any of their works] forget to punish them. These oaths cum reticentia are very dreadfull. Take heed lest by stubbornesse we provoke God to swear in his wrath that we shall not enter into his rest. Take heed lest a promise of entering being left us, and a profer made us, we should seem to come short of it, to come lag or late, a day after the faire, an houre after the feast. God is now more quick and peremptory then ever in rejecting men that neglect so great salvation Heb. 2. 3. the time is shorter, he will not wait so long as he was wont to do. He that beleeveeth and is baptized shall be saved: he that beleeveeth not, shall be damned. Surely God will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because a short work will he make in the earth. The time is short, saith the Apostle 1 Cor. 7. 29. a metaphor (say some) from a piece of cloth rolled up, only a little left at the end. Let us therefore feare (as the same Apostle inferreth upon the consideration of Gods oath Heb. 3. 18. with 4. 1.) and let our feare not weaken but waken our diligence in well-doing, lest he sweare and repent not, lest he come to a resolution and decree (Gods oath is nothing else but his inviolable and invariable decree) to cast us off, as he did Saul, for his wilfull disobedience 1 Sam. 15. Saul lived long after his utter rejection, and men could see no alteration in his outward condition: but God had sworn, as here, never to forget any of his works. Now saith Samuel to him (and it is fearefull) the Eternity of Israel (the Excellency of Jacob) will not lie, nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent. Do not think this a case that seldome comes: it is done every day upon some or other, saith a great Divine: but woe be to that man upon whom it is done: it had been much better for him that he had not been born, Mat. 26. 24. Oh consider this all ye that forget God, lest he swear by his excellency, Surely I will never forget any of your works.

Verse 8. Shall not the land tremble for this? ] q. d. So great are the oppressions here exercised, that the very axletree of the earth is even ready to crack under them. Amaziah, that hedge-priest of Bezebel, had said of our Prophet, that the land was not able to beare all his words, chap. 7. 10. but Amos more truly affirmeth, that the land trembled under their many and mighty sins, and could beare them no longer: the earth-quake fell out about this time Am. 1. 1. and it was a just wonder, that the earth had not opened her wide mouth, and swallowed them all up quick into hell as Numb. 16. 31, 32. and as it did a great part of the city of Antioch Anno. 527. for their horrible heresies and blasphemies there held and broached by her bishops.

and every one mourn ] i. e. smart, till they mourn. Nationall sins bring nationall plagues. The Hebrewes hold that there is not a worse sin then Oppression: St. James saith, that it cries to heaven, and entreth into the eares of the Lord of sabbath Jam. 5. 4. who will not faile to heare, for he is gracious Exod. 22.

and it shall rise up wholly as a flood ] i. e. The land shall rise up, shall seem to do so, when it is floated and over-covered with water: as the sluggards field is said to rise up or ascend with thornes, that is to be overgrown therewith. Here then is threatened an overflowing scourge, an universall destruction covering the face of the country, as Nilus doth a great part of the land of Egypt every yeare, leaving much mud behind it: whereof see Pliny and other Authours. Mercer thinks the words would be best read by interrogation, as the former, thus, and shall it not rise up wholly as a flood? q. d. shall it not be turned into a large lake, as once Sodom and her sisters were for like cruelties to the poore? Ezech. 16.

Verse 9. And it shall come to passe in that day &c. ] Here the Lord threateneth (saith Mr. Diodate) to encumber the land with horrible and mournfull calamities, when it shall be least thought of. Earthquakes, inundations, suddaine and dreadfull darkneses are sure effects and signes of Gods heavy displeasure against mens sins Psal. 18. 8, 12. Mat. 24. Luk. 21. Joel. 2. 10. as Another noteth. See a like text, Jer. 15. 8, 9. and promise contrary to this threat Job. 18. 5, 6.

I will cause the sun to go down at noon ] A suddaine change, as was at Sodom: the Sun was faire risen upon it that very day that it was destroyed in, Gen. 19. 23, 24. as at Babylon, when surprized by Cyrus, they could not at first beleieve their own calamity: as it was with Jerusalem often, and shall be with Rome Rev. 18. 7, 8. She saith in her heart, I shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning and famine &c. to confute their fond conceit of an eternall Empire. For when they shall say Peace and safety, then shall sudden destruction come upon them, as travaile upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape, 1 Thes. 5. 3. Philosophers say, that before a snow, the weather will be warmish: when the wind lies, the great raine falls: and the ayre is most quiet when suddainly there will be an earthquake. Pharaoh had all faire weather made before him, till the instant that he was drowned in the sea. Nebuchadnezzar, Herod, and other tyrants were smitten in the height of their pride, and ruffe of their iollity. Jerusalem had three yeares great plenty before her last destruction, of which some interpret this Text. Those seven once flourishing Churches of Asia, how glorious and resplendent were they till they had sinned away their light? The same might be said of many others: and who knowes how soon it may be said also of us? who knowes whether we be not even now, upon the very Tropikes and turning-points of time? Surely Gods patience towards us quò diuturnior èò minacior, the longer it lasteth the more evill is toward us, if we abuse it. If in a land of light we love darknesse better then light, we may soon have enough of it. Solem in Britannia non occidere nec resurgere retulit Tacitus. Tacitus telleth us that at some time of the yeare, the Sun seemeth neither to rise nor fall in this country: but so lightly to pass from us in the night, that you can scarce discern day from night. Of England for this many yeares it may be said, as Solinus doth of the Rhodes, that it is semper in Sole sita ever in the Sun. How long it shall be so, He alone knowes that knowes all. Walk whiles ye have the light: and pray that God would discloud these gloomy dayes with the beames of his mercy, and not cause our Sun to go down at noon, nor our land to be darkened in the clear day. Oh stop this Sun of righteousnesse posting (as it may seem) from us (when the blind blind man cried lustily, Jesus though journeying stood still ) stay him by your importunities, as those two did at Emaus and say,

Extingui lucem nec patiare tuam.*

Verse 10. And I will turn your feasts into mourning ] Whether your idolatrous feasts and temple-musick whereby you vainly conceit to be secured from danger, saying, Is not the Lord amongst us ? what evil can come unto us. Or your common feasts, whereat you have songs to cheer you up, and so to put sorrow from your hearts, and evil from your flesh, nourishing your selves as in a day of slaughter, or good cheer Jam. 5. 5. All shall be turned into mourning, funerall mourning, see ver. 3.

and I will bring up sack-cloth upon all loynes ] for a token of your great grief, as the custome then was, and is still for mourning-weedes. The Hebrew word sack is the same in almost all languages : which sheweth that the Hebrew is the mother of all the rest, faith Mercer.

and baldnesse upon every head ] you shall pull off your haire for grief ; Or, because they had learned of the Heathens their neighbours, in token of lamentation, to shave their heades Ezech. 7. 18. Jer. 48. 37. and beards too Isa. 15. 2. which yet was forbidden them to do, Lev. 19. 27. and 21. 9. unless it were to shew their sorrow for sin Esa. 22. 12.

and I will make it as the mourning of an only son ] which was very bitter Jer. 6. 26. Zech. 12. 10. The losse of a loving yokefellow is more grievous then that of a son : but to father and mother together nothing more bitter then luttuosa facunditas ( Lata's case in Hierome ) to bury many children, and especially to bury all in One.

and the end thereof as a bitter day ] Thereof, that is, either of that land, or of that lamentation, there shall be bitterness in the end. So the Poet

*Nunc & amara dies, & noctis amarior umbra est ;
Omnia jam tristi tempora felle madent.*

Tibul. lib. 2,

How could it be otherwise then extream bitter with this people, when heaven and earth conspired to punish them ? neither had they the good word of God ( called the word of his patience, written on purpose that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope Rom. 15. 4. that out of those breasts of consolation we might suck and be satisfied, Esa. 66. 11. ) to succour them and keep from swooning Psal. 119. 92. And this was the greatest plague of all the rest : and is therefore reserved to the last place, deterrima tanquam colophon, as a most sad catastrophe.

Verse 11. Behold the dayes come ] Behold it ; for it is a just wonder : the Lord createth a new thing in the earth, when Israel should want the word ; Israel to whom were committed the oracles of God, Israel to whom God had spoken by the mouth of his holy Prophets, which had been since the world began, in a sweet succession : See my True treasure pag. 3. 4. He made known his wayes to Moses, his acts and monuments to the children of Israel. Yet even these who had the cornucopia of Gods word shall now suffer a famine of it : they shall have cause to cry out, We see not our signes, there is no more any Prophet, neither is there amongst us any that knoweth how long, Psal. 74. 9. the word of God shall be precious, and they shall be hard put to't to come by it ; Amaziah and his complices shall not need to pack away the Prophets, as chap. 7. 12. and to bid them go preach elsewhere : for God will, for a singular plague to an unworthy people, withdraw them : the law shall be no more, the Prophets also shall find no vision from the Lord Lam. 2. 9.

not a famine of bread] though that's very grievous, Lam. 1. 11, 19. and 2. 12, 20. and 4. 4, 9. and 5. 16. and puts people to many hard straits and extremities (as were easie to instance) even to the eating of one another.

nor a thirst for water] a torment more intolerable then the former. Lysimachus to save his life parted with his kingdom for a draught of water.

But of hearing the word of the Lord,] which is pabulum anime the souls proper food, such as she cannot live without: but when God seeth his oracles vilipended and lying under the table, 'tis just with him to call to the enemy to take away. It was so with those seven churches of Asia among many others; as also with those of Africa that vast Continent (thrice as large as Europe) in all which there is not any region intirely possessed by Christians, but the kingdom of Habassia: for as for the large region of Nubia, which had from the Apostles time (as 'tis thought) professed the Christian faith, it hath again above an hundred yeers since forsaken it, and embraced instead of it, partly Mahumetanism, and partly Idolatry; and that by the most miserable occasion that might be, viz. famine of the word of God, for lack of Ministers. For, as Alvarez hath recorded, at his being at the king of Habassia's court, there were Ambassadors out of Nubia, to intreat him for a supply of ministers to instruct their nation, and to repair Christianity, gone to ruine amongst them; but they were rejected.

Hist. Ethiop.

Verse 12. And they shall wander from sea to sea,] Trouble themselves to no purpose, take pains (as Esau did for venison, but lost his labour) run to all coasts and quarters to seek the word of the Lord.

and shall not find it] And why, they despised it when it was in their power; they rejected the counfel of God against themselves with those Lawyers, Luk. 7. 30. He would have gathered them, but they would not be gathered; he would have purged them, but they would not be purged; Ezek. 24. 13, 14. they are therefore miserable by their own election: as Saul was, who slighted Samuel whiles he was alive, and would have been full glad of his counfel when he was dead. He that would not once worship God in Samuel, worships at length Samuel in Satan; and no marvel. Satan was now become his refuge, and preacheth his funeral: his Urim now was darknesse, his Prophet a ghost: O woful condition. But what should a parent do when the child loaths and spils his victuals? snatch it from him, and lay it out of his reach. Samaria felt this worser famine, when carried captive especially: so did Jerusalem, after Malachi, whose prophecy the Jews fitly call Chathimath Chazon the sealing up of vision. Bath Chol, or the Eccho from heaven they had now and then after this time, Mat. 2. 17. Joh. 12. 28 they had also the writings of Moses, and the Prophets interpreted after a fort by the Scribes and Pharisees, whom (whiles they sat close in Moses chair, and kept it warm) men were bound to hear, Mat. 23. 2, 3. which because Dives did not, he suffered hunger and thirst in hell for ever, Luk. 16. 24. And had he been granted the liberty of hearing again upon earth but one more sermon, how farre would not he gladly have gone for it? and how, as for life, would he have listned to it? But this could not possibly be, for out of hell there is no redemption, Psal. 49. 8, 9. and when the night of death once comes, men can work no more. Night is a time not of doing work, but of receiving wages; up therefore and be doing, whiles it is yet day, Joh. 12. 35, 36. seek ye the Lord while he may be found, Esay 55. 6. seek him seasonably, seek him seriously: Then shall ye seek me and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart, Jer. 29. 13. That was a dismall doom that our Saviour passed upon those stiffe-necked Jewes and uncircumcised in heart and ears, (as Saint Steven rightly stiles them, Act. 7. 51.) that were as good at resisting the Holy-Ghost as ever their fathers had been before them. Ye shall seek me, and yet shall die in your sinnes: whither I go ye cannot come, Joh. 8. 21. Ye shall wander up and down for meat, making a noise like an hungry dog, and grudge that ye be not satisfied, Psal. 59. 14, 15. Do not the miserable Jewes do so all the world over to this day, expecting their Messias? quem tantis ululatibus exposcunt, throwing open their windows to behold him, and praying for the rebuilding of their Temple thus, Templum tuum brevi, valde citò, valde citò, in diebus nostris citissime, nunc adifica templum tuum brevi, &c. Merciful God, great God, bountiful God, beautiful God, sweet God, mighty God, thou God of the Jewes, now build thy Temple, do it shortly, suddenly, quickly, very quickly, very quickly, very quickly, even in our dayes, now, this day before the next, &c. Ah poor creatures ! they would not, when time was, know in that their day the things which belonged to their peace ; therefore to this day they are hid from their eyes, and wrath is come upon them to the utmost. Alterius perditio tua sit cautio, Let their harmes be our warning, not to stand out the day of grace, not to surfeit of the word, lest we suffer a famine of it ; not to retain the snuffes of our finnes, lest they dim our candlestick : a removal whereof, except we repent, may be as certainly foreseen and foretold, as if visions and letters were sent us from heaven, as once to Ephesus telling them so, Rev. 2. 5. And indeed it hath been the opinion, and is still the fear of some not unconsiderable Divines, that Antichrist, before his abolition, shall once again overflow the whole face of the West, and suppress the whole protestant Churches. Now if ever this come to passe, (as justly we may fear it will) what may we thank but our detestable lukewarmnesse and loathing of the heavenly Manna, our not receiving the love of the truth, that we might be saved ? for which cause if God shall send us strong delusions, even the efficacy of error, that we should believe a lie, that being infatuated we should be seduced, and being seduced be damned, as Austin glosseth that text, whom can we blame for it ?

Verse 13. In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst.] When God depriveth a people of his Ordinances, and so withdraweth his gracious presence from them, what wonder though temporal judgements come rushing in as by a sluice ? Persecute and take him, (saith Dauids enemies) for God hath forsaken him, and there is none to deliver him, Psal. 71. 11. The Philistins are upon me, saith Saul, for God hath forsaken me. Behold, I am cast out from thy presence, saith Cain (that is, from my fathers house where thine ordinances are administered) and therefore every one that findeth me shall slay me, Gen. 4. 14. In that day of the want of the word, in the day of spiritual famine and thirst, behold aliud ex alio malum, another thirst shall seise upon the choycest and fairest ; as flies settle upon the sweetest perfumes, when they are cold, and corrupt them.

Shall the fair virgins] whom all men favour for their comelineffe, ὀττι καλὸν εἶεν ὦν, beauty is of it self lovely and attractive, it needeth no letters of commendations : but God is no respecter of persons, and beauty abused is like a fair house with an ill inhabitant, saith Diogenes : like a jewel of gold in a swines snout, saith Solomon, Prov. 11. 22. Some are Helena's without, but Hecuba's within, painted sepulchres, Egyptian temples ; like Aurelia Orestilla, of whom Salust saith, that she had nothing in her praise-worthy but her beauty: Fair she was and foolish, not καλὴ καὶ σοφὴ, beautiful and wise, as it is reported of Aspasia Cyrus his concubine. Now these fair maids, together with the choice young men, best able to endure thirst a long season, shall faint for thirst,] Heb. shall be over-covered with grief, shall be troubled and perplexed, shall faint and swoon, shall find by experience that all flesh is grasse, and the glory thereof as the flower of the field, that even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall. But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as Eagles, they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint. Esa. 40. 30, 31.

Verse 14. They that swear by the sin of Samaria] i. e. by the calfe set up at Bethel, not farre from Samaria. This calfe is called the sin or guilt of Samaria, to shew the abomination of it ; for which cause also Paul calls it sinful sin, Rom. 7. 13. as not finding for it a worse Epithite : and Antichrist for like cause he calleth That man of sin, 2 Thess. 2. 3, to note him Merum scelus, saith Beza, meerly made up of sin. Now to swear by this of Samaria, was to deifie it : to swear by any thing besides the true God, is to forsake him, Jer. 5. 7. which is an hateful wickednesse, Jer. 2. 12, 13, as in Papists who familiarly swear by their Hee-Saints, and She-Saints; and so sacrilegiously transerre upon the creature that which pertaineth to God alone.

and say, Thy god, O Dan, liveth,] God onely liveth, to speak properly, 1 Tim. 6. 17. but to say that Dan's Deumulus lived, (being no better then a dumb and dead idol) and to swear by the life of it, (as the Spaniards do now in the pride of their Monarchy, by the life of their king) this is horrible impiety. As for that of Abigail to David, 1 Sam. 25. 26. Now therefore my Lord, as the Lord liveth, and as thy and the manner of Beersheba liveth] that is, the formes and rites of worshipping in Beersheba (another nest of idolatry, Chap. 5. 5. and Hos. 10. 13.) as the Chalde paraphraseth it. Durandus hath written the Romish Ritual, the way of worship used in that Synagogue of Satan: Mercer rendreth it, Vivere peregrinatio Beersheba, the way or passage of Beersheba liveth. Beersheba had an idol, and was the way to Dan and Bethel: hence this superstitious oath drawn out to the full length, By the fin of Samaria, by the god of Dan, and by the manner of Beersheba: like as the great Turk Mahomet promising his souldiers the spoyle of Constantinople for three dayes together, if they could win it, for confirmation of his oath solemnly swore by the immortal God, and by the four hundred Prophets, by Mahomet, by his fathers soul, by his own children, and by the sword wherewith he was girt, faithfully to perform whatsoever he had to them in his proclamation promised.

even they shall fall and never rise up again] Fall, fatally, ferially, irrecoverably, as old Eli did when his neck was broken, but first his heart. The ten tribes for their idolatry and contempt of the word never returned out of captivity. From the famine foretold what could follow but irreparable ruine, though for a time they might flourish, See Prov. 29. 1. with the note. Of that spiritual famine let us be most impatient, and say as Luther did, I would not live in Paradise without the word: but with it I could make a shift to live in hell it self.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. I saw the Lord] This Seer, Chap. 7. 12. saw the Lord in a vision; for otherwise God is too subtile for sinew or sight to seize upon him. We cannot look upon the body of the Sun, neither can we see at all without the beams of it: so here, standing upon the Altar] Or, firmly set so: to do execution upon that Altar, sc: that idolatrous Altar at Bethel fore-mentioned, and formerly threatned by another Prophet, 1 Kin. 13. 1. 2. The Rabbines say, God was seen standing upon that Altar, as ready to sacrifice and slay the men of that age, whose idolatries and other impieties he could no longer bear with. And hence it is haply, that he is brought in standing; like as Aët. 7. 55. Iesus at Stevens death was seen standing at the right hand of God, where he is usually said to sit. Stat ut vindex, sedet ut iudex.

And he said] sc: to the Angel that stood by, Zeck. 3. 7. or to the enemy commisionated by him, or to some other creature, for they are all his servants, Psal. 119. 91. neither can he want a weapon to tame his rebels with.

Smite the lintel of the door, that the posts may shake] Smite with a courage, as Ezeck. 9. Angels give no light blowes. Behold, the Lord, the Lord of Hosts shall lop the bough with terrour: and the high ones of stature shall be hewen down, and the haughty shall be humbled: And he shall cut down the thickest of the forrests with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a Mighty one: that is, by an Angel shall he smite to the ground that mighty army which was like a thick wood, see Esaï. 37. 36. Psal. 78. 25. and 89. 6. So at our Saviours Resurrection, an Angel, in despite of the souldiers set to watch, rolled away the grave-stone, and sat upon it. And as a mighty man, when he sitteth down, shaketh the bench under him, so did He shake the earth: and for fear of him the Keepers did shake, and became as dead men, Mat. 28. 2, 4. Down with this Idol-Temple, down with it, saith God here, even to the ground.

and cut them in the head, al of them] cleave them down the middle, so that every post may be sure to fall, being divided from the top to the bottom: and let this act be a signe to them all of what I intend to do to their persons; as many of them as by this gate have entred into this Idol-Temple and Altar. A deep cut in the head is dangerous and deadly, Gen. 3. 15. Psal. 68. 22.

and I wil slay the last of them] I, by mine agents and instruments, as afore: for it is but one hand and many executioners, that God slayes men with. Job could discern Gods arrowes in Satans hand, and Gods hand on the armes of the Sabaean robbers. The sword is bathed in heaven, before it is embrewed in mens blood, Esaï. 34. 5. The Lord killeth and maketh alive, saith holy Hannah, 1 Sam. 2. 6.

Verse 2. Though they dig into hell, &c. ] No starting-hole shall secure them from the wrath of God, and rage of the creature, set a work by him. Hell and destruction are before the Lord, Prov. 15. 11. yea hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering, Job 25. 6. He hath a sharp eye, and a long hand, to pull men out of their lurking-holes; as he did Adam out of the thicket, Manasseh from among the thornes, Jonah from the sides of the ship, the Duke of Buckingham in Rich. the thirds time, &c. Be sure, saith Moses, your sinne will finde you out, Num. 32. 23. and Gods hand will hale you to punishment. 2 Chro. 33. 11 Speed.

Though they climb up to heaven, ] That is, (by an hyperbole) to high and strong places: as the Babel-builders, the Benjamites that fled to the Rock Rimmon, and there abode four moneths, Judg. 20. 47. the gibing Jebusites, that were so confident of their strong-hold of Zion, that they flouted David and his forces, 2 Sam. 5. 8. the proud Prince of Tyre, and others.

thence will I bring them down ] From their loftiest tops of Pride and creature-confidence which God loves to confute and defeat: as I might instance in Nebuchadnezzars, Xerxes, Haman, Sejanus, Bajazet, that terroure of the world, and (as he thought) superior to fortune, yet in an instant, with his state, in one battle overthrowen into the bottome of misery and despaire: and that in the midst of his great strength. The same end awaits the Pope and his hierarchy-rues also à culmine Roma, that Jupiter Capitolinus shall be one day unroofed by him, who casteth the wicked down to the ground Psal. 147. 6. Turke. hist. 287.

Verse 3. And though they hide themselves in the top of Carmel ] In densis sylvis, inter spelæa ferarum, Lawfull enough it is in some cases to hides David did oft, and Elias, and Christ, and Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32. and Athanasius, and diverse other Saints. Tertullian was too rigid in condemning all kind of hiding in evill times. But to hide from God, who searcheth Jerusalem with lights, and to whom the darknesse and the light are both alike, Psal. 139. 12. to whom obscura clarent, muta respondent, silentium confitetur, this is base, and bootlesse. Carmel shall not cover them, nor any other starting-hole secure them from divine justice. The poore Jewes were pulled by the Romanes out of privyes and other under-ground places, where they had hid themselvss, as Josephus writeth: and so were those Samaritans served by the Assyrians, who ferreted them out, and slaughtered them. Lib. de fuga on persecution.

and though they be hid from my sight, ] as they think; but that cannot be: for He (like the Optick vertue in the eye) sees all, and is seen of none.

in the bottome of the sea, ] which, how deep and troublesome soever, is to God a Sea of glasse like unto Chrystal: corpus diaphanum, a pervious, clear, transparent body, such as he sees thorow, and hath the sole command of, Rev. 4.

thence will I command the serpent. For there is that crooked serpent Leviathan, there are also creeping things innumerable, to arrest wicked men as rebels and traitors to the highest Majestie, and to drag them down to the bottom of hell. All elements, and creatures, shall draw upon them, as servants will do upon such as assault their Lord. Rebells quoque facta est, quia homo numini, creatura homini, as Austin truly and trimly avoucheth. Esay 27. 1. Psal. 104. 26.

Verse 4. And though they goe into captivity, &c. ] And so may hope the worst is over, (Surely the bitterness of death is past) yet it shall prove otherwise: The hypocrites hope is as the giving up the ghost, saith Job, and that's but cold comfort: Or, as the spiders web, spun out of her own bowels; and, when the beesome comes, swept to the muck-hill. 1 Sam. 15. 32.

before their enemies, ] whose custome was to drive their captives before them, Lam. 1. 5. young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, Esay 20. 4. Or, before their enemies, that is, before they are taken captive by the enemies, by a voluntary yeeldance, in hope of quarter for their lives. The Jewes indeed had a promise from the Prophet Jeremy, chap. 21. 9. That if they went out and fell to the Chaldeans that besieged them, they should have their lives for a prey, but the ten tribes had no such promise made them: They were strangers from the covenants, Ephes. 2. 12. and therefore could look for no mercy. and I will set mine eyes upon them, ] Heb. eye, viz. the eye of my providence, that oculus irretortus, whereby I will look them to death, and take course that nothing shall go well with them: see a little below, vers. 8. Jer. 21. 10. Psal. 34. 16. In Tamerlanes eyes sat such a Majesty, as a man could hardly endure to behold: and many in talking with him became dumb. He held the East in such awe, as that he was commonly called, The wrath of God, and terror of the world. Augustus Cesar frowned to death, Cornelius Gallus: and so did Queen Elizabeth, Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellour. Gods enemies are sure to perish at the rebuke of his countenance, Psal. 80. 16. and, if he but set his eyes upon them for evil, and not for good, all occurrences shall certainly work together for the worst unto them.

Verse 5. And the Lord God of Hosts is he, &c. ] Here the Prophet proveth what he had said in the foregoing verses, by an argument drawn from the wonderfull power of God, which profane persons are apt to question, that they may harden their hearts against his fear. Consider saith He, first, that He is the Lord God of Hosts, and (as the Rabbines well observe) he hath the upper and lower troops ready prest, as his horse and foot, to march against his enemies. Next, that he toucheth the land, as it were with his little finger, and it shall melt, like the fat of lambs before the fire: it shall crumble to crattle, moulder away, and be moved, because he is wroth, Psal. 18. 7. and shall men be unmoved? shall they be more insensible then the senselesse earth? The people of Antioch, though many of them gave their hands for Chrysostoms banishment, yet terrified by an earthquake (which wrought in them an heart-quake, as it had done in the Gauler, Acts 16.) they immediately sent for him again. But thirdly, the tremend power of God appears in this, that

The land shall rise up wholly like a flood, and it shall be drowned, as by the flood of Egypt. ] God can flote it, and flood it at his pleasure. See chap. 8. 8. Water is naturally above the earth, as the garment above the body saith David: and would (but for the power and providence of God) prove as the shirt made for the murdering of Agamemnon, where the head had no issue out. Let God be seen herein, and mens hearts possessed with his holy fear: who can so easily pull up the sluices, let in the Sea upon them, and bury them all in one universall grave of waters, Fear ye not me, saith the Lord? will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the Sea, by a perpetuall decree, that it cannot passe it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not passe over it? This Aristotle admires, and David celebrates in his Physicks, (as One calleth that 104 Psalme) verse 6. 9. and all men should improve, to affright their consciences from provoking to anger so great a God.

Verse 6. It is he that buildeth his stories (or spheres) in the heaven, ] Surgit hic oratio. The Prophet here riseth in his discourse: and as Chrysostom said of St. Paul, Tricubitalis est, & celos transcendit; Low, though he were, and little, yet he gat up into the third heaven: so may we of Amos, though but a plain-spoken and illiterate heardsman, yet in setting forth the power of God, hee mounts from earth to heaven, and shews himself to bee Virum bonum, dicendi peritum, an exquisite Oratour, according to Quintilians character. God this Great Architect, and publike-workman, (as the Apostle after Plato, whom he seemeth to have read, calleth Him, Heb. 11. 10) hath without tool or toil, Esay 40. 28. builded his stories in the heaven (which is three stories high, 2 Cor. 12. 2.) wherein (as in a theatre, or molten looking-glasse, Job 37. 18.) his Majesty most clearly shineth, chap. 4. 13. and 5. 8. See Psal. 104. 3. every sphere and starre twinkling at us, and as it were, beekning to us, to remember his omnipotency (whereof that rare Fabrick is a notable work and witnesse) and not to think to escape his judgements, if we go on in sinne. For although he be higher then the heavens, Job. 8. 11. yet his eyes behold, his eye-lids try the children of men, Psal. 11. 4. and verse 6. Upon the wicked He shall rain down snares, fire and brimstone, &c.

and hath founded his troop (or bundle) in the earth, ] that is, the other three elements say some: the Sea, which together with the earth maketh one Globe, say others: the Universe (saith Mr. Diodate) which is like the fabrick of a building:

of which the earth being the lower part, and onely unmoveable, hath some resemblance of a foundation.

He that calleth for the waters of the Sea, and poureth them out, &c. ] See the Note on chap. 5. 8.

Verse 7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, ] The emphasis lieth in this last word, Unto me, who am no respecter of persons, but in every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. ) Unto your selves indeed you seem some great businessse, because Israelites; to whom pertaineth the Adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, &c. Rom. 9. 4. To others also you seem a great nation, yea a wife and understanding people, as having God so nigh unto you, and so set for you, Deut. 4. 6, 7. and 33. 29. But tell me, Quis te discrevit? Who made you to differ? and what have ye more then others, that ye have not me to thank for? You look upon the Ethiopians with scorn, as an ignoble and servile people: as likewise upon the uncircumcised Philistines, and unhal- lowed Syrians. But wherein are you beyond them, if you look back to your Original, and consider my dealings with them and you? It is nothing else but self-love that maketh you thus insolent; and teacheth you to turn the glasse to see your selves bigger, Others lesser then they are. You foolishly set up your Counter for a thou- sand pound; and are in some sence like those Ethiopians, or Negroes, so much slighted by you; of whom it is said that they paint the devill white, as being a co- lour contrary to their own. But much more to blame are you, that being Gods peculiar people, and partakers of so great priviledges, you do no more change your evil manners, then the Ethiopians do their black-hue Jer. 13. 23. you are no where white but in your teeth, as they: good a little from the teeth outward. I am near in your mouths, but farr from your reines, Jer. 12. 2. Such an one was that stigmaticall Cass the son of Iemini mentioned in the title of the seventh Psalme, (perhaps Saul the son of Kish the Beniamite is intended) non tam cute quam corde Ethiopius, of black and ill conditions: and therefore to God no better then an Ethiopian, or any other Pagan people.

have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt? ] q. d. I grant I have; and you glory very much in it: whereas you should rather glorify me much for it, and walk worthy of such a deliverance; for every blessing is a binder, and every new deliverance a new tie to obedience. But what singular thing have I herein done for you more then for Philistines and Syrians, whom yet you look upon as dogs and out- casts?

have not I also brought up the Philistines from Caphtor, ] i. e. from Cappadocia (called an Island Ier. 47. because it bordered upon the sea) or, as some will have it from Cyprus, a rich Island, called therefore Macarish, that is, Blessed.

and the Syrians from Kir ] Syros è Kire, from Cyrene a countrey of Asia, as Beroaldus thinketh. It is mentioned Esa. 22. 6. as subject to the king of Assyria: and thither the Syrians were translated by Tiglath-Pileser 2 King. 16. 9. but when either these or the Philistines were brought back againe to their own coun- treys, we read not in scripture, or elsewhere at this day. These are ancient things, (as it is said in another case) and are here alledged as well known to the Israelites, who are nipt on the crown as they say, and pulled from that perilous pinnacle of self-exaltation, whereupon they had unhappily peirked themselves.

Verse 8. Behold the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinfull kingdom ] Be it Ethiopia, Palestina, Syria, or Israel, but especially Israel Amos 3. 2. nor his eye only his ὀφθαλμὸς his jealous eye (as ver. 4. for evil, and not for good: but both his eyes, yea his seven eyes, for he is ὀφθαλμοὶ Alle eye, to look through and through the sinfull kingdom, to judge and punish, to inflict tribulation and ang- uish upon every soul of man that doth evil, of the Jew first, because of his privi- leges, and also of the Gentile Rom. 2. 9. The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, with the point of a diamond Jer. 17. 1. and Israel is therefore worse then others because he ought to have been better. His whole kingdom is a kingdom of sin, a merum scelus, a very Pontropolis, as that place in Thracia was called, whither Philip had assembled all the infamous persons and men of evil demeanour. What is the transgression of Jacob? Is it not Samaria? Mic. 1. 5. their capitall sins were most in their capitall cities; and thence overflowed the whole kingdom: called and I will destroy it] See here the venomous nature of sin, and shun it, else we shall prove traytours to the state, and have our hands if not upon the great cartropes, yet upon the lesser cords, that draw down vengeance upon the land. saying that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob] A remnant shall be left for royall use, reliquas faciam reliquias, and so make a manifest difference, remembering my promise Lev. 26. 40. which is a speciall text touching the rejection and conversion of the Jewes, as is also this in some mens judgments. For here (say they) is a threatening of extream desolation with some comfort enterlaced of a remnant to be reserved: amongst whom it is further promised 1. that the kingdome of David thorough Christ shall be set up as glorious as ever it was before, in the most flourishing times of David or Solomon ver. 11. 2. Next, other nations shall joyne with them and be made partakers of one common inheritance ver. 12. So doth James Att. 15. 16, 17. expound it. 3. Thirdly there is promised the fruitfulness of their land ver. 13. the inhabiting in their own cuntry, ver. 14. and the perpetuity of their abode there, ver. 15. But all this others think to be, optabile magis quam opinabile, little better then a golden dreame.

Verse 9. For so I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel] It is not without Gods command and good leave that evil spirits and men can sift the saints, as Satan desired to have done Peter. He desired it, as a challenger desireth one of the other side to combat with: so he beg'd leave to sift Job, and so he tempted David to number the people, but it was by Gods permission. Up therefore and pray that ye enter not into temptation Luk. 22. 31, 46, or that ye may come cleer out of it, and more then conquerours, even Triumphers: the enemy is skinted: yea Christ will tread him under your feet shortly.

and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations] The ten tribes among the Assyrians (who were Emperours of the whole East) and whither since they are scattered, whether into Shina, Tartary, West-Indies, or other countries, is not known. The whole twelve-tribes (those also that once instantly served God day and night Act. 26. 7.) are now wofully disiected and dissipated: being cast out of the world, as it were, by a common consent of Nations, and generally slighted and hated. The Romanes permitted other nations to call themselves Romanes, after they had conquered them: but so they would not suffer the Jewes upon any termes to do: lest there should besome blot stick to the glory of the Romanes by that odious and fordid people. The Pope useth them as sponges, the Turk as slaves, &c.

Christ hath his fan in his hand, and will surely discriminate: he will rake out the pretious from the vile, he will drive the chaffe one way and the wheate another: and take care that not the least grain of weighty wheat, that had good tack in it, (as a stone hath, though but a little stone) shall be lost. He will turn his hand upon the little ones, and secure them Zech. 13. 7.

Verse 10. All the sinners of my people shall die by the sword] The flagitious, presumptuous persons, that blesse themselves when I curse them, saying, We shall have peace though we walk every man in the imagination of his heart, and take his full swinge in sin. of the enemy, or which is worse, gladio spiritali saith Mercer, by the spiritual sword, being blinded and reſected by God; ſo that their preſervation is but a reſervation to a greater miſchief. Whereas, on the other ſide, ſome of Gods elect might in a common calamity periſh by the ſword, but then (Joſiah-like) they died in peace, though they fell in battle: their death was right pretious in the ſight of the Lord, and a plentifull amends made them in heaven.

Begnadenn

Ver. 11. In that day wil I raiſe up the Tabernacle of David] A moſt ſweet con- cluſion of the Propheſie by ſundry Evangelicall promiſes after ſo many very ſevere and ſharp menaces: the Sun of righteouſneſſe liketh not to ſet in a cloud. In that day, that happy day whenſoever it ſhall dawn, that Chriſt ſhall come: for the Prophets knew not the certaine time when, but made diligent enquiry as far as they might with ſobriety 1 Pet. 1. 11. and well knew that the Law, which they preached and explained, was an introduction to a better hope Heb. 7. 19. which they ſaw afar off and ſaluted Heb. 11. 13.

Wil I raiſe up the Tabernacle of David] that is, the kingdome of the houſe of David ſaith the Chaldee Paraphraſt: meaning, of the Meſſiah, whom the ſounder ſort of Rabbines from this text call Ben Nipblei, the repairer of the breach, the reſtore of pathes to dwell in: Now the Church is here called the Tabernacle of David, becauſe that once ſtately Palace of David was by many deſolations reduced to a tent, as it were, and that ready to drop too. The Branch grew out of the root of Jeſſe, when that goodly family was ſunk ſo low, as from David the king to Joſeph the carpenter. Beſides, all was out of order both in Church and State, when Chriſt came.

and cloſe up the breaches thereof] Heb. Wall up: by unwalling (as the Hebrew hath it Num. 24. 17.) all the children of Seth: by ſubduing the ſons of men, the godly ſeed to the obedience of faith: by bringing into captivity every haughty thought &c. 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5. (that at the name of Jeſus every knee may bow Philip. 2. 10.) and getting a full conqueſt by the preaching of the goſpell, which ſhall quickly cloſe up all ruptures, and raiſe up all ruines, by chaſing away terrours and falſe-worſhips, doctrines of devils, and traditions of men, whereby the Scribes and Pharifees had made the commandement of God of none effect.

and I will build it as in the dayes of old] in thoſe purer times of David and the other holy Patriarches, who made up but one and the ſame Church with us, and were ſaved by the ſame faith in Chriſt Jeſus, that Lamb of God ſlain from the foundation of the world, Rev. 13. 8. Mine antiquity is Jeſus Chriſt ſaid Ignatius the Martyr. As we prefer the neweſt Philoſophy, ſo the ancient'ſt Divinity, ſaith Another.

Verſe 12. That they may poſſeſſe the remnant of Edom,] That they which are called by my name, which are called Chriſtians, viz. the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſours to the end of the world, may poſſeſſe together with Chriſt (to whom the Father hath given the Heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the earth for his poſſeſſion) the remnant of Edom; thoſe few of them that receive the faith, who are but as a remnant to the whole peece, an handful to a houſeful. And not of the Edomites onely, thoſe inveterate and hereditary enemies to the Iſrael of God; but of all the heathen which are called by name, who beſeech and are baptized into Chriſts name, being content to receive his mark, and to profeſſe his Religion, which formerly they were perfect ſtrangers to. Theſe and thoſe firſt Preachers of the Goſpel, and Planters of Churches (being Iſraelites by birth) are ſaid to poſſeſſe by inheritance, becauſe Chriſt was pleaſed to make uſe of their miniſtery; and upon theſe his white horſes to ride abroad the world, conquering, and to conquer, Rev. 6. 1, 2. In a like ſenſe it is promiſed, Eſa. 14. 2. that the houſe of Iſrael ſhall poſſeſſe their proſelytes in the land of the Lord for ſervants and for handmaids, and take them captives whose captives they were, and rule over their oppressours. Such a change shall the Gospel make.

[saith the Lord that doth this] For indeed none else could have done it. Effectual conversion is his work alone, God persuade Sapher, &c. Noah may speak persuasive-ly, but God onely can persuade. Rebecca may cook the venison, but Isaac onely can give the blessing. Paul may plant, &c. Deus potest facere, nec solet fallere.

Verse 13. Behold, the dayes come, saith the Lord, that the plowman, &c.] The Gospel of peace brings with it the peace of the Gospel, and with peace, plenty, with the horn of salvation the horn of plenty, a confluence of outward comforts and contentments, as in Solomons dayes, and Constantines, (whom God prospered and blessed beyond all that he could have wished, saith Austin) and Q. Elizabeths, whom, for her care to propagate the Gospel, He made to be the happiest woman that ever swayed scepter, as her very enemies were forced to acknowledge: so liberal a paymaster is the Lord, that all his retributions are more then bountiful; and this his servants have not ex largitate, sed ex promisso, out of his general providences, but by vertue of a promise, which is farre sweeter. The Masorites have observed, that in this verse are found all the letters of the Hebrew Alphabet (as also in 26 more verses of the Old Testament) to note, say the Calvinists, that in the kingdom of the Messiah, there shall be great abundance of all things, & plenum copie cornu: or, if that should fail, yet plenty of all spiritual benedictions in heavenly things, Eph. 1. 3. and contented godlinesse, 1 Tim. 6. 6. which hath an antarkie, a self-sufficiency; so that having nothing a man possesseth all things, 2 Cor. 6. 10. This the Prophet expresseth in the following words by many excellent hyperbole's though (to say sooth) Christus & regnum ejus non patiuntur hyperbolen. All words are too weak to set forth the worth of Christ and his kingdom.

[the plowman shall overtake the reaper] In signis hyperbole, saith Mercer: no sooner shall harvest be ended, but seeding shall succeed, and that promise fulfilled, Levit. 26. 5. all busineses belonging to the tillage of the ground, and the inning of the fruit, shall have their fit and suitable seasons; where, under the name of corporal blessings spiritual also are to be understood: and indeed those blessings out of Zion are farre beyond any other that come out of heaven and earth, Pf. 134. 3.

[and the treader of grapes, him that soweth seed] precious seed, Pf. 126. 5. sowing-seed (as one englisheth it) drawn out of the seed basket, and cast all along upon the land: the meaning is, that the vintage shall last so long, that the seeds-man shall scarce have time to do his businesse, for waiting upon the wine-press.

[and the mountains shall drop sweet wine] Or juice of pomegranates, more delicious liquor then that which the Italians profanely call Lachryma Christi, or that which at Paris and Lovaine is called Vinum Theologicum, or Vinum Cos, that is, coloris, odoris, saporis optimi, the best in the countrey for colour, savour and taste, to please the palate.

[and at the hills shal melt] sc. with milk, honey, oyl, as Joel. 3. 18. the same almost with this. And the heathen Poet hath the like,

——— Subitis messor gaudebit arvis:
Rorabunt querceta favi stagnantia passim
Vina fluent oleique lacus.———

Ver. 14. And I will bring againe the captivity of my people] There is an elegancy in the original that cannot be englished, and God seemes delighted with such Ag-nominations, as hath been before observed: to shew the lawfull use of Rhetorike in divine discourses, so it be not affected, abused, Idolized. This promise is fulfilled when beleivers are by the gospel brought from darknesse to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgivenesse of sins, and be set free from the tyranny of corruption, and terrour of death Heb. 2. 14. 15. Colos. 1. 13. Luk. 1. 74. Zach. 9. 11. Psa. 68. 19.

[and they shall build the wast cities] Restore the sincere service of God, as those noble Reformers did in all ages; fetching the Church, as it were, out of the wilderness, where she had long laine hid Rev. 12. 6. and whence she is said at length to come leaning upon her Beloved Cant. 8. 5.

Is not this to wrest the scriptures, and so to set them on the rack, as to make them speak more then ever they intended? Is it not to compel them to go two miles when they are willing to go but one? Is it not to taw them, and gnaw them, as Tertullian saith that Marcion the heretick (that Mus Ponticus as he therefore calls him) did, to make them serviceable to his vile purposes?

Vers. 15. And I wil plant them upon their land] as trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified, Esay. 61. 3, 11. being well rooted and no worse fruited, Philip. 1. 6.

and they shall no more be pulled up] None shall pull them out of Christs hand; for he and the Father are one. None shall separate them from the love of God in Christ Jesus, Rom. 8. they shall be sure of continual supplies of sap and safety, being kept by the power of God thorow faith unto salvation, 2 Pet. 1. 3. The paradise of God was so planted, that it was watered on all sides with most noble rivers, to keep it flourishing: how much more will the Lord do this in his heavenly garden the Church? See Psal. 92. 13, 14. when it comes to be transplanted especially.

saith the Lord thy God] Thy God, O Prophet, who will ratifie and verifie what promises soever thou hast uttered in his name. Or thy God, O people, now reconciled unto thee in Christ, Ioh. 26. 17. and therefore ready to heap upon thee all things needful for life and godlinesse.

THE viſion of Obadiah, ] The ſame, ſay ſome, that hid the Lords Prophets, and fed them by fifty in a cave, when ſought for to the ſlaughter, by wicked Jezebel, 1 King. 18. 4. whereupon himſelf alſo received a Prophets reward. That is ( ſaith Lyra ) was endued with the ſpirit of propheſie. Hierom addeth, that he was buried at Samarita, ( called afterwards Sebaſte by Herod, in honour of Augustus ) and that there his Sepulchre was yet to be ſeen. The Rabbines ſay, that this Obadiah was that widows husband, whom Eliſha relieved, by multiplying her oyl, 2 King. 4. Others ( with more ſhew of reaſon ) conjecture that this was ~~that~~ Obadiah mentioned 2 Chron. 34. 12. a faithfull Levite, ſet by Joſiah to overſee the Artificers, who repaired the Temple in the eighteenth yeere of his reigne: and ſo was contemporary to Ezechiel and Jeremy, with whom alſo he conſenteth in many paſſages: and beſides, he maketh mention of the Babylonish captivity, and the Edomites cruelty to the Jews at that time. But let him be who he will, ( for where the Scripture hath no tongue, we need not finde ears: but may well content our ſelves with a learned ignorance ) his doctrine he entitleth not a Burden, becauſe he concludeth it comfortably, but a Viſion which is more generall: it being his ſcope to comfort the people of God, that were under great affliction.

Jer. 49.
Pſal. 137. 7.

Thus ſaith the Lord God concerning Edom, ] If Obadiah were himſelf an Edomite, but a Proſelyte to the Church ( as ſome Rabbines have reported him ) his viſion ſhould have taken the better with his cruell countrey-men, to bring them to repentance. But whether he were or not, they ſhould have obſerved his authority: and that his doctrine came Cum privilegio, and that it was the Lord God, the Tremend Trinunus that ſpake by him; and that hee was according to his name, a servant of the most high-God, which shewed unto them the way of salvation, Acts 16. 17. Sed surdo fabulam: the Edomites were so fleshed in blood, and such inveterate enemies to the Church, that there was little good to be done upon them. Howsoever, to leave them without excuse, and, if possible, to rouse them out of their security, He saith,
ſervant

We have heard a rumour from the Lord, ] We, that is, I and my fellow-Prophets (who are à secretis to the Lord, Amos 3. 7.) have heard for a certainty, that the Edomites are devoted to destruction. And that this was no vain rumour, but accordingly accomplished, see Jer. 25. 9, 21. Mal. 1. 3.

and an Embassadour is sent among the heathen. ] An herald at arms sent by Nebuchadnezzar, say some, to stir up his Chaldeans against the Edomites: Others, make this Embassadour to be Christ, or a created Angel, or a divine instinct, or, lastly, the Prophets. Whosoever he is, he doth his work very vigorously.

Arise ye, saith he, and let us rise up against her in battell. ] Let us joyn our forces, and do our utmost against Idumea. After this sort also shall Gods warriors stirre up themselves one day, and one another, against the Romish Edomites, those Pseudo-christians Antichristians, when God shall once put into their hearts, to hate that old withered whore of Babylon, to make her desolate and naked, to eat her flesh, and burn her with fire, Rev. 17. 16, 17. The Alarum was long since given them (not unlike this in the Text) by Francis Petrarch in these words. Babylon altera, nempe propinquior atque recentior, adhuc stat: cito iidem casura; si essetis viri. There yet standeth a nearer and newer Babylon then that of old: but it should not stand long, were you but Men. Arise ye, and let us rise up against her in battell. The Jews at this day call the Hierarchie of Rome, the wicked kingdome of Edom; and for Dumah, Esay 21. 11. they read Roma, by a very easie (but willing) mistake. See Dr. Taylours sermon, called The Romish Edomite.

Verse 2. Behold, I have made thee small among the heathen. ] That is, vile, despicable, and abject, as Psal. 119. 141. I am small and despised: nothing is more ordinary then to despise the day of small things, Zech. 4. 10. And whereas God is said to be Magnus in magnis, nec parvus in minimis, hee had alwayes kept down these profane Edomites, shutting them up in mount Seir, a craggy barren countrey (not unlike Ascre Hesiods countrey, or Landasse in Wales, which is said to be a place, neither pleasant, fertile, nor safe) and not suffering them to attain to any fame, or almost name among other Nations. Were it not that they are mentioned in the Bible (and never there for any goodnesse neither) it would hardly have been known that there ever had been such a people. Wherefore then should Edom be so intolerably insolent, as verse 3? swell to such an height of pride, play such bloody pranks, as he is here accused of? especially since God is taking a course to make him yet lesser and lower then yet he is, by those armies of his that are comming upon him, to stain the pride of all his glory.

Esay 23. 9.

Verse 3. The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, ] so as to make thee think thy self some great businesse, when its no such matter; and that thou canst secure thy self in thy strong-holds from thy strongest enemies: but herein thy pride hath befooled thee, and put the same trick upon thee that the serpent did once upon the first woman, Gen. 3. 13. (the same word is there used as here) who complained, when she was in the transgression. The serpent hath deceived me, &c. He is still the King of all the children of pride; and thereby cheateth them, ravisheth them of their right reason, and rendreth them the direct objects of Gods hatred and heavy displeasure, Jam. 4. 6. hee setteth himself in battell array against them. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens (saith Zophar concerning the proud person, Job 20. 6.) and his head reach unto the clouds: yet he shall perish for ever like his own dung; they which have seen him, shall say, Where is he? There is a deceitfulness in sinne, Heb. 3. 13. a lie in all these outward vanities, Jon. 2. 8. they were never true to those that trusted in them. But the proud person feedeth upon asbes, he feedeth himself with false hopes: a deceived heart hath turned him aside, put him into a fools paradise, that he cannot deliver his soul, get out of his golden dreams, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand? His case is not unlike that mans, who lying fast asleep upon the edge of a steep rock, dreams merrily of much happinesse and safety: but upon the sudden starting for joy, breaks his neck, and

2 Pet. 2. 18. Such great swelling words of vanity speakes the proud man, such big bubbles of words, sesquipedalia verba, Who shall bring me down? who is the Lord? who is lord over us? &c. Such haughty expressions such lofty language is a forerunner, a presage of imminent destruction, as here. A bulging wall is not farr from a downfall. While the word (Is not this great Babel &c.) was yet in Nebuchadnezzars mouth, he was deprived of his kingdome, and driven from men &c. Dan. 4. 31. Megasthenes the Persian (an ancient writer) reporteth that the Chaldeans relate, that Nebuchadnezzar returning home laden with victories, fell mad; and being in a fanatick veine, foretold the destruction of Babel, whether he foretold it or no tis sure he occasioned it, by confiding in it, and by robbing both God of his glory, and his ancessors (the first founders) of their honour: for he only enlarged it, and built the palace entirely: and now he saith? Who shall bring me down? &c. That will I, saith God, in the next words. Aesop being asked by Chilo (one of the seven wise men of Greece) what God was doing? answered, He bringeth down the proud, and lifteth up the lowly. Verse 4. Though thou exalt thy self as the Eagle] Or, as the Arabick text hath it, ad aquilam hard by the Eagle; Couldst thou fly as high a pitch as that bird, which is said to fore out of sight, and build thy nest aloft, as He doth, on the highest mountaines, and tallest trees, that the serpent may not come at his young.

and though thou set thy nest among the starrs] i. e. upon such high hills as reach to the upper region of the ayre. Of Ithaca, (Ulysses his country) the Oratour saith, that it was in scopulis quasi nidus affixa, set as a nest among the rocks. And Pavlus Aemilius the Romane Generall pulled down the castles at Athens, saying that they were tyrannorum nidi: and our Henry 8. commanded the Abbeyes here to be demolished, saying, that those crowes-nests were to be destroyed, ne iterum ad cohabitandum convolent that they might never breed againe amongst us. Lucifer and his Antitype Nebuchadnezzar spake of ascending into heaven, above the heights of the clouds, and of the setting their thrones above the starres of God Esa. 14. 13, 14. See the like language, or bigger from the prince of Tyre Ezek. 28. 2. with the issue, much like this that here followeth.

thence will I bring thee down] Down with a vengeance: as he did Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar, Herod, Edom, Attilas, Genfericus, Bajazet &c. The Philistines flouted Jonathan and his armour-bearer and said, Come up to us, and wee will shew you a thing: that is, we will give you your payment before we part with you: they held it impossible to get up that sharp steep craggy rock where they kept garrison. But Jonathan clambred over that rock on his hands, and feet; and put them to the rout 1 Sam. 14. 13 An exploit of as great or rather of greater valour, then that of Alexander the great, for which he is so crowned and Chronicled by Plutarch, and Curtius: the story is this. Arimazes having garrisoned a very strong rock, rock, (held almost inaccessible, and to which there was but one only passage) in the Sogdian countrey, with thirty thousand men: and being sent unto by Alexander to yeeld up his hold, derided him and asked whether Alexander could flie? whereunto Alexander returned this answer, I will make thee know ere thou art a night elder, that the Macedonians can flie. Hereupon he pickt out three hundred of the boldest men he had: and by great promises prevailed with them the next night, to climbe up the backside of the rock to the top of it; which accordingly they did: and killing the guardes, took the garrison, letting in Alexander, who nailed Arimazes to a crosse.

[saith the Lord] who will surely do it: how improbable, or impossible soever you may judge it.

Verse 5. If theeves came to thee, if robbers by night] Or, what? have theeves come to thee? have robbers been here? O, sure 'tis worse then so with thee: they would never have made such clean work, as they say, but have left somewhat behind them, they would never have plaid the Harpies in this sort, and taken all before them, &c. Thus the neighbour nations stand wondring at this wofull desolation, and sarcastically insulting: Now to be mocked in misery is no small grief to the party. Thus the Prophet prickes them by a Rhetorical Addubitation, the better to affect their minds with an effectual feare of no ordinary or easy calamity, but such as will be wonderfull, and incredible: so that they that heare of it will say, how art thou cut off? ] Or, how silent art thou? what? did thine enemies set upon thee per amica silentia Luna? did they take thee napping, that they shred thee thus? Have they dealt by thee, as Sr. Francis Drake (in his travels) did by the Spaniard whom he found sleeping on the bank of a river with many wedges of gold lying by him. He never waked the man, but eased him of his charge; Or rather as Epaminondas did by the watchman, whom he found fast asleep: he thrust him through with his sword; and being chid for so severe a fact, replied, Talem cum reliqui, qualem inveni, I left him but as I found him.

If the grape-gatherers came to thee, would they not leave some grapes: ] Surely they would: Deut. 24. 21. there would likely be a gleaning of grapes after the vintage is done Isa. 24. 13. two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough; foure or five in the outmost fruitfull branches Esa. 17. 6. It is hard but some make escape out of the battle to bring the ill newes. Edoms ruine therefore and desolation was most deplorable and irreparable, sith none was left alone: but all both men and meanes raked and racemated.

Verse 6. How are the things of Esau searched out? ] Or (as Drusius reads it) How are the posterity of Esau searched out? the men to the slaughter, the wealth to the spoile? what cunning and daring souldiers were these to pry into every corner for prey, and to pull them out of every lurking hole, where they might have been circumvented and butchered, in those dark and strait places; This shewes surely that they were both armed and animated by God himself. Confer Joel. 2. 6, 7, 8, 9. but especially Jer. 49. 10, 11. where you have the full of that, which is here but abridged: and therefore this verse hath not so much as an Athnach in it, for distinction.

how are his hid things sought out? ] i. e. his treasures and Jewels which have their name in Hebrew from hiding: because men use to secret and secure them with utmost care and diligence, See Mat. 13. 44. hence they are called treasures of darknesse Esa. 45. 3. See Iob 3. 21. Abundance of this was found at Constantinople, taken by the Turks: so that the souldiers divided it among themselves by hat-fuls, wondring at their wealth, and deriding their folly, that possessing so much, they would bestow so little in defence of themselves and their countrey, lost by their tenacity and nigardice: And the same is reported of Heidelberg. This that is here threatened against Edom, was accordingly executed in the fift yeare after the destruction of Jerusalem, saith Iosephus; Nebuchaduezzar in the 23. yeare of his raigne invading and wasting Idumea. Verse 7. All the men of thy confederacy ] which therefore should be true to thee, but prove trecherous: so vaine it is to trust to that broken reed of carnall combinations. Many friends are like deep ponds, cleare at the top, and all muddy at the bottom: the causes they will be, but not the companions of calamity. Like they are faith One, to crowes which flock to a dead carcasle, not to defend it but to devour it: and no sooner have they bared the bones, but they are gone. David complaineth of such Psal. 55. 13, 14, 15. and Jeremy of his unkind countrey men of Anathoth chap. 11. But for Edom, it was no great pittie, considering their perfidy both to God (because they had transgressed the lawes morall and municipall, changed the ordinances, that is, the law, of nations and broken the everlasting covenant, that is, the law of Nature, which is that light that lighteneth every man that commeth into the world Iob. 1. 9.) and also to their brethren the Israelites their extreme inhumanity, as it followeth ver. 10. 11. They had therefore but their own measure meted againe to them: as they had forgotten the brotherly covenant, Am. 1. 9, 11. so they met with those that paid them home in their own coyne: neither were they any more pittied, then Haman when the king frowned upon him, or Sejanus when he fell into the displeasure of Tiberius; his friends shewing themselves most passionate against him, saying that if Cesar had clemency, he ought to reserve it for men, and not cast it away upon monsters.

al brought thee even to the border] And there left thee at the worst: pretending to help thee, but betraying thee indeed to the enemy: and helping to cast thee out of thy countrey, under a shew of courtesy.

have deceived thee] Tuta frequensque via est per amici fallere nomen. This made a certaine Heathen cry out, Friends, there is no friend to be found: and Another, to pray God to deliver him from his friends; for, as for his enemies he could better beware of them.

they that eat thy bread] Heb. thy bread-men, thy fellow-commoners, convictores & consalanei, others amici, that are seldome either satisfied, or sure.

have laid a wound under thee] The Hebrew word signifieth both a wound and a plaister: they would secretly wound them, lay a wound under them; and yet seeme willing to bind up their wounds, and heale them, by applying a plaister: such dawbing there is in the world, Fide, deside. Cavebis autem si pavebis.

there is none understanding in him] that is, in Edom: and this seemeth spoken by way of Apostrophe to the Israelites, whose comfort is intended in this whole Prophesie. It is as if it had been said, Edom holds himself wise, but will shew himself a very sot, destitute of common sense: such as taketh not notice that these are the wounds with which he was wounded in the house of his friends: the wittall is either insensible of it: or else well content with it, till he hath bought his wit, and begins to open his eyes; but not till the paines of death are upon him, as it is said of the Mole.

Verse 8. Shal I not in that day saith the Lord &c.] Edom was famous for wisdom, as appeareth by Eliphaz the Temanite, and other of *Iob*s friends who were Idumeans: and Rabshakeh could say, that counsel and strength are for warre Esa. 36. 5. what a price did Agamemnon sat upon Nestor? and Darius upon Zophirus? Scipio did nothing without his Polybius, and ascribed most of his victories to his advise. Every purpose is established by counsel; and with good advice make warre, saith Salomon. Romani sedendo vincunt passed for a proverbe of old. The Romanes conquered by sitting in counsel: and Cyreas got more cities by his wisdom, then Pyrebus by his puissance. But where no counsel is the people fall Prov. 11. 14. and this was *Edom*s case in that day, that is, at that time when their confederates betrayed them to their enemy, and desolation was at next doore by. dementat. When God intends to undo a man (say the Dutch) he first puts out his eye, and befools him, Pliny saith of the Eagle, that setting upon the Hart, hee lights upon his hornes, and there flutters up and down, filling his eyes with dust, born in her feathers: that at last he may cast himself from a rock, and become a prey. God blindeth the understanding, and expectorath the wisdom of those whom he designeth to destruction. Surely the Princes of Zoan are fools, the wise counsellours of Pharaoh are become brutish, they have also seduced Egypt ——— The Lord hath mingled a spirit of perversities in the midst thereof, &c. Esay 19. 11, 12, 13, 14.

Verse 9. And thy mighty men, O Teman, ] thy Gyants, thy Champions, that durst look death in the face upon great adventures in the field: these were now dismayed, and dispirited; their courage was quailed, and even broken with fear, as the word signifieth: so that as Saul, when the Devil had preached his funerall, made haste and fell with the fulnesse of his stature all along on the earth, as being fore afraid, 1 Sam. 28. 20, so shall it be with the mighties of Teman, that is, of Edom: for Teman was nephew to Esau, and sonne to Eliphaz, Gen. 36. and of him, some city, or part of the countrey took its denomination. The Chaldee and the Vulgar Latine take the word Teman appellatively, and render it thus. Thy mighty men shall perish from the South: or, those that dwell to the Southward of thy countrey, and so are more remote from the Northern Chaldees; yet they shall no sooner hear of their coming, but they shall tremble, and forget their prowess.

against thy brother, ] thine own mothers sonne, Psal. 50. 20. This is no small aggravation of thy sinne, that it is in germanum Jacob, thy nearest Allies. Edom had other sinnes not a few: but this was the chief, and is therefore here and elsewhere chiefly alledged, as the cause of their utter ruine, Ezech. 25. and 35. Amos 1. Mal. 1. Nothing is more hatefull to God then unnaturalnesse. A brother is born for adversity, Prov. 17. 17. his birth bindes him to it: and hee must first offer violence to himself, that is unkind to his distressed brother: he must tear the dictates of nature out of his own heart. And however at other times brethren may jarre and jangle: yet at a strait, and in a stresse, good nature (if there be any remains of it) will work: and good blood will not belie it self: Israel was charged for this cause not to abhor an Edomite, because he was his brother, Deut. 23. 7. and yet the Edomites used them as discourteously in their passage to Canaan, as the Moabites and Ammonites did, Num. 20. 20, 21. they were also their perpetuall enemies, and of a devilish vindictive spirit toward them, to the very last: hence their ensuing doom.

Shame shall cover thee, ] for thy violence covering thee as a garment, and for thy pride compassing thee as a chain, Psal. 73. 6. The face of such as are ashamed is wont to be covered with blushing, the blood flushing to the outward parts to relieve them, and, as it were, to hide their shame. Hence the Hebrews say, that those that blush for shame, are covered with shame, Mic. 6. 10. Psal. 69. 8. and 35. 26. and 109. 17, 29. Iob 18. 22. Those that shame the counsel of the poor, because the Lord is his refuge, Psal. 14. 6. shall themselves be covered with confusion here, and be raised up at last day to shame and everlasting contempt, Dan. 12. 2.

And thou shalt be cut off for ever.

Verse 11. In the day that thou stoodest on the other side, ] Over-ant; curiously eying, and maliciously promoting, by thy virulent tongue, and violent hands, the downfall of Israel. Nemo curiosus quin malevolus, saith an Ancient. These Edomites fed their eyes with their brethrens miseries, as with a pleasant spectacle. At first perhaps, they were onely lookers on: but afterwards they stood against them in baitel (when they saw them worsted) and took part with their enemies. See Esth. 8. 2. Psal. 9. 6. Eph. 6. 11. The Samaritanes afterward served them in like sort, as Josephus reporteth: especially when Antiochus tormented the Jewes, they wrote to him to excuse themselves as no Jewes; and (offering him their service) basely fliled him, Antiochus the mighty God.

In the day that the strangers carried away captive, &c. ] Edoms malice is here aggravated by the circumstance of time they took to expresse it: viz. when Gods people were at worst, and when their extreme misery should have moved pity. This was a Dog-like, Devil-like practise, to fall upon those that are down before; to adde affliction to the afflicted, Psal. 69. 26. to push the wounded out of the Heard, as they say Deer do. Of such barbarous and savage usage David oft complaineth, and Job, and Jeremy, and Jesus, Psal. 22. such shall one day cry out at Gods barre, as Josephs brethren did, Gen. 42. 21. and finde no mercy, Jam. 2. 21. no more then cruell Haman did, Esth. 7. it being just with God to set off all hearts from him, who had been so unreasonably mercilesse. This Job well knew, and therefore so studiously purgeth himself of this hainous wickednesse, chap. 31. 29. Ansonius also out of Pitracus Myrelenaus affirmeth him to bee a beast and worse, that maketh himself merry in another mans misery. The beastliest among bruit creatures, even swine, seem to be affected with the out-cries of their kind. Men onely, more bruitish then they, triumph in the calamities each of other, and are not moved with their out-cries, albeit as bitter as that of Hezekiah, Esay 38. 14. O Lord, I am oppressed, help me. This Solomon calleth oppression of an high nature, Eccles. 4. 1. See Psal. 142. 4.

and forreiners entred into his gates, ] having taken the city: then did the Edomites set fire to the Temple, 2 Esdr. chap. 4. vers. 45. Citizens in a siege fortifie their gates, and defend them to the utmost; for if the gates bee gained, the city is lost: as it was at Jerusalem, and as it had like to have been at the city of Coccinum, in the Island of Lemnos, which the Turks had surprized on the sudden, but that they were happily prevented by the courage of one Marulla, a maiden of that city, who seeing her father slain in the gate, took up the weapons that lay by him: and, like a fierce Amazon, notably revenged his death, desperately fighting in defence of her cuntry, with those few that were in the gate at the first, and so kept the Turks out, untill the rest of the citizens, moved with the alarm, came to the gate.

Thou, who hast from David's dayes (for most part) been our vassall and tributary. Hierom applieth this to Heretikes; Mercer to that Arch-heretike Antichrist, an utter opposite to Christ, yet a pretended friend (as was Iudas) a servant of Gods servants (if you'le beleve him) but a most bloody persecutour of the Church, in whose ruines he yet revelleth, and will do, till Christ shall punish him, with his sore, and great, and strong sword, Esay 27. 1. and dung his vineyard with the flesh of that wild-bore.*

The Hebrew word here rendred calamitie, signifieth a fog, vapour, or mistie cloud, Gen. 2. 6. Iob 36. 27. and by a Metaphor, it is put for affliction and misery, as it is also in Latine.

Sin proceeds by degrees: neither is any man at his worst at first. First they looked at the churches calamity, and then they laughed, and then they insulted and spoke big words, and then they plundered, and lastly they butchered some, and imprisoned other some. Did not Gods enemies do all this amongst us, in our late unnaturall commotions? wherein, besides the many massacres made every where, it was a like difficult thing, in those parts where they prevailed, to find a wicked man in their prisons, or a good man out of them.

Verse 16. For as ye have drunk upon mine holy mountaine] As you O Edomites, have rejoyced and revelled in the ruines of Zion, carousing and carolling in her calamity, so shall many nations, and you among, yea above the rest (for your excessive perfidy and cruelty) drink deeply of the cup of Gods fury, which hath eternity to the bottom.

and they shall be as though they had not been] This clause makes against that other sense that some set upon the text, viz. The Heathen shall drink, feast, and triumph over thee, O Edom, whom they have subdued: yea they shall drink so stoutly that they shall swallow thee up, and all thy substance, leaving thee nothing Præter calum & canum, as that Roman prodigall boasted he had done to himself. Their exposition exposition seemeth more probable, who here begins the Consolatory part of the Prophecies: and make this verse an Apostrophe to the afflicted Jews thus: Like as ye my people have drunk your part of the cup of affliction: (an ordinary Metaphor, not in Scripture onely, as Ezek. 23. 32. Ier. 49. 12. Mat. 20. 22. but also in Heathen Writers, in allusion perhaps to the cup of poyson given at Athens to Malfactours, or (as some think) to the manner of their feasts whereat the Symposiarch, or ruler of the feast (Iob. 3.) gave order what, and how much, every one should drink) so shall all the Heathen drink, and that continually: yea they shall not onely sip of the top, that which is sweetest and clearest; but the dregs and sediment too, they shall both drink and swallow down; till such time as it hath wholly swallowed them up, so that they shall be as though they had not been. See for confirmation of this sence, Ier. 25. 25. and 49. 12. And pray for the ruin of Rome, so long since foretold by Sibylla. Tota eris in cineres, quasi nunquam Roma fuisset. The Prophecies are fulfilled already in Edom; whose very name is lost, more then what the Scripture reporteth of them. The Chaldees cut off abundance of them, together with the Moabites, Ammonites, and other neighbour nations. After that, Judas Macchabeus, and his nephew Hircanus slew a great sort of them: and then, lastly, the Romans and other Princes rooted them utterly out. See *Ioseph. Verse 17. But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, ] God will turne againe their captivity as the streames in the South. He stirred up the spirit of Cyrus to send them home: he restored unto them both Religion and Liberty: he did all that could be done for them, by sending his Son amongst them in the fulnesse of time, made of a woman, &c. made also unto all his people, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Jesus hath delivered us from the wrath to come, 1 Thess. 1. 10. Neither is there any other Name, whereby heaven is to be had, but onely by the Name of Jesus.

and there shall be holiness, ] Holiness to the Lord, as Zach. 14. 20. See the Notes there. All the Lords people shall be an holy nation, 1 Pet. 2. 9. Every inhabitant of the city of God shall be partaker of holiness, both imputed and imparted; that, for justification, being inherent in Christ, imputed to us; this, for sanctification, imparted by Christ, inherent in us.

and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions. ] They returning from Babylon shall not onely recover their own possessions, out of the hands of the Edomites, Samaritans, and Syrians; by virtue of an Edict from king Darius; but they shall also possess the Edomites themselves, and their territories: when converted to the faith of Christ, they shall bring their wealth unto the Church, and (as it is said of Tyrus, Esay 23. 18.) feed and clothe therewith the Saints of God.

Verse 18. And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, &c. ] The house of Jacob are the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin: the house of Joseph are the ten tribes of Israel, whereof Ephraim was the head. The sence is this, those two tribes, together with such of the ten as joyned themselves to them, either before, or after the captivity, shall invade Idumea, burn it, and subdue it, as fire doth stubble fully drie. This was done by Hircanus, and Judas Macchabeus, who compelled the Edomites to bee circumcised: and so wholly possessed those parts, that there were not any reliques of them remaining; no not so much as one περὶος (as the Septuagint render it) or, περὶος (as some read them,) any to carry corn after the camp, or fire before it, according to the custome of the Greeks and Easterlings; which torch-bearer might as little bee violated, as an Embassadour; but here, hee should bee cut off with the rest, and not so much as a messenger left to relate the overthrow. The Edomites were so utterly rooted out by Hircanus, that they thenceforth ceased to bee Edomites, and became Jews. Those of them that were converted, by the preaching of the Gospel, ceased to be either Edomites or Jews, and became Christians. The Apostles burning with the zeal of Gods glory, and love to mens souls, devoured and wasted the infidelity, idols, and vices of the Gentiles, where-ever they came preaching. Hence Chrysostom saith, Peter was a man made all of fire, walking among stubble: Paul was insatiabilis Dei cultor, an insatiable servant of Christ. And to the like purpose it was, that to one that desired to know what kind of man Basil was, it is said, there was presented in a dream a pillar of fire, with this Motto, Talis est Basilis, Such an one is Basil. And old Latimer, when he was demanded the reason why so little powerfull preaching? answered, Deest ignis, the spark of the Spirit is wanting. Howbeit this Prophecy, as it began to be fulfilled at first by the Apostles, and the Apostolical persons that came after them; so it is daily, and shall be continually to the worlds end fulfilled by the faithfull preachers of Gods holy word, who are clothed with a spirit of judgement and of burning, Esay. 4. 4. and out of whose mouth proceedeth fire, Rev. 11. 5. to purge the gold, and to consume the stubble.

Verse 19. And they of the South shall possesse the mount of Esau, ] Those of the South, that is, the tribe of Judah. For Judea was divided into five parts, Josh. 15. whereof one was Southward, toward the coast of Edom, ver. 21. Another was in the vale or plain, near unto the Philistines, ver. 33. Here then Obadiah sheweth, that the Jews shall not onely recover their ancient inheritances, but also much enlarge the same: whereby he signifieth, that the Church of Christ shall grow so very great, that Jewry shall be too narrow for them (see Zach. 10. 10.) the ancient bounders shall not receive them. See Num. 24. 17. Esay 11. 14. The Gospel was soon spread, not onely to the neighbour nations, but to all the ends of the earth: the Edomites, Philistines, &c. are onely mentioned, as being better known and more adverse to the Jews, then other nations were.

and they shall possesse the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria, ] All which Hircannus subdued, and destroyed their Temple built in mount Garizim.

and Benjamin shall possesse Gilead, ] that is, shall propagate and extend his habitation beyond Jordan: and in respect of his exceeding great multitude, shall be compelled to hold and possesse Gilead, all the countrey betwixt Jordan and mount Libanus. Thus Hierom with the Hebrew Scholiasts, and many others: who do also note, that under these earthly felicities heavenly are described: and that all this is chiefly accomplished under Christ, when as the faithfull are made heirs and lords of all things by Him, who is their Head. See Ezek. 37. 16, &c.

Verse 20. And the captivity of this host of the children of Israel, &c. ] i. e. the multitude of the Jews carried captive to Babylon, returning at length into their own countrey, shall possesse all the places of the Canaanites, all the Maritime cities, all the tract of ground as farre as Sarepta, which is betwixt Tyre and Zidon, therefore called Sarepta of Zidon, 1 King. 17. 19. Here dwelt the Canaanites, whom Asher could not expell, Judg. 1. 31, 32. See Mat. 15. 22.

and the captivity of Jerusalem which is in Sepharad, ] that is, either in some citie of Assyria, or in the utmost bounds of the Babylonish dominion, (as some interpret the word Sepharad, by taking it asunder) or as farre as Apharad, (so the Septuagint) that is, Euphrates. The Hebrew Doctors, as by Canaanites here, they understand the Dutch, and by Zarephath, France, so by Sepharad they will needs have Spain to be meant, subdued say they by Nebuchadnezzar, after other his great conquests, and by him planted with Jews, carried captive from Jerusalem. With such bold and frivolous fancies do these poor deluded creatures fondly feed themselves. They are generally light, aeriall, and fanaticall brains, faith One: apt to work themselves into the fools-paradise of a sublime dotage. They not onely expect a corporall restitution to their own countrey, but also a sovereignty over all other nations, and possession of their Provinces, faith Another: they beleave that the Messias is not yet come, because the Christian Empire is not yet destroyed: and therefore they pray daily for the overthrow of the Roman Empire. Out of the East it is that they expect their Messiah, whither the Spanish Jews fled, (when they were banished) and are exceedingly multiplied: for those do they hold to be this captivity of Jerusalem here mentioned, viz. of the tribe of Judah; and the other in Germany, and Italy, to be of the tribe of Benjamin: who in honour of the more noble tribe, and to correspond with them the better, do learn the Spanish Tongue: which those still retain, in hope, belike, to be one day Lords of that large and rich country.

Shall possesse the cities of the South.] i. e. shall return to their own Sontherly cities and provinces. Verse 21. And Saviours shall come up on mount Zion, ] Judas Machabeus, and Hircanus in the history: as in the mysterie, the Apostles and other of Christs Ministers, who are here and elsewhere called Saviours (a very high stile) because God maketh use of their Ministry (as he doth likewise of the Angels) for the good of them that are heirs of salvation, Heb. 1. 14. and by their help, the faithfull are saved. Hence those expressions, 1 Tim. 4. 16. thou shalt save thy self and those that hear thee, 1am. 5. 20. he shall save a soul from death, Job 33. 24. Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have received a ransom. See also Mic. 5. 6, Jude 23. 1 Cor. 3. 6, 7, 9. and 4. 1. and 9. 22. Let Ministers hence learn their dignity, and their duty. Christ hath communicated to them many of his own most honourable titles, as Light of the world, Doctor, Pastour, Saviour, Redeemer, &c. True it is, He alone is the principall Saviour (and therefore it followeth in the closure of this shortest, but most difficult Prophet, the kingdom shall be the Lords) He, to speak properly is the sole both Sovereign and Saviour of his body the Church. Sed servatores dicuntur, saith Mercer, but they are called Saviours, because they preach the word of this salvation, and are instrumentall to Christ in that great work, like as the Apothecary is to the skilfull Physician, in curing his patient of a deadly disease.

to judge the mount of Esau, ] Antichrist with his adherents: all other Infidels also, and Atheists, condemned here by Christ and his faithfull Ministers, as rebels against God, and sinners against their own souls. Wilt thou judge them, sonne of man? wilt thou judge them? cause them to know their abomination, and to judge themselves worthy to bee destroyed; that judging themselves, they may not bee judged, 1 Cor. 11. 31. but of Esauites may become true Iacobites: as Iether, by nature an Ismaelite, 1 Chron. 7. 17. is, for his faith and piety, called an Israelite, 2 Sam. 17. 25. Lo thus to judge the mount of Esau, ought to bee the ambition of Christs Ministers, for to gain them to Christ, by convincing the world of sinne, of righteonsnesse, and of judgement, that is, of the mischief of sinne, the necessity of justification by Christs merit, and of sanctification by his Spirit. This is to be both Judges and Saviours; as those Judges of old were, whereunto the Prophet here seemeth to allude. This is to save people with fear, pulling them out of the fire, Jude 23. This is to proclaim Christ King, and to set the Crown upon his head, as Cant. 3. 11. with that glorious acclamation, The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our law-giver, the Lord is our King, and He will save us, Esay 33. 22.

more plainly, then if he had by voice foretold his death and resurrection. And whereas the Grandees and Potentates of the world get them a great name by the death and danger of many others; Jonas his omnibus superior est, saith an Interpreter, Jonah surpasseth them all in this, that by his sermon at Niniveh he preserved that great city, wherein were so many thousand persons, and so much cattle chap. 4. 11. That he was called and sent thither by God, it appeareth by this text, and Oecolampadius observeth it. He was not, saith he, of them that run before they are sent; but being sent, he refused to run, because of the hardnesse of the task laid upon him: as did likewise Moses and Jeremy, till better tutorred. There is lesse danger in refusing to run when sent, then in running unsent. But when God calleth a man to the ministry, let him not doubt or despond, though at first he find not so much encouragement. Magna semper fecerint, qui Deo vocante docuerunt, saith Luther. They have alwayes done great things that have followed Gods call, as did Jonas at Niniveh, and doth still in the Church of God: for among others, Cyprian that famous Mariyr confesseth, that he was converted from idolatry and Necromancy, by hearing the history of the Prophet Jonas read and expounded to him by Cecilius, whom he thenceforth called nova vita parentem, the father of his christian life.

As in the Papacy (where the whore sitteth upon them Rev. 17. 1. that is, useth them vilely and basely; sitteth upon their consciences, as Rachel did upon her fathers images) though their superiours command the Friars a voyage to China or Pern, without dispute or delay they must presently set forward: to detract or disobey in this case is held breach of vow, equall to sacrifice: This is intollerable tyranny. But where God calleth or commandeth (as here,) to ask a reason, is presumption; to oppose reason, is rebellion. Paul durst not but be obedient to the heavenly vision Act. 26. 19. Jonah declined his Apostleship (as a Father calleth it) but it had like to have cost him a choaking: whereof when in danger, he could confesse that They that observe lying vanities (as he had done to his cost) forsake their own mercy, are miserable by their own election. (whence some take it here for the sea) but that may be by a metonymie of the ad-junct: because Tarsus stood upon the Ocean-shore, and was a fit haven whence to hoise up saile into sundry countries.

from the presence of the Lord] Ab ante Domini from the speciall and spirituall presence of God wherein he had hitherto stood and ministred. For from Gods generall presence (whereby he filleth all places) and is not farr from any one of us Act. 17. 27. (not so farr surely, as the bark is from the tree, the skin from the flesh, or the flesh from the bones) Jonas knew he could not flee. Blind Nature saw and could say,

God is a circle, said Empedocles, whose center is every where, whose circumference is no where. Why the Prophet fled, many causes are assigned by Interpreters: as Amor patriæ, timor humanus &c. his feare of the Ninevites, his love to his Israelites, his conceit that it would be to little purpose to preach to heathens, sith he had prevailed so little at home &c. The very cause was that which we find chap. 4. 2. I fled to Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God &c. and I feared, feared, lest I should thereupon be counted a false Prophet. So much there is of Self found in the best: who when once they are got out of Gods way, they may run they know not whither, and return they know not when.

and went down to Ioppa] Heb. Iapho, a sea-town in the tribe of Dan. Iosh. 19. 46. distant about 50. miles from Geth-Hepher (Jonas his town 2 King. 14. 25.) which was in the tribe of Zabulon toward the lake of Tiberias. Sinners are no small paines-takers. There is the same Hebrew and Greek word for wickednesse and toilesomenesse. Would sinners be at the same paines for heaven, that they are at for hell, they could not lightly mis of it.

and he found a ship going to Tarshish] They that have a mind to commit sin, shall easily meet with an occasion: the Tempter, who feelth their pulses and knoweth which way they beat, will soon fit them a penniworth: He hath a wedge of gold to set before Achan, a Coxbi before Zimri. Indeed it is the just mans happinesse, that no evill shall happen to him Prov. 12. 21. that is (as Mercer interpreteth it) non parabitur ei & dabitur occasio iniquitatis, God shall cut off from him the occasions of sin, remove stumbling-blocks out of his way; either not lead him into temptation, or not leave him in it.

so he paid the fare thereof] Forſan ut citius navie ſolveret: perhaps to make the marriners hasten the more. Jonas might better have obeyed God and gone to Nineveh on free-coſt. But wit is best when 'tis bought, they say. How many be there, who periſh at their own charge; as Phocion the Athenian payd for the poyſon that diſpatched him.

to go with them to Tarshish from the preſence &c.] i. e. out of Gods bleſſing, into the worlds warme Sun. All wilfull ſinners are runnagates from the Lord; ſatiſque ſunt à corde ſuo fugitivi, ſaith Tertullian: ſaine they would alſo run (if they knew how, or whither) from their own conſciences. But if they belong to God, Conſcience ſhall be awakened to do its office: and they ſhall one day ſay with her, I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home againe empty, why then call ye me Naomi; call me Marah: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me Ruth 1. 20, 21.

Verſe 4. But the Lord ſent out] Heb. caſt forth, ſc. out of his treaſuries Pſal. 135. 7. where-hence he ſendeth at his pleaſure mighty great winds which he (the only Æolus) holdeth in his fiſt, hideth in his repositories, checketh them as he ſeeth good, weighs them in his hand Iob 28. 25. ſends them out as his Poſts, makes them pace orderly, appoints them their motion, whether as meſſengers of mercy Num. 11. 13. Gen. 8. 1. Exod. 14. 21. or as executioners of juſtice Exod. 10. 13. Iob 1. 29. hurting mens houſes, cattle, corn, perſons: yea hurrying and hurling the wicked into hell Iob 27. 21.

a great wind into the ſea] whither they that go down in ſhips ſee Gods great wonders in the deep. For he commandeth and raiſeth the ſtormy wind, which liſteth up the waves thereof &c. Pſa. 107. 23, 24, 25. &c. Did it not ſo in a marvelous manner here in 88. and againe in that other 88. ſome few yeares ſince? Had not Jehoſaphat his ſhips broken at, Ezion-geber 1 King. 22. 48. and Charles the fifth at Algeire by two terrible tempeſts, which deſtroyed almoſt all that goodly Fleet? The very marriners acknowledged this wind to be an effect of Gods juſtice, and therefore thought fit to implore his mercy: for there was a mighty tempeſt in the ſea] which is troubleſome of it ſelf and never ſtill; though ſometimes it ſeems ſo: but by bluſtering and big winds is made out of meaſure troubleſome, ſuch as was that καλας Luk. 8. 23. and that Εν-ροχλυν Act. 27. 14. which Pliny calleth Navigantium, Peſtem, the marriners miſery.

ſo that the ſhip was like to be broken] Heb. thought to be broken. Gr. was in danger to be broken: the marriners made no other reckoning: they looked upon all as loſt. God reſerveth his holy hand for a dead liſt uſually: and loveth to help thoſe that are forſaken of their hopes.

Verſe 5. Then the marriners were afraid, and cryed every man to his God] Forced by the preſent neceſſity, fiſt theſe ſtout fellowes were ſurprized with feare: neither could they looke pale death in the face with blood in their cheeks. Death is the king of terrors Iob 18. 14. Natures ſlaughter-man, Gods curſe and hels purveyour.

Next they cryed every man to his God. This was a lesson of Dame Natures teaching, sc. that there is a God, and that this God is to be called upon, and especially in distresse. Thole fooles of the people that said there was no God, could not (when hardly bestead) but look up to heaven and cry out for help. All people will walk every one in the name of his God Mic. 4. 5. These mariners or salt-men (so called, either because they dealt in that commodity, or else because they rowed in the salt sea) had their severall gods, according to their severall countries, and these they now called upon, whom till now perhaps they little enough cared for; sea-men are not over-pious, for most part. And yet of the Turkish mariners I have read, that every morning they salute the Sun with their generall shouts; and a Priest saying a kind of Letany, every prayer ending with Macree Kieboon that is, be Angels present: the people answer in manner of a shout Homin, that is Amen. But it is remarkable, that these in the text, though they cryed every man to his God, yet, lest they might all mistake the true God, they awaken Jonah to call upon his God. This uncertainty, attending idolatry, caused the Heathens to close their petitions with that generall Dijque Deaque omnes. But (thirdly) as they cried to their gods, so (according to that rule Ora & labora.)

they cast forth the wares that were in the ship Not doubting to sacrifice their goods to the service of their lives. Skin for skin, and all that a man hath &c. so Act. 27. 18 19, 38. Let us lose any thing for eternal life Luk. 16. 8. and 9. 25. Mat. 18. 8. suffer any hardship for heaven: we cannot buy it too deare. A stone will fall down to come to its own place, though it break it self in peeces by the way: so we, that we may get to our center, which is upward &c.

but Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship Into the bottom of it, hither he had betaken himself before the storm; not considering that God had long hands to pull him out of his lurking-holes, and bring him to judgement.

and he lay and was fast asleep It's likely, that he had not slept of many nights before (through care, feare and grief, those three vultures that had been gnawing upon his inwards) and therefore now sleeps the more soundly. Or rather it was carnall security: his heart being hardened by the deceitfulness of sin Heb. 3. 12. He had hardened his heart against Gods feare, and wilfully withdrawn from his obedience: hence this spirituall lethargy, this deep sleep in sin; not unlike that of the Smiths dog, whom neither the hammers above him, nor the sparks of fire falling round about him can awake: though the water-pot and speare be taken from the bolster, the secure person stirs not: though the house be on fire over his eares, he starts not. Their senselesnesse God will cure in his Jonas's, by sharp afflictions. Cold diseases must have hot and sharp remedies. The lethargy is best cured by a burning ague: God will let his presumptuous people see what it is to make wounds in their consciences, to trie the preciousnesse of his balm: such may go mourning to their graves. And though with much adoe they get assurance of pardon, yet their consciences will be still trembling as Dauids Psa. 51. till God speake further peace, even as the water of the sea after a storm is not presently still: but moves and trembles a good while after the storme is over.

Verse 6. So the ship-master came unto him God might have come himself with his drawn sword, (as Baannah and Rechab did upon sleeping Ishboseth) and taken off his head: or have sent an evill Angel to arouse him in a fright: or have thrown him into the burning lake, as Agrippa did his dormouse into the boyling caldron. But such is not Gods manner of dealing with his people, though he be deeply displeased. Correct them he will, but with judgement not in his anger, lest they be burnt to nothing. Instruct them also he will (Corrections of instruction are the way of life Pro. 6. 23.) by one meanes or other; as he did here Jonas by a rude mariner: and as long before he had done Abraham and Sarah by Abimelech an Heathen Prince, to shame them what meanest thou O sleeper Heb. what's come to thee? what a senselesse stupidity hath seized thee. Are we all in danger, and dost thou sleep? as the Philosopher (in danger likewise of shipwrack) said to one that made light of it, Do we all stand upon our lives, and dost thou play the foole? The spirituall sleeper, in like sort, may he be but warme in his own feathers, regards not the danger of the house. He is, saith One, a mere mute and cipher, a nullity in the world, a superfluity

arise, call upon thy God] For our gods will do nothing for us. The gods of the heathen are silver and gold, the work of mens hands: they have mouthes but speak not, &c. Psal. 115. 4. But if Gods Israel trust in the Lord, he will be their help, and their shield, v. 9. Forasmuch as there is none like unto him, Ier. 10. 6. neither is their Rock as our Rock, our enemies themselves being judges, Dent. 32. 31.

if so be that God will think upon us.] The Chaldee hath it, will be merciful unto us: The Hebrew word signifieth, will clear up, and behold us with a serene countenance; granting us a calme, and taking care that we perish not. So shall we acknowledge him to be Haelohim, that God by an excellency. Q. Elizabeth (that Regina Serenissima) for her merciful returning home certain Italians that were taken prisoners in the 88 Invasion, was termed Saint Elizabeth by some at Venice: who also affirmed to the English Embassadour there, that though they were Papists, yet they would never pray to any other Saint, but that Saint Elizabeth.

Vers. 7. And they said every one to his fellow] when Ionnas had now prayed, and yet the tempest continued (for we know that God heareth not sinners, Iob. 9. 31. no not a David or a Jonah, if he regard iniquity in his heart, Psal. 66. 18. how should the plaister prevaile whiles the weapon remains in the wound?) they resolve to try another course for the safegard of their lives. Man is ζῷον καὶ σαρκὶν, a creature that would faine live, said Esoy; and what man is he that desireth life, and loveth many dayes: that he may see good, saith David, whereunto Austin answereth, Quis vitam non vult? who would not be master of such an happinesse? Rom. 4.

Come and let us cast lots] And so put the matter into Gods hands, Pro. 16. 33. He disposeth of lottery, so it be rightly undertaken, not superstitiously, curiously, rashly: but as trusting in God, and not tempting him.

that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us] Some extraordinary cause they knew there was of this extraordinary tempest. Sinful men strike not their dogs, much lesse their children, without a cause. A Bee stings not, till provoked; neither doth God punish his creatures, till there be no other remedy, 2 Chron. 36. 16. Good therefore is the counsell of the Prophet, Lam. 3. 39, 40. Why is living man sorrowful, a man for the punishment of his sin? Let us search and trie our wayes (find out the sin that God strikes at) and turn again to the Lord; turn and live.

so they cast lots.] They should have also prayed, as Alt. 1. & 6. saying as Saul, 1 Sam. 14. Give a perfect lot: wicked men also are bound to pray, Psal. 14. 4. but although they do not, God can get himself glory by their prophane lottery; as he did by Nebuchadnezzars, Ezek. 21. 20, 21.

and the lot fell upon Jonah] Secret sins will out at length, and be brought into judgement, Eccles. 12. 14. Sæculi latitia est impunita nequitia. Surely the bitterness of death is past, said Agag, but he found it otherwise. Jonah thought himself out of the reach of Gods rod, &c. Wicked mens faults shall be written in their foreheads; and they forced to answer for all at last with flames about their ears. Aug.

Vers. 8. Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause, &c.] He confessed not till urged, and necessitated. Sinne gaggeth people, and prompts them to hide their faults, as Adam; or at least to mince, extenuate, shift them upon other persons and things, as Eve. Sinne and shifting came into the world together; and Satan, that old manlayer, knowing that there is no way to purge the soul but upwards, holds the lips close, that the heart may not disburden it self, God by this means is oft put to his proof, and must bring the malefactor to trial; who refusing ordinary trial, must therefore be preft, Ier. 2. 35. 1 Sam. 15.

what is thine occupation?] For that thou hast one, we take it for granted. At Athens every man was once a year, at least, to give account to the Judges by what art or trade he maintained himself. By Mahomet's law, the Grand Signior himself must use some manual trade; Solyman the Magnificent made arrow-heads; Mahomet the great, horn-rings for archers, &c. That which the mariners here enquire after is, whether Jonas his occupation be honest and lawful? whether he laboured the thing that was good, Eph. 4. 28. For if any man over-reach or oppresse his brother in any matter, by the use of any ill arts, he shall be sure to find, that the Lord is the avenger and whence comest thou? ] Art thou not of an accursed countrey? and is not thy people a people of Gods wrath, as England was in the time of the sweating-sicknesse, pursuing the English where-ever they came; which made them like tyrants both feared and avoyded of all nations? How the Jewes are at this day hated and shunned as an execrable people, is known to all.

What is thy countrey, and of what people art thou? ] *Nota*nda brevitatis, saith Hierome here, Note the brevity of these questions, nothing short of those in Virgil so much admired.

Note also here, how these Pagans proceed not to execution, till they have fully inquired into the matter. This was farre better then that ugly custome of some people in Europe, mentioned by Eneas Sylvius: that if any one amongst them be suspected of theft, or the like crime, he is presently taken and hanged up. Then, three dayes after they examine the businesse; and the party be found guilty, they suffer his body there to hang till it rot down: or if otherwise, they bury him in the Church-yard, and keep a funeral-feast at the publike charge.

Vers. 9. And he said unto them, I am an Hebrew ] i. e. a true Beleever, as was Heber the Patriarch, Gen. 10. 21. and, after him, Abram the Hebrew, as he is called, Gen. 14. 13. This name of Hebrews, as it was the first title given to Abraham and his seed, so it indureth one of the last, 2 Cor. 11. 22. Philip: 3. 5. Epistle to the Hebrews, title.

and I fear the Lord God of heaven, ] That's mine occupation: I serve God with my spirit, in the Gospel of his Sonne, as Paul hath it, Rom. 1. 9. every faithful Minister is servant to the King of heaven, Act. 27. 23. (this the devil could not deny, Act. 16. 16, 17.) neither is he of his meaner or inferiour servants, of his Underling, sbut of the noblest employment: Ministers are his Stewards, Embassadors, Paronyms, or Spokesmen, &c. and this is their occupation, or their work; farre beyond that of Solomons servants.

which hath made the sea, and the drie land, ] This troublesome sea that now so threatneth you: and that drie land which you would so fain recover. These, with all their contents, are his creatures: neither did he make them, and then leave them to Fate or Fortune; as a carpenter leaves the house he hath built to others, or a ship-wright the ship: but he ordereth and ruleth them at his pleasure, and will unmake all again, rather then his shall want help in one season, P'sal. 124. 8. and 134. 3. This was part of Jonah's confession, and but part of it: for he told them (no doubt) how ill he had dealt with this great and good God, running away by stealth from his masters service, and detrecting his yoke; and that therefore he was justly apprehended, and adjudged to death. To this purpose was Jonas his confession, qua ei salutis fuit exordium, saith Mercer, which was the beginning of his safety and salvation. Now his hard heart is broken, and his dumb mouth opened, not only to confesse his offence, but to aggravate it: in that being not only an Hebrew of the Hebrewes, a member of the true Church, but a Prophet, a Doctour in Israel, he should deal so perversely and perfidiously. It is a sweet happinesse when sin swels as a toad in a mans eyes, and he can freely confesse it in the particulars, and with utmost aggravation; laying open al his transgressions in all his sinnes, as Moses phraseth it, Lev. 16. 21. Affliction sanctified will bring a soul to this, as here it did the Prophet: like herein to that helve Eliſa cast into the water, that fetcht up the iron that was in the bottom.

Vers. 10. Then were the men exceedingly afraid ] Heb. with great fear; when once they had heard the businesse, and weighed the particulars of his message to Nineveh, of his miscarriage, and of his present misery, together with the danger that themselves were in for his sake: how much more for their own, as being conscious to themselves of farre more and greater sinnes then Jonas had to answer for, &c.

for I know that for my sake, this tempest is upon you.] If Jonah were a type of Christ, in that being cast into the Sea, a calme followed: yet herein hee differed, that Christ suffered not for his own offences, but bore our sinnes in his own body on the tree, and died, the just for the unjust.

Verse 13. Nevertheless the men rowed, ] Heb. digged: for so they that row seem to do with their oars, as with spades. Hence also the Latine Poets say, that Boatsmen cut, plow, furrow the waters. Insidunt pariter sulcos, — The Seventy render it inscidere, they did their utmost indeavour with violence, to bring the ship to shore, and to save Jonah: and not as those bloody Emperours, Tiberius, Caligula, and Claudius, who took delight in the punishment of offenders, and used to come early in the morning into the market-place, to behold their executions. Non nisi coactus, said that better Emperour, when he was to subscribe a sentence of death: and, Oh that I could not write mine own name, said Another upon the like occasion.

but they could not, ] They did but strive against the stream, for the Lord had otherwise determined it: and Voluntas Dei ne esset rei: who hath resisted his will? for the Sea wrought and was tempestuous against them.] As verse 11. Præsentemq; vires intentant omnia mortem.

We beseech thee, O Lord, we beseech thee, ] A most ardent and affectionate prayer. A naturall man may pray from the bottome of his heart, out of a deep sense of his wants: but he cannot give thanks from the bottom of his heart; because void of the love of God, and joy of faith. Danaus noteth from these words, that Judges ought to pray before they passe sentence of death upon any.

Let us not perish for this mans life, ] which we take away, but full sore against our wills. Wilfull murder was ever accounted an heinous crime among the Heathens also. Abels innocent blood had as many tongues as drops, to crie to heaven against Cain. Gen. 4. 10. The voice of thy brothers bloods. And 1 King. 9. 26. Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth. Murder ever bleeds fresh in the eye of God: and to him, many years, yea, that eternity that is past, is but yesterday. Full well then did these men so earnestly deprecate the guilt of innocent blood, which they knew would lie and light heave.

The Marriners had tried all wayes to save him: till they saw they must either destroy him, or be destroyed with him. So deal many with their beloved sins, which they are loth to mortifie, they see they must either kill or be killed, Rom. 8. 13. either turn from them to God, or burn for ever in hell. Jonas his charity is exemplary, who yielded to perish alone, rather then to have others perish with him, and for him: the Devil and his imps desire to draw company the same way with themselves; and say as that wretch of old, When I die, may the earth be all fired.

and cast him forth into the Sea, ] Thus dealeth God by his servant Jonah; formerly faithfull in his office, and able thereunto, and therefore sent to Nineveh. Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, Prou. 11. 31. here they are sure of their payment, neither can all their good deeds bear out one prepened wickednesse, or a lesser fault that lies unrepented of: as were easie to instance in Moses, Miriam, David, others: And all this proceeds from love displeased.

For They offered a sacrifice to the Lord] They sacrificed (spirituall sacrifices presently, (that holocaust of themselves Rom. 12. 1. that broken heart that lieth low and heareth all that God saith, giving thanks to his name Heb. 13. 15.) and resolved to cover Gods altar at Jerusalem upon their safe arrivall, as the Chaldee here paraphraseth. and made vows] That the true God should be their God (as Jacob the father of vows promised Gen. 28. 21.) and that they would bestow cost on the Temple, on the poor Saints, to feed and cloath them, as Isa. 23. 18. &c.

Verse. 1. Then Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God] i. e. Praised God with this Canticum eucharisticum, this gratulatory song as Tremellius calleth it. That he prayed in the ship, in the sea, in the whales belly, we donbt not; but that he chiefly intendeth to shew his thankfulness for the return of prayers, and the sweet support he felt in the whales belly, we do as little doubt; See ver. 2, 6, 7. yea that this was the substance (though now better methodized) of what he praised and praised in the bowels of the fish, we have cause to beleave from this very verse: and therefore also his deliverance is set down ver. 10. after his doxologie. The word here rendred pray'd signifieth also sometimes, to give thanks, as 1 Sam. 2. 2. and who knowes not that thanksgiving is a speciall part of prayer? This therefore: Jonah having prayed, and perceiving that he was heard, and by the goodnesse of God preserved safe in body, and sound in mind, he growes strong in faith, giving glory to God: and being fully perswaded that he should yet walk before him againe in the land of the living.

out of the fishes belly] where though he might seem buried alive, and free among the dead, yet he enjoyed Gods gracious presence, and those strong consolations, that made him live in the very mouth of death, and say in effect as blessed Bradford did, I thank God more of this prison and of this dark dungeon then of any parlour, yea then of any pleasure that ever I had. For in it I find God my most sweet God alwayes.

Lam. 3. 29.

Verse 2. And said, I cried by reason of mine affliction] His lips did not move in affliction, like a creaking doore or a new cart-wheele, with murmuring and mutinying against God and men: he set not his mouth against heaven (as the howling wolf when hunger-bit) neither did his tongue walk through the earth, cursing the day of his birth, and cutting deep into the sides of such as were meanes of his misery. But putting his mouth in the dust, if so bee there might be hope, he cried by reason of his affliction. The time of affliction is the time of supplication: no time like that for granting of suites Zech. 13. 9. Gods afflicted may have what they will of him then, such are his fatherly compassions to his sick children: he reserveth his best comforts for the worst times, and then speaketh to the hearts of his people, when he hath brought them into the wilderness Hos. 2. 13. This Jonah experimented, and therefore said, I cried out of mine affliction unto the Lord.

And he heard me] How else am I alive amidst so many deaths? here's a visible answer, a recall return: Oh blessed be God who hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me Psal. 66. 20. Surely as the cloud, which riseth out of the earth many times in them and insensible vapours, falleth down in great and abundant showers: so our prayers, which ascend weak and narrow, return with a full and enlarged answer. This was but a pittifull poore prayer that Jonas here made, as appeares ver. 4. and so was that of David Psal. 31. 22. For I said in mine hast I am cut off from before thine eyes: Nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications, when I cried unto thee. It would be wide with us, if God should answer the best of us according to our prayers, yea though well watered with teares: sith Ipsa lacryma sinit lacrymales &c. we had need to weep over our teares, sigh over our sobs, mourne over our griefs &c. Jonah was so taken with this kindnesse from the Lord his God, that he repeates it and celebrates it a second time.

out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice] The whales belly he calleth hells-belly, because horrid and hideous, deep and dismall. Thence he cried as David did De profundis, and was heard and delivered. Yea had hell it self closed her mouth upon a praying Jonah, it could not long have held him: but must have vomited him up. A Mandamus from God will do it at any time, Psa. 44. 4. and what cannot faithfull Praier have of God? there is a certaine omnipotency in it, said Luther.

Verse 3. For thou hadst cast me into the deep] A graphicall description of his wofull condition, which yet he remembreth now as waters that are past and is thankfull to his Almighty Deliverer. See the like in David Psa. 116. 3. and learn of these and other Saints, to acknowledge the uttermost extremity of a calamity, after we are delivered out of it. For hereby thy judgement will be the better instructed and the more convinced: thine heart also will be the more enlarged to admire, and thy mouth the wider opened to celebrate the power, wildome, and mercy of God in thy deliverance. As if this be not done, God will be provoked either to inflict heavier judgements, or else to cease to smite thee any more with the stripes of a father, and to give thee up for a lost child.

for thou hadst cast me into the deep] Not the mariners, but Thou didst it: and therefore there was no averting or avoyding it. Thou hadst cast me with a force, as a stone out of a sling, or as that mighty Angel Rev. 18. 21. that took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence &c.

In the midst of the seas] Heb: in the heart of the sea's: so Mat. 12. 40. So shall the Son of man be three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth. And Deut. 4. 11. we read of the heart of heaven that is, the middle of it, as the heart sitteth in the midst of the body as king of that Isle of Man. Now if it were so grievous to be cast into the main Sea, what shall it be to be hurled into hell, by such an hand, and with such a force into that bottomelesse gulf, whence nothing was ever yet boyed up againe?

and the floods compassed me about] Aquarum confuges The Sea, whence all floods or rivers issue, and whereto they return (Homer calleth the Ocean ποταμὸν a river by the figure Misís) Danaus here noteth that out of that gulf of the Sea, which of Plato is called Tartarus, that is, hell, the waters do flow into the veines of the earth (as it is Eccles. 1. 7.) losing their saltnesse in the passage. Here Jonah cried out as Psa. 69. 1. 2. Save me, O God: for the waters are come in unto my soule. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into the deep waters, where the floods overflow me. It was onely his faith that held him up by the chin: and, like blown bleathers, bore him aloft all waters.

ων. libad. 5.

all thy billowes and thy waves passed over me] All: so it seemed to Jonah, that God had poured out all his displeasure upon him: but he suffereth not his whole wrath to arise against his people: neither remembreth iniquity for ever. Thy billowes or surges, not the seas but thine. God seemed to fight against Jonah with his own hand. David likewise in a desertion complains that all Gods waves and floods were gone over him Pf. 42. 7. In this case (for it may be any ones case) let us do as Paul and his company did (in that dismall tempest Act. 27. when they saw neither sun nor star for diverse dayes and nights together) cast anchor of hope, even beyond hope: and then wait and wish for day. God will appeare at length, and all shall clear up: he will deliver our soules from the nethermost hell.

Vers. 4. Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight.] Thus those straits brought him to these disputes of despair, as they did likewise David, Psal. 31. 22. the Church in the Lamentations Chap. 4. 22. and others, apt enough in affliction to have hard conceits of God, and heavy conceits of themselves. Whiles men look at things present, whiles they live by sense onely, it must needs be with them as with an house without pillars, tottering with every blast; or as a ship without anchor, tossed with every wave. They must therefore thrust Hagar out of doors, and set up Sarah; silence their reason, and exalt Faith, as did Jonas here; Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight: Here you may take him up for a dead man; here he inclineth somewhat to that of Cain, Gen. 4. 13, 14. and surely they that go down to this pit (of despair, as Hezekiah speaketh of the grave) cannot hope for Gods truth, as long as there they stay.

yet I will look again toward thine holy Temple] Here he recollects and recovers himself: as the same soul may successively doubt and believe; not simultaneously: and faith, where it is right, will at length outwrestle diffidence, and make a man more then a conquerour, even a *Triumph*er. When sense saith such a thing will not be, Reason saith, It cannot be, Faith gets above and saith, Yea, but it shall be: what talk you to me of Impossibilities, I shall yet (as low as I am, and as forlorn) look again towards Gods holy Temple of heaven; yea, that here on earth, where God is sincerely served, and whereto the precious are annexed. Faith is by one fitly compared to the cork upon the net: though the lead on the one sinks it down, yet the cork on the other keeps it up in the water. The faithful soon check themselves for their doubtings and despondency, as Jonah here; as David chides David, Psal. 43. 5 and as Paul saith of himself and his fellowes, that they were staggering, but not wholly sicking, 2 Cor. 4. 8.

Vers. 5. The waters compassed me about even to the soul] that is, usque ad animam deliquimus, till I laboured for life; and was as good as gone.

The depth closed me round about] see the Note on vers. 3. and further observe, that Gods dear children may fall into desperate and deadly dangers, see Psal. 18. 3. and 88. 3. & 116. 3. And this for 1. prevention, 2. purgation, 3. probation, 4. preparations to further both mercies and duties. Let us not therefore censure our selves or others as hated of God, because greatly distressed ; but encourage our selves in them, as did David at Ziklag, 1 Sach. 30. 6. The right of the Lord shall change all this.

The weeds were wrapt about mine head] Alga as Alligando. The weeds which the fish had devoured, or whereunto the fish, wherein I was, had dived and lain down amongst them. Or this might befall Jonah in the bottom of the sea, before the fish had swallowed him : for weeds easily wrap about those that swim, or are drowned.

Vers. 6. I went down to the bottomes of the mountains] that is, of the promontories, or rocks of the sea, where the waters are deepest. Thus Morcer after Kimchi. The channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered, Psal. 18. 15. The mountains are said to be under water, Prov. 8. 25. because their foundations are there placed.

the earth with her barres was about me for ever] As if resolved there to keep me close prisoner ; that though the fish had disgorged me, yet I should never have got to land. The shores are set by God as barres to keep the sea within his bounds, Job 38. 8, 10, 11. Jer. 5. 22. Here then all the creatures seemed to set against poor Jonas, and (which was more then all) the Creatour too : so that he might sigh and say, as in the Poet,

*In me omnis terraq; aviumq; marisq; rapina est :

Verſe 7. When my ſoul fainted within me, I remembered the Lord] And could ſay as the Church in Eſay when at loweſt, Doubtleſſe thou art our Father, our Redeemer, thy Name is from everlaſting. As there is in the creatures an inſtinct of nature to do their kind : ſo there is of grace in the Saints, to run to God. Tea in the way of thy judgements, O Lord, have we waited for thee : the deſire of our ſoule is to thy Name, and to the remembrance of thee : With my ſoule have I deſired thee in the night : yea with my ſpirit within me will I ſeek thee early &c. Eſa. 26. 8, 9. Oh Lord, ſaith Habacuc, art not thou from everlaſting my God and mine holy One. It was a bold queſtion, but God approves and aſſents to it in a gracious answer, ere they went further ; We ſhall not die ( ſay they obruptly ) O Lord thou haſt ordained them ( the Caldeans ) for judgement : but us onely for chaſtiſement. Here was the triumph of their faith, and this was that which held up Jonas his hope though with wonderfull difficulty, held head above water. He remembered the yeeres of the right hand of the moſt High Pſal. 77. 10. he called to mind his ſongs in the night ſeaſon ver. 6. his former experience, a juſt ground of his preſent confidence. He remembered the Lord, his Power and Goodneſſe, thoſe two pillars, the Jachin and the Boaz that ſupport Faith ; and this fetcht him againe when ready to faint. I had even fainted, unleſſe I had believed to ſee the goodneſſe of the Lord in the land of the living, Pſal. 27. 13.

and my prayer came in unto thee] q. d. Though I was ſo faint I could ſcarce utter a prayer, yet thou harkneſt and heardeſt, as Mal. 3. 16. thou madeſt hard ſhift shift to hear, (as I may say) thine ears were in my prayers, as S. Peter hath it, 1 Pet. 3. 12. thou feldest my breathing, when no voice could bee heard, Lam. 3. 56. thou heldest not thy peace at my tears, Psal. 39. 12. quando fletu agerem non afflatu, yea thou heardest the voice of mine affliction, Gen. 16. 11.

Into thine holy Temple. ] Whether we take it of the Temple at Jerusalem (a type of Christ) Jonah's prayer was accepted for Christs sake: and proved to no lesse purpose, though made in the Whales belly, then if he had been pouring it out in Gods holy Temple. Or, if we understand it of Heaven, the habitation of Gods holinesse, and of his glory, his orisons were come up thither, for a memorial before the Almighty, Act. 10. 4. and like pillars of incense pierced into his presence, Can. 3. 6. neither would they away without their errand, but lay at Gods feet, til he should command deliverance out of Zion.

Verse 8. They that observe lying vanities. ] That listen to sense and reason in matters of God, and make provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof, as Jonah had done to his cost, till, having payed for his learning, he descried them all to bee but lying vanities, or most vain vanities, emptie Nothings.

for sake their own mercy. ] Are miserable by their own election, because sinners (in a speciall manner) against their own souls, as were Corab and his complices, Num. 16. 38. as was Pope Silvester, who gave his soul to the Devil for seven years enjoyment of the Popedome: and as are all those wilfull wicked persons, that refusing to be reformed, and hating to be healed, chuse to spend the span of this life after the wayes of their own hearts, though they thereby perish for ever. These are those fools of the people, that preferre an apple before Paradise, a melle of portage before the inheritance of heaven; their swine before their Saviour, turning their backs upon those blessed and bleeding embracements of his, and cruelly cutting the throats of their own poor souls, by an impenitent continuance in sinne: so losing, for a few bitter-sweet pleasures, or paltry profits in this vale of tears, for an inch of time, that fulnesse of felicity at Gods right hand, thorough all eternity. It is written of them who tame the Tyger, that when they have taken away the young one, knowing that presently they shall be pursued by the old Tygresse, they set looking-glasses in the way by which they flee: whereunto when she cometh and seeth some representation of her self, she lingreth about them a good space, deceived by the shadow, and detained in a vain hope to recover the young againe: Mean-while the hunter most speedily posteth away with his prey. Semblably dealeth Satan with the men of this world (saith mine Authour) He casts before them the deceitfull lusts of profit, pleasure, and preferment (the worldlings Trinity) those lying vanities, being none other then shadows and semblances of good: yet are men so delighted with these, that they dote about them, having no care to pursue the enemy, for recovery of that image of God, the Divine nature, that Satan hath beguiled them of. He setteth them to the tree of knowledge, that they may not taste of the tree of life. He putteth out their eyes with the dust of covetousnesse, and shutteth their ears against the instructions of life, lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their hearts, and should be converted, and God should heal them, Mat. 13. 15. In all which there is not any thing more to be lamented then this, that people should love to have it so, Jer. 6. 31. be active in their own utter undoing, Hos. 13. 9. wittingly and willingly forsake God the fountain of living waters (their own mercies, as he is here called, and elsewhere, Psal. 144. 2.) and hew themselves out cisternes, broken cisternes that can hold no water, Jer. 2. 13.

Verse 9. But I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving. ] q. d. Let others do as they think good: let them make a match with mischief till they have enough of it. Let them walk till they have wearied themselves, in the wayes of their hearts, and in the sight of their eyes: but let them know (I speak it by wo-full experience) that for all these things, God will bring them to judgement, Eccles. 11. 9. The best that can come of sinne is Repentance: and that's not in mans power, but in Gods gift, 2 Tim. 2. 25. If he had not melted mine hard heart, and brought me back to himself with a strong hand, I had pined away in mine iniquities, and perished for ever. But now having been so miraculously delivered from so great a death, I will sacrifice unto the Lord with the voice of thanksgiving. I will set up my more and sing aloud unto God my Saviour, who hath thus beyond all desert, delivered such a miserable wretch, rebell, and runagate as my self.

I will sacrifice ] Heb. I will say, &c. those Birds and beasts in use for feasts and sacrifices at Jerusalem. with the voice of thanksgiving. ] Heb. of confession, that is, I will confesse and acknowledge God to be what he is, to do what he doth, and to give what he giveth. Now to offer a sacrifice, at such a confession, or thanksgiving, added much to the solemnity thereof; and made it more honourable in it self, and more acceptable to God. To these gratulatory sacrifices the word slaying is attributed, as here: to shew, that even in gratulation, expiation must bee made: and that by the blood and sacrifice of Christ all our offerings are accepted in heaven.

I will pay that I have vowed. ] Not my generall vow onely as a Covenanter, to devote my self to his fear and service all my dayes; but those particular, personally voluntary vowes made in my distresse: such as was that of Jacob, Gen. 28. 20. Hannah, 1 Sam. 1. 11. David, Psal. 132. 1, 2. &c. In affliction men are wondrous apt to promise great matters, if they may but be delivered. See Psal. 78. 36. Pliny in an Epistle to one of his friends, that desired rules from him how to order his life aright; I will, saith he, give you one rule, that shall be instead of a thousand. Ut tales esse perseveremus sani, quales nos futuros esse profiteamur infirmi. That you be sure to be the same when well, that you vowed to be when you were sick. But this is few mens care. See Jer. 34. 10, 11. Sonnes of Belial break these bonds (as Sampson did the green withes) and cast away those cords from them; if they could at least: being worse herein then those Mariners, chap. 1, then Saul, that made great conscience of violating his vow, 1 Sam. 14. then Turks and Papists, who are superstitiously strict this way. Jonah knew it to be as bad, if not worse, then perjury, to vow and not to performe, Numb. 30. 3. and that God is the avenger of all such, Deut. 23. 21. He therefore, not merely for fear of punishment, but chiefly for hatred of that sinne faith, I will pay that I have vowed, ] The Hebrew word Ashallemah seemeth to imply two things. First, that his vow, till paid, was incomplete, it was an imperfect thing; the better part of it was yet wanting. Next, that till that chare were done, he could not be at peace within himself, he could not be quiet: for vowes are debts: and debts, till they be payed, are a burden to an honest minde, and do much disease it.

Salvation is of the Lord. ] Salus omnimoda, as the Hebrew word (having one letter more then ordinary in it) importeth: all manner of salvation, full, and plentiful deliverance, is of the Lord; who is therefore called, the God of salvation, unto whom belong the issues from death, Psal. 68. 20. A quo vera salus non aliunde venit. This Jonah speaketh, as he doth all else in this holy Canticke, not by reading, or by rote, but out of his own feeling, and good experience: his whole discourse was digg'd out of his own breast, as it is said of that most excellent 119. Psalm, that it is made up altogether of experiments; and it therefore hath verba non legenda sed vivenda, words not so much to be read; as lived; as One said once of it. Dives thought that if one went from the dead to warne his wicked brethren, they would never be able to resist such powerfull Rhetorick. Behold, here is Jonah raised from the dead, as it were, and warning people to arise, and stand up from dead courses and companies, that Christ may give them light: why do they not then get up and be doing at it, that the Lord may be with them? Shall not the men of Nineveh rise up in judgement with this evil generation, and condemn them, because they repented at the preaching of Jonas: but these do not, though they have many Jonas's, that both preach and practise, non verbis solum predicantes sed & exemplis, as Ensebins saith Origen did, that live sermons and not teach them onely?

Verse 10. And the Lord spake unto the fish, [ He spake the word and it was done. He is the great Centurion of the world, that saith to his creature, Do this, and hee doth it. Yea, he is the great, great Induperator, to whom every thing saith: Insuper sequi tam velle mihi quam posse necesse esse. I am wholly at thy beck, and check. Jonah spake to God, and God to the fish. It may be said of faithfull prayer, that it can do whatsoever God himself can do: sith he is pleased to yeeld himself overcome by the prayers of his people, and to say unto them cordially, as Zedekiah did to his Courtiers colloquingly. The king is not he that can deny you any thing. Prayer is of that power, that it can open the doors of Leviathan, as wee see here, (which

(which yet is reckoned as a thing not feasible; Jonah 4. 24.) yea of the all-devouring grave; Heb. 11. 35. If the Lord, pricked on by the prayers of his people, set in hand to save them, and shall say to the North, Give up; and to the South, Keep not back, bring my sonnes from farre, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, Esay 43. 6. they shall come again, and none shall be able to hinder them: Come therefore (with those good souls in Hosea, who had sinned for their folly, as well as Jonah) and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us: he hath smitten, and he will bind us up. After two dayes will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight. A time we must have to be in the fire, in the fishes belly, as in Gods Nurturing-house; but hee will take care that wee be not there overlong: what's two or three dayes to eterni-ty? Hold out faith and patience: Yet a very little, little while, and hee that shall come, will come, and will not tarry.

and it vomited up Jonah upon the dry land.] And here Death was defeated and wiped: it was much more so, when it had swallowed up Christ; and little dreamt that it self should have been thereby swallowed up in victory. But then was fulfilled that of the Prophet, O death, I will be thy death. And as there so here in a proportion, and as a type, omnia jam inversa, saith Mercer, all things are turned t'other way. Before the fish was an instrument of death; now, of life, and serves Jonah for a ship to bring him to dry land. This fish useth not to come neer the shore, but to sport in the great waters: howbeit now he must, by speciall command, vomit up Jonah upon the dry land. Why then should it be thought a thing incredible with any, that God should raise the dead? The Sea shall surely give up the dead that were in it: and death and hell deliver up the dead that were in them: and they shall be judged every man according to his works, Rev. 20. 13. This, some of the Heathens believed: as Zoroastres, Theopompus, and Plato. And the Stoikes opinion was, that the world should one day be dissolved by fire or water: and all things brought to a better state, or to the first golden age again. But we have a more sure word of Prophecie: and this that is here recorded may serve as an image and type of our preservation in the grave, and our resurrection from the dead, by one and the same Almighty power of God.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. AND the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time. Jonah is a sinner, but not a cast-away. God layes him not by as a broken vessel, treads him not to the dung-hill, as unfavoury salt: but receives him upon his return by repentance, and restores him to his former employment, gives him yet a name, and a nail in his house; yea sends him a second time on his message to Nineveh; and counting him faithfull puts him again into the ministry, who was before a runagate, a rebel, &c. But he obtained mercy, &c. 1 Tim. 1. 13. as did likewise the Apostles, after that they had basely deserted our Saviour at his passion; and Peter after he had denied him. See Ioh. 20. 22, 23. and 21. 15, 16, 17. The penitent are as good as innocent. Return ye back-sliding children (saith the Father of mercies) and I will heal your back-slidings, Ier. 3. 22. The Shulamite returning, is as lovely in Christs eye as before: and all is as well as ever betwixt them, Cant. 6: 4. There is a naturall Novatianisme in the timorous conscience of convicted sinners, to doubt and question pardon for sinnes of Apostasie and falling after repentance: But had they known the gift of God, and who it is that saith to them. Be of good cheer, thy sinnes are forgiven thee, they would have conceived strong consolation.

Verse 2. Arise go unto Nineveh,] Begin again, and take better heed: as the Nazarite was to do, that had defiled the head of his consecration, Numb. 6. 9, 12.

unto Niniveh that great city] See the Note on Chap. 1. 2. There was no city since, by the estimation of Diodorus, had the like compasse of ground or statelinesse of wals; the height thereof being an hundred foot, the breadth able to receive three carts carts a-row, adorned with fifteen hundred turrets. Some think (as Annus & Borsius) that those three cities spoken of, Gen. 10. Rehoboth, Calah and Resen were all included in Niniveh, and they conceive it thus: that when Nimrod had built Babylon, Ninus, disdaining his government, went into the fields of Assur, and there erected a city after his own name. Raphael Volaterranus saith, it was eight years in building, ten thousand men working at it. Quintilian saith, that great Milain, ancient Ravenna, brave Banonia, noble Naples, and other great cities of Italy are but towers to Rome: but what was Rome to Niniveh? and yet Lipsius hath written a treatise of Romes greatness, and when the Emperour Constantine came to Rome, and beheld the companies that entertained him, he repeated a saying of Cineas the Epirote, that he had seen so many kings as citizens: but viewing the building of the city, he thought naturam vires omnes in urbem unam effudisse, that nature had shewed the utmost of what she could do, in that one great city. See more on vers. 3.

and preach unto it the preaching] Heb. Proclaim unto it (or, against it) the proclamation that I say to thee, that I have formerly put into thy mouth, and do now say again, &c. that their wickedness is come up before me, and I am even upon the way toward them to punish it grievously. Flagitium & flagellum sunt semper acui & filum, Who ever waxed fierce against God and prospered? Job 9. 4. This wicked men must be boldly told, Esa. 3. 11. however they take it; neither may Gods ministers steal away the word, Jer. 22. 30. or keep back from the people any part of Gods counsel, Act. 20. 27. handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commend themselves to every mans conscience in the sight of God, 2 Cor. 4. 2. as becometh his Embassadors.

Vers. 3. So Jonah arose, and went unto Niniveh] He went not home first, to bid them farewell, as Luk. 9. 61. neither went he another way, as once: it was enough of that once, and he had learned obedience by the things that he had suffered. To Niniveh he goes, though a mere and a mean stranger, unknown, unregarded, and with an harsh message; such as he might fear would cost him his life from that fierce and furious people. But Jonah feareth nothing now but disobedience: and seems to say, as afterwards Luther did, Iuveniar sine superbo, excus & modo impij filij non arguar, Let me be called and counted proud, mad, any thing, every thing that naught is, so that I be not found guilty of sinful silence, and of betraying the trust committed unto me, by a dastardly deserting the cause of God. Jonah was now of another spirit, and fulfilled after God, as Caleb, Num. 14. 24. for why? he had now received not a spirit of fear, and of bondage, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind, 2 Tim. 1. 7. his spirit of grace had sanctified to him his afflictions, which else would have been but as hammers to cold iron; as they were to Pharaoh, Ahaz, the raving thief, &c. Aben-Ezra saith that as soon as ever the whale had vomited up Jonah, he got up and took the direct way to Niniveh: that if God should command him thither again he might be ready, and shew his forwardness. It is a very good signe, when men are the better for what they suffer: when thereby the iniquity of Jacob is purged, and this is all the fruit the taking away of their sinne, Esay 27. 9.

according to the word of the Lord] His call and command which Jonah had formerly cast behind him, Sed Piscator istius sapit, There shall be only fear to make you understand the hearing, Esay 28. 19. Esay stood off till frightened; but then he offers his service: Here I am, send me, Chap. 6. 8.

now Niniveh was an exceeding great city] Heb. a great city of God, or so God; which some interpreted dear to God, and such as he would not destroy. Others a city not idolatrous, though otherwise vitious: Others, a city which God himself accounted great, and looked upon as such. But if to a great mind nothing is great, as Seneca saith, what can be great to him who is great, Pf. 77. 13. greater, Job. 33. 12. greatest, Pf. 95. 3. greatness it self, Pf. 145. 3. and to whom all nations are but as the drop of a bucket, or dust of the ballance? behold, he taketh up the Isles as a very little thing, Esay 40. 15. Oecolampadius applieth it to the Church of the Gentiles, that city of the living God. They do best that take it, as we read it, for an exceeding great city: like as elsewhere tall mountains and cedars, are called mountains of God, Psal. 36. 7. and cedars of God, Psal. 80. &c. and excellent wrestlings, are wrestlings of God, Gen. 30. 8. See Gen. 23. 6. So the Greeks and Latines call great great things divine : God being the measure of all true greatnesse : Niniveh as it was a very great city (of fifty miles compasse as Herodotus and Diodorus) so Jonah is often told so ; that he might come to it well prepared and resolved : sith he was to have a great task, and an hard tug of it. See Vers. 2. and Chap. 1. 2.

Of their dayes journey] Not such a journey as a traveller could dispatch in no lesse time ; but suh as a Preacher pedetentim obambulando by leasurely walking, might in three dayes go thorow : See Vers. 4. This is added to set forth further the greatnesse of the city.

Vers. 4. And Iona began to enter into the city] Having seen God, he now fears no colours, dreads no danger ; as neither did Moses, Michaiah, Esay, Chap. 6. Paul, Act. 21. Luther going to Wormes, &c. Knowing therefore the terrour of the Lord, we perswade men, 2 Cor. 5. 18. we forewarne them to flee from the wrath to come, Mat. 3. 7. we pull them out of the fire of hell, as firebrands, Iude 23.

Yet forty dayes and Niniveh shall be overthrowen] The word properly noteth a sudden, inevitable, and perpetual destruction, such as was that of Sodom and her Sisters, Gen 19. 25. Ier. 20. 16. Es. 13. 19. Am. 4. 11. Now we must not think that Jonah said no more then is here set down : that he expressed no condition, such as was that, Rev. 2. 5. Except ye repent, or that like a mad man he ran up and down the city (as one did once about Jerusalem, and another lately about London) repeating and thundering out these words onely, insonditis & ineptis clamoribus, with harsh and hoarse outcries. God therefore threatneth that he may not punish, and all his threats are conditional, Ier. 18. 8. if they repent, he will also. This, if Jonah expressed not, yet the Ninivites understood ; for else they would never have repented but despaired (as Judas with his pœnitentia Iscariotica) and defied Jonah as an evil messenger sent against them. They might well enough think that if God had not meant them mercy, he would never have forewarned them, never have given them forty dayes respite : the Septuagint cannot be refused for rendring it three dayes (though some have attempted it) It is probable that Jonah omitted nothing that pertained to the preaching of repentance, though here we have it set down in some onely. The Hebrews tell us, that the Mariners also went to Niniveh ; and telling what had befallen Jonah at sea, confirmed his doctrine, and sentence against the Ninivites, who thereupon repented. But these, as they affirm without reason, so they may be dismissed without refutation.

Am. 3. 7.

Vers. 5. So the people of Niniveh beleaved God] See the mighty power of Gods holy word. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong holds, 2 Cor. 10. 4. to the laying flat those wals of Jericho, making the devil fall as lightning from the heaven of mens hearts, Luk. 10. 18. These Ninivites though rich, great, peaceable, prosperous, profane above measure, (as great cities use to be) &c. yet, at the preaching of Jonah they believed God, and repented of their evil wayes : whether truly and seriously I have not to say. There is an historical faith, an assent to the truth of what God speaketh, and trembling thereat, Jam. 2. 19. there is also a natural and moral repentance wrought by natural conscience : such as was that of Pharaohs, Saul, Ahab, Alexander the Great ; when, having killed Clitus, he was troubled in conscience, and sent to all kind of Philosophers (as it were to so many Ministers) to know what he might do, to appease his conscience, and satisfie for his sinne. There are very good Aurtheres that hold this conversion of the Ninivites to have been sound and serious (and for this they alledge that of our Sayiour, Mat. 12. 41. ) flowing from a lively faith in God, which is the root of all the rest of the graces, the very womb wherein they are received ; the fountain also and foundation of all good works, as the Apostle Peter hinteth when he saith, 2 Pet. 1. 5. adde to your faith vertue, which is nothing else but faith exercised.

both to evidence, and to increase their inward humiliation. True it is, that hypocrites and heathens may do all this and more, as Ahab, those Psa. 78. 34. 36. and Isa. 58. 3. The Romanes in a strait ad Deos populum & vota convertunt, commanded the whole people with their wives and little ones to pray and pacify the gods, to fill all the temples, and the women to sweep and rub the pavements thereof with the haire of their heads &c.

Verse 6. For word came unto the king of Nineveh] I can hardly believe that this was Sardanapalus (as some will carry it) but some other better Prince, that (Vespasian-like) was patientissimus veri, one that had those about him that would tell him the truth of things, and he was content to heare it, and submit to it. Like enough it is; that this was but harsh newes to him at first hearing: but when he had well considered it, and taken advise upon it, he set upon a reformation. Our Chroniclers tell us of a poore Hermite that came to Richard the first Anno 1195. and, preaching to him the words of eternall life, bad him be mindfull of the subversion of Sodom, and to abstaine from things unlawfull. Otherwise, said He, the deserved vengeance of God will come upon thee. The Hermite being gone, the king at first seemed to slight his words. But afterwards falling sick, he more seriously bethought himself: and waxing sound in soule as well as body, he grew more devout and charitable to the poore, rising early and not departing from the church till divine service were finished &c. If the king of Nineveh had ever heard of Jonah his being in the whales belly, it might well be some inducement to him to believe his preaching, it might do him no lesse good then John Friths book called A preparation to the crosse, brought in a fish's-belly to the University of Cambridge a little before the Commencement, did to some good people here, that had hearts to make use of it. One grave Divine gave this Note upon it in a sermon before the Parliament, above twenty yeares since, That such a book, should be brought in such a manner, and to such a place, and at such a time, when by reason of peoples confluence out of all parts notice might be given to all places of the land, in mine apprehension it can be construed for no lesse then a divine warning, and to have this voice with it, England prepare for the crosse.

he arose from his throne] Laid aside his state, as the great Turk also doth, at this day, when he entrench into his temple to pray. Jer. 13. 18 Say unto the King and to the Queen Humble your selves, sit down: for your principalities shall come down, even to the crown of your glory. This great king could not but know himself to be a great sinner: and that his sins had done much hurt. 1. by Imputation: for plectuntur Achivi, the people oft pay for their Rulers follies, as in Dauids dayes, 2 Sam. 24. 2. by Imitation: for Magnates are Magnetes, they draw many by their example: and as bad humours flow from the head to the body; so do bad Rulers corrupt the rest. This conscious, and (as some think) consciencious King therefore riseth up from his throne, (as Eglon that unweildy king of Moab had once done to heare Gods message by Ehud) & qui paulo ante sedebat superbus in folio, nunc jacet humilis in solo, he lieth low, and putteth his mouth in the dust Lam. 3. 29. laying aside all cogitation and pride of his kingly majesty: together with all soft and sumptuous rayment (that nest of pride, as One calleth it.)

he laid his robe from him] Paludamentum suum, saith Tremelius; but that's a cloak which the Romane Emperours used to put on when they went forth to battle, and therefore not so proper here (as Piscator thinkes) sith there was no visible enemy, which makes the Ninevites repentance the more remarkable. Mercer rendreth it Chlamydem suam, his imperial cloake; the Chaldee his precious garments. The word signifieth his sumptuous and gorgeous attire, his cloake of State, no lesse costly (perhaps) then that of Alcibenes the Sybarite, sold to the Carthagians by Dionysius for 100. talents: or that of Demetrius of Macedon, which none of his successors would weare propter invidiosam impendij magnificentiam for the exceeding great costliness thereof. This robe or purple and other ornaments the King of Nineveh laid aside, as was fit, in this day of restrain, as a fast-day is fitly called. So the children of Israel stript themselves of their ornaments by the mount Horeb, where they had made a golden calf Exod. 33. 6. For the Lord had said to Moses, Say unto the children of Israel, ye are a stifnecked people: I wil come up into the midst of thee, and consume thee: therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee. ver. 5. that I may determine how to dispose of thee: and this is spoken after the manner of men, who judge by the outward actions as Gen. 18. 21. and 22, 12. for otherwise, God knoweth all his works from the beginning of the world Act. 15. 18. But he speaketh this here as if he would hereby judge of their repentance, whether it were true or false. The Prophet *Esa*y objects it to those of his time for a foule fault, Behold in the day of your fast, ye find your pleasure chap. 58. 3.

and covered him with sack-cloth] And so, as Chrysostome hath it, quod non poterat diadema, id faccus obtinuit: sicut ferrum potest quod aurum non potest. Sack-cloth could prevaile more then silk: as iron can do what gold cannot.

and sat in ashes] In cinere illo, so Vatablus rendreth it: in that ashes wherein he used to sit, when he most mourned. Our sorrow for sin should be the deepest of all sorrowes Zech. 12. 11, 12, 13. See the Note there.

Verse 7. And he caused it to be proclaimed] by sound of trumpet as Icel 2. 12. or otherwise as 2 Chron. 20. 3, 4, 18, 19, 20. and 22, 6, 7. at which times he that obeyeth not, is culpable before God and man Lev. 23. 29.

by the decree of the King and his Nobles] who all unanimously consenting to so good a work, in quibus praeerant, praebant became a president to their inferiours; who looked upon them (no doubt) as their looking-glasses, by which most men dressed themselves. When Crispus the chief Ruler of the Syragogue beleaved, many Corinthians beleaved also Act. 18. 8. The Primitive Christians were wont to pray that their emperours might have good counsellours. Of a certaine Prince in Germany it was said, that Esset alius, si esset apud alios, He would have been a far better man, had he had better servants and officers about him.

let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock taste any thing] The whole action of Fasting hath it's name both in Hebrew and Greek, from abstinence and forbearance of meates and drinks: à toto if it may be, at least à tanto & à tali, as Dan. 10. 2, 3. and as it might be here, till the forty dayes were expired; besides, that one or more solemne dayes of totall fasting, wherein neither man nor beast &c. But why is the beast abridged of sustenance? both to testify and increase the peoples humiliation by their lowings and bellowings. Alexander the great, at the death of his favourite Ephestion, clipped his horses and mules haire, and cut them short, in token of his great grief: he pulled down also the battlements of the walles, that they might seem to mourn with him. So Virgil speaking of the generall grief for Cæsars death saith.

Let them not feed, nor drink water] But what they get of themselves without mans care, who is to be wholly intent and taken up in Gods service; and so to begin the heavenly life here, the sweetnesse whereof makes him forbear both meate and thirst. Besides, they took pride in their palfries, covering them with purple and rich trappings. See Judg. 8. 26. they catered for the flesh by fattening cattle and other creatures to please their palate. This they were now forbidden to do by an edict from the king, who interesteth himself in matters of religion; as did also Artaxerxes Ezra. 7. 26. (for which Ezra seeth cause to blesse God) and Nebuchadnezzar Dan. 3. 29. which the scripture commendeth, and recordeth as a work of his repentance.

Verse 8. But let man and beast be covered with sack-cloth] Let all best meanes be used for the humbling of the heart: without which, what is an humbling day but a religious incongruity (saith One) and a very high provocation: like Zimri's act when all the Congregation were weeping before the doore of the Tabernacle? The beasts covered with sack-cloth were as an house handd with blacks, to move men to mourne the more. Chrysostome telles us of a custome in his time, (and it is still in use amongst us) that when great men were buried, their horses followed the hearse cloathed in black; as seeming to mourne for their masters. The court fest weeds are fittest for fasting-dayes: to shew that but for shame, we would have none, as having forfeited all: and that we look upon our better apparell, but as finer covers of the foulest shame.

and cry mightily unto God] Cry with a courage; Let the beasts roare lustily and rend the clouds as it were with their clamours: want of food will make them do so. And as God can so speak, as that the bruit beasts shall understand him, Joel. 2. 11. Am. 5. 8. and 9. 4. Iohn. 2. ult. so can they, after a sort, so speak or moane, that he can understand them Joel. 1. 20. Hof. 2. 21. Ps. 147. 9. he heareth the young ravens that cry unto him, though but with a hoarse and harsh note: whence also they have their name in Hebrew. Much more will He heare men that cry unto him, if they cry mightily with intention of spirit, and extention or rather contention of speech: if they set up their note, as the noise of many waters Rev. 19. 6. if they thunder and threaten heaven, as Nazianzen saith his sister Gorgonia did: if they bounce hard at heaven gates, and resolve to wring mercy from God by an holy violence, as Tertullian saith the good people of his time did. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much: but then it must be the working, stirring, labourfull prayer, as the word signifieth; that strives and struggles, and straines every veine in the heart (as Elias seemed to do by that posture in prayer of putting his head betwixt his leggs 1 King. 18. 42.) that sets awork all the faculties of the foule, and all the graces of the spirit: that stirs up dust as Jacob did: maketh a man sweat, as our Saviour; who being in an agonie prayed the more earnestly Luk. 22. 44. not without strong crying and teares, and was heard in that he feared Heb. 5. 7. For such a prayer when a man cryes to God ἐν ἰσχύϊ αὐτοῦ mightily or with all his strength, πολλὴ ἰσχὺς it availeth much, it can do any thing; as Paul using the same words saith, I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me Philip. 4. 13.

Tea let them turn every one from his evill way &c.] For else Prayer profits not, Humiliation is to no purpose without Reformation; Repentance for sin, without repentance from sin: there must be fruits meet for repentance, answerable to amendment of life, tantamount as repentance, and that weigh just as much as it: for, Optima & aptissima pœnitentia est nova vita, saith Luther, the best and truest repentance is a new life: and if gods people will humble themselves, and pray and seek his face, and withall turn from their evill wayes, then he will do much for them 2 Chron. 7. 14.

and from the violence that is in their hands] Heb. In the hollow of their hands, where it lay hid as it were, but not from God, who here bids them turn from their wrong-dealing and rapacity. This was their speciall sin, (ut in magnis imperijs & emporijs magna sunt rapina) therefore are they charged to relinquish it. It is a speech, saith Mercer, like to that of our Saviour, Go tell my Disciples and Peter &c. Tell them all, but be sure you tell Peter. So here: turn from all your evill wayes: but especially from the violence that is in your hands. See Es. 59. 6. Ezech. 23. 27. Psal. 7. 4. The Hebrewes understand this text of restitution to be made of evill-gotten goods, or wrongfully detained from the right owners. This say they, must be done: or the party can be no more renewed by repentance, then a man could be legally purified by the washing of water, when he continued to hold in his hand an unclean thing. That of Austin is well known, The sin is not remitted, till that which hath bin ill-gotten from another be restored. And that of Father Latimer, Restore, or else you will cough in hell, and the Devils will laugh at you. Gravell in the kidneys will not grate so upon you, as a little guiltinesse in this kind will do upon your consciences. The same Latimer tells us in a sermon of his afore K. Edw. 6. that the first day that he preached about Restitution, there came one and gave him twenty pounds to restore: the next time another, and brought him in thirty pounds: another time another gave him two hundred pounds ten shillings. The Law for restitution see Num. 5. 6, 7. the party must not only confesse but restore, or he is not a true convert. And this will well appeare when death comes to draw the curtaine, and looke in upon a man. Hence our Henry the 7. in his last will and testament, after the disposition of his soul and body, he willed restitution should be made of all such monies as had unjustly been levied by his officers. And the like we read of Selymus the grand Signiour in the Turkish history. Verse 9.

Verse 9. Who can tell if God will turn and repent? This is the speech of one that doubteth, and yet despaireth not: like that of David praying for his sick child, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me that the child may live 2 Sam. 12. 22. We are staggering, saith Saint Paul, but not wholly sticking 2 Cor. 4. 8. They that go down to the pit (of despaire, as well as of the grave Est. 38. 18.) cannot hope for thy truth: but are hurried headlong into hell, as the Gergeites swine were into the sea. The Prophet Jonah was peremptory, that by such a day Nineveh should be destroyed: These men therefore had good reason to doubt, if not of the pardon of their sins, yet of the saving of their city. All their hope is, that this that Jonah denounced was not Gods absolute decree, but only his threatening, and that conditionall too; viz. except they repented. This if they could do, and heartily, they knew not but that mercy might be yet had. Keep hope in heart, or the work will go on heavily Psal. 43. ult. Hope is the daughter of Faith: but such as is a staff to her aged mother. See the Note on Isa. 2. 14. Of Gods repenting I have spoken elsewhere.

Verse 10. And God saw their works i. e. He noted and noticed them to others. Or, he saw them, that is, he approved of them. Videre Dei, est approbare. Let God but see Repentance (as a rainbow) appearing in our hearts and lives, and he will never drown us in destruction. But unlesse God sees turning, he sees no work in a fast, saith One upon this very Text. God may say to impenitent fasters, saith Another, as Isaac did to his father, Behold the fire and wood, but where is the lamb? Or as Jacob did concerning Joseph, Here's the coat, but where's the child? Get thee behind, said Jehu to the messengers, what hast thou to do with peace? Confessions and humiliations are our messengers: but if the heart be not broken, if the life be not amended, what peace? The Talmudists note here, that God is not said to have seen their sack-cloth and ashes, but their repentance and works, those fruits of their faith; truth in the inward parts, which God eyeth with singular delight Jer. 5. 3. as the work of his own spirit Eph. 8. 9. Certum est nos facere quod facimus; sed ille facit ut facimus, and he is pleased to call his grace in us, our works, for our encouragement in well-doing: and freely to crown it in us, without any merit on our part.

That they turned from their evill way To which they were by nature and ill custome so wedded and wedged, that they could never have been loosened, but by an extraordinary touch from the hand of heaven. The conversion of a sinner from the evill of his way is Gods own handy-work Jer. 31. 18. 2 Tim. 2. 25. Ezech. 6. 9. Plato went three times into Sicily to convert Dionysius the tyrant, and could do no good on him. Polemo, of a drunkard, by hearing Xenocrates, is said to have become a Philosopher: But what saith Ambrose to him? Si respicit à vino &c. If he repented of his drunkenness, yet he continued an Infidel; he was still temulentus sacrilegio drunk with superstition: He recovered of one disease, and died of another, as Benhadad did: he gave but the half turn, and therefore turned at length, and neverthelesse into hell. We conceive better of these Ninivites though some are of opinion, that their repentance was but fained and forced, as was that of Pharaoh and Ahab, as appears (say they) by the sequent history, by their dealing against the Jewes, and by Nahum.

that all the peoples joy should be dashed and damped with such a sad and sudden disaster. How much better minded was he when dumb, not once opening his mouth, because God did it, Psal. 39. 9? The Greeks give this Rule, Either say nothing, or say that which is better then nothing. O that you would altogether hold your peace, and it should be your wisdom, said Job to his friends, Iob 13. 5. Silence sometimes comes to be a virtue, and never more then when a man is causelessly displeased. Prima semper irarum tela maledicta sunt, saith Salust. Angry people are apt to let flie, to mutter, and mutiny against God and man; as here. Reason should say to choler, that which the Nurse saith to the childe. Weep not, and you shall have it. But either it doth not: or if it do, yet the ear (which tasteth words, as the mouth doth meat) is oft so filled with gall (some creatures have fel. in aue) that nothing can relish with it. See Exod. 6. 9. If Moses his anger was pure, free from guile, and gall, Exod. 32. 19. yet Jonah's was not so. It is surely very difficult to kindle and keep quick this fire, without all smoke of sinne. Be angry, and sinne not, is, saith One, the easiest charge, under the hardest condition that can be. Men, for most part, know not what they do in their anger; this tasteth such a smoke. Put fire to wet straw and filthy stuffe, and it will smoke and smutch you quickly; yea scorch you and scald you, when once it breaks out. Levit. 13. 5. we read of a leprosie breaking out of a burning: seldome do passions burn but there is a leprosie breaking out of that burning. It blistereth out at the lips: hence the Hebrews have but one and the same word for Anger and foaming at the mouth, Esth. 1. 18. Zach. 1. 7. They have also a Proverb, that a mans disposition is much discovered, Bechor, bechis, becagnab; by his cup, by his purse, and by his passion: at which time, and in which cases. A fool uttereth all his mind, Prov. 29. 11. (all his wrath, say the Seventy) and that suddenly, rashly, as the Hebrew intimateth: but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards, Prov. 29. 11. Ahasuerus when hee felt himself enraged against Haman, walked into his garden, Esth. 7. 7. And Plutarch tells of one Archytas, that, displeased with his servants for their sloth, hee hung from them, saying, Valete quoniam vobis irascor, I will leave you; for that I am angry with you. The very first insurrections of inordinate Passions are to bee cruel, the first smoke of them to be smothered, which else will fume up into the head, and gather into so thick a cloud, as wee shall lose the sight of our selves, and what is best to be done: Cease therefore from rash anger, and stint strife betime. The beginning of it, saith Solomon, is as when one letteth out water: therefore leave off contention before it bee medled with. Prov. 17. 14. Storms rise out of little gusts: and the highest windes are, at first, but a small vapour. Had Jonah stopt, or slept back, when he felt himself first stirred, he had not so shamefully over-shot himself, nor heapt up so many sinnes, as he did in the following entercourse with Almighty God. He was naturally hot, and hasty: and so were those two brethren the sonnes of thunder; they had quick and hot spirits, Luke 9. 55. Now, where there is much untowardnesse of nature, there Grace is the more easily overborn: sowre wines need much sweetning. Gods best children, though ingrafted into the true vine, yet carry they about them a relish of the old stock still. It is thought by very good Divines, that Jonah feeling his own weaknesse in giving place to anger, thought to strive against it, and to addressed himself to prayer, verse 2. but transported by his passions of grief and rash anger, while by prayer hee thought to have overcome them, they overcame him, and his prayer too: so true is that of the Apostle; The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God, Jam. 1. 20.

Verse 2. And he prayed unto the Lord, i. e. He thought to have done so; but, by the deceitfulnesse of his own heart, he quarrel'd with God; and instead of wrestling with him, as Jacob, he wrangled with him. The words seem to be rather a brawle then a prayer; which should ever proceed from a sedate and settled Spirit, and hold conformity with the will of God. Could Jonah be in case to pray, when he had neither right conceptions of God, nor bowels of mercy to men: but that millions of people must perish rather then he be held a false Prophet? Say there were something in it of peace for Gods glory, which he thought would suffer; as if God were either mutable, or impotent. Say that there were in this outburst, something of affection to Gods people, who had then no greater enemy to fear, then these Ninevites; whom therefore Jonah would have had destroyed according to his his prediction: yet cannot he be excused for falling so foul upon God, and upbraiding Him with that which is his greatest glory, Exod. 33. 28, 19. with Exod. 34. 6, 7. The truth is, nothing makes a man eccentric in his motions, so much as head-strong passions, and private respects. He that brings these into Gods presence, shall do him but little good service. The soul is then onely well carried, when neither so becalmed that it moves not when it should, nor yet tossed with tempests to move disorderly, as did Jonah here, and Job, in that peevish prayer of his, chap. 6. 8, 9. See also Jer. 20. 7, 8.

[ I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my saying, &c. ] that is, my thought: for whether he worded it thus with God till now, it appeareth not: but God heareth the language of mens hearts: and their silence to him is a speaking evidence.

[ when I was yet in my countrey. ] And had Jonah so soon forgotten what God had done for him, since he came thence? Oh what a grave is oblivion! and what a strange passage is that (and yet how common?) Then beleeveth they his words, they sang his praise. They soon forgot his works, they waited not for his counsel, Psal. 106. 12, 13. Jonah did not surely wait for Gods counsel, but anteverted it. Idcirco anteverti, saith he in the next words, (Therefore I fled before) and thought hee had said well, spoke very good reason. It is the property of lust and passion, so to blear the understanding of a man, that he shall think he hath reason to be mad, and that there is great sense in sinning. Dogs in a chafe bark at their owne masters: so do people in their passions let lie at their best friends. They set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh thorow the earth, Psal. 73. 9. Jonah in his heat here, justifieth his former flight, which he had so sorely smarted for, Et quasi quidam Aristarchus, he taketh upon him to censure God for his superabundant goodness, which is above all praise.

[ For I knew that thou art a gracious God, and mercifull, &c. ] This He knew to be Gods name, Exod. 34. 6, 7. but withall he should have remembered, what was the last letter in that Name; viz. that he will by no means clear the guilt. See Nabum 1. 2, 3. The same fire hath burning heat and chearfull light. Gracious is the Lord, but yet righteous, saith David, Psal. 116. 5. his mercy goes ever bounded by his truth. This Jonah should have considered; and therefore trembled thus to have upbraided God with that mercy by which himself subsisted: and but for which he had been long since in hell, for his tergiversation and peevishness. But mercy rejoiceth against judgement, and runneth as a spring, without ceasing. It is not like those pools about Jerusalem that might be dried up with the trappings of horse and horse-men. The grace of God was exceeding abundant, 1 Tim. 1. 14. It hath abounded to flowing-over, as the Sea doth above the hugest rocks. See this in the present instance. Jonah addeth sinne to sinne, and doth enough to undo himself for ever: so that a man would wonder how God could forbear killing him, as hee had like to have done Moses, when he met him in the Inne. But He is God, and not man: he contents himself to admonish Jonah of his fault, as a friend and familiar, velut cum eo colludens, jesting with him, as it were, and by an outward signe, shewing him how grievously he had offended. Concerning these Attributes of God here recited, see the Note on Joel 2. 13. and say with Austin, Laudent alij pietatem: Dei ego misericordiam. Let no spider suck poison out of this sweetest flower: nor out of a blind zeal make ill use of it, as Jonah doth, for a cloke of his rebellion: lest abused mercy turn into fury.

[ Verse 3. Therefore now, O Lord, take I beseech thee my life from me, ] A pitifull peevish prayer, such as was that of Job, and that of Jeremy above noted: to which may be added Sarah's hasty wish for God to arbitrate betwixt her and her husband: Moses his quibbling with God, till at length he was angry, Exod. 4. 10, 14. Eliab's desire to die out of discontent, &c. What a deal of filth, and of flesh, clogs and cleaves to our best performances? Hence David so prayes for his prayers, and Nehemiah for pardon of his reformations. Anger is ever an evil counsellour; but when it creeps into our prayes, it corrupts them worse then vinegar doth the vessel wherein it standeth. Submit your selves therefore to God (as Jonah should have done) resist this devil (of pride and passion) and he will flee from you: as by giving place to impatience ye give place to the Devil, Eph. 4. 26. who else (by his vile injections, or at least by his vain impertinencies) will so flie-blow and marre our duties ties that we may well wonder, they are not cast back as dirt into our faces. Sure it is that if the holy Ghost had not his hand in our prayers, there would not be the least goodnesse in them: no not uprightnesse and truth, without which Christ would never present them, or the Father accept them.

for it is better for me to die then to live ] sc. in that disgrace that I shall now undergo of being a false prophet, not henceforth to be believed. Lo, this was it that troubled the man so much, as it did likewise Moses, Exod. 4. 1. They will not believe me; for they will say, The Lord hath not appeared unto thee. But God should have been trusted by them for that, and his call obeyed howsoever, without consultations or disputes; carelesse of their own credit, so that God might be exalted. True it is, that a man had better die with honour, then live in disgrace, truly so called. It were better for me to die, saith holy Paul, then that any man should make my glorying void. Provident we must be (but not over-tender) to preserve our reputation: learning of the unjust steward by lawfull (though he did by unlawfull) means to do it: for our Saviour noted this defect in the children of light, that herein they were not oft so wise as they should be, Luke 16. 8. But Jonah was too heady and hasty in this wish of his death; because his credit, as he thought, was crackt, and he should be lookt upon as a liar. But was the Eng of a good conscience nothing to him? was Gods approbation of no value, nor the good esteem of his faithful people? It was enough for Demetrius, that he had a good report of the truth 3 Iohn. 12. what ever the world held or said of him. What is the honour of the world but a puffe of stinking breath? and why should any Jonah be so ambitious of it, as that without it he cannot find in his heart to live. Life is better then honour. Joseph is yet alive, saith Jacob. To have heard that Joseph lived a servant would have joyed him, more then to heare that he died honourably. The greater blessing obicureth the lesse. He is not worthy of honour, that is not thankfull for life. St. Pauls desire to be dissolved that he might be with Christ, which is farr farr the better Phil. 1. 3. was much different from this of Jonah.

Vers. 4. Doeſt thou do well to be angry? ] Or what? art thou very angry? Nunquid recte? Summon the sobriety of thy senses before thine own judgement: and see whether there be a cause. Is it not lawfull for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil because I am good? Shall I not shew mercy on whom I will shew mercy? Or enviest thou these poor Ninivites their preservation, for my sake? Cannot I provide for mine own glory, and for thine authority by other means and wayes then thou imaginest? Have patience Jonah, and rest better satisfied with my dispensation. Be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath. For, I wot well, the Wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. This thou wilt see and say as much, when come to thy self, for now thou art quite off; and being transported as thou art,

Hierome seeks to excuse Jonahs anger: but God here condemneth it, as not well: and Jonah himself, partly by not answering again, and partly by recording the story, seems to say of himself as Father Latimer doth in another case; I have used in mine earnest matters to say, Yea, by Saint Mary, which indeed is not well. Anger is not altogether unlawful, so it be well carried; It is, saith one, a tender vertue: and as it is not evil to marry, but good to be wary, so here. Let a man ask himself this question, Do I will to be thus angry? and is mine indignation rightly regulated for principle, object, measure, end? If it be not, the spirit of God will be grieved in the good soul, and sensibly stirre, Eph. 4. 30, 31. yea, thou shalt hear the correcting voice thereof within thee, saying, Dost thou well to be thus angry? Should not all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking be put away, with all malice? And should ye not be kind one to another, and tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christs sake hath forgiven you? Eph. 4. 31, 32.

Vers. 5. So Jonah went out of the city, ] As not yet knowing what God might do, though he found him inclinable to shew them mercy upon their repentance. Or he might think haply, that these Ninivites were onely sermon-sick, penitent indeed for the present, but it was too good to hold long: these seemingly righteous men would soon soon fall from their righteousness, and then be destroyed, though for present somewhat favoured of God. Mercer reads the text in the preterpluperfect tense, and makes it an hyperon proteron thus, exierat autem Jonas; but Jonas had gone out of the city, sc. before he had shewed himself so hot and hasty against God, and brawled with him as above. Others think, that when he saw which way the squares were like to go, he flung out of the city in a great pelt: and if God had fetcht him again with a flower on the ear (as Queen Elizabeth did the Earl of Essex her favourite, when being crossed by her of his will, he uncivilly turned his back as it were in contempt) he had done him no wrong: But God is long-suffering, &c. He considereth whereof we are made, and with what strong corruptions we are beset. He knowes that sinne hath a strong heart, and will not easily be done to death: that nothing cleaves more pertinaciously, or is more inexpugnable then a strong lust; whether it be worldliness, wantonness, passionateness, pride, ambition, revenge, or the like: these Jehusites will not easily be driven out; these sturdy rebels will hardly be subdued; these stick closest, as a shirt doth to a leprous body; and cannot be done off but with great ado. Now if Jonah be of a cholerick constitution, and soon kindled; if this evil of his nature have been confirmed by custome (a second nature) if Satan stirre up the coals, and say to him as the people did to Pilate, Do as thou ever hast done: God graciously considereth all this, and beareth with his evil manners.

and [sat on the east-side of the city] Quite out of the precincts; where he might see their ruine, and not suffer with them. Faux after he had laid his train, and set it awork to fire the powder at such an hour, was to have retired himself into Georges fields, and there to have beheld the sport. That Jonah was so uncharitable as to wish and wait the overthrow of Niniveh, and not that they would rather return and live, admits of no excuse. But that expecting its overthrow (according to that God had threatned by him) he secured himself by separating from those sinners against their own souls, was well and wisely done of him. See Esa. 48. 20. and 52. 11. 2 Cor. 6. 17. Rev. 16. 4. Lot did so from Sodom, the people from Core and his complices, John and his disciples from Cerinthus the heretick: he sprung out of the Bath from that blasphemer, lest he should be punished with him: so the Church of Ierusalem packt away to Pella, &c.

and there made him a booth] A sorry something, wherein to repose himself, till the indignation were over-past. Ministers as good souldiers of Iesus Christ must suffer hardship, be content to dwell in tents, or to lie in huts, till they come to the heavenly palace, where they shall have a better building, 2 Cor. 5. 1. yea, a throne in that city of pearl, whose master builder is God, Heb. 11. 13. Mean while let them not seek great things for themselves: but as the Turks never build sumptuously for their own private uses, but content themselves with simple cottages how mean soever, good enough say they, for the short time of our pilgrimage here: so much more should Christians, & especially Ministers, whose reward (how little soever upon earth) is great in heaven. Let them live upon reversions: and though their dwelling be but mean, a booth or little better, yet they shall have stately mansions above: and in the mean time, if they can but say as that Heathen did, Εὐβδὲ ἐστὶ θεὸς, God dwells here with me, this house of mine is a little Church, a tabernacle for the God of Isaiah; oh how happy are they in that behalf, even above the great Turk with his Seraglio, (which is two miles in compasse) yea, with his whole Empire, which (saith Luther) is but a crust cast by the great house-keeper of the world to his dogs.

his word by raining down hell from heaven upon it, as once he did upon sinfull Sodom: or overwhelme it with the river Tigris, as once he did some part of it, saith Diodorus Siculus, so that twenty furlongs of the town-wall were thrown down by it. And the Prophet Nahum threateneth, that with an over-flowing flood God would make an end of the place thereof, chap. 1. 8.

Verse 6. And the Lord God prepared a gourd] sc. after that his booth was dried up, and the leaves withered, God by his providence, and not without a miracle (because without seed, and so sudden) furnished Jonah with this gourd or ivy-bush, or white vine, or the plant called Palma Christi, or Pentadactylon, because it resembleth a mans hand with five fingers: something it was, but what, is not certainly known. Kimchi thus describeth it: Est herba longis & altis frondibus umbrosa. It is an herb or plant that yeeldeth good shade with its long and large leaves. And many yeares before him, one Rabba son of Hanna said, that it growes by the waters side, is commonly set for shade-lake, before tavern doores: and that oyle is made of the seeds of it.

and made it to come up over Jonah] Not only to refresh him, (who having been so lately in the whales-belly was haply more tender-skinned then before, and not so well able to endure the heate of the Sun) but also to make way to that reproof he afterwards gave him ver. 10. Hoc enim externo signo, saith Mercer, for by this outward signe, God sporting with him, as it were, clearly convinceth him of his impatience, & admonisheth him of his duty: & this He thinketh was not done till the forty dayes wore over.

to deliver him from his grief] from his head-ach, caused by the heat of the Sun; which yet he cursed not as the scorched Atlantes are said to doe. Or to exhilarate and refresh his spirits after his self-vexing: for the hasty man never wants woe, and the envious person, because he cannot come at another mans heart, feedeth upon his own. Now though God chide him for his fault, yet as a father he tendereth his infirmity, and taketh care that the spirit faile not before him and the soule that he had made. And it is as if he should say: Jonah goeth on frowardly in the way of his heart; I have seen his wayes and will heale him: I will leade him also, and restore comforts unto him Esay 57. 16, 17, 18 As it is a rule in Physick, still to maintaine nature.

so Jonah was exceeding glad] Heb. rejoyced with great joy, that is, supra modum, he was excessive in all his passions, which speakes him a weake man. Some think he rejoyced the more in the gourd, as conceiving that God thereby voted with him, and for him. This was also Leahs error, when rejoycing in that whereof she should have repented rather, she said Gen. 30. 18. God hath given me my hire, because I have given my maiden to my husband, and she hath borne me a first son. So much mistaken are the best sometimes: and so bladder-like, is mans soule; that filled with earthly vanities though but wind, and gone with a wind, it growes great, and swells in pride and folly: but if prickt with the least pin of piercing grief, it shriveleth to nothing.

Verse 7. But God prepared a worm] All occurrences are to be ascribed not to Nature, Fate, or Fortune, but to God: who as he is Great in great things, so is he not little in the least. He prepared first the gourd, and then the worm, and then the wind. He was the great doer in all. He so attempereth all, that his people shall have their times and their turns of joy and forrow. These two are tyed together, said the Heathen, with chaines of Adamant: hence also Ageronia's altar in the temple of Volupia. See the circle God usually goes in with his, Psal. 30. 5, 6, 7. &c. to teach them that all outward comforts are but as grasse or flower of the field, which he can soone blast or corrode by some worne of his providing. Moneo te iterumque iterumq; monebo, saith Laclantius, I warn thee therefore, & will do it againe & againe, that thou look not upon those earthly delights as either great or true to those that trust them: but as things that are not onely deceitfull, because doubtfull but also deadly, because delicious. There is a worm lies couchant in every gourd to smite it, a teredo to waite it, besides the worm of conscience bred in that froath and filth, for a perpetuall torment.

and it smote the gourd that it withered] Plants have also their wounds, diseases and death, saith Pliny. The gourd being gnawed at the root, and robbed of its moistness withered. Sic transit gloria mundi. But the righteous shall flourish like a palm-tree tree (not like this palm-crist) Psal. 92. 12. Now the palm-tree though it have many waights at the top, and many snakes or wormes at the roor, yet it still sayes, Nec premor nec perimor, I am neither born down, nor dried up: but as Noah's olive drown'd, kept its verdure; and as Moses bush fired but not consumed; so farth it with the righteous, persecuted but not forsaken &c. 2 Cor. 4. 8, 9. and at death a crown of life awaites him, Quanta perennis erit, an immarcescible crown, an inheritance undefiled and that withereth not, Pet. 1. 4. that suffereth no Marasmus, but is reserved fresh and green for you in heaven; like the palm-tree which Pliny saith never loseth his leafe nor fruit: or like that Persian tree, whereof Theophrastus saith, that at the same time it doth bud, blossome and beare fruit.

Verse 8. God prepared a vehement East-wind. The windes then blow not where they list, at randome I mean, and without rule: but are both raised and layed againe by God at his pleasure. He prepared, and sent out of his treasures, this violent East-wind. Heb: silent: so called either because it silenceth all other winds with its vehemency: or because when it blowes, men are made silent or deaf with its din, so that their tale cannot be heard. There are that by silent here understand a still, low, gentle East-wind, that cooled not the heate of the ayre inflamed by the Sun, but rather added to it, and set it on: αἰὼνικὸν the Greeks interpret it: and this suites well with that which followeth.

and the Sun beat upon the head of Jonah. Ussit & laetit Psal. 121. So the Poet, —feriente cacumina Sole.

Chrysostome cannot but wonder, that whereas all fire naturally tendeth upwards, the Sun should shoot his beames downwards, and affect these lower bodyes with his light and heat. Whereby if he be trouble some to any Jonah, it is because God will have it so (for he is a servant, as his name in Hebrew importeth) without whom neither Sun shineth nor raine falleth Mat. 5. 45. and who by afflictions (set forth in Scripture by the heate of the Sun) bringeth back his straglers Psal. 119. 97.

that he fainted. Though the head of man hath a manifold guard upon it, as being overlaid first with haire, skin and flesh, like the three-fold covering of the Tabernacle; and then encompassed with a skull of bones like boards of Cedar; and afterwards with diverse skins like silken curtaines: and lastly enclosed with the yellow skin which Solomon calleth the golden ewer Eccle. 12. 6.

yet Jonah fainted and wished in himself to die. Ita ut ab animo suo peteret mori, he required of his soule to go out of his body, Egredere o anima mea, as Hilarion said, but in a better sense he called for death, as his due: being, belike, of Seneca's mind, that Nature hath bestowed this benefit on men, that they may bereave themselves of life, whensoever they please: not considering that God is Lord of life and death, neither may any one lay down his life but when He calleth for it: as a souldier may not leave his station, but at the command of his captaine.

it is better for me to die then to live. Not so Jonah, unless you were in a better mind. You should rather say as Martinus on his sick-bed did, Domine si adhuc populo tuo sum necessarius, Lord if I may yet be serviceable to thee, and usefull to thy people, I refuse not life and labour. Or as Mr. Bolton on his death-bed desirous to be dissolved, when he was told by some standers by, that though it was better for him to die then to live, Yet the Church of God would miss him: He thus sweetly replied with David & Sam. 15. 25, 26. If I shall find favour in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me again &c. but, if otherwise, loe here I am, let him do what seemeth good in his eyes. A good man is born for the benefit of many, as Bucers Physitians said to him: neither may he desire to die out of discontent, as Jonah did for a trifle, wherein he was crossed; and rather then which to have been deprived of, Niniveh that great city, by his content, should have been destroyed. That he never after this would return to his own countrey, but was so sick of the fret that he died of the fullens, as some Hebrewes say, I cannot beleieve. See the Note on ver. 3.

— Dijne hunc ardorem mentibus indunt
Euriale? an sua cuique deus fit dira libido?

Knew not Jonah that to be angry without a cause, was to be in danger of the judgement? Mat. 5. 22. that it was a mortall sin, and not veniall, as Papists falsly conclude from that text; which sets not forth a different punishment of rash anger, but a diverse degree of punishment? that it is the murder of the heart, as our Saviour there shewes, and the fountaine of the murder both of the tongue, and of the hand? will he be like the foolish bee, who loseth her life to get revenge? See the Note on ver. 4.

and he said] Before he said nothing when reproved for his rash anger ver. 4. and that was best. Now he chats against God, laying the reins in the neck of his unruly passions, and running riot. Who can understand his errors? and who can tell how oft a servant of God may fall into a foul sin, if strongly inclined thereto by nature, or violently tempted by satan and his instruments? Of Judah indeed it is expressly noted, that he knew his daughter-in-law Tamar againe no more Gen. 38. 26. But what shall we say to Lots double incest? to Sampsons going down againe to Gaza Judg. 16? to Abrahams twice denying his wife? to Iohns twice adoring the Angell Rev. 19. 10. and 22. 8? Let him that standeth, take heed lest he fall: and let Gods people see that there be no way of wickednesse found in them, that they allow not, wallow not in this guzzle: sith hereby they loose not their jus hereditarium, but yet their jus aptitudinale, not their title but yet their fitnessse to Gods kingdom: and perhaps, their fulnesse of reward there 2 Iohn 8.

and he said, I do well to be angry, even unto death] A fearefull out-burst: resist passion at the first rising up: else who knowes whither it may transport us? Passions, saith One, like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion move themselves: and know no ground but the bottome. Jonah (saith Another upon this text) slights admonition, riseth up in an animosity against it to a desperate degree of anger: such wild beasts are furious passions when we give them the reins. Thus He, Surely as the Lion beateth himself with his own taile: and as fullen birds in a cage beate themselves to death, so could Jonah in this rage find in his heart to do: and he shames not to tell God as much. It was therefore no ill wish of him that desired God to deliver him from that naughty man Himself, from headlong and headstrong passions, which may not only disweeten a mans life but shorten it. The Emperor Nerva died of a fever contracted by anger. Valentinian by an irruption of blood. Wenceslaus King of Bohemia in a rage against his cup bearer fell presently into a palsey, whereof he died. What disease Jonah died of I know not: but this I know, that in his heat he did and said enough here in this text, to have made Almighty God retolve as he did once against those muttering Mutineers in the wilderness, As truly as I live, saith the Lord, as ye have spoken in mine eares, so will I do to you: Thou shalt surely dye Jonah; out of thine own mouth will I judge thee &c. But God chose rather to glorifie himself in Jonah's salvation, then in his deserved destruction. Dat igitur penitentiam, & postea indulgentiam (as that father prayed) He therefore first giveth him repentance, and then pardon, as appeareth partly by his recording of these passages, and so shaming himself, as it were, before all the world: and partly also by his closing up his Prophecy with silence: not striving with God for the last word, as Peter did with Christ, and would needs carry it, till the event of things confuted him, and he was glad to seek a corner to cry in Mat. 26. 35. with 75.

me à malo ho-
mine meipso.*

Num. 14. 28.

Verse 10. Then said the Lord] He did not roare upon Jonah, nor run upon him with a drawn sword, even on his neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers: but gently said unto him, that he might the more admire his own impotency and Gods lenity; both which he studiously describeth all along this Prophecy; a good signe of his sound repentance.

Iob 15. 26.

Thou hast had pity on the gourd] Here is the end scope and application of the parable; whereby it appeareth that God prepared not the gourd so much for the ease and use of Jonah's body, as for a medicine to his soule, convincing him of the iniquity both of his wayes and wishes, by an argument drawn from the lesse to the greater: and confuting him by a comparifon. Thou, a sinfull and wretched man, hast had pity: Or spared, and art sorry it perished. The gourd a sorry shrub, a meane mulhrome, and none of thine neither, but as lent thee: Alasse master, said they it was but borrowed:

for the which thou hast not laboured] And so canst not be so fast-affected to it. For all men love their own works rather then other mens, as parents and poets, saith Aristotle: proving thereby, that those which have received their riches from their parents are more liberall, then they which have gotten them by their own labour.

πάντες ἀγα-
τὰ ἐκ γὰρ αὐτῶν.

neither madest it grow] Thou hast neither planted nor watered it, or any way added to it, by thine industry: for that also was no part of thy paines but mine. Not that God laboureth about his creatures; for he doth all his work without tooke or toile Esa. 40. 28 but this, as many other things in Scripture, are spoken after the manner of men, and so must be taken.

Which came up in a night] Heb: was the son of a night, not without a miracle: though Pliny speak of the quick and wonderfull growth of this shrub.

and perished in a night] Cito oriens, cito isidem moriens, quickly come, and as quickly gone; a fit embleme of earths happinesse. Surely man walketh in a vaine shew; fancā quadam felicitate temporaliter florens: they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb. They are but Hemerobij: their life is but a day (and such a day too, as no man is sure to have twelve houres to it) as this gourd was but of one dayes continuance, as it came up in a night, so it perished the next; cito crevit, cito decrevit, repente prolatus, repente sublatus, of very small continuance.

And should not I spare Niniveh*] I who am all-bowels: I who am a sin-pardoning God Neh. 9. 31. none like me for that Mic. 7. 18. I, who am the Father of mercies, and God of all comfort 2 Cor. 1. 4. whose property and practise it is to comfort those that are cast down 2 Cor. 7. 6. I, who am so transcendently gracious, that thou hast even bit me in the teeth with it ver. 2. should not I be affected with the destruction of Niniveh?

that great city] See Notes on chap. 1. 2. and chap. 3. 3, 4. yea I will spare it, sith it is ten thousand times more worth then that gourd of thine so much pittied.

wherein are more then sixscore thousand Persons] more then twelve myriads of innocent infants that cannot discern &c. but live a kind of sensitive life, as not yet come to the use of reason, and are therefore matched and mentioned with beasts. And also much cattle (a part of my care) which have had their share, as they could, in the common humiliation; and shall therefore share in the common preservation. And hast thou an heart to repine at this, and not to be set down with so good reason? Jonah is now sad and silenced: and although we heare no further of him, yet methinks I see him (Iob. lik) laying his hand upon his mouth in an humble yeeldance: yea putting his mouth in the dust, and saying Once have I spoken, but I will not answer: yea twice, but I will proceed no further. Teach me, and I will hold my tongue: for thou hast caused me to understand wherein I have erred. How forcible are right words &c.

Verſe I.

He word of the Lord &c.] See the Note on Hoſ. I. I. to Micah the Moraſſhite to diſtinguiſh him from Micaiah the ſon of Imlah, who propheſied in Ahabs dayes, above an hundred yeares before this. Micah the Moraſſhite, ſo called from the place of his birth or abode which is made famous by him (as Abdera was by Democritus, Hippo by Auſtin) and not He by it; Ambroſe ſaith his name ſignifieth, Quis iſte? who's this? who? (ſaith that Father in answer) Not one of the common ſort, but an elect veſſell to carry Gods name to his people. Hierome from his title Moraſſhite interpreted, calleth him Coharedem Chriſti Coheire with Chriſt, of whom and his kingdome he ſweetly Prophecieth: and may therefore be called the Evangelicall Prophet; as was Eſay, his contemporary with whom he hath many things common: and this one thing above him, that he nameth Bethlehem Chriſts birth-place chap. 5. 2. for the which (as well as for his boldneſſe Ier. 26. 18.) he was famous in the Church Mat. 2. 6. Ioh. 7. 42.

in the dayes of Iotham, Abaz. Hezekiah] Abaz ſtandeth between Iotham and Hezekiah, as thistle or thorn between two lillies. or roſes. Manaſſeh comes after, and degenerates into his grandfather Abaz. To his time Micah attained not, much leſſe to Joſiahs, as Iſidore hath it: for betwixt Iotham and Joſiah were an hundred and twenty yeares at leaſt. It is probable that Micah Propheſied forty yeares, if not more: wherein he ſaw many changes, and met with many moleſtations: had cauſe enough to cry out with his Colleague, Who hath beleev'd our report? My leaneneſſe, my leaneneſſe &c. Yet held he on his courſe; as being of Latimers mind, who ſpeaking in one of his ſermons of a miniſter that gave this answer why he left off preaching? viz. becauſe he ſaw he did no good; this ſaith Latimer, which he saw [sc. with the eyes of his mind, for the use of the Church; whereto this prophesie comes commended, first as the word of the Lord, and secondly, as extraordinarily revealed to this Prophet.

concerning Samaria and Jerusalem] Samaria seemeth to be first named because most guilty before God. They are yoked together, because there was scarce ever a better (Aholah and Aholibah sisters in sin) and one the much worse for the others neighbourhood. Jerusalem would take it in high scorn (likely) to be matched with Samaria (so much slighted and shunned by her Isa. 4. 2.) as Papists now do to be set by Protestants, Turks by Christians (the word of a musulman beares down all other testimony amongst them) But this Prophet is very bold (as it is said of Isa his cocontaneous Rom. 10. 20) binds them both up in one bundle, and ipareth not to shew Judah their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins.

Verse 2. Hear, all ye people,] He beginneth as Esay, in a lofty and stately stile, powing himself out in a golden flood of words (as Tully speaketh of Aristotles Politicks) and calling for utmost attention and affection: as knowing that he had to do with men more deaf then sea-monsters, and more dull then the very earth they trod on; which is therefore here commanded to hearken, sith men (that habitable part of Gods earth Pro. 8. 31) will not heare and give care: wherein they are worse then the insensible creatures Psal. 119. 91.

and let the Lord God be witnesse against you] Here he turneth his speech to the refractory Jewes: speaking to God as a righteous judge and swift witnesse, Judex, Judex, vindex, against them if they hearkened not to his message, nisi pareant, ideoque pereant.

the Lord from his holy temple] that is, let him testifie from heaven Psal. 11. 4, that he is displeased with you, and that I have carefully sought your soules-health. Or, from his temple at Jerusalem wherein ye glory, and where ye think ye have him as fast bound to you, as the Tyrians had their idol Apollo, whom they chained and nailed to a post, that he might not forsake them, when Alexander besieged their town, and took it. The Heathens had a trick when they besieged a city, to call the Tutelar gods out of it by a certain charme, as beleiving that it could not otherwise be taken. In a like sense whereunto some have interpreted the following verses here.

Verse 3. For behold the Lord commeth out of his place] that is, say they out of Judea and his temple there, leaving it to the Chaldeans and Assyrians. See Ezech. 3. 12. and chapters 9. 10, and 11. where God makes divers removes from the Cherubins to the threshold, from thence to the East-gate, from thence to mount Olivet, quite out of the city chap. 11. 23 and when God was gone, then followed the fatall calamity, in the ruine of the city. But by Gods comming farth out of his place here, I conceive is meant his descending from heaven to do justice on this hypocriticall nation, Esay 26. 21, and because hypocritis nihil stupidius hypocrites resting on their externall performances and priviledges will hardly be perswaded of any evill toward them Mic. 3. 11. Is not the Lord, say they amongst us? nona evill can come upon us; therefore we have here an emphaticall Ecce, Behold the Lord commeth: he is even upon the way already, and will be here with the first. He will come down as once at Sodom, when their sin was very grievous Gen. 18. 20. when they were overcharged with the superfluity of naughtiness; God came from heaven to give their land a vomit; And so he would do here: for Unregenerate Israel was to God as Ethiopia Am. 9. 7. as the Rulers of Sodom, and people of Gomorrhah Esay 1. 10.

and tread upon the high-places of the earth] the High and mighty Ones, that having gotten on the top of their hillocks as so many Ants, think themselves so much the better and safer, repose confidence in their high places and strong-holds, as Nebuchadnezzar did in his Babel, Edom in his cliffs of the rocks, munitions of rocks, Obad. 3. the rich fool in his heapes and hoards Luk. 12. these, with their false confidences, God will tread down in his anger, and trample them in his fury, as the mire of the streets: he will bring down their strength to the earth, and lay their honour in the dust. Isa. 63. 3, 6.

Verse 4. And the mountaines shall be molten under him] This is to the self-same sense:

Though

Though men swell in their own eyes, to the hugeness of so many mountains: and though gotten upon their hill of ice, they think they shall never be moved, Psalm 30. 6, 7. yet when God with his devouring fire, and everlasting burnings comes in presence, these craggie mountains shall soon dissolve and melt as wax, they shall be as waters, poured down a descent, they shall flow as a land-flood, &c. By which similitudes, and familiar comparisons is notably set forth the irresistible wrath of God for the affrighting of hard-hearted sinners, that they may take hold of his strength, and make peace with him, Esa 27. 5.

The valleys also shall be cleft. ] The poorer sort also shall have their share in the common calamity. God will neither spare the high for their might, nor the base for their meanness, but Lords and lovels together, shall be as wax before the fire, &c. ] Wax is a poor fence against fire, sticks and stubble against a strong torrent: so humane force, against divine judgements.

Verse 5. For the transgression of Jacob is all this, ] Left they should think, either that these things were threatened in terrorem onely, and would never be inflicted: or else that they had not deserved such severity, but that God should pour out his wrath rather upon the Heathen that knew him not, and upon the families that called not on his name. The Prophet here sheweth that Jacob was become a just object of Gods indignation, by his transgressions or rebellions, and the whole house of Israel by their sinnes: there was a generall defection, and therefore they must expect a generall destruction. For why? the just Lord is in the midst thereof: he will not do iniquity, he will not acquit the guilty: morning by morning doth he bring his judgements to light, he faileth not: but the unjust knoweth no shame, will take no warning, which is a just both preface and desert of his ruine.

What is the transgression of Jacob? ] say they in a chatting way; like those miscreants in Malachy, that so worded it with God, chap. 1. and 3.

Is it not Samaria? ] saith the Prophet, in answer to that daring demand of theirs. So, what are the high-places of Judah? ] viz. the superstitions and carnall confidences thereof? Is it not Jerusalem? saith the Prophet. Are not their capitall cities become their capitall sinnes? Read we not of the calf of Samaria, Hos. 8. 5. and did not her kings set up idols at Dan and Beihel, and Gilgal and Beerseba? As for Jerusalem, had she not turned the very Temple into an high-place, by resting in her ceremoniall services, and sacrifices? Did not some of her best kings wink at the high-places? And Ahaz, that stigmaticall Belial, shut up Gods Temple, and set up strange worships? How then could these frontlesse fellows ask, What is the transgression, &c? and What are the high-places &c? The Prophet goes not behind the door to tell them, that the best of them were no better then a rabble of rebels against heaven: and their chieftains were most in fault, though they least liked to hear of it. Samaria is a very Poneropolis, and Jerusalem is little better: they both are even transformed into sinnes image: the Prophet here speaks of them, as if they were not onely sinfull, but sin it self; as Tully saith of one Tubulus a Roman Preter, that he was so desperately wicked, ut ejus nomen non hominis sed vitij esse videretur; that he passed not for a man, but for a Vice, so flagitious were his practices: or as Austin saith of this present evil world, That it is nothing else but a stie of filthy hogs, or a kennell of mad dogs.

*Harapocorum,
rabidorum canum. Aug.*

Verse 6. Therefore I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, ] i. e. like as when stones are gathered out of a field, they are laid together on heaps: so I will take course that where Samaria now is, there shall be nothing to be seen, but heaps of stones and rubbish. God is the true condemner: for thou hast made of a city an heap, of a defended city a ruine, a palace of strangers to be no city, it shall never be built, Esa 25. 2. Of Rome it was long since prophesied:

O that God would hasten that day: Scipio foresaw it, and wept, sc. when he saw Carthage set all on a light fire by himself. In the greatness of the Turkish Empire are swallowed up many kingdomes and countreys: besides all those Churches and places so much spoken of in Scripture, the Romans onely excepted: yet no doubt for their many and mighty sinnes, Time shall triumph over this so great a Monarchy, chy, when it shall but then live by fame, as others now do. Jam seges est ubi Troia fuit. Though thou build thy walls as high as heaven (said the Oracle to wicked Phocas) yet sinne that lieth at the foundation, will one day over-turn them.

Turk. hist. pref. Cedren.

and as plantings of a vineyard, ] that is, it shall be made a place fit for the planting of vines: it shall be utterly rased and harased. A Lapid observeth the fitnessse of the expression here used, in that Samarita was scituate on an hill that bore vines: and before it was a city, it had been a vineyard: God threatneth to make it so again, and so to stain the pride of all its glory: see what a trouble-rown sinne is. Surely did people but know what it will once cost them, and cause to them, they durst not but be innocent.

and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, ] that is, into a by-corner. Elapidation is necessary to a vine-yard, Esay 5. 2. there being no possession that requireth more pains and care, as Cato hath observed.

and I will discover the foundation thereof. ] I will not leave a stone upon a stone, nor any foot-step of so stately a city, that hath so long time been a cage of unclean birds, an Angean stable of abominable idolatries. God, as he hath loving respects to the places of his servants birth and abode, Psal. 87. 6. Esay 49. 16. so he sets the marks of his wrath upon those places where foul sinnes have been perpetrated, as upon our Abbeyes and Monasteries, whose very foundations are laid naked.

Verse 7. And all the graven images thereof, ] Upon these the jealous God will execute vengeance: so to shew his hatred of idolatry. The stones of the altars hee will make as chalk-stones, that are beaten in sunder: the grooves and the images shall not stand up, Esay 27. 9. As for those that worship them, and repent not of the works of their hands, Rev. 9. 20. they shall smart surely for their idolatries, as did those of old in the wilderness: and the more ingenuous of their posterity acknowledge at this day, that there is no punishment befalleth them, in which there is not still an ounce of that golden calf. True it is, that the Samaritan superstition which was grosser at first, (and for which they were carried captive by the Assyrian) was afterwards refined by Manasseh a Jew-priest, that in Alexanders time made a defection to him, and brought many Jews with him: but that saved them not from utter destruction.

and all the hires thereof shall be burnt with fire, ] Her rewards given her by her sweet-hearts, Hof. 2. 5, 12. and 9. 1. her vowed presents and memories, (as Papists now call them) her monies and donaries shall be set on a light fire. God will confute their vain confidences, as he did those Popish rebels of Norfolk in Edward the sixth time, who brought into the battell the Pix under his canopie, and with all his trinkets, crosses, banners, candlesticks, memories, &c. which in the end could neither help themselves, nor save their friends from the hands of their enemies.

for she gathered it of the hire of an harlot, &c. ] Ill gotten goods thrive not. Few harlots are found to be rich. Indeed we read of Phryne, a notable strumpet, that she offered to rebuild the walls of Thebes. on condition that this might be engraven on them; Ο μὲν Ἀλέξανδρος κατακαύσας, &c. Alexander pulled them down, and Phryne set them up again, but it would not be accepted. Flora also the Roman harlot was very rich: and so is the whore of Babylon at this day, by her trading with the merchants of the earth: but this will not hold long, Rev. 18. 10. In one hour shall her judgement come: and in one hour so great riches shall come to nothing, verse 17. England was wont to be counted and called the Popes Ass; for bearing his burdens: and his puteus inexhaustus, his pit of treasure, whence hee drew at pleasure. Polydor Virgil was sometime Collectour of his Peter-pence here, &c. But Henry 8. casheered and cast him out hence; depriving him of his harlot-hire. And well he had done, had he not given occasion to those that came after to complain. Possidebant Papista, possident jam Rapista, &c.

Verse 8. Therefore I will wail and howle, ] Good men are usually more deeply affected with the wretched estate of wicked persons, then they themselves are. Thus Samuel mourned for Sauls rejection; Daniel was astonied and troubled at the import of Nebuchadnezzars dream, chap. 4. 19. *Habakkuk*s belly trembled, and his lips quivered at the consideration of the judgements that were to come upon the Chaldeans. Do we so (saith Mr. Perkins) at other mens smartings.

Hab. 3. 16.

I will go stript, ] tam mente quam veste, renting off my garments, and casting them them from me, as if bereft of my wits: Pro demente vel insano quidam accipiunt, saith Calvin here. See Esay 59. 15. with the margent, and Esay 20. 2.

I will make a wailing like the dragons, ] which sucking the Elephants blood, till he fall down dead upon them, and oppresse them with his huge bulk, make an horrible howling: so horrible (saith Palacius out of Pliny and Solinus) that they amaze, yea kill those that hear it. Fides sit penes antores.

and mourning as the owls, ] Heb. as the daughters of the owl, or of the ostrich: young ostriches cast off by their dammes, Job 39. 14. Lam. 4. 3. and hungerbit howl pitifully, as do also the young ravens for like cause, Psal. 147. 9. Of the ravens of Arabia it is recorded, that full gorged, they have a tuneable sweet record: but empty, screech horribly. By these similitudes here used, the Prophet would expresse his griefe to be unexpressible.

Verse 9. For her wound is incurable, ] Or, she is grievously sick of her wounds; Or, her wounds are full of anguish, neither is there any to pour in balm of Gilead, to allay it: any to lick it whole, as the Lady Elinor did her husband Prince Edwards wound, traiterously given him in the holy land, by an Assassine, with a poisoned knife.

for it is come unto Judah, ] viz. Samaria's wound and Plague is come, i. e. shall shortly come, though now they live, as if out of the reach of Gods rod, or as if they had a protection.

he is come unto the gate of my people. ] Sennacherib (fleshed with former successes at Samaria, which had been carried captive by his father) came up to the very gate of Jerusalem, as an over-flowing scourge: and thought to have cut off all the Jews at once: as if they had had all but one neck. He came up over all his channels, and went over all his banks. He passed thorough Judah, and over-flowed, reaching even to the neck: and the stretching out of his wings filled the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel, Esay 8. 8. But Immanuel soon took a course with him, Esay 37. 33. so that though he came to the gates, yet he entered not into the city: nor shot an arrow there, nor cast a bank against it. Look upon Zion, saith that Prophet, the city of our solemnities, and see if Jerusalem be not still a quiet habitation, Esay 33. 20. Walk about Zion, saith the Psalmist, and go round about her, tell the towers thereof. See if any be missing since Sennacherib came up against them. Mark yee well her bulwarks: are they diminished? consider her palaces: are they at all defaced? Psal. 48. 12, 13. What if Jerusalem be wicked? yet Sennacherib is insolent. If therefore Jerusalem shall be smitten with the rod of Sennacherib's fear, Sennacherib shall be smitten with the sword of Gods revenges, who of all things cannot endure a presumptuous and self-confident vaunter: but will deal with his people, not according to his ordinary rule, but according to his Prerogative. Surely Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts, though their land was filled with sinne against the Holy One of Israel, Ier. 51. 5.

Verse 10. Declare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all, ] sc. in their sight and hearing, (though at home, weep your fill, verse 8.) lest the daughters of those uncircumcised triumph, 2 Sam. 1. 20. lest out of your tragedies they compose comedies; and ye become their musick, whilst they revel in your ruines, and make themselves merry in your misery.

In the house of Aphrah, roll thy self in the dust. ] An elegant Agnomination in the original: q. d. Dust thy self in the house of dust. Aphrah had its name from its dirtiness; as Paris is called Luseta à luto, from its dirtiness: and as Hiram called the twenty cities of Galilee given him by Solomon, Cabul, that is dirty, or displeasing, 1 King. 9. 13. Fitly was this city called Aphrah, or Dusty, saith the Prophet: for it shall be reduced to dust, and the inhabitants occasioned to roll themselves in the dust, in token of extreme sorrow. See Lam. 2. 10. Some think Aphrah is put for Ephraim: others, better understand it for a particular city; either that in the tribe of Manasseh, Gideons city, Judg. 6. 11. or that other in the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. 18. 23. not far from Jerusalem.

Verse 11. Passe ye away, thou inhabitant of Saphir, ] Or, thou that dwellest fairly, as it were in a city set with Saphires, see Esay 54. 11. such as was Susa in Persia, and Antioch in Syria, a city so sweet and specious, that Mahomet never durst come into it, lest he should be there detained by the pleasure of the place.

Saphir

Saphir here (say some) may allude to Samaria, that instead of her fairnesse shall be exposed to ignominy and nakednesse: they shall be carried away, young and old, naked and bare-foot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Samaria, Esay 20. 4. So the Popes champions dealt by the Waldenses in France, those ancient Protestants. One great city of theirs they took, and put to the sword sixty thousand. To another they gave quarter for life; but so, as that both the men and the women should depart stark naked (partibus illis quæ honeste nominari non possunt, sanctorum illorum cruciatorum oculis expositis) and shew all.

*River. Jesu

The inhabitants of Zaanan ] Loci pecorosi, faith Junius, the countrey of flocks. Some make it to allude to Zion. Others say, it signifieth an out-let: and make it to be as a gate to the kingdom of Judah. These came not forth of their gate in the mourning of Bethzel, or of the place over-against, to condole with them, as having their hands full at home, and matter enough of mourning for their own misery.

He shall receive of you his standing ] The enemy shall stand and stay amongst you, till he hath subdued you, and made a clear conquest: hee shall not give you over, till he have done the deed.

Verse 12. For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good, ] Or, shall grieve for the good, viz. that he hath lost in the common calamity; grieve till hee be heart-sick, as Amos 6. 6. or wait till he faint, for hope deferred maketh the heart sick, Prov. 13. 12. The name of this city is Maroth, that is, bitternesse; and bitter things shall befall her: see Ruth 1. 20. because together with the good of Piety, which she ought to have waited upon, she hath lost the good of Prosperity, which in vain she hath waited for. The expectation of the wicked is wrath, Prov. 11. 23.

But evil came down from the Lord. ] It is He that sends and sets the enemy awork: as Titus acknowledged, at the last destruction of Jerusalem, that he onely lent his hands to the divine justice. It was God that stirred up enemies to revolted Solomon. And Job descried Gods hand on the arms of the Sabeen robbers.

Verse 13. O thou inhabitant of Lachish, bind the chariot to the swift beast, ] To the Camel, or Dromedary, faith Calvin, which is a very swift beast, (wee call a slow body Dromedary, per Antiphrasin) or to the post-horses Angarijs, as Junius: he means, Make hast away. Salmaneser is already at Samaria, and Sennacherib will be ere long at Lachish, Esay 36. 2. Hannibal ad portus, begone with all possible speed: hast, hast, hast.

She is the beginning of sin to the daughter of Zion, ] Not partner onely, but Author, and Ring-leader. Such are all heresiarchs, and inventors of evil things, Rom. 7. 30. These shall drink deep of Gods wrath here, and be cast alive into the burning lake, Rev. 19. 20. Some apply the words to the confederacy of Lachish with Jerusalem against king Amaziab, 2 King. 14. 19. slain at this city.

For the transgressions of Israel were found in thee. ] The often-change of person in this verse is remarkable. The chief sinne that Lachish stands charged with is, that being near to Beerseba, she had learned her manner, Amos 8. 14. that is, her rites, and religions, instituted by Jeroboam, and transmitted them to Jerusalem. Superstition soon spreads, and is catching: like the Jerusalem-Artichoke, it quickly over-runs the ground, and chokes the Heart.

Verse 14. Therefore shalt thou give presents, &c. ] And so seek to make thee friends among the Philistines: but such carnall confederacies never prosper. The Greek Churches, Anno 1438. afraid of the Turks, sent and subjected themselves to the Bishop of Rome, that they might have the help of the Latine Churches: but shortly after, they were destroyed, their Empire subdued, and swallowed up by the Ottoman greatnesse, &c. How much better were it to send a Lamb to the Ruler of the earth, Esay 16. 1? to bring presents unto Him that ought to be feared, Psal. 76. 11? even to God, who cutteth off the spirits of Princes, and is terrible to the Kings of the earth? verse 12. Was he not so to Sennacherib whom Lachish here feared, and fled from? to Nebuchadnezzar, Belsazzar, Xerxes, who after he had waisted over two millions of men into Greece, and beaten the Hellepont (for battering his bridge of boats over it) with three hundred stripes, was defeated, routed, and forced to flee back in a poor fishers boat, to save his own life?

The houses of Achzib (that is of a lie) shall be a lie to the kings of Israel. ] Or have been a lie to the kings of Israel : never true to those that trusted them : And wilt thou confederate with them, and confide in them ?

Verse 15. Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, ] Or, a Possessor, who shall lay claim to thee, as by right of inheritance. This heir was the Assyrian, and those Colonies brought by him into the cities of Israel, 2 King. 17. 34. These took upon them as heirs and owners of the country, till turned out afterwards by Josiah King of Judah, 2 King. 23. 4, 8. Here is another elegant allusion, ( as this Chapter is full of them ) for Marefabab signifieth an Inheritance, or Possession. And if it were Mizab's own country, ( as many think ) we may see the Prophets integrity, in not bearing with his best friends : but taking the same liberty to tell them of their sins, and dangers, that they did to commit the one, and to incur the other. Physician heal thy self, said they to our Saviour, Luke 4. 23. that is, thine own country, as it is there explained.

He shall come unto Adullam, the glory of Israel. ] Haply so called, because David was once there hid and harboured : and the place thereby renowned. Or, because it was a strong-hold, wherein Israel gloried and trusted, but in vain : sith the enemy should come to it, and surprize it. Some think poor Adullam is called the glory of Israel ironically, and by way of scorn. Some read it thus, O glory of Israel, ( to wit, then lost and overthrown ) and they make it to be a deep sigh of the Prophet, fet from the bottome of his heart ; whereby he witnesseth that he is greatly sorry for the ruine of the Israelites : that hee might move them also to mourn in like manner. This he further preffeth them to in the next words.

Verse 16. Make thee bald and poll thee, ] i. e. Make most bitter lamentation ; he alludes to a custom among the Easterlings, of tearing off the hair of their heads and beards, in times of great heaviness. See Job 1. 20. Esay 15. 2. Jer. 7. 29. Ezr. 9. 3. In other cases baldness was forbidden Israel, ( lest they should symbolize with Heathens, but in case of sorrow for sin, they were called to it, Esay 22. 12.

for thy delicate children, ] To whom thou hast been rather a parricide then a parent : dealing by them, as that false School-master in Italy, that brought forth his scholars to Hannibal.

as the Eagle, ] when he is old, and loseth his feathers ; and with them, not only his beauty, but also his swiftness and courage.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. WO to them that devise iniquity, ] Or, labour, affliction, vanity, a lie. The Hebrew word Ara, is of large use ; applied to all kinde of sinne, which causeth pain, sorrow, and misery : and here in particular to covetousness, that root of all evil to a mans self, and others, 1 Tim. 6. 9, 10. Our Prophet sings a Wo at it, as doth likewise Habakkuk, chap. 2. 9. calling it an evil covetousness, as the Prophet Esay tells us, that for the iniquity of his covetousness, God was wroth with Israel and smot him, Esay 57. 17. The world counts it a light offence : and casts a cloak of good husbandry over it, 1 Thes. 2. 5. But this disguise will serve such, no better, then that which Ahab once put on and perished. Let no man deceive you with vain words, ( those plastered words, 2 Pet. 2. 3. used by hells Proctours ) for because of these things ( sc. fornication, covetousness, &c. those peccadillo's as they are counted ) cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience, Ephes. 5. 6. For why ? They devise iniquity, cogitant quasi coagitant, they plot and plow mischief, being men of wicked devices, Prov. 14. 2. talking estoons to themselves, as that covetous catif did, Luk. 12. 17. beating their brains about their worldly projects, and resting no more, no not upon their beds by night ( a time and place appointed for rest, when men should together with their clothes put off their cares, and compose themselves to sleep ; that nurse of nature, and sweet parenthesis ) then one doth upon a rack, or bed of thorns.

Thus they work evil upon their beds, ] They work hard at it, having the devil for their task-master, who shall therefore also be their pay-master. He hath their souls here as in a sling, 1 Sam. 25. 29. violently tossed about and restless : they are his drudges drudges and dromedaries, driven about by him at his pleasure 2 Tim. 2. 26. wholly acted and agitated by him Eph. 2. 2. having as many Lords as lusts, where-with their hearts are night and day exercised, 2 Per. 2. 14. without intermission. See this in Felix, who at the same instant trembled and coveted a bribe: in Abab, who sick of Naboths vineyard, laid him down upon his bed, but rested not. His heart did more afflict and vex it self with greedy longing for that bit of earth, then the vast and spacious compasse of a kingdome could counter-comfort.

when the morning is light they practise it] And so they lose no time, being up and at it by peep of day; when others are fast asleep, and so more easily surprised and circumvented by them. The morning is the most precious part of the day: and should be employed to better purpose. But wickednesse proceedeth from the wicked, as saith the proverb of the Ancients 1 Sam. 24. 13. and as they like not to have God in their heads Psal. 10. 4. nor hearts Psal. 14. 1. so neither in their words Psal. 12. 4. nor wayes Tit. 1. 16. but the contrary: Surely satan is rightly called the God of this world; because as God at first did but speak the word and it was done, so if the devill do but hold up his finger, give the least hint, they are ready prest to practise.

because it is in the power of their hand] The Vulgar hath it, Because their hand is against God: and indeed the same word El signifieth God and Power. The Seventy render it, Because they have not lifted up their hands to God (an exercise proper and fit for the morning Psal. 5. 4.) The Tigurine, Quia viribus pollent, They have strength enough to do it. Their hand is to power (so the Originall hath it) that is, saith Calvin, quantum possunt, tantum audent, they dare do their utmost, they will try what they can do: their hand is ever ready to rake and scrape together commodity; neither can they be hindered either by the feare of God, or any respect to righteousness.

Ver. 2. And they covet fields, and take them by violence] See here the severall degrees of sin; and what descents covetous men dig to hell, and beware betimes. Surely as the plot of all diseases lies in the humours of the body; so of all sin in the lust of the soule. The Heathen could say,

Covetousnesse is called the lust of the eyes 1 Ioh. 2. 16. because from looking comes lusting, from lusting, acting, (hence lusts of the soule are called deedes of the body Rom. 8. 13.) yea acting with violence, they covet and take, they rob and ravish Psal. 10. there is neither equity nor honesty to be had at their hands: but as they take away fields, houses, heritages shamelessly; so they beare them away boldly, and think to scape scotfree; because it is facinus majoris abolla, the fact of a great one, whose hand is to power, as ver. 1.

and houses, and take them away] though a mans house be his castle (as we say) yet it cannot secure him from these cormorants. Scribes and Pharises devoured widdowes houses Mat. 23. 17 where was a concurrence of covetousnesse and cruelty (for these seldome go sundred) besides the putid hypocrisie of doing this under a pretence of long prayers. A poor man in his house, is like a snail in his shell: crust that, and you kill him.

so they oppresse (or defraud) a man and his house] Either by fraud or force, by craft or cruelty they ruine a man, (a well-set man virum validum) and his family, his whole progeny; which might not be done to the unreasonable creatures Deut. 22. 6. This is to be like Uladus that cruel Prince of Valachia: whose manner was, together with the offendour to execute the whole family; yea sometimes the whole kindred.

Ver. 3. Behold against this family do I devise an evil] They had devised iniquity ver. 1. and now he deviseth their misery. God usually retaliates, and proportions provocation to provocation Deut. 32. 21. frowardnesse to frowardnesse Psal. 18. 26. contrariety to contrariety Lev. 26. 18, 21. and device to device, as here. He loves to pay sinners home in their own coyne; and to make them know by sad experience and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter to forsake the Lord and his feare Jer. 2. 19. Woe be to that man against whom the Almighty sets himself to devise an evil: such an one shall find, that thought is not free (as that pestilent proverb would would make it) either from the notice of Gods holy eye, the censure of his mouth, or the stroak of his hand. See Ier. 4. 14. and 6. 39. Rev. 2. 23. Deut. 29. 19. And this, Nature it self had some notion of, as appeareth by his censure who judged that Antiochus did therefore die loathsomely, because he had but an intent to burn Diana's temple. Fecit quisque quantum voluit, saith Seneca: and Incesta est, & sine stupro, quæ stuprum cupit saith the same Authour. Vaine thoughts are very sins, and expose men to punishment: these shall either excuse or accuse at the last day Rom. 2. 15. Meane-while, God is devising what to do to them: he is preparing his bow and making ready his arrowes upon the string, even a Tophet of the most tormenting temper will shortly swallow them up, without true and timely Repentance.

From which ye shall not remove your necks] It shall so halter and hamper you, that like fishes taken in an evill net, and as birds caught in a snare, so shall ye be snared in an evill time, when it falleth suddenly upon you Eccles. 9. 12. ye shall never be able either to avoide it, or to abide it. But as the bird in a gin, the fith on the hook, the more it strives, the more it sticks: and as the bullock under the yoke, the more he wriggles, the more he galles: so shall it be here. Your faire necks, that would not beare the easy yoke of Gods obedience, shall be ridden on by the enemy and bound to your two furrowes Hos. 10. 10, 11. yea a yoke of iron shall be put upon thee, untill thou be destroyed Deut. 28. 48.

The meaning here is, God would deject and darken them, so as that they shall utterly lose their former renown and splendour. He will thrust them down, as it were with a thump on the back, and there hold them. See Ezech. 21. 26, 27. the scene shall be changed, and the haughty abased.

for this time is evill] Both sinfully and penally evill. The Apostle semeth to allude to this text, when he saith, Redeeme the time, because the dayes are evill: and Sufficient to the day is the evill thereof, that is, the misery of it, saith Christ Mat. 6. 34. And againe, Those very dayes shall be affliction (so the Greek text hath it) Mark 13. 19. as if the time were turned into affliction: because of that evill, that onely evill without mixture of mercy Ezech. 7. 5. here foretold, and therefore foretold, that it might have been prevented.

Verse 4. In that day shall one take up a parable &c.] In that day, that dolefull, and dismal day of their calamity.

shall One] Any one that is moved at your misery, and would work you to a sense of your sin the mother of your misery:

shall take up a parable] tristem & querulam sad and sorrowfull.

and lament with a doleful lamentation] Heb. with a lamentation of lamentations, or with heigh-bo upon heigh-bo, as the word seemes to signify.

we be utterly spoiled] Plundered to the life, laid naked to the very foundation, chap. 1. 6. put into such a condition, as that there is neither hope of better, nor place of worse.

he hath changed the portion of my people] that is God, or the Assyrian by Gods appointment, hath taken away our countrey, and given it to strangers. The Pope took upon him in Henry the 8. dayes to give England Primo occupaturo to him that could first win it. This brutum fulmen came to nothing: But when Gods people changed their glory for that which profited not, Ier. 2. 11. he soon changed their portion; he caused that good land to spew them out, he turned their weale into woe, and brought wrath upon them to the utmost. Neither profited it them any more to have been called Gods people, then it did Dives in flames, that Abraham called him Son; or Judas, that Christ called him Friend.

how hath he removed it from me? ] This is Lamentation-like indeed. See Lam. 1. 1. and 2. 1. and 4. 1. all beginning with the same word, How. The speech is concise and abrupt, meet for mourners. There is an elegancy in the original not to be Englished. How uncertaine are all things here! God sits upon the circle of the earth, earth, and shakes out the inhabitants at pleasure, as by a canvas. Persons and things are said to be in heaven, but on earth: on the outside of it only, where they have no firm footing. Dionysius was driven out of his kingdom: which yet he thought was tied to him with chains of adamant, saith the Historian.

Esa. 40.

turning away (from us as a loathsome object, being so incorrigibly flagitious) he hath divided our fields] sc. to the enemy for a reward: like as he gave Egypt to Nebuchadnezzar for his pains at Tyre. Or thus, Instead of restoring (which now we are hopelesse of) he hath divided our fields, our fertile and fat countrey to those that will be sure to hold their own in it; as the Gauls and Goths did in Italy, after they had once tasted the sweetnesse of it. Vatablus rendreth the text thus: How hath he taken from me those fields of ours which he seemed ready to restore? he hath even divided them, sc. to others.

Verse 5. Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot] Fields were divided with cords of old, and inheritances also, See Psal. 16. 5. and 105. 11. and 78. 55. 2 Sam. 8. 2. This hope is henceforth cut off from revolted Israel: the ten tribes never returned, the other two did, and some few of the ten amongst them. Whether upon their conversion to Christ they shall be restored to the promised land, Time (the mother of Truth) will make manifest.

In the congregation of the Lord] So you were once, but now nothing lesse. A Congregation ye are still, but of malignants: a rabble of rebels conspiring against heaven. A name ye have to live, but ye are dead: ye cry out Templum Domini, The Temple of the Lord are we: but in truth ye are no better then those Egyptian temples, beautifull without, but within nothing to be seen but a cat, rat, or some such despicable creature. Here they are called the Congregation of the Lord by an irony, as the Cardinal of Ravenna is so called by way of derision.

Verse 6. Prophecie ye not, say they, to them that prophecie] Prodigious impudency, thus to silence the Prophets, or else to prescribe to them, according to the other reading of the text, Prophecie not, as they prophecie, for they are too tart: therefore Drop not ye who thus drop vinegar and nitre, who vex our galled consciences, no lesse then the cruel Spaniards do the poor Indians naked bodies, which, for a sport they do day by day drop with burning bacon: But let these drop that can smooth us up, that can utter toothlesse truths, that will drop oyle into our eares, and give us silken words; these be Prophets for our turns &c. God cannot please some hearers, unlesse he speak tinkling and tickling words. Now, these must get their eares healed (as Demosthenes advised his countrey men of Greece) ere they can be in case to hear with profit. They must learn of Bees, to passe by roses and violets, and sit upon Time; to heed, I meane, sound rebukes rather then smooth supparations. There are that note a jeare in the team Drop. It is well known that the word Preached is oft compared to raine Deut. 32. 2. Esay. 55. 10. 11. The Prophets therefore are here in derision called Droppers or Distillers, and forbidden to do their office; or at least, to drop in that sort. Thus their successors in evill the Pharisees (who were likewise covetous) derided Christ; And thus their predecessours also in Esay's time put a scoff upon him, and his preaching, cap. 28. 10. where the sound of the words in the Original carries a taunt as scornfull people, by the tone of their voice, and riming words, gibe and jeare at those whom they vilify.

Verse 7. O thou that art named the house of Jacob] That hast a name to live but art dead Rev. 3. 1. that art called a Jew, and makest thy boast of God Rom. 2. 17. that hast a form of knowledge Rom. 2. 20. and a form of godlinesse 2 Tim. 3. 5. a semblance of sanctimony Luke 8. 18. acting religion, playing devotion, as if it were a name onely; or as if it were enough to be named the house of Jacob, or to have his voice, though the hands are the hands of Esaü, the practise nothing suitable to the profession. Thus many amongst us content themselves with the bare bare name of Christians: as if many a ship, hath not been called Safe-guard or Goodspeed, which yet hath fallen into the hands of Pirates. The devil will surely sweep, and hell swallow all such Nominalists: such shall find that an empty title yeelds but an empty comfort at the last. What was Dives the better for this, that Abraham called him sonne, or Iudas that Christ called him friend, or the rebellious Iewes that God stileth them his people? Doth he not elsewhere disclaim them, and call them a sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity; the people of his wrath and of his curse? May not all Formalists fear Jacobs fear? Gen. 27. 12. My father per-adventure will feel me, and I shall seem to him as a deceiver: and I shall bring a curse upon me, and not a blessing. Our heavenly Father will surely feel us in our addresses: and if he find us but complementing, and contenting our selves to be called the house of Jacob, he will confute our vain confidences, and cut us out of the roll; as he did Dan and Ephraim, who were named the house of Jacob, and yet for their wickednesse are passed by in the reckoning up of the twelve tribes, Rev. 7. as if they were souldiers put out of pay, and cashiered.

Is the spirit of the Lord straitned, or shortned? Is he a penny-father? hath he but one blessing? Is there not with him the residue of the spirit? plenteous redemption, an exceeding abundant goodnesse even to a superpleonasm? Where then is the fault that you are no more Jacob-like, plain-hearted and perswasible; that ye refuse to be reformed, hate to be healed, saying to me, Depart, and to my Prophets, Drop not, &c. Neither curse ye nor blesse ye, as he said to Balaam? wherein if they should hearken to you, and be ruled by you, yea, should you straitly threaten them with bonds to speak henceforth to no man in my name, as Act. 4. 17. yet my word is not bound, 2 Tim. 2. 9. but runs and is glorified: my spirit is not straitned, but is free and not fettered. I tell you, that if these (Prophets) should hold their peace, and not drop, the stones would immediatly cry out: which against change of weather do stand with great drops of water to confute your unyeeldingnesse. Turn ye therefore now at my reproof; behold, I will turn out my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you, Prov. 1. 23. I will do it howsoever; yea, in despite of you I will do it, as some sence the foregoing verse, reading it thus (and the original will bear it) Drop ye not, but they shall drop.

Are these his doings? ) i. e. Such as God doth approve of, or rather, are these Jacobs doings? tread you in the steps of your father Jacob? did he ever silence the Prophets, and withstand those that were sent unto him? Did he not rather lie low, put his mouth in the dust and crie out, speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth. Good is the word of the Lord which ye have spoken, &c. And whereas ye will be apt enough to replie that Iacob had no other cause: for the Prophets never spake but good and comfortable things to him, it is answered in the next words.

Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? ] Heb. upright; that pondereth his paths by the weights of my word, and turneth not to the right hand nor to the left, Pro. 4. 26, 27. but walketh exactly, accurately, and precisely, Eph. 5. 15. keeping within my precincts, &c. Do not my words do good to such, and speak they not peace to him? David felt it as sweet as honey, Pf. 119. 103. But as honey causeth pain to exulcerate parts, though of it self it be sweet and medicinal: so doth the word of God to exulcerate consciences. Children, though they love to lick in honey, yet they will not endure to have it come neer their lips, when they have sore mouths: so is it here. Excellently saith Saint Austin, Adversarius est nobis, quamdiu sumus & ipsi nobis, &c. The word of God is adversary to none, but such as are their own greatest adversaries, &c. It may well be compared to Moses rod, which whiles he held it in his hand, it flourished and brought forth almonds; but being cast on the ground it turned into a serpent. Did it not take hold of those refractories, Zech. 1. 6. that would not take hold of Gods covenant, and chuse the things that pleased him, Esay. 56. 4? Doth it not still sting wicked people with unquestionable conviction and horror; when as great peace have they which love Gods law, and nothing shall offend them?

for

for as there is no beginning of eternity, so neither is there any succession. But let men take heed how they heap up sin, lest they heap up wrath: for although God may bear with people for one or two out-strayes, yet when once it comes to three transgressions and to four, he will not turn away the punishment, Am. 1. 2. and one new sin may set many old awork in the conscience; making it like Ezekiels scroul, wherein was written lamentations, and mourning, and woe. Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, saith the Lord, 2 Kin. 9. 26. The word signifieth last night, though it were done some while before. See the word yesterday so used by the Apostle Hebraizing with his Hebrews, Chap. 15. 8. Some read the text thus, He that was yesterday my people is risen up on the other side as against an enemy, viz. raging against God, and ranging against all men, biting all they come anear as mad dogs. See Esay. 9. 21. 1 Thess. 2. 15. they please not God, but rise up in rebellion against him; and are contrary to all men, being rather Israelites then Israelites, Gen. 16. 12. and therefore not rightly named the house of Jacob (that plain man, Gen. 25. 27. without welt or gard, guile or gall) nor could the word of the Lord do good unto them, so long as their deeds were evil, and they loved darkness rather than light.

Joh. 3. 19.

Ye pull off the robe with the garment] Robbing and pillaging passengers with greatest inhumanity: not leaving them a rag to cover them, or a crasse to blesse them with, as the proverb is. This was common in Scotland and Africa, saith Dan. here. It was in England also, till the dayes of king Alfred, who first divided the land into shires, and then the subjects into tenths or Tithings; every of which severally should give bond for the good abearing of each other, &c. By this courie men were not careful onely of their own actions, but had an eye to all the nine, for which they stood bound; as the nine had over each. Infomuch that a poor-girle might travel safely with a bag of gold in her hand, and none durst meddle with her.

from men that passe by securely, as men averse from war] There are a sort of such as delight in warre, Psal. 68. 30. that make a sport of it, as Abner, 2 Sam. 2. 14. that take more pleasure in it then in an Empire, as Iustin saith of Pyrrhus king of Epirors. David was none such; and yet he wanted not for courage. His motto was, I am for peace, or (as the Hebrew hath it) I am peace. He had seen the woe of warre, and knew well the lawlesse of it. The law is no more, saith the Church in the Lamentations, Chap. 2. 9. Inter arma silent leges, saith the Heathen, The noise of warres drowns the voice of lawes. A reverend man hath well observed, that as those three commandments, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal are ranked together in the law: so they are commonly violated together by unruly souldiers, Esay. 13. 16. Their children also shall be dashed in pieces before their eyes, their houses shall be spoyled, and their wives ravished. These are the miseries of warre. But what meant these miscreants to shed the blood of warre in peace, 1 Kin. 2. 5. to strip the innocent and therefore fearlesse passenger of his raiment, as those thieves did him, that went down from Ierusalem to Jericho, dreading no such danger? neither to rob him onely, but to ravish him too, Pf. 10. that they might find all precious substance, and fill their houses with spoyl? And what meant the corrupt Rulers to suffer it so to be, and not to brandish the sword of justice against such stigmatical Belialists.

have ye cast out from their pleasant houses] where they had long lived with their husbands in love, peace, and much sweetnesse, as good Naboths wife had: This was barbarous cruelty. God had taken order in the law, that none should harm a bird sitting upon her own nest, how much lesse a daughter of Abraham? Widdows and Orphans are his clients, Pf. 146. 9.

from their children have ye taken away my glory] i. e. My maintenance and that livelihood that I had allowed them for their better education, which might have redounded to my great glory. This is not your rest] As you falsly fancy, and vainly vaunt: binding upon the promise, but not performing the condition. It is the guile of gracelesse men to stuffe themselves with promises, till they have made them a pillow for sinne: Et sic presumendo sperant, & sperando pereunt, they presume till they perish, as he did who died with this desperate saying in his mouth, Spes & fortuna Valite, Farewell life and hope together.

Because it is polluted] sc. by your sinne, which is of so fullying a nature, that it defileth also the very visible heavens, which are therefore to be purged by the fire of the last day: like as those vessels that held the sin-offering were either to be broken if earthen, or to passe the fire if of better mettall: they must not think to rest that let sin lie unrepented of in the conscience. But as a man that hath used himself to drink poison, at the 1. & 2. time he may do wel, but the last it overcomes and destroyes himself: so the next sin, though lesse, may set all the former aworking. And as two poisons met in the stomach make a man restless, so sin and wrath met in the conscience, raise a great garboile there. Neither must they think to dwell in Gods good land, that will not live by Gods good laws, Esa. 1. 19. Ps. 107. 39, 40. they walk upon fireworks every moment ready to be blown up: brimstone also is scattered upon their habitations, that if the fire of Gods wrath do but lightly touch it, they are suddenly consumed. Eusebius telleth us of Dioclesian, that bloody persecutor of the Church, that giving over the Empire, he decreed to lead the rest of his life quietly: but he escaped not so. For after that, his house was wholly consumed with lightning, and a flame of fire that fell from heaven, he hiding himself for fear of the lightning died within a little after.

it shall destroy you even with a sore destruction] Diffipatione roborata, saith Calvin, Perditione precisata, saith Tremellius. The land longs for a vomit to spue you out, and it shall do it effectually. Poyson given in wine works more furiously then in water. Woe be to that people or person whom God will destroy with a violent destruction. This he doth not willingly, or from his heart, Lam. 3. 35. but mens sinnes compel him to it. Surely as many a fowl is shot with an arrow feathered from her own body: and as of the blackbirds slime is made the lime whereby he is taken: so out of the dung of mens sinnes doth God make his limetwigs (his judgements I mean) to take them withal. Long they might rest, would they but let him rest: but pollution is the forerunner of perdition.

Verse 11. If a man walking in the spirit, &c.] Si vir ventosus, so Junius rendreth it, if a windy and false man lie, saying, &c. Let a man but feed them with vain hopes and frothy fancies, let him but make fair weather before them: when the storm of Gods wrath is ready to break out upon them; let him promise them plenty of all things, and prophesie to them of wine and strong drink: as the Popish Priests in Gerfons time publicly preached to the people, that if any one would hear a Masse, he should not on that day be struck blind, nor die suddenly, nor want sufficient sustenance, &c. These call themselves the Spirituality, or men of the Spirit, (as Hosea hath it) as if all others to them were carnal, and destitute of the spirit. They also (after the manner of those false prophets of old) take to themselves big-swole titles, and as they increase in their pretended holiness, so they proceed in their titles from Padre benedicto to Padre Angelo, then Archangelo, Cherubino, and lastly Cerephino, which is the top of perfection. But what is all this more then a light flask, or a pillar of smoak, which the higher it mounteth, the sooner it vanisheth? And what are all such vain boasters but gloria animalia, popularis aurea mancipia vilia as Hierome calls Crates the Philosopher? may it not fitly be said of them as Hos. 9. 7. The Prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad: and as Ezek. 13. 3. Surely these are foolish prophets that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing. O Israel, thy Prophets are like the foxes in the desert, &c. A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The Prophets prophesie falsely, and the Priests beare rule by their means, and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof? Jer. 5. 31. All will be naught no doubt. There is not a more dangerous creature then a parasitical Prophet. Ezekiel calleth them the devils dirt-dawbers,

And these are Prophets for this people, fit letice for such lips; dignum patellâ operculum: a singular plague of God upon the men of this world, who deserve to be deceived: for why? they have desired it, and it best pleaseth their vitiated palats. Most people, having first flattered themselves, are well content to be soothed up by others: and I cannot but accord him that saith, If there were Judges ordained for flattery, they would have no doings: there being so very few that will complain, that they are flattered.

Verse 12. I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee, An Evangelicall promise (saith Diodate, after Others) of gathering together the Univerſall Church under the kingdom of Christ, contrary to the precedent dispersion, vers. 10. Assembling I will assemble, and gathering, gather them, sc. into the boſom of the Church, called therefore Ecclesia (as culled and collected out of the world) and Church, or Kirk, of Kueiaxâ: because it belongs to the Lord Christ, who gathereth his together, as the hen doth her chickens: and died not for that Nation of Jews onely, but that also he might gather together into one, the children of God that were scattered abroad, Joh. 11. 51, 52. Here, He is called the breaker up: and his Apostles likewise those that have broken up, and have passed thorough the gate, &c. doing great exploits, and subduing souls to the obedience of the faith; as here in Britain, where Cesar himself could not break thorow, but as Pompey in Lucan upbraids him. Hence Tertullian saith, Christ brake into those places of Britanny that the Romans could never come at. He is that King against whom there is no rising up, Prov. 30. 31. He is Jehovah on the head of his people, or in the fore-front of them, as their Captain General, to lead them on, and bring them off safely in all encounters. Habent ista amplissimam promissionem, saith Gualther here: this is an excellent promise, and carrieth in it a most sweet consolation. But I rather think it to be a continuation of the former threatening: I will surely assemble them, sc. to the slaughter. I will gather them together, sc. that they may be broken in pieces: I will put them (or pen them up) together as the sheep of Bozrah, that are fat, and fit, and appointed for the slaughter. See Esay 34. 6. Bozrah was a rich pasture country in Edom, from whence most fat sheep, and meet for meat were sent to the shambles.

As the flock in the midst of their fold, So will God, first shut you up by strait sieges, and then number you out to the sword; and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter, Esay 65. 12. There is a memorable story of the suffering of certain good people in Calabria, Anno 1560. by the hands of the bloody Papists there. A great sort of them being thrust up in one house together, as in a sheep-fold, the executioner comes in: and among them, takes one, and blindfoldeth him with a muffler about his eyes, and so leadeth him forth to a larger place, where he commandeth him to kneel down: which being done, he cutteth his throat, and so leaving him half-dead, and taking his butchers knife, and muffler all of gore-blood, cometh again to the rest; and so leading them one after another, he dispatched them all to the number of eighty eight. In Ireland many like barbarous butcheries have been committed, by those breathing devils the Romish Rebels, those fer-wolves worrying Christs flock in the midst of the land. But shall they thus escape by inquiry? No verily, in thine anger cast down that people, O God, Psal. 56. 7. Give them blood again to drink, for they are worthy. A Lapid saith, that Bozrah signifieth Rome: and that Micah here, after a sort foretelleth, that the Church of Rome should bee the common sheep-fold of the sheep of Christ, under one chief shepherd the Pope. But this conceit is far fetcht: and Rome (the slaughter-house of the saints) is no otherwise Bozrah, then that she is of Edom (the Rabbins for Dumah, Esay 21. 11. read Roma, and call the Court of Rome, the wicked kingdome of Edom) and that her brats, as the Vultures young ones, do glut-glut blood (so the Hebrew soundeth, Job 39. 30.) and where the flux is, there is she.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. AND I said,] viz. at another time, and in a new discourse: the heads whereof ~~we~~ we have here recorded. A stinging Sermon it is, preached to the Princes, and Prophets, those great Heteroclitēs in the house of Israel. For as in a fish, so in a Church and State, corruption begins at the head: and as rheume falling from the head upon the lights, breeds a consumption of the whole body, so is it here. To the chieftains therefore, and Capitanei, our Prophet applieth himself: And as it is said of Suetonius, that ea libertate, scripsit Imperatorum vitas, quā ipsi vixerunt, that hee wrote the Emperours lives with as much liberty, as they lived them: so did Micah as boldly reprove the Princes sinnes, as they committed them. Such another Preacher amongst us was Latimer, and after him Deering; who in his Sermon afore Queen Elizabeth, speaking of the disorders of the times; These things are so, saith He, and you sit still and do nothing. And again, May we not well say with the Prophet, saith He, It's the Lords mercy that we are not consumed, seeing there is so much disobedience, both in subjects and Prince. Once it was Tanquam ovīs, as a sheep before the shearer: but now it is Tanquam iuvenca petulca, as an untamed heifer, &c. In our dayes, Reverend Mr. Stock had this commendation given him by a faithfull witnesse; that hee could speak his minde fitly, and that he durst speak it freely. I will go to the Bishop (Steven Gardiner, then Lord Chancellour) and tell him to his beard, that he doth naught, said Dr. Taylor Martyr; and hee did so, though his friends dissuaded him. Truth must be spoken, however it bee taken. And if Gods Messengers must be mannerly in the forme, yet in the matter of their message, they must be resolute, and plain-dealing. It is probable that Joseph used some kind of preface to Pharaohs Baker, in reading him that hard destiny, Gen. 40. 19. such haply as was that of Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar, chap. 4. 19. or as Philo brings him in with a Utinam tale somnium non vidisses, &c. But for the matter, he gives him a sound, though a sharp interpretation. So dealeth Micah by these corrupt Princes, to whom neverthelesse he giveth their due Titles: and of whom hee fairly begs audience. Hear I pray you, yee heads of Jacob, &c. Or, hear yee now, who formerly have refused to hearken. It was in Hezekiah's dayes, that this Sermon was preached, as appeareth, Jer. 26. 18. not long before Sennacherib invaded the land, Mic. 5. And although the King himself were religious, and righteous, yet many of his Princes and Courtiers, who in the reigne of his father Ahaz, had been habituated in rapine, and wrong-dealing, still played their pranks, and are here as barely told their own.

Is it not for you to know judgement?] To know it, and do it? as it is said of our Saviour, that he knew no sinne, that is, he did none. And have the workers of iniquity no knowledge? they eat up my people as they eat bread, and call not upon God, Psal. 14. 4. Of all men Magistrates should be knowing men, fearing God, hating covetousnesse, and cruelty, Exod. 18. 21. They are the eyes of their Countrey, and

and if they be dark, how great is that darknesse? They are the common looking-glasses, by which other men use to dresse themselves. Judges they are, to discern, and decide controversies: fit it is therefore and necessary, that they know judgement: how else shall they execute it? Tully complaineth of the Roman Priests in his dayes, that there were many things in their own lawes that themselves understood not. I will get me to the great men, saith Jeremy, (when hee found things farre amisse among the vulgar) and will speak unto them; for they have known the way of the Lord, and the judgement of their God: but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds, Jer. 5. 5.

Verse 2. Who hate the good, and love the evil, [q.d. That you know not judgement; but are men ignorant of the truth, which is according to godlinesse, appeareth by your wicked practises. For you stand acrosse to what God requireth, hating what you should love, and loving where you should hate. Goodnesse is in it self amiable, and attractive: but you are perfect strangers to it, and therefore hate it, and those that professe it. Evil is of the Devil: and must therefore needs be loathsome: and yet you love it, allow it, and wallow in it: whereas you should abhorre that which is evil (hate it as hell) and cleave (or bee fast glued) to that which is good, Rom. 12. 9. You are direct Antipodes to the godly, Psal. 15. 4. and have nothing in you of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. or of the spot of Gods children: but are a perverse and crooked generation, Deut. 32. 3.]

Who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones.] Like so many carnivorous Canibals, or truculent wild-beasts. As the Ossivage, or Break-bone pursueth the prey, tears off the flesh, breaks the bones, and sucks out the marrow: such were these griping tyrants: their furious rapacity surmounted all bounds of humanity. Such an one was Verres among the Romans, as Tully describeth him: that Tigre Tiberius, those Romish Usurers in King John's time here, called Causini quasi capientes Ursi (quoth Paris) devouring Bears: who left not so much money in the whole Kingdom, as they either carried with them, or sent to Rome before them. Money, and lands are here called mens skin, flesh, and bones: and a poor mans substance is his life. See Mark 12. ult. and Luke 8. 43. Hence oppression is called a bony sine, Amos 5. 12, 13. and Oppressours Men-eaters, Psal. 14. 4. and murtherers, Hab. 2. 12. Cyprian cries out, Fera parvum Danieli, Aves parvum Eliam, homines sapiunt; Lions spare Daniel, ravens feed Elias; but men rage and are worse then both. Melancthon maketh mention of a certain Prince, some few years before his time, who, to get money out of his subjects, would send for them: and by knocking out first one tooth, and then another (threatning to leave them toothlesse else) would extort from them what summes soever he pleased. Our King Johns exactours received from his subjects no lesse summes of curses, then of coin, saith the Chronicler: And so did Cardinal Wolsey, under Henry 8. by his importable subsidies: which caused Suffolk to rise up in arms, making poverty their Captain.

Verse 3. Who also eat the flesh of my people, and slay their skin, &c.] He stills proceeds in the Allegory, the better to argue, and aggravate their extreme cruelty. Money, saith the Heathen, is a mans flesh, blood, life, all. Of this, when the people were pilled, and polled, by their cruel princes, who are here compared to butchers and cooks, they are looked upon as not onely excoiated, but excoiated, and even exossated, and laid for dead: for mortis habet vices qua trahitur et a geminibus. It is a lifelesse life that many poor people live for want of necessities. Such savage Shepherds Ezekiel inveighes against, that not onely sheer their sheep, but held them, and suck their blood. Atqui pastoris est pecus tondere, non deglubere, non carnem & ossa concidere, &c.

Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them] Thence. when God shall have changed their cheer, pulled the fat morsell from between their teeth, and fed them with the bread of affliction, and water of affliction, with prisoners pittance as they call it, which will neither keep them alive, nor suffer them to die; Then shall they cry, and whine as hogs when hungry, as dogs when

They cry unto the Lord aloud, but it is only to be rid of his rod, they roare when upon the wrack, but 'tis only to get off, they look rufully as the fox doth when taken in a gin, but it is only to be set at liberty, they chatter out a charm when Gods chastening is upon them. yea they may be with child (as it were) of a prayer, and yet bring forth nothing but wind Esa. 26. 16, 17, 18. that bite with their teeth] The dogs of Congo bite through they bark not, saith Mr. Purchas: there are a sort of cur-dogs, saith Another, that suck a mans blood only with licking. Seducers are such: Beware of false Prophets: for they come to you in sheeps clothing; but inwardly they are ravening wolves. And in this sense Hierome and Theodore take this text: they devour those they make prize of, as the Apostles word signifieth Colos. 2. 8. Others think their covetousnesse and gormandise is noted.

Like they are to the ravens of Arabia that full gorged have a tuneable sweet record: but empty, screech horribly. Si ventri bene si lateri as Epicurus saith in Horace, Let their bellies be filled and their backs fitted, and they will prophecy all good to you: as those false Prophets nourished by Iezabel did, to Abab; as the Pharisees cryed up the Centurion, who had built them a synagogue Luk. 7. as the Popish Clergy canonize their benefactors, and extoll them to the skies. Wolfin Bishop of Sherborn displaced secular Priests and put in Monks. Hence the Monkish writers make him a very holy man; and report of him, that when he lay a dying he cryed out suddenly, I see the heavens open, and Jesus Christ standing at the right hand of God, and so died. Yea, they had a trick to make their Images speak their minds this way. As the rode of grace here in England had a man within it inclosed, with an hundred wires to make the image goggle with the eyes, nod with the head, hang the lip: move and shake his jawes according as the value was of the gift that was offered. If it were a small peece of silver, he would hang a frowning lip: if a peece of gold, then should his jawes go merrily. This idolatrous forgery was at last, by Cromwells meanes, disclosed: and the image with all his engines shewed openly at Pauls crosse, and there torn in peeces by the people, who had been so seduced.

Verse 9. Therefore night shall be unto you] Ye shall be benighted, your gifts blasted, and your persons baffled: your lamp shall be put out in obscure darknesse: the sword shall be upon your arms, and upon your right eyes: your arms shall be clean dried up, and your right eyes utterly darkened. Those illuminations and inspirations that ye seemed to have, shall be taken from you: and God shall passe that dreadfull sentence, Take the talent from him, even here in this life: let him not have the least dram or drop of a prophetick Spirit, of ministeriall abilities; and then, in the next world, cast ye the unprofitable servant into utter darknesse &c. Mat. 25. 28. 30.

Zech. II. 17.

and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine] Tenebra vobis à divinatione, vel propter divinationem, so Calvin. All the reward ye shall have for your divination shall be disgrace and confusion: your folly shall be manifest unto all men, as was that of Jannes and Jambres 2 Tim. 3. 9.

And the Sun shall goe down over the Prophets] The same thing is set forth by sundry Metaphors, for more assurance: for Hypocritis nihil stupidius, it is hard to perswade an hypocrite, that evill is toward him: see ver. 11.

Verse 7. Then shall the Seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded] They shall be hissed and hooted at for Impostour, and falsaries: shame shall be the promotion of these fooles, as it is at this day of the Heathen Philosophers, of the Iewish Rabbins, of the Popish Doctours and Schoole-men: who once caried the bell for most acute and accurate Divines, but now appear to be great triflers, a rotten generation of dunghil-divines as one stileth them: in detestation of whose vain jangling and doting about questions 1 Tim. 6. 4. Luther saith, Prope est ut jurem &c. I could swear almost, that there was not a Schoolman that understood one chapter of the Gospel. Latimer professed that by hearing Bilneys confession, he learned more, then afore in many yeares. So from that time forward, saith He, I began to smell the word of God, and forsake the School-doctours, and such fooleries.

yea they shall all cover their lips] And stand aloof; as lepers. See Lev. 13. 45. Ezek. 24. 17, 22. Or they shall leave off their lying; for I will stop their mouthes, that they shall not hereafter so much as mute any more. The Septuagint render it, All men shall abhorre them, shall open their lips against them. Montanus, involvens mysticem suam, they shall wrap up their mustachoes, which (saith à Lapide) the false Prophets wore upon their upper-lip, & incedebant compruli, and went neatly trimmed, as do now the Calvinistical Ministers. But if some do so, yet this is better then the Popish priests shaving, which is a ceremony so bald, that some Priests in France are ashamed of the mark: and few of them have it, that can handiomey avoid it.

for there is no answer of God] He comes not at them, as sometimes he did to Abimelech, Laban, Balaam; neither speake they according to his word, for why? there is no light in them Es. 8. 20. The Philosophers professing themselves to be wise (but wanting the wi-dome from above) became fooles Rom. 1. 22. The Pharisees had they known any thing aright and as they ought, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory 1 Cor. 2. 8. Oracles they had and miracles enow: but they rejected the counsell of God against themselves being not baptized Luke. 7. 30. or if they were, yet remained they a viperous brood Mat. 3. and never attained to that answer of a good conscience toward God 1 Pet. 3. 21. The Schoolmen often cite the Philosophers, seldome the Apostles; they count the authority of Fathers as good as that of Scriptures: neither doubt they to call the writings of the Eathers by the name of Scripture. Was not this to set mens threshold by Gods threshold: and their posts by his posts Ezek. 43. 8. what marvel therefore though they became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened, while they taught for doctrines mens traditions? what marvell though Popish fopperies once so admired be now so much slighted, since the world teeth further into them, then formerly? Notable is that passage in K. Henry the eights protestation against the Pope; England is no more a babe; there is no man here, but now he knowes that they do foolishly, that part with gold for lead &c. Surely except God take away our right wits, not only the Popes authority shall be driven out for ever, but his name also shortly shall be forgotten in England. We will from henceforth ask counsell of him and his, when we list to be deceived, when we covet to be in error, when we desire to offend God, Truth, and honesty &c.

Ver. 8. But truly I am full of power] But doth it become the Prophet thus to praise himself? Laus proprio sordescit in ore: and those who vaunt most, have oft the least courage; as those creatures who have the greatest hearts of flesh, are the most timorous; as the Stag, Panther, Hare &c. For answer, it must be considered, that the Prophet speaketh not here of his own good parts, out of a vain glorious humour (it was enough for him that he was all glorious within, virtusque suo contenta theatro est) but to separate himself from those false prophets aforementioned, and to assert his calling by his qualifications, as doth likewise St. Paul 2 Cor. 12. to those who sought a proof of Christ speaking in him. The word rendered But truly signifies, All which notwithstanding: q. d. Albeit there is such a generall defection from God, and such unfaithfulnesse in the Prophets of these times, yet I am full of power, lively and lusty, vigorous and vivacious.

by the spirit of the Lord] That noble Spirit, as David calleth him, that spirit of power, of love, and of a sound mind (as Paul, that putteth spirituall mettle into the soule, and stealeth it against al opposition. And truly if the spirit put not vigour into us, how dead and flat are our duties and all ordinances like liquor that hath lost its spirits? there is as much difference many times as betwixt cold water and Aquavita.

and of judgment] to discern of things that differ, to time a word as the Prophet Esay hath it, and to teach things profitable and proper to my auditours (not as He in the Emblem that gave straw to the dog, and a bone to the Asse; or as those false Prophets, who spake good of evill, and evill of good) and wisely to distinguish betwixt law and Gospel in praxi; which who so can do, let him thank God, saith Luther, and let him know, that he is a Divine indeed.

and of might] Or, of manhood, virtue, prevalency against an adversary, patience under whatsoever crosse occurrences for the truths sake, and for my pain-dealing. A minister had need be a man, every inch of him; and to play the man 1 Cor. 16. 13. yea, as the good souldier of Jesus Christ, to suffer hardship; being strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. He must be like the diamond in the High-priests brestplate for hardnesse and hardinesse, as of Athanasius Nazianzen testifieth, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sinne] to tell them of their wickedness with the same liberty that they commit it. See here the true picture of a Preacher, both how he must be gifted, and how deeded; A thanklesse office it is with the world to be thus bold and buisie; and very many ministers affect to be counted no medlers: they think it enough to preach toothlesse truths, and not to incur the displeasure of people, by telling them of their transgressions, and Gods judgements. But this is not the garb and guise of those that are sent and gifted by God, see Ezek. 3. and 33.

Verf. 9. Hear this, I pray you, ye heads, &c.] He had had a bout with them before: but because little good was thereby done, he is at them again; according to that counsel of the wiseman, In the morning sow thy seed, in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not, &c. Preach the word saith the Apostle, be instant (or stand over the work) in season, out of season, &c. 2 Tim. 4. 2. Chrysostome told his Antiochians, that he would never give over preaching against that sinne of swearing, till they gave over their swearing: which because he could not get them to do, he breaks out into these words. It will be an hard speech unto you, but I will speak it: Though there be so many thousands of you, yet there cannot be found an hundred that shall be saved: and I tell you true, I doubt of them too.

Ye heads of the house of Jacob, and Princes of the house of Israel] As bad as they were he gives them their titles. The devil also is to have his due: he is called by the holy Ghost Prince of the ayre, and his Angels are stiled Principalities, powers, Rulers of the darknesse of this world, Eph. 6. 12. See the Note on vers. 1.

that abhorre judgement] They were not onely ignorant of it, vers. 1. but abhorred it; and therefore abhorred it, because they knew it not. Plato could say, that if morall vertue could be beheld with mortal eyes, it would attract all hearts to it self. But these, as natural brut beasts made to be taken and destroyed, spake evil of those things that they understood not, 2 Pet. 2. 12. and what they knew naturally as brut beasts, in those things they corrupted themselves, Jude 10. being carried away by their impetuous and imperious lusts, they not onely did that which was evil, but also hated the light of the law that reproved and sentenced them: licensing others by their practise at least, to do the like. Such Centaures and Cyclopes were these princes of Israel grown; such Heteroclitites these heads of the house of Jacob. The whole head was sick, Isai. 1. 5. the Rulers were a scab, Chap. 3. 7. The Lord looked for judgement, but behold oppression: for righteousness, but behold a crye. They had made the age not unlike that under Nero, wherein nothing almost was unlawful: but villany was acted by authority.

and pervert all equity] Heb. they pervert, &c. It is spoken to others, in token of abomination: See the like, Gen. 49. 4. with the Note. Now equity or rectitude is perverted, when the guilty are acquitted and the innocent condemned, (See Esay. 5. 20, 23. when there is accepting of persons, and receiving of gifts.

Verf. 10. They build up Zion with blood] Heb. bloods, that is, with goods gotten by rapine and robbery, to the utter undoing of many poor oppressed, whose livelihood is their life, Mar. 12. ult. Luk. 8. 43. How much better Selymus the great Turk, who being upon his death-bed moved by Pyrrhus the Bassa to bestow the great wealth, taken by him from the Persian Merchants, upon some notable hospital for relief of the poor, took order that those evil-gotten goods should be forthwith restored again to the right owners, to the shame of many Christians who will not be drawn to do so. Our Henry the seventh indeed in his last will and Testament, devised and willed restitution should be made of all such moneys as had unjustly been levied by his officers. But how few such princes are to be found? It is held a goodly thing to build Zion, though it be with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity. But God, as he will not have ex rapina holocaustum, so he infinitely abhorreth all those, who, under pretext of religion in building some poor hospital with the fragments of their accursed wealth, seek to make him a party, a partaker of their cruelty, as those did, Esai. 66. 3, 4. Mar. 7. 11, Mat. 23. 14. Our Henry the third, when he had (after his many great exactions) sent the Friar-Minors a load of freese to clothe them, had the same sent back again with this message, That he ought not to give almes of what he had rent from the poor, neither would they accept of that abominable gift. Zion is not to be builded or beautified with bloods, &c.

Verf. 11. The heads thereof judge for reward,] Being so many locusts, & latrones cum privilegio, as one saith, Well might Saint Paul say that covetousnesse is the root of all evil, 1 Tim. 6. 10. It is here assigned as one cause (and carnal security as another) of that Regiment without righteousnesse, here justly complained of. And it was the worse, because it had over-run all sorts of such as were in place of power, whether Civil or Ecclesiastical. The Princes and Judges took gifts, which they should not only not have taken, but have hated, Prov. 15. 27. they should have shaken their hands from holding of bribes, Esay. 33. 15. sith there is a curse to such Magistrates with an Amen to it, Deut. 27. 25. and Psal. 15. 5. exclusion out of heaven: Olim didici quid sint munera, said one once, Raine is good (said another) and ground is good, sed ex eorum conjunctione fit lutum, of the mixture of these two is made dirt: So, Giving is kind, and taking is courteous: yet the mixing of them maketh the smooth paths of Justice foule and uneven. Nec prece nec precio, should be the Magistrates Motto. And Iustice Iustice (as Moses phraseth it, Deut. 16. 20.) that is, cleer sheer justice without mud should run down as waters, and righteousnesse as a mighty torrent, Am. 5. 24.

In Mat. 10. 16

and the Priests thereof teach for hire, and the Prophets thereof divine for money] They were merely mercenary: and as Apollo's Oracles, corrupted by Philips gold, were said οὐκ ἀληθινά, to speak as he would have them, so was it here. Both Priests and Prophets were ignava ventris mancipia, (see vers. 5. with the Note) greedy dogs, slow-bellies, they all looked to their own way, every one for his gain from his quarter, Esay. 56. 11. Albertus Magnus complained of the covetousnesse of Pastours in his time: Bernard for this cause calleth them Impostours, and By-seers. Hugo Cardinalis said that the devil had two daughters, Avarice and Luxury: the former whereof he had married to the Jewes, the latter to the Gentiles: but now, saith he, the Priests have taken away both of them from their right husbands, and make use of them for their own. Si posui aurum in conjugium meum, So the Septuagint read that text, Job. 31. 24. signifying the covetous mans great love to money: whence Saint James calleth such, adulterers, and adulteresses, Chap. 4. 4. Saint Paul saith they minde onely earthly things (sc. their purses and paunches) Phil. 3. 19. and and uncessantly woove this Mundus immundus, this vile strumpet the world: having eyes full of the adulteresse, and that cannot cease to sinne. But their money shall perish with them that teach for hire, that follow the ministry onely as a trade to pick a living out of, qui plus fisco quam Christo vacant, plus attonsoni quam attentioni gregis, & ubi non vident quastum, rident Christum, &c. All seek their own, not the things which are Iesus Christs, Psal. 2. 21.

yet will they lean upon the Lord] Or, lay their weight upon him, as upon a staffe or crutch, velut firmissimo scipione. Thus their forefathers (Psal. 78. 32, 35.) though they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works, yet they would needs believe that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer. So their successours, Jer. 3. 3, 4, 5. when they had spoken and done evil as they could, yet, having a whores forehead, they could give goodly words, Wilt thou not from this time crie unto me, My father, thou art the guide of my youth? Will he reserve his anger for ever? Will he keep it to the end? Here were good words (for they are good cheap, as we say) but nothing more. The Lord was much in their mouthes, but farre from their reins, Jer. 12. 2. Selfe-deceivers think they lean upon the Lord, when it is no such matter: Their faith is a mock-faith, a strong phansie, a blind presumption, which will prove but a broken reed, and was never true to those that trusted it. Surely as he that maketh a bridge of his own shadow cannot but fall into the brook; so neither can he escape the burning lake, that had rather be carnally secured, then soundly comforted. Good gold is a cordial; so is not Alchymy gold: neither will it passe the seventh fire, as the other will. Security is the forerunner of calamity: neither miscarry any so sure or so soon, as the over-confident.

and say, Is not the Lord amongst us] And hath he not promised so to be for ever? True, but upon condition that you be with him, and no otherwise, 2 Chron. 15. 2. He is not so tied to you, but that he can go away from you. See his many removes,

Ezek.

Ezek. 9, 10, and 11 Chapters; and observe, that still as he goes out, some judgement comes in. They call themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel, the Lord of hosts is his name, Jer. 48. 2. but all this was but court-holy-water, as they call it, empty words; such as our profligate professours are full of. But wilt thou know, O vain man, (or, O empty man) that words without works are bootlesse? Jam. 2. 20. that externall priviledges alone profit not, Jer. 7. 4. Act. 6. 14. that formal profession and performances are disaccepted, and those that please themselves therewith are but as women travelling with a false birth, Isai. 26. 18. Men are wont to do with these, as those Conjurers did with the name of Jesus; they thought if they used that name, it was enough. They heare therefore, A& 19. 5. Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye? So shall it fare with such as glory in this, that they were born in the bosome of the Church, live under the means of grace, &c. Gehazi took the Prophets staffe: but there was something more, else the childe had not been raised. Those tell but an ill tale for themselves, that have no more to say but this, Is not the Lord amongst us? Men are the worse for his presence with them, if they walk not worthy of the Lord in all well-pleasing, if they have Col. 3. 10. not grace to serve him with reverence and godly fear: for even our God is a consuming fire, Heb. 12. 28, 29.

None evil can come upon us] Let Prophets say what they please, we shall have peace, Deut. 29. 19. all shall be well with us, whiles God is with us, and for us. Job. 8. 20. But God will not take the wicked by the hand, saith Job, neither will he at all acquit the guilty, saith Moses. The foolish shall not stand in his sight, saith David: for he batesh at the workers of iniquity, Psal. 5. 5. Beware of him and obey his voice; provoke him not: for he will not pardon your transgressions, Exod. 23. 21. or if he do, yet 'tis two to one, that he will take vengeance of your inventions, Psal. 99. 8. Shake off therefore carnal security: fear the Lord, and depart from evil.

Vers. 12. Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field] even for your sakes, O wicked Princes, Priests and Prophets; you are the traytours that have betrayed us all into the hands of divine justice: to be angry with us for saying so, and telling you what to trust to, is as if some fond people should be angry with the herald, or the trumpet, as the cause of their warres.

Zion shall be plowed as a field] Shall be utterly laid waste and levelled. Conquerours used to plow up those places that they would not have re-edified; and to sow them with salt, Judg. 9. 45. It must needs be a dismal destruction, that is described in such exquisite tearms. Alterius perditio tua sit cautio. This threatening of the Prophet took so well, that the judgement was respited for above an hundred years, Jer. 26. 19. But now mens hearts are more hardned, and therefore their destruction more hastened.

and Jerusalem shall become heaps] Rupes rudernm, This they once thought as possible, as to overthrow Gods own throne: the very disciples had a conceit that the World could not outlast the Temple, as may be gathered from Mat. 24. 3. But they (some of them) lived to see themselves confuted, and our Saviours words verified, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down, Vers. 3.

and the mountain of the house] that famous house that was worthily reckoned one of the seven wonders of the world, and stood upon mount Moriah.

bigger then all the land of Canaan, chap. 40. 41. 42, &c. Let Popish buzzars blaspheme that description of the Temple and City: calling it, (as Sanctius doth, once and again) insulsam descriptionem, a senselesse description: so speaking evil of the things that they know not, Jude 10. We beleve and are sure, Job 6. 69. that God hath provided some better thing for us, then for those under the law, Heb 11. 40. viz. that great mystery of godlinesse, God manifested in the flesh, 1 Tim 3. 16. who should again restore the kingdom to Israel, the spiritual kingdom to the Israel of God: as is here foretold in the self-same words with those of Esay chap. 2. 1, 2. whence he is not ashamed to take it.

That the mountain of the house of the Lord ] The Church, 1 Tim 3. 15. called elsewhere, the mountain of the Lord, and his holy hill, Psal 15. 1. and 24. 3. and 48. 2. Esay 30. 17. both for its sublimity, Gal 4. 26. and firmnesse, Psal 46. 3. and 125. 1. winde and stormes move it not: no more can all the power and policy of hell combin'd prevail against the Church, Mat 16. 18. She is avivn q ad-vnt q, a kingdom that cannot be shaken: and may, better then the city of Venice, take for her Posie, Immoti manet.

Shall be established in the top of the mountains ] Constituatur firmiter, shall bee strongly set upon a sure bottom, upon munitions of Rocks: yea upon the Rock of Ages, Mat 16. 18. Jer 31. 35. Esay 33. 20. Some, by the house of the Lord, here understand the Church: and by the mountain of this house, Christ, whereon it is built, and whom Daniel describeth by that great mountain that filled the whole earth, Chap. 2. 35. that stone cut out without hands, that smot in pieces the four Monarchies, ibid. And hence it is, that this mountain of the Lords house is exalted above the hills: the Church must needs be above all earthly eminencies whatsoever, because founded upon Christ: who therefore cannot be exalted, but shee must be lifted up aloft together with him. God who is rich in mercy, saith, that great Apostle, hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Ephes 2. 5, 6. The Church is mysticall Christ, 1 Cor 12. 12. she is his wife, and wheresoever hee is Caius, she is Caia: she shineth with his beams, and partaketh of his honours; union being the ground of communion.

and people shall flow unto it. ] As waters roul and run toward the Sea: but that these waters should flow upward, flow to the mountain, as here, is as wonderfull; as that the Sun should send his beams downward to the earth, when as it is the property of all fire to aspire and flie upwards. This is the Lords own work, and it is marvellous in our eyes. The metaphor of flowing, importeth the coming of people to Christ, by the preaching of the Gospel. 1. Freely, Psal 110. 3. 2. Swiftly, as the waters of the river Tigris, swift as an arrow out of a bowe, See Esay 60. 8. 3. Plentifully, by whole Nations turned to the faith, and giving up their names to Christ. 4. Joynly, as verse 2. and Zach 8. 21. 5. Zealously, bearing down all obstacles that would damme up their way. 6. Constantly, and continually, as rivers run perpetually, by reason of the perennity of their fountains; and are never dried up, though sometimes fuller then some: quin ut fluvij repentinis imbris augmentur, saith Gualther. as rivers swell oft with sudden showres, and overflow the banks, so beyond all expectation, many times, doth God take away tyrants, and propagates his truth, enlarging the bounds of his Church, with new confluxes of Converts.

Verse 2. And many nations shall come and say ] The conversion of the Gentiles is here foretold, a piece of that mystery of godlinesse, 1 Tim 3. 16. The Jews usually call Christians in contempt Gozin, (the word here used) and Mamzer Goi Bastard-Gentiles. But, either they must come under this name themselves, or deny that they are the posterity of Abraham, Gen 12. 2. Where God saith, I will make of thee a great Nation.

Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord ] The wicked have their Come, Prov 1. 11. and would not go to hell alone. Should not the Saints have theirs? should they not get what company they can toward heaven? The Greeks call goodnesse, Καλόν, from καλός; and Ἀγαθόν, from ἀγαθός, because it doth as it were, invite and call others to it; and every man is willingly to run after it.

hear, and beleeve, and be sealed with that holy spirit of promise, as those Ephesians were, chap. 1. 13. We read that Marcellinus, Secundanus, and some others, were converted to Christianity by reading Sibylla's oracles of Christs birth: and that by Chaucers Book, some were brought to the knowledge of the truth. But either this was not so, or not ordinary: for faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word preached, which therefore the people of God do so prize, as Luther did, who said, He would not take all the world for one leaf of the Bible: and that without the preaching of the word, he could not live comfortably in Paradise: as with it, hee could live and enjoy himself, though it were in hell.

and he will teach us of his wayes ] Cathedram in cœlis habet qui corda docet, saith Austin. All true Converts are taught of God, Joh. 6. and then quàm citò discitur quod docetur? saith the same Father; how soon are men discipled? how soon learn they the wayes of God, whereby to serve him here, and be saved by him hereafter. For it is false that some contend for: sc. that every man may be saved in his own faith, be it right or wrong: For none can come to the Father but by the Son, Joh. 14. 6. Neither is there any other name but His under heaven whereby men must be saved, Acts 4. 12. See Joh. 17. 3. and 6. 40. Heb. 11. 6. whatsoever the Huberians affirme of Universall Election; or the Puccians of a naturall faith.

For the law shall go forth of Zion ] The law, or doctrine, as Prov. 13. 14. Understand here the Gospel, that Law of God, Psal. 19. 7. that Law of Christ, Gal. 6. 2. that perfect law of liberty, Jam. 1. 25. a counter-pane whereof God putteth into the hearts of his people, Jer. 31. whereby they become (as it was once said of the Thracians) Αὐτονομῶν, a law to themselves; as being transformed into the same image with the Gospel, like as the pearl, by the often-beating of the Sun-beams upon it, becommeth radiant as the Sun.

and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. ] Not from Africa at first (as the brethren of the rosy-crosse would have it) though 'tis thought the Gospel was received, and the Christian faith professed even from the Apostles time, in that large region of Nubia in Africk. But repentance and remission of sinnes was preached among all nations beginning at Jerusalem, Luke 24. 41. The Jews were Gods Library-keepers, and the Apostles sent and went from Jerusalem to plant Churches abroad the world, and to gather into one, the children of God that were dispersed, Ioh. 11. 52.

Verse 3. And he shall judge among many people, ] We had before, Christs Prophetical Office: here we have his Princely, and elsewhere his Priestly, (wherein both the former are founded) for he is the true Trismegist, and Melchisedech was a right type of him. He is the onely judge, and needs no Vicar upon earth, such as the Pope claims to be, Esay 33. 22. no such Officers to see his lawes executed, as the Ephori were among the Greeks, and the Censores among the Romans. The Lord that sent the rod of his strength out of Zion, as verse 2. doth also give him to rule in the midst of his enemies, whiles his people are willing in the day of his power, in the beauties of holinesse, Psal. 110. 3. willing that Christ should send forth judgement to victory, Mat. 12. 20. that is, perfect his own work of grace begun in their hearts. To which end, as it here followeth,

This seems to have been the effect of that old prophecy among the Easterlings, that Judas profecti rerum potirentur, some that came out of jury should conquer all. Vide Suet. in Vespas. & Tacit. lib. 21.

He shall rebuke (or convince) strong nations ] Convince them, I say, (by his Spirit) of sinne, of righteousness, and of judgement, Ioh. 16. 8. Of the loathsomenesse of sin, of the necessity of getting righteousness by Christ, and repentance from dead works; that men may serve the living God, and as much as in them is, live peaceably with all.

Acts 17. 30.

And they shall beat their swords into plowshares ] i. e. their fierce and fell natures shall be mansued, as Esay 11. 6, 7, 8, 9. and if they wage warre, it shall be non nisi coacti, either for the just punishment of Delinquents, whom they cannot otherwise come at: or for their own necessary defence, and that they may establish peace with with truth. But if men would live by the lawes of the Gospel, they need not wage warre, or want peace, either of countrey or of conscience: but they might take for their Motto, that of David, Ani shallom, I am peace: and have for their portion that peace, peace, Esay 26. 3. even a perfect, sheer, pure-peace, a multiplied peace with God; with themselves, and with others: this is a main piece of Christs kingdom upon earth, who is the Prince of peace, and came in a time of peace: viz. in the raigne of Augustus, when as there was Totius orbis aut pax aut paxio, saith Florus, a generall peace, or truce thorowout the whole world.

neither shall they learn warre any more] To make a trade or a gain of it, and so to earn a curse Dent. 27. 25. to delight in it, Psal. 68. 30. and make a sport of it (as Abner did, 2 Sam. 2. 14. and Pyrrhus king of Epirots) to wage it without weighty reason rashly. If we Princes (saith our Hen. 7.) should take every occasion that's offered, the world should never be quiet, but wearied by continuall warres. We may also here take warring (as St. James doth, chap. 4. 1.) for jarring, and jangling, for private discords, and dissensions. Now these the people of God are so farre from learning, that they utterly lay them aside, and are kinde one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christs sake forgave them, Ephes. 4. 32.

Verse 4. But they shall sit every man under his vine] feeding upon the fruit that shall even fall into his mouth, saith à Lapide. Sit they shall under Christ, the true Vine, saith Hugo, and under the holy Ghost, as a fig-tree, whose fruit is farre sweeter then any honey. But these are coynt interpretations saith Gualther. I should rather expound this Text by that 91. Psal.; wherein the safe and happy condition of the godly is at large described. Vineyards and fig-yards were ordinary in those countreys: and hence this proverbiall expression, to set forth doubtlesse, the spirituall security, and that peace of conscience chiefly; that is granted to Christs subjects: a peace, farre beyond that under Solomon, which is here pointed at: or that under our Queen Elizabeth, not to be passed over without one touch at least upon that string, which so many years together sounded so sweetly in the ears of our Fathers. Then it was, if ever, that the mountains brought forth peace, and the little hills righteoufnesse, Psal. 72. 5. The great ones defended their inferiours, and the inferiours blessed their superiours; the Magistrate righted the subject, and the subject revered the Magistrate.

and none shall make them afraid] God, they know, will not hurt them, man cannot: he may take away their heads, but not their crowns; their lives, but not their hopes: for the righteous hath hope in his death: his Posie is not onely, Dum spero, but Dum expro. Let the wicked have a trembling heart, and failing eyes while he lives, Dent. 28. 65. and when he dies crie out, as a great man was heard to do, Spes & fortuna valete, Farewell life and hope together. The servant of Christ, as he sits mediis tranquillis in undis all his life long: so when he dies, he can call his soul to rest: and sing old Simeons Nunc dimittas, Lord, now let thy servant depart in peace, &c.

for the mouth of the Lord of hosts,] And what better assurance can we desire, sith God can neither die, lie, nor denie himself: Sith, secondly, he is the Lord of Hosts, and so armed with power to make good what he hath spoken. Peter had a will to deliver Christ from the Jews, but wanted power. Pilate had power to have done it, but wanted will. God wanteth neither of these to do for his people, and to deliver them out of danger. Courage therefore.

Verse 5. For all people will walk every one in the name of his god,] They will do so, they are resolved not to alter their religion: as Tully said, Me ex ea opinione quam a majoribus accepi de cultu deorum, nullius unquam movebit oratio: I will never be dissuaded by any one from that way of divine worship, which I have received from my forefathers. How wilfull at this day are Jews, Papists, Pagans, Heretikes? And how much easier a matter do we finde it, to deal with twenty mens reasons, then with one mans will? A wilfull man stands as a stake in the midst of a stream, lets all passe by him, but hee stands where he was. Nay but wee will have a king say they, when they had nothing else to say. Nay, but I will curse howsoever, though against my conscience, saith Balaam: and do not the Popish Balaamites as much as this, many of them? As for the Vulgar sort of them, they they are headlong and headstrong, resolved to retaine contra gentes the senselesse superstitions transmitted unto them by their Progenitours. But what saith the Oracle Rev. 14. 7. Feare God, and give glory to him; for the houre of his judgement is come: and (what ever your anceltours did) worship you him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountaines of waters.

and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God] This was well resolved, and is as well practised by all Christs faithfull people, who dare not follow a multitude to do evill Exod. 23. 2. dare not walk by their fathers practise Iosh. 24. 2, 14, 15. for they consider that no commandement doth so expressly threaten Gods judgements upon posterity as the second. They therefore resolve to walk in the name, that is, by the lawes and under the view of the Lord their God, who is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, as Moses describeth him, in opposition to all other deities, whether so reputed or deputed Deut. 10. 17.

for ever and ever] We will not only take a turn or two in his wayes, as temporaries; who are hot at hand but soon tire, and give in: but we will hold on a constant course of holinesse, and not faile to follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth Psal. 1. 2. Ioh. 8. 12. and 10. 4. 14. Rev. 7. 17. As for those Apostates that change their God, that change their glory for that which doth not profit, as they therein commit an horrible wickednesse, such as the heavens have cause to be astonish'd at Ier. 2. 11, 12, 13. so they could not chuse out for themselves a worse condition Heb. 10. 37, 38. for why? they put the son of God to an open shame chap. 6. 6. like (as those that are carted amongst us are held out as a scorn) and do in effect say, that they have not found him such as they took him for.

Verse 6. In that day] sc. of grace and of the Gospel: It is called a day and that day, by an excellency in regard of Revelation, Adornation, Consolation, Distinction, speedy Preterition.

saith the Lord] Whose word cannot be broken Ioh. 16. 35. and is therefore the best security 2 Cor. 1. 20.

will I assemble her that halteth] Heb. that goeth sideling, that is maimed, disioynted, lamed, Esa. 35. 3. torn Psal. 35. 15. and tired out with long journeys into captivity, as the Jewes were by the Babylonians, Greeks and Romanes before Christs coming: that they might breath after those dayes of refreshing from the presence of the Lord Mal. 3. 1.

and I will gather her that is driven out] Or, rejected, thrust away with a force, that is, the Gentles, suffered to walk in their own wayes Act. 14. 16. and carried away unto dumb idols, even as they were led 1 Cor. 12. 2.

and her that I have afflicted] Both Jewes and Gentiles, the whole community of people: for God shooke all nations then, when the desire of all nations (Christ Heb. 12. 25.) was to come Hag. 2. 7. See verses 22, 23. Iunius, after the Septuagint, rendereth it ut veniant desiderati omnium gentium, that the Saints, those desirable ones, out of all nations may come: for unto Shiloh in a most afflicted time (when the scepter was departed from Judah &c.) was the gathering of all people to be Gen. 49. 10. Esa. 26. 8, 9. See Esay. 66. 20. rather in litters as lame people are carried) should they come, then not at all: rather on one leg with Jacob, should they wrestle, then not prevail.

Verse 7. And I will make her that halted a remnant] Yea a renowned remnant Zeph. 3. 19. Not many Jewes were converted in comparison of the Gentiles: hence they are called a remnant. They both killed the Lord Iesus, and their own Prophets: they have also persecuted us, saith the Apostle or cast us out, as by an Ostracisme, and they please not God, and are contrary to all men, forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles &c. Thus the generality of them then: and to this day they continue crosse, and cursing Christ and his followers, thrice a day in their synagogues: Howbeit at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace Rom. 11. 5. and that remnant became the seminary of the Christian Church.

Consider the faith and patience of the Martyrs, and you will easily yeeld them to be a strong nation indeed: Christians have shewed as glorious power in the faith of Martyrdome, as in the faith of miracles. They can do that which others cannot turn their hands to: they can suffer wrongs, best of any: Compell them to go a mile, they'll be content to go two: yea as far as the shoes of the preparation of the Gospel of peace will carry them. There is nothing that they dare not undertake and undergo for the glory of their God. Thi courage in Christians; Heathens counted obstinacy; but they knew not the power of the spirit, nor the privy armour of proof that the Saints have about their heart, which maketh them insuperable, more then Conquerours.

and the Lord shall raigne over them in mount Zion ] i. e. In the Christian Church, out of which went the law, that is, the Gospel ver. 2. See Esa. 40. 9. and 52. 7. Heb. 12. 22. There shall Christ raigne, and so he did ever: but now he shall declare himself to be Messiah the Prince Dan. 9. 25 Lord and Christ Act. 2. 36. Saviour and Sovereigne. As king he 1. of rebels makes them subjects, willing to be ruled by him. 2. He preserves them in that privilege by his spirit. 3. He gives them lawes far better then those of the twelve tables in Rome, which yet far exceeded (saith Cicero) all the learned libraries of the Philosophers in worth and weight. 4. He sweetly inclineth their will to yeeld universal obedience thereunto, and to crosse themselves so they may please him. 5. He rewards them with comfort and peace here, and with life eternall hereafter. 6. He destroyes all the enemies of his Church, and then at last delivers up the kingdome to his Father 1 Cor. 15. 24. not his *essentia*ll kingdome as God, but his economical kingdome, as Mediatour.

Verse 8. And thou O tower of the flock ] that is, O Church of Christ, who is oft compared to a shepherdesse in the Canticles: here to a Migdal-eder or tower of the flock (that flock of Christ which hath golden fleeces, precious soules) in reference either to that tower, Gen. 35. 21. built for the safety and service of shepherds: or else to the sheep-gate in Jerusalem (whereof read Neh. 3. 1. and 12. 39.) so called from the sheep-market, which for the conveniency of the Temple was neare to it; as was also the sheep-pool called Bethesda Ioh. 5. 2. where the sacrifices were washed. The world is a field, the Church a fold, in that field; and a strong fold (strong as a tower) yea a strong-hold *Ophe*l as it is stiled in the next words; and that of the daughter of Zion, that is of the Christian Church, the inviolable security whereof is here noted.

unto thee shall come, even the first dominion such as was in David's dayes and Solomons: large, rich, peaceable, prosperous, terrible to other nations &c. This was carnally understood by the Jewes, who therefore dreame to this day of an earthly kingdome, and have in their synagogues a crown ready to set upon the head of their Messiah whensoever he shall come: neither were Christs disciples without a tincture of this Pharisaicall leaven: whence their often-enquiries when the kingdome of God shall come? and their frivolous contests among themselves, who should be the greatest in Christs kingdome? who should sit at his right hand and at his left &c. as if there should have been in Christs kingdome (as in Solomons) a distribution here of honours and offices. And this groundlesse conceit hung as bullets of lead at their eye-lids; that they could not look up to see that Christs kingdome was spirituall and not of this present world.

Baxter. Syn:

the kingdome shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem This the Jewes (mistaking it as before) pray earnestly that it may come cito, citius, citissime, biberah, bejamens, with speed, and even in our dayes; oft throwing open their windowes to behold their King, and to receive their long-looked-for preferment, in his earthly monarchy.

Ver. 9. Now why dost thou cry out aloud? ] Hout and haule? q. d. hast thou any such cause to be so unreasonably and out ragiously impatient, so long as Christ is thy king and counsellour? What if there now be no king in thee? What if thy counsellour be perished? A wo-case I confesse, and great confusion must needs be the issue of it; as it fell out in Jerusalem after Iosiah was slaine: Conter Hof. 3. 4. with the Note there. But yet there is hope in Israel concerning this thing; neither need the Saints be so excessively dejected with outward crosses, so long as Christ

Christ is with them, and for them. If Seneca could say to his friend Polybius, Fas tibi non est salvo Cesare, de fortuna tua queri, Be thy case never so miserable, thou hast no cause to complaine, so long as Cesar is in safety: How much lesse ground of mourning or murmuring have Christs subjects, so long as He liveth and reigneth? Gaudeo quod Christus Dominus est, alioqui totus desperassem writeth Calvin. Epist. Aticonius to Calvin, of the Churches enemies: I am glad that Christ is Lord of all: for otherwise I should have had no hope of help at all. David in deep distress comforteth himself in the Lord his God 1 Sam. 30. 6. and Psal. 119. 94. I am thine, save me, saith He: q. d. my professed subjection to thee calleth for thy care and protection of me: and here he stayes himself. Kings and Councillours are great stayes to a state: but Christ is not tied to them. These are but particular good things, as is health against sicknesse, wealth against poverty &c. but Christ is an Universall good, all sufficient and satisfactory; every way proportionable and fitting to our soules, and severall necessities. Why then do we cry aloud as utterly undone? why sing we not rather with David when at greatest under, The Lord loveth, and blessed be the God of my salvation. It is God that avengeth me, and delivereth me from the violent man &c. He is King of all the earth. He is wonderfull in counsel, and excellent in working &c. It was a learned mans Motto, Blessed be God, that he is God; and blessed be Christ that he reignes for ever; that Counsel is his, and sound wisdom: that he hath understanding, he hath strength Prov. 8. 14.

for pangs have taken thee as a woman in travel] They have, but they needed not, hadst thou but turned into thy counting-house, and considered thy manifold priviledges in Christ, thy King and Countellour. We oft punish our selves by our passions, as the lion that beates himself with his own taile. Sed ô bene (saith an Interpreter here) quod sint hi dolores saltem similes parturientium, It is yet an happiness, that the Churches pangs, though bitter, yet are no worse then as those of a woman in travell. For 1. The paines of travell seldome bring death; but life both to mother and child: so do afflictions to the Saints 2 Cor. 4. 17. Heb. 12. 9. 2. Travell comes not by chance, nor for long continuance: neither doth affliction Job. 7. 30. Luk. 22. 53. 3. Travell is unavoidable, and must be patiently born: so must affliction; or else we lose the fruit of it: Act. 14. 22. 2 Tim. 3. 12. 4. Verse 10. Be in pain and labour to bring forth &c.] Be sensible of thine ensuing captivity, and take on: but yet with hope of a gracious deliverance in due time. See the Note on ver. 9. It is no lesse a fault to despise the chastening of the Lord, then to faint when thou art rebuked Heb. 12. 5. The hypocrite in heart heapeth up wrath saith Elihu, and why? he crieth not when God bindeth him Job. 33. 11. The wicked saith Hannah, are silent in darknesse, and shall therefore lie down in sorrow. This is not patience but pertinacy, the strength of stones and flesh of brasse Job 6. 12. It is not valour but apathie, stupidity and indolency, much complained of in scripture, and threatened with a succession of sorrowes Lev. 26. 18, 28. seven more, and seven more, and seven to that. Three times in that chapter God raiseth his note of threatening, and he raiseth it by sevens, and those are discords in musick. Such sayings will be heavy songs; and their execution heavy pangs: worse then those of a woman in travel.

there shalt thou be delivered, there the Lord shall redeem thee] This There, is as Emphaticall as that Yet so oft repeated Zech. 1. 17. See the Note there. It seemed improbable to many, and to some impossible, that ever they should return out of Babylon. But God effected it to the great astonishment of his poore people, who were like them that dream Psal. 126. 1. and could scarce beleieve their own eyes. God loves to deliver those that are forsaken of their hopes. Ad nos ergo transferamus promissionem istam, saith Gualther upon the text. Let us apply this promise to our selves: and as oft as we are pincht with poverty, or tormented with diseases, or cast out into banishment, or are in any great danger by water or land, or under terrours of conscience, let us think we heare God thus speaking to us, There shalt thou be delivered: there I will redeem thee &c.

Verse 11. Now also many nations are gathered &c.] that is, they shall be once gathered, when the Babylonians, who are Lords of the world, shall muster many nations against thee. Would any man take the Churches picture saith Luther? then let him paint a silly poor maid, sitting in a wood or wilderness, compassed about with hungry lions, wolves, bores and beares, and with all manner of cruel and hurtfull beasts, and in the middelt of a great many furious men assaulting her every moment and minute, for this is her condition in the world.

that say, Let her be defiled] sc: with blood and slaughter. Or, Let her be condemned as an hypocrite, Let her be stoned as an adulteresse, so the Trent translation. Thus they pretend, as Rabshakeb did, that they were sent by God against an hypocriticall nation, that had broken their faith with God and men. The like craft and cruelty was used in the Parisian massacre, and Gunpowder-plot: God and man, said they (in that blind letter, that brought all to light) have agreed to punish the wickednesse of this age. Those that would kill a dog, give out that he was mad first, saith the French Proverb. Whom no man looketh after Jer. 30. 17.

and let our eyes look upon Zion] Let us feed our eyes with such a delightfull spectacle: and say as that cruel Charles the 9. of France did, when he saw the streetes strowed with the bodies of the massacred Protestants, and the rivers dyed with their blood, O pulchrum spectaculum! O brave sight, Or, as the Q. Mother of Scotland, when she beheld the dead carcases of her Lutheran subjects, said, that she never saw a goodlier peece of Arraz in all her dayes. See the accomplishment of this prophecy in the Lamentations, Psal. 137. and in the book of Nehemiah.

Verse 12. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord] Nothing like their thoughts Es. 55. 8. Confer Es. 10. 7, 8. Zach. 11. 15, 16. &c. His thoughts are fatherly, whiles theirs are butcherly: the Physitian in setting leeches to his patient, seekes his good: he ayms not at filling the leeches gorges: neither will he set more on him, then will make for his health. God by his wisdom, and according to his eternall counsell (which the wicked understand not) ordereth and draweth the blind and brut motions of the worst creatures to his own honour, and his churches good; as the huntsman doth the rage of the dog to his pleasure, or the marriener the blowing of the wind to his voyage, or the Artist the heate of the fire to his work, or the Physitian the blood-thirstinesse of the leech to a cure. Surely, (saith the Psalmist speaking of Senacheribs cruelty in the siege of Jerusalem) the wrath of man shall praise thee (eventually, though not intentionally) the remainder of wrath shalt thou restraine Psal. 76. 10. Let the enemies think and project as they please, let them rage and resolve upon your utter ruine. I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evill, to give you an expected end: to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you who are troubled rest &c. For thus saith the Lord God the Holy One of Israel,

In returning and rest shall ye be saved, in quietnesse and in confidence shall be your strength Elay. 30. 15. And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Ioseph, and I will bring them again to place them, for I have mercy upon them, and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and I will heare them, Zech. 10. 6. Surely as it was said of old, Neither shall Rome fall while Scipio standeth: neither shall Scipio live when Rome falleth: so may it more truly be affirmed of Christ, that he and his people shall stand and fall together. for I will make thine horne iron &c.] So that thou shalt do great exploits, by mine assistance, against Sennacherib, Antiochus and other enemies subdued and threshed down to straw by the valiant Maccabees. Spiritualiter etiam hoc intelligendum, saith Sa. here; this is also spiritually to be understood of converting people to the faith separat à pale à infidelitatis. This the Apostles did vigorously and effectually, being furnished by Christ with hornes of iron, and hooves of brasse; with spirituall courage and metall, whereby they did soon beat in peeces many people, and brought them to Christ by the obedience of faith, together with all their wealth and substance, which they cheerfully consecrate unto the Lord of the whole earth. This was typified of old by the Tabernacle built with the spoils of the Egyptians: and by Davids dedicating to the Lord the gold and silver which in great abundance he had taken from the enemies 2 Sam. 8. It is prophecied of Tyrrus, that being converted she should find another manner of merchandise then formerly, viz: to feed and cloth Gods poore with durable cloathing. The Centurion, when once he became a Proselyte, built the Jewish Synagogues, that had been thrown down by Antiochus. Constantine the Great was bountifull to the Church above measure, inasmuch as that he was by the heathens in scorn called Pupillus, as if he had wanted a guardian to over-rule and order his expences. Sed refriguit hoc studium hodie in magistratibus plerisque, as Gualtherus here complaineth, and not without cause. The Church is not only scantied, but spoiled of her revenues: and that which was piously consecrated, is impiously converted to other uses &c. Thus He.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. NOW gather thy self in troopes, O daughter of troopes] Here the Virgin, the daughter of Zion despiseth her adversaries of Assyria and Babylon, and laughs them to scorn: the daughter of Ierusalem shaketh her head at them Isa. 37. 22. and bearing her self bold upon the foregoing promise (chap. 4. 13.) that she should beat in peeces many people, she taketh liberty to taunt the Assyrian Monarch with all his troopes beleaguering her, and basely abusing her Judges: telling him, that the Babe of Bethlehem would shortly take an order with him. And although she were but a Virgin, yet, having such a Champion as Christ, who is in love with her, that will take her part and fight her quarrell, she doubteth not to say, Now gather thy self in troopes &c. Nunc turmatim cauto, ô turmaria, Increase thine army and come forth, Gather your selves and ye shall be broken in peeces, gird your selves, and ye shall be broken in peeces. Take counsell together, and it shall come to naught: speak the word and it shall not stand, for God is with us, Jehovah is our Judge, Jehovah is our Champion, Jehovah is our king, he will save us. Lo, this is the Churches confident boasting in Christ, this is the triumph of her, trust in him. The thought of his birth swalloweth up all her fears and discontents; and compasseth her about with songs of deliverance.

He hath laid siege against us, ] And already devoured us in his hopes: but if we do but turne us to Christ, and say, Behold the whom thou lovest is distressed: the Assyrian as a strong river is come up over all his channels, and reacheth even to the neck: yea the stretching out of his wings filleth the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel, Esay 8. 7, 8. he will soon bestir himself, he will bessege our besiegers, he will smite them upon the cheek-bone, and break the teeth of those ungodly, that smote the Judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek, for a reproach to the whole people. Hugo, by this Judge of Israel, understandeth Christ, who was indeed at his passion contumeliously buffeted, and smitten with rods upon the cheek, Mat. 26. 6, 7. But this, though it be true, yet cannot be the fence of this text.

Joh. 6.

Verse 2. But thou Bethlehem Ephratah ] Not so called from Ephratah, Caleb's wife, 1 Chron. 2. 19, 50, 51. but from its fruitfulness: whence also it had the name Bethlehem, that is, the house of bread, where Jesus, (that Bread of life, that came down from heaven) was born in the fulness of time, as is here first foretold by this Prophet: that great mystery of godliness being revealed to the world by degrees, in severall Ages. Here was Christ born by meer accident; in regard of his parents; who were brought hither by a tyrannicall Edict of Augustus, Luk. 2. 2. but yet by a sweet providence of God, that this Scripture might be fulfilled, and our faith in Christ settled.

Though thou be little among the thousands of Judah ] Or, Art thou little, &c. ? q. d. No such matter: and so it agreeth with Mat. 2. 6. Or thus: And thou Bethlehem Ephrata, it is a small thing to be among the Princes of Judah: Out of thee shall come a Ruler, &c. q. d. thou hast a dignity above this, and above them all, in that out of thee shall come a Ruler, &c. Take Isagwir in the Neuter gender, (as Sculetus after Osiander, and Forster doth) and then the seeming difference betwixt the Prophet and Evangelist is taken away. Some make St. Matthew to relate the words of the Scribes to Herod, as they had varied the Text before him. But we finde not that they are any where taxed for altering or corrupting the Text; but for misinterpreting it onely, Mat. 5. Besides that, they were by their office Text-men, to look to the letter of the Scripture, and to keep it pure, 1 Cor. 1. 20. where they are distinguished from teachers of traditions, and teachers of Allegories.

Joh. 6. 27.

yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me ] that is, to God the Father: that we may know that the coming of Christ in the flesh, was a plot of Gods own contriving. He came not by chance, but by counsel: him hath God the Father sealed, anointed and appointed to the work. This is comfortable to consider of.

that is to be Ruler in Israel ] Matthew rendereth it, a Captain that shall feed my people Israel, Mat. 2. 6. See the Note there.

whose goings forth have been from of old ] This is spoken of Christs eternal generation, which none can declare, Esay 53. 8. What is Gods name, and what is his Sons name, if thou canst tell? Prov. 30. 4. The Scripture usually speaketh of this grand Mystery by way of circumlocution. It is here spoken of in the Plurall number for the excellency of it. In this Text then we have a description of Christ, in his natures and offices. See the like, Rom. 1. 3, 4. and adore the fulness of the Scriptures.

Verse 3. Therefore will he give them up ] As a little before the day springeth, it is darker then ordinary: so before the day-spring from on high visited Gods people, they were under very hard and heavy pressures and miseries: whereby their desires after him were increased and ineagered. The enemy oppressed them, by Gods permission, yea by his active providence: that they might pant after a Saviour, and sigh out with old Jacob their father, Gen. 49. 18. O Lord, I have waited for thy salvation.

untill the time that she which travelleth hath brought forth ] She, that is, the Virgin Mary, say some: Or, she, that is, say others, the afflicted Church, according to chap. 4. 9, 10. See the Notes there. Shee must have a time of travell, of trouble, before she can bring forth, and be delivered. Luther saith well, that the Church is hæres crucis, and that every Christian is a Crucian: we must suffer before we can reign, and bear the crosse, or ere we wear the crown.

Then

Then the remnant of his brethren ] i. e. the converted Gentiles, whom Christ is not ashamed to call his brethren, Heb. 2. 11, 12. shall return unto the children of Israel ] shall be profelyted, and conjoynd to the elect Jews, that there may bee one sheep-fold under one shepherd. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: In that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one, Zech. 4. 9. See the Note there.

Verse 4. And he shall stand and feed (or, rule) in the strength of the Lord ] He shall stand, and none shall be able to stirre him: there shall be lifting at his government, but it stands firm and fixed. Earthly Monarchies have their times, and their turnes: their ruine, as well as their rise. The Roman Empire fell under the weight of its own greatnesse. The Turkish, although it be indeed very strong, yet is it by many probably thought to be on the declining hand. But Christ shall stand, when all earthly greatnesse shall lie in the dust. And He shall feed his flock in the strength of the Lord: neither shall any ravenous Lion, or grievous Wolf, pluck them out of his hand; because He and the Father are one, Joh. 10. 39. and God hath laid help on one that is mighty, Psal. 89. 19.

and in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God, ] that is, by the power of Gods word, called his name, Acts 9. 15. and elsewhere. This word hath a singular majestie in it, whereby it aweth and affecteth mens consciences, to the propagating of Christs kingdom: viz when it is accompanied with the Spirit of God, called his strength in the former clause. And that these ever go together, in all the subjects of Christs kingdom, see Esay 59. 21. As for me, this is my Covenant with them, saith the Lord, My Spirit that is upon them, and my word which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seeds seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever.

for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth. ] Now, that is, ere long: in Gods due time, which oft seems long, because we are short; apt to antedate the promises, in regard of the accomplishment, to limit the Holy One of Israel, and to set him a time, to set his Sun by our diall, Jer. 8. 20. help they would have that Summer at furthest. But as God never fails in his own time, so he seldom comes at ours: We must live by faith, Hab. 2. 2. and stay Gods leisure, as David did for the kingdome, and those in Esther, for deliverance. Gods promises will at length take their way over all Alpes of opposition: but we have need of patience &c. For yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry, Heb. 10. 36, 37.

Verse 5. And this man shall be the peace ] The man Christ Jesus, 1 Tim. 2. 5. that man, that shall be as an hiding place from the winde, and a covert from the tempest: as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, Esay 32. 2. Winds and tempests will arise, and that upon the Church; Assyrians, and Babylonians, (Nimruds-brats) will invade, and infest her: but that famous He afore-mentioned shall bee her peace, her Prince of peace, Esay 9. 6. who giveth her pacem omnimodam, peace internal, external, eternal, called by the Apostle life and peace, Rom. 8. 7. This peace, peace, as Esay calleth it, chap. 26. 3. that is, a multiplied, renewed, continued peace: this peace Regionis & Religiosis, of Countrey, and of Conscience, as God hath promised, and Christ hath purchased. He merited, and made it through the blood of his Crosse, Col. 1. 20. Esay 53. 5. Ephes. 2. 16. And hence it was, that as he was brought from heaven, with that song of peace, Luke 2. 14. so he returned up again, with that farewell of peace, Joh. 14. 27. left to the world the doctrine of peace, Ephes. 2. 17. whose Ministers are messengers of peace, Rom. 10. 15. whose followers are the children of peace, Luke 10. 6. whose unity is in the bond of peace, Ephes. 4. 3. and whose duty is the study of peace, Rom. 12. 18. and to whom God hath promised, I will give peace in your land, &c. And ye shall chase your enemies, &c. If any ask, how peace, and pursuit of enemies can consist? It is easily answered: You shall have civil peace amongst yo r selve, and besides an ability to quell, and quiet forraigne enemies. Or, you shall have peace: and if it hap that war arise, you shall have the better in battle: if the Assyrian come into your land, he shall be a loser by it: if he tread in your palaces, he shall retreat with shame, and defeatment, as it befell Sennacherib.

Then shall we raise against him seven shepherds ] that is, a competent number of Chieftains and Champions, with their victorious forces, which shall repell the enemies, and secure the Church; Christo duce & auspice Christo, under Christ the Arch-shepherd. This some understand of the Apostles, those anointed, or anubized Ones, (as the word here signifieth) the weapons of whose warfare were not carnall, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong-holds, 2 Cor. 10. 4. 5. and bringing in, not the heads, but hearts of those whom they had subdued: as Paul did of Sergius Paulus, the Proconsul, Acts 13. 9. where also he is first called Paul, in memory (belike) of those first spoils hee brought into the Church. By shepherds here, are meant (saith Gualther) the Ministers and Preachers of the word, who feed, defend, and watch over the flock. By principal men, Magistrates, endued with that free, (or, as the Chaldee hath it) kingly spirit, Psal. 51. 12. to decree, and act for the good of the Church. Such shepherds, in the time of the Assyrian warre, were Esay, Micha, Joel, &c. such principall men, were Hezekias, and Elia-kim, Isa. 22. &c. Such after the captivity were, Ezra, Haggie, Zachariah, Malachi, Zorobabel, Nehemiab, Judas Macchabeus, &c. Qui nutantem remp. & Ecclesiam suis consilijs, & fortibus gestis fulserunt, who under-propped and kept up the tottering Church, and Common-wealth by their prayers, counsels, and valiant achievements, both before and since the dayes of Christ upon earth.

Verse 6. And they shall waste the land of Assyria, ] Heb. They shall eat it down, as shepherds do pastures with their flocks. Pascere is put for perdere, saith Calvin: they shall leave nothing there safe or sound, but either bend, or break the Churches enemies, bring them to Christ, by the sword of Gods word, or utterly ruine them by temporall slaughters. Aut penitendum, aut perivendum.

Thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian ] It is Christ that delivereth his, what instruments soever he please to make use of, Luke 1. 71. 1 Cor. 15. 24. ap. he must have the praise of it. The Grecians thankfully acknowledged to Jupiter their deliverance from the Persians, wrought by Themistocles; and therefore called him, Ελευθεύς: as the Romans for like cause Sep-tor, presenting a Palme to him, and sacrificing a white Ox: so acknowledging, it was his power, whereby the conquest was achieved. Our Edw. 3. after his victory at Boitiers, (where hee took the French king Anno 1356.) took speedy order, by Simon Archbishop of Canterbury, that eight dayes together should be spent in giving God the thanks and glory. How much more should wee praise him for spiritual deliverances, from sinne, Satan, the world, &c. and consecrate our selves wholly to his service, sith Servati sumus ut serviamus, Luke 1. 74. deliverance commands obedience, Ezra 9. 14.

Verse 7. And the remnant of Jacob ] The remnant according to the election of grace, Rom. 11. 5. these are but a few in comparison, as a remnant to the whole peece, or an hand-full to an house-full: but they shall increase and multiply, by Gods blessing upon them, as is here set forth by two similitudes. First, for their propagation and multiplication, the Prophet compareth them to the dew, which is ingendred and distilled from heaven immediatly. Therefore also Psal. 110. 3. new converts are compared to dew, and Gods begetting them, to the womb of the morning, when over-night the earth was dry. Secondly, for their growth and increase, he compareth it to the sprouting up of herbs and graffe in the wildernesses, where man cometh not, and so their springing tarieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sonnes of men, for them to come with their watering-pots to nourish them (as herbs in gardens do) but these have showers from heaven, that give the increase. I the Lord do keep my vineyard, I will water it every moment, Esay 27. 3. There is an honour due to Gods Ministers, 1 Thess. 5. 13. but the word onely must be glorified, Act. 13. 48. and Christ earnestly intreated, that as of old the Manna came down with the dew, which covered the Manna (whence that expression, hidden Manna, Rev. 2. 17.) so he himself who is the bread of life, would descend into us, by the word of his grace, and fill us with the fruits of righteousness: that he would rigare & recreare, refresh and cherish our hearts, as the dew from heaven doth the dry and fady fields.

Vers. 8. And the remnant of Jacob--as a Lion among the beasts of the forest ] The saints shall prosper and do great exploits, as being indued with an invincible force of the spirit, making them as so many Cuer-de-lions: or as Chrysostom saith of Peter, that he was like a man made all of fire walking among stubble. What Lion-like men were all the Apostles, those white horses upon which the Lord Christ rode about the world conquering and to conquer? Rev. 6. 2. That lion of the tribe of Judah Rev. 5. 5. had put upon them of his own spirit: and of his fulnesse bestowed upon them grace for grace: hence their transcendent zeale and courage for the truth. Steven was amongst his country-men the Jewes, as a Lion among the beasts of the Forrest. So were in their severall generations Athanasius, Basil, Ambrose, Luther, Latimer, Farel &c. that noble army of Martyrs: One of them told the Persecutors that they might pluck the heart out of his body: but never pluck the truth out of his heart. Another, that the heavens should sooner fall, then he would turn. A third, that if every haire of his head were a man, he would suffer death in the opinion and faith that he was now in. A fourth said, Can I die but once for Christ? And generally, the valour of the patient, and the savagenesse of the persecutors strove together; till both exceeding nature and beleefe, bred wonder and astonishment in beholders and readers; and in some, effectual conversion, as in Iustin Martyr, in Calverius, in those 400. said to be converted at the Martyrdome of Cecilia, and lastly in Silvester the executioner at the martyrdome of Simon Laloe at Dyon in France: where seeing the great faith and constancy of that heavenly Martyr, he was so compuncted with repentance, and fell into such despair of himself, that, after much adoe, being comforted and converted, he removed with all his family to the church of Geneva. But what a silly conceit is that of the Jewes at this day, that when Messias comes, they shall be these Lions among the Gentiles in the midst of all other people to tread them down, and to tear in peeces without rescue? and what a true character hath a late writer given of them, that they are a light, aeriall, and fanaticall-brain'd people; and easily apt to work themselves into the fooles paradise of a sublime dorage?

The Spaniards called their Navy in 88. the Invincible Armado: but it proved otherwise: and that upon Saint James his day, whom they count their Patrone, their Tutelary-Saint. It is not unlawfull to have cities and strong-holds &c. but to confide in them, by rising up to a corky frothy hope when we have them: or to sit down in a faithlesse fullen discontent and despondency when we want them; this is to make flesh our arme, and so to incur that heavy curse Ier. 17. 5. God will cut off all occasions of so doing from those whom he loveth, as here he promiseth: and as accordingly he performed to this people, after their return from Babylon, and especially a little before the comming of Christ in the flesh, when they were reduced by Pompey into a province of the Roman Empire.

thou art a Samaritan, that is, one that dealeth with the devil: for otherwise they knew, that Christ was no Samaritan, but a Galilean, as they called him in scorn, in truth a Bethlehemite, as verse 2. But especially Deut. 18. 10, 11. where we have these five Arguments (as One well observeth) against Astrological, and other unlawfull predictions. First, that all such are abomination to the Lord, verse 2. Secondly, that for such Arts, the Canaanites were driven out, verse 12. Thirdly, that unlesse men cast away the use of the said Arts, they cannot be perfect, that is, upright and sincere with God, verse 13. Fourthly, that godly men must differ from Canaanites and Heathens, in the abandoning such arts, verse 14. Lastly, that instead of such wayes of prediction, the Lord raiseth up Christ, the great Prophet, to foretell unto them what is meet for them to foreknow, verse 15. with Act. 3. 23. To seek to know more, is condemned for curiosity and rashnesse, by Christ himself, in his own disciples, Act. 1. 7. it derogateth from the glory of Christ, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge: it is to go a whoring from Christ, Lev. 20. 6. and is therefore in this Text fitly yoked with idolatry: It is here also reckoned among those things that must be cut off, if Christs kingdom shall be set up amongst us. So that if there were no other text of Scripture against that wickednesse but this alone, it were sufficient.

Joh. 8. 48.

Verse 13. Thy graven images also will I cut off | Sorcery and Idolatry are fitly coupled here and elsewhere: for they commonly go together, as in the Pope and his Clergy. See Rev. 9. 21. and 21. 8. as also in the Canaanites, Philistines, and other Heathens. True it is, that the Temples at Rome were without images for 170 years after it was built: that the Laedemonians would not endure pictures or images, lest by them they should be distracted: that the Turks and Jews both, at this day, do abhorre Christian Religion, for the abominable idolatry they see among Papists. For since the captivity of Babylon, the graven images and statues have been so cut off from the Jews, that they would never be drawn to worship the work of their hands. They have a saying amongst them to this day, That no punishment befalleth them, wherein there is not an ounce of that golden calf, they once made in the wilderness. Having paid therefore for their learning, they abhorre idols, Rom. 2. 22. and count it sacrilege, as Plutarch did, to worship by images. The Papists should do so likewise: and not say as their Vasquez (unable to answer our arguments doth) that the second Commandement belonged to the Jews onely: or bring such proofs for their idolatry, that the images themselves (if they were sensible) would blush to hear repeated.

Verse 14. And I will pluck up thy groves, &c. | wherein thou placest a part of thy happinesse, (as the Hebrew word importeth) and hast an over-high opinion of them, because anciently frequented by the Fathers, before the Law. But it should have been considered, that it was but a will-worship at best; yea, that God had flatly forbidden the planting of groves, Deut. 16. 21. as things in use among Pagans, for honour, either of some God, or some great mans ghost, which was thought to dwell there.

Nulli certa domus, lucis habitamus opacis.

Virg. Æneid.

The worshippers of Priapus, (that shame) when they had ended their sacrifice, stept into a grove hard by the altar, and there like brut beasts, promiscuously satisfied their lusts: thereby as they conceived, best pleasing their god.

So will I destroy thy cities. | Or, thine enemies: and this will be the end, or fruit of that forementioned reformation. Mr. Fox observeth, that in K. Edw. the sixts time, the English put to flight their enemies in Muskeborough field, in the self-same day and hour wherein the Reformation, enjoyned by Parliament, was put in execution at London, by burning of idolatrous images.

Verse 15. And I will execute vengeance in anger | upon those that refuse to be reformed, that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lords Jesus Christ,

2. Thef. 1. 8. Such as were the Jews enemies, the primitive persecutors, the stubborn Papists, some of whom have professed, that they would rather take part with the Turks than with the Lutherans: as some rigid Lutherans again have protested openly, that they would return to the Papacy, rather than to admit ever of that Sacramentary and Predestinatory pestilence (as they call it) of the Calvinists. But what a sad story is that related by Mr. Burroughs, who had it from a worthy Minister of those parts; that at Hamborough was not long since held a consultation by some learned Lutherans, concerning the cause and cure of Germanies calamities: and where it was concluded, that Germany suffered so much in these late warres, because their images in Churches were not adorned enough, which therefore they would presently procure done. Had they consulted this text, they might soon have seen their mistake, and bethought them of better. But Lord, when thine hand is lifted up, they will not see: howbeit they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy toward thy people: yea, their ears shall be opened, and their instruction sealed, Job 33. 16. that they may be accounted worthy to escape that vengeance, that shall be executed in anger and fury upon the Heathen, that have not heard the joyful sound, but, as so many sea-monsters, have with a deaf ear passed by the doctrine of salvation, the Gospel of peace.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Hear ye now what the Lord saith,] Exordium breve est, sed plane patheticum, saith Gualther. This is a short, but pithy and pathetically preface; wherein he woos their attention: Audite queso, Hear, I pray you. Ministers are spokesmen for Christ, and must therefore give good words: and yet remembering on whose errand they come, it is required that they be found faithfull, 1 Cor. 4. 2.

Arise, contend thou] Surge, age, O Micah! Debate thou Gods cause against this rebellious and ingratefull people, as it were in judgement: calling all, even the insensible creatures to be judges. See the like, Dem. 32. 1. Efay 1. 2. Mic. 1. 2. (for these two Prophets have many things common) and be sensible, that some sit as senselesse before a Preacher still, as the seats they sit on, pillars they lean to, dead bodies they tread upon: so that we have need (as One did once in my hearing) to call to the walls and windows to hear the word of the Lord. This heavy ear is noted for a singular judgement, Mat. 13. 13, 14. Efay 30. 8, 9. The Philosopher was angry with his Bacotians: telling them that they had not their name for nought, sith their ears were Ox-ears, and that they were dull creatures, and incapable of counsel. Demosthenes also for like cause, called upon his countrey-men of Athens, to get their ears healed: and Diogenes used to tell his tale to the statues and images, that he might inure himself to lose his labour, as he had so often done, in speaking to the people. Let us, to the wearing of our tongues to the stumps, preach and pray never so much, men will on in sinne, said blessed Bradford, in that excellent Sermon of his of Repentance. We cry till we are hoarse (saith another rare Preacher) we speak till we spit forth our lungs: but all to as little purpose as Bede did, when he preached to an heap of stones. Asino quispiam narrabat fabulam: at ille movebat aures. But shall people thus carry it away, and God lose his sweet words? Never think it. Those that will not hear the word, shall hear the rod, verse 9. of this chapter: and if they could but see their misery, they would do as the Prophet requires, cut their hair and cast it away, under the sense of the horror of Gods indignation; Jer. 7. 27, 29. they would beg of God a hearing ear, (which is as an ear-ring of gold, Prov. 25. 12.) and beseech him to make the bore bigger, that his word might enter: yea to draw up the ears of their souls to the ears of their bodies, that one saving sound might pierce both at once. Let him that hath an ear to hear, hear: or if yet any think good to forbear, let him forbear, Ezek. 3. 27. but he will certainly repent it. He that now gives God occasion to call to the hills, &c. shall one day tire the deaf mountains, saying, Fall on me, hide me, dash and crush me in a thousand peeces. O that I might trot directly to hell, and not stay to hear that dreadfull Discedite, Go ye cursed!

Verse 2.

Verse 2. Hear O ye mountains the Lords controversie ] Although the people would neither hear nor obey God, the Prophet doth: and, according to command, he summoneth the mountains to hear and testifie: the Lord seeming to say unto him, as once he did to Ezekiel; But thou sonne of man, be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: but hear what I say unto thee, and do it. It might seem to him a senselesse thing to cite the mountains, &c. But hee knew that if God command a thing, to argue or debate upon it were bold presumption; to search the reason of it, proud curiosity, to detrect or disobey it, flat rebellion. To the mountains and foundations of the earth he applies himself: happily with like minde, and in like manner as the Host of Nola did to the Church-yard: and there called at the graves of the dead; Oh ye good men of Nola, come away; for the Roman Cenfor calls for your appearance: for he knew not where to call for a good man alive.

and ye strong foundations of the earth ] Those roots of the mountains, Jon. 2. 7. yet not so strong, but God can shake them, Job 9. 5, 6. Nab. 1. 5, 6. and that by so weak a creature as air, gotten under ground, and seeking a vent. Hee can lift them off their foundations, Deut. 32. 22. and carry them to another place to hear his controversie, as he did the hill in Herefordshire, Anno 1571. and that other in the territories of Bern, that removing out of his place in an earth-quake, covered a whole village, that had 90 families in it. See the Note on Amos 1. 1.

Camden. de Britan. fol. 472. Pelan. synt.

for the Lord hath a controversie with his people. ] See the Note on Hos. 4. 1. and learn to tremble before this great God, who sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers, Esay 40. 22. which he can shake out of their place at pleasure, and send them packing to hell. O consider what a fearfull thing it is to be at controversie with God: and to have him both our Accuser, witness, and Judge. O the terror of the Lord at that great and last day of the world! Utinam ubique de hoc iudicio differetur! Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us (but they shall reply, we are witnesses against you for your detestable unthankfulnesse) and to the hills, Cover us, but they shall echo out Cover us; for who can dwell with this devouring fire? who can abide these everlasting burnings?

and he will plead with Israel. ] At which time they shall find, that an empty title, hath but an empty comfort; and that tribulation and anguish shall be on every soul of man that doth evil: but of the Jew first, because of his priviledge, and then of the Gentile. None so deep in utter darknesse, as those that once were Angels of light. Let us all pray with holy David, Enter not into judgement with thy servant, O Lord, &c. And with Job, If thou shouldst contend with me, I could not answer thee one of a thousand. And with Daniel, O Lord, righteousness belongs unto thee: but to us confusion of face, because we have sinned against thee.

Psal. 143. 2. Job 9. 2. 3. Dan. 9. 7. 8.

Verse 3. O my people, what have I done unto thee? ] Or rather, what have I not done, to do thee good? O generation, see ye the Word of the Lord, and not hear it onely: was ever any thing more evidencing and evincing then what I now alledge? Have I been a wilderness unto Israel, a land of darknesse? May I not well say unto you, as He did to his ungratefull countrey men; What? Are ye weary of receiving so many benefits from one man? But say; What hurt have I ever done you? and wherein have I wearied you, or been troublesome to you? unlesse it be by daily loading you with loving-kindnesses, Psal. 68. 19. and bearing with your provocations? Forgive me that injury, 2 Cor. 12. 13.

Testifie against me, ] Put me in remembrance, let us plead together, declare thou against me, that thou mayest be justified, Esay 43. 26. See here, first, with what meeknesse, and mildnesse God proceedeth against sinners, so Esay 5. 3. Judicate quæso. See, next, that God is content, for our better conviction, to submit his courses unto scanning, and to bring his proceedings with us to a triall, before hee passe sentence; that he might be justified when he speaketh, and cleared when hee judgeth, Psal. 51. 4. Here hee wills them to plead the cause with him, as it were at even hand; offering to make answer to whatsoever they could object, or lay to his charge. Seipsum quasi reum sistit. He maketh himself the Defendant, and bids them put in their Bill of complaint against him, freely and without fear. This is Stupenda sanè dignatio, a wonderfull condescension indeed. Should he use martiall law against us, and as soon as ever we offend (like Draco) write his lawes in blood upon upon us (as One well saith) it were but just and right. But for him to reason and plead with us about the justice of his cause before he proceeds to judgment, this deserves admiration and acknowledgement in the highest degree. O the depth!

Verse 4. For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt] Here God twits them with his former favours: which he never doth, but in case of brutish unthankfulness. Now there was brutish, and worse. To render good for evil is divine: good for good is humane: evil for evil is brutish: but evil for good devilish. This makes God, contrary to his custome, upbraid people with what he hath done for them: and angrily call for his love-tokens back againe, as Hof. 2. 9. For their deliverance out of the Egyptian servitude how great a mercy it was, see the Note on Hof. 11. 1. such as they were againe and againe charged never to forget Deut. 6. 12. and 5. 15. and 26. 5. to 12. How much more bound are we to God for our Redemption by Christ? for what's Pharaoh to Satan? Egypt to this present evil world? Egyptian bondage to sins slavery? Seeing then that our God hath given us such deliverance as this, should we againe break his commandments &c. Well might the hills and mountaines testify against such a monstrous unthankfulness, and disingenuity.

and redeemed thee out of the house of servants] Gradatim progreditur, saith Calvin. It was something to be brought out of the land of Egypt, a most superstitious place: where they turned the glory of the incorruptible God to the similitude of the image of a corruptible man (for they defiled their king Osiris) and of birds (for they worshipped the hawk and Ibis) and of foure-footed beasts (for they worshipped an ox, a dog, a cat, a swine) and of creeping things, for they worshipped the Crocodile, Ichneumon &c. yea they worshipped plants and pot-herbs. Hence the Poet

Rom. 1. 23.

Juven.

To be brought out therefore from amongst such hatefull Idolaters was no small favour, lest they should smell of their superstitions, as Mica's mother did after all that aying sin in the desert Judg. 17. 3. and Jeroboam, by being there awhile, had learned calf-worship: hence that strickt charge never to make league with them. But to be redeemed out of the house of servants, was more: out of the iron furnace Deut. 4. 20. Ier. 11. 4. where they wrought night and day in latere & luto Exod. 1. in setting up those famous Pyramids, and treasure-cities for Pharaoh, where they served with rigour, Exod. 1. 13. their lives were made bitter with hard bondage ver. 14. till God withdrew their shoulders from the burden, and their hands did leave the pots Psal. 81. 6. till they saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved-work of a Saphire-stone Exod. 24. 10. to shew, that God had now changed their condition, their bricks made in their bondage to Saphirs. Confer Esay 54. 11. and consider what God hath done for us, by bringing us into the glorious liberty of his own children, who were once the devils drudges and dromedaries, serving diverse lusts and pleasures Tit. 3. 3. which gave lawes to our members Rom. 7. and held us under in a brutish bondage, much worse then the Heathens mil-house, the Turks gallies, Bajazets iron-cage, the Indian mines, or Egyptian furnace. For there, if they did their task they escaped stripes; but here, let men do the devill never such doughty service, they are sure of scourges and scorpions after all, armies and changes of sorowes and sufferings: terrours and torments, without any the least hope of ever either mending or ending. This should make us lift up many an humble, joyfull, and thankfull heart to our most powerfull Redeemer: saying with St. Paul, Now to the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever, Amen. 1 Tim. 1. 17.

and I sent before thee, Moses, Aaron and Miriam] As three principall guides, and Miriam for one: who did her part among the women Exod. 15. 20. and, having a prophetick spirit, became a singular instrument in the hand of God who spake by her Num. 12. 2. But her weak head was not able to bear such a cup of honour, without being intoxicated: which caused her father to spit in her face Num.

Num. 12. 2, 14. Her death is recorded in scripture Num. 20. 1. but not her age, as is Sarahs Gen. 23. 1. Some have observed that God thought not fit to tell us of the length of the life of any woman in Scripture but Sarah, to humble that sex. But as soules have no sexes, so of some women (such as were Miriam, Deborah, the Virgin Mary, Priscilla, Blandina, the Lady Jane Gray, Q. Elizabeth &c.) it may be said, that in them, besides their sex, there was nothing woman-like or weak: as if (what Philosophy saith) the soules of these noble creatures had followed the temperament of their bodies, which consist of a frame of rarer roomes, of a more exact composition, then mans doth. It is possible that Miriam might (till that matter of emulation betwixt her and Moses his wife fell out) be as helpfull to Moses and Aaron, as Nazianzens mother was to his father; not a help-fellow only, but a doctresse and governesse.

Versé 5. O my people remember now what Balak.] There must be a Recognition of Gods mercies, or else there will neither follow Estimation, nor Retribution. Else we that should be as temples of his praises, shall be as graves of his benefits. Our soules are naturally like filthy ponds, wherein fish die soon, and frogs live long; rotten stuff is remembred, memorable mercies are forgotten; whereas the soul should be as an holy Ark, the memory like the pot of Manna preserving holy truths as the Law; and speciall blessings, as Aurons rod, fresh and flourishing. This Israel did not, and are therefore justly blamed Psal. 106. 7, 13, 21. and here againe reminded of one signall mercy among many, that they might take notice of the enemies malignity, Gods benignity, and their own indignity and ingratitude, that parching wind, that drieth up the fountaine of divine favours.

What Balack king of Moab consulted] Iosua saith, that he arose and fought against Israel chap. 24. 9. that is, he had a good mind to have fought, but he did not because he durst not. So Esth. 8. 7. Haman is said to have laid his hand upon the Jewes, because he intended and attempted such a matter. They, that is the Sortilegi or Lot-forcerers, with whom, Balack-like, he consulted, cast Pur, that is, the lot before Haman from day to day, and from month to month: viz. to find out what month or day would be lucky for the accomplishment of his intended massacre of the Jewes: but before that black-day came, Mordecai was advanced, and Haman hanged. Now, as there, by the speciall providence of God overruling the superstition of that wicked wretch, way was made for the preservation of Gods people: So was it here. Balack consulted, and Balaam answered him: that is, he was as willing to curse as the other would have had him, but might not: for God would not harken unto him, but blessed his people still, and delivered them out of his hand Iosb. 24. 10. Yea though at length he was resolved to curse howsoever, and therefore went not forth as at other times to seek for enchantments, but set his face toward the wilderness, as if he would do the deed, whatever came of it Num. 24. 1. Yet his indeavour was fruitlesse and frustrate. So shall the malicious attempts of Rome and Hell be against the Reformed religion and the Professors thereof (whom the Romish Balaam banns and curses with bell book and candle (at the instigation of the Spanish Balak, with his factours the Jesuits) so long as they adhere to him and pray as Psal. 109. 26, 27, 28, 29. Help me O Lord my God: O save me according to thy mercy. That they may know, that this is thy hand: that thou Lord hast done it. Let them curse, but blesse thou: When they arise, let them be ashamed, but let thy servants rejoyce &c. Salvation is of the Lord: his blessing is upon his people.

Remember what I did for you at Shittim in the wilderness, and so all the way untill you came into the promised land, even to Gilgal, where you first pitched tent Iosb. 5. 8, 9, 10. At Shittim it was, where, by the pestilent counsel of Balaam (the devils spelman) the Midianites out-witted them, by setting faire women before them as a stumbling-block Num. 25. 1, 18. to draw them to those two sinner-sins, adultery and idolatry. Then and there, the heades of the people were hanged up before the Lord against the Sun, and some others; when as God might justly have cut them all off, and cast them away from being a people before him. Nonne illic refulsit admirabilis Dei gratia? saith Calvin: was not this a miracle of Gods mercy?

that ye may know the righteousness of the Lord] i. e. the faithfulness and goodness of God in keeping promise with your fathers, notwithstanding your provocations. Or my righteous dealings with those fornicators and adulterers, whom I there judged: preserving the innocent, or penitent, till they came to Gilgal, and onwards. Or that thou maist know how just my complaint is of thee, and mine action against thee. So Vatablus expounds it.

Verse 6. Wherewith shall I come before the Lord] This is vox populi the voice of the people now convinced in part; or at least of some one for them. Prestat herbam dare quam turpiter pugnare. Better yeeld then disgracefully hold out the contest. God, say they hath the better of us: neither need he now call upon heaven and earth to arbitrate, nor on the mountaines and strong foundations to heare the quarrell, for we are self-condemned Tit. 3. 11. Our own consciences read the sentence against us, we have deserved to be destroyed: but oh what may we do to avert and avoid his wrath? what shall we do that we might work the works of God? Ioh. 6. 28. Loe this is the guise of gracelesse men: faine they would pacifie God, and work themselves into his grace and favour by ceremonies and frivolous businesses: yea they offer largely for a dispensation to live in their sins, which they had as lief be knockt o' th' head, as part with. Interea per flexuosos circuitus fingunt se ad Deum accedere, à quo tamen semper cupiant esse remoti, saith Calvin, they fetch a compasse about God, but care not to come near him. Heaven they would either steale if they could, or buy at any hand, if they might: faine they would passe à cano ad calum, à deliciis ad delicias from Dalilah's lap to Abraham's bosome: faine they would (as One saith) dance with the devill all day, and then sup with Christ at night. They seem here very inquisitive and solicitous about their soules health: they give the half-turn sed ad Deum usque non revertuntur but they return not even to God: like a horse in a mill they move much, but remove not at all: like those silly women 2 Tim. 3. 6, 7. or as ants that run to and fro about a mole-hill, but grow not greater.

and bow my self before the high God] Or, shall I bow my self &c. will that, or any like bodily exercise please him, or pacify him? if cringing or crouching will do it, if sack-cloth and ashes, if hanging down the head and going softly, if penances and pilgrimages &c. hypocrites do usually herein out-do the upright. Doth the Publican look with his eyes on the ground? the hypocriticall Jewes will hang down their heads like bulrushes. Doth Timothy weaken his constitution by abstinence? the Pharisees will never give over till his complexion be wholly withered and waned. Doth Paul correct his body with milder correction, as it were a blow on the cheek? the Jesuite will martyr his sides with the severe discipline of scorpions. But although God must be glorified with our bodies also 1 Cor. 6. 20. and externall service is required (what ever the Swenfeldians say to the contrary) yet Bodily exercise of it self profiteth little 1 Tim. 4. 8. and let those that brag off or bind upon their outward worship of Christ consider, that the devill himself in the demoniack of Gadara fell down and worshipped him. What comfort can there be in that which is common to us with devils? who as they beleve and tremble, so they tremble and worship. The outward bowing is the body of the action; the disposition of the soule, is the soule of it.

shall I come before him with burnt-offerings &c.] shall I prevent him, and propitiate him with holocausts? shall I meet him marching against me, and thus make my peace with him? The Jewes were much in sacrifices, till they wearied Gods soule therewith, and all his senses Esay 1. 13, 14, 15. but they were sacrificing Sodomites ver. 10. they stuck in the bark, they pleased themselves in the work done, not attending the manner, which either makes or marres every action, and is mainly eyed by God: their devotions were placed more in the massy materiality, then inward purity; and hence rejected David could tell (through these Questionists could not) that God desired not sacrifice, further then as thereby men were led to Christ; and that the sacrifices of God are a contrite spirit Psal. 51. 16, 17. that no burnt offering is acceptable, nor calf of a yeare old, unless laid on the low altar of a broken heart, which sanctifieth the sacrifice.

Verse 7. Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams] It was taken for a maxime among all nations, that no man was to come before God empty-handed:

nor to serve him of free-coft. And although Lycurgus the Lacedemonian made a law, that no man should be at very great charge for a sacrifice, lest he should grow weary of Gods service: yet when the famous carver Phidias, advised the Athenians to make the statue of Minerva rather of Marble, then of Ivory. 1. because more durable (this passed with allowance.) 2. because lesse chargeable: at the mention hereof, with infinite indignation they commanded him silence. Pliny tells us, of Alexander the Great, that when, as being yet a youth, he cast great store of frankincense upon the altar; and his School-master told him, he must not bee so liberall, till he had subdued the frankincense-countreys: when once he had conquered Arabia, he sent his school-master a ship full of frankincense, largely exhorting him to worship the gods therewith. Superstition is, for most part, not liberall onely, but prodigall; and no wonder, when as good works are by Bellarmino said to be mercatura regni celestis the price and purchase of heaven. Hence their Churches are so stuffed with vowed presents, and memories, as at Loretto, and elsewhere, they are fain to hang their Cloysters, and Church-yards with them. What would not men give, what will they not suffer, that they may be saved? I would swim thorow a sea of brimstone, said One, that I might come to heaven at last. But those that would buy heaven, and do offer as these here, a bribe for a pardon, shall hear, Thy money perish with thee: And those that seek to be saved by their works, Luther fitly calls, the Devils martyrs: They suffer much, and take much pains to go to hell, they buy their damnation, as One saith the Pharisees did, when they gave Judas those thirty pieces, for which he sold his salvation.

Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, &c?] The superstitious Jews used, we know, to offer up their children in sacrifice to Moloch, or Saturn, 2 King. 17. and 21. and 23. and that, in an apish imitation of Abrahams offering his sonne Isaac. To the same Saturn the Phœnicians are said to have sacrificed the best of their sonnes. So did the Carthaginians, as Diodorus Siculus testifieth. And when as they had for awhile left off so to do, and were overcome by Agathocles, they (supposing that the gods were therefore angry with them, because they had not done as formerly) slew 200. at once, at the altar, of their young Nobility, to pacifie the offended deity. Of like sort were Anammelech, and Adrammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim, unto whom that people burnt their children in the fire, 2 King. 17. 13. And little better were our Ancestours, the old Bristones, who not onely sacrificed their strangers, but their children too, non ad honorem sed ad injuriam religionis. Here then the Prophet seemeth to speak by way of Concession, that he may shew these Questionists, how little it would avail them to sacrifice their children, if such a thing were lawfull to be done.

Verse 8. Hee hath shewed thee, O man, what is good] i. e. What is right, just, and acceptable to himself. Hee shewed it by the light of Nature: for Aristotle (Natures secretary) saith, It is not likely that God is so well pleased with the costlinesse of the sacrifices, as with the godlinesse of the sacrificers. He hath shewed it much more by the light of Scripture: there he hath told thee, what is the unum necessarium, One thing necessary; in comparison whereof all other things are but by-busineses: what is the Totum hominis, the whole duty of man, sc. to fear God, and keep his commandements, Eccles. 12. 13. What is the Bonum hominis, as here, yea, the Summum Bonum, or chiefest good of man, attainable in this life; viz. Communion with God, and Conformity to God.

But to do justly, and to love mercy] This is the summe of the second Table: as that which followeth, is of the first, to walk humbly with thy God. Here then is a brief of the whole Bible, a little Bible, as the eleventh to the Hebrews, is by One not unfitly called, A little Book of Martyrs. Do this and live: Do this here enjoyned, and thou shalt never fall: yea, thou shalt go gallantly into heaven, as Saint Peter hath it, 2 Epist. 1. 10. 11. Certa semper sunt in paucis, saith Tertullian. Things simply necessary, whether to be beleaved or practised, are few in number, but many in vertue; in sight small, but great in weight: like gold, which being solid, is contracted into a narrow room: but may be drawn into so large an extent, that one angel may cover an acre of ground, as the Naturalists have observed. To do justly, is the duty, not onely of Magistrates, whom God hath entrusted with the administration of his earthly kingdom, by the due execution of vindicative and remunerative justice, but also of all other persons, in their severall places and stations, whose rule must be that golden saying of our Saviour, Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets, Mat. 7. 12. See the Note there.

And to love mercy ] This is more then to shew mercy: for that a man may do, and yet, for want of love, lose all, 1 Cor. 13. He must not onely draw out his sheaf, but his soul to the hungry, Esay 58. 10. nor distribute spirituall alms, but do it out of deep affection, as Titus, 2 Cor. 7. he must be ready to distribute, willing to communicate, 1 Tim. 6. 18. his mercy must flow from him, as water doth from the fountain, or light from the Sun: it must not be wrung from him, as verjuice from a crab, or as distilled water is forced out by the heat of the fire. Let the love of Christ constrain us to look out some of his receivers, (as David did Jonathans stock) to whom we may shew mercy for his sake. What though we be weak, yet if willing to shew mercy, God accepteth according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. The widows mite is beyond the rich mans magnificence: because it came out of a richer minde: The Apostle bids, Put on, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindnesse, Col. 3. 12. such as the Gaoler had toward Paul and Silas: such as the Samaritan had toward the wounded man by the way-side: such as those primitive Christians had, who came to the Church, with strong affections, with large contributions, Acts 4. 34. The like is foretold of Tyrus when converted, Esay 23. 18. and of Ethiopia, Psal. 68. 31. that shee shall hastily stretch her hands unto God, Heb. she shall make them run, noting her readinesse, and speedinesse, in giving her goods unto the saints. The tender mercies of the Almighty, shed forth abundantly upon His, leave a compassionate frame upon their hearts, and do dye their thoughts, as the die-far doth the cloth.

And to walk humbly with thy God ] Or, bashfully, with an holy shamefacednesse, and sollicitousnesse of doing any thing that may offend the eyes of Gods glory. Yea, what care, saith the Apostle, 2 Cor. 7. 11. sc. of walking worthy of the Lord, unto all-pleasing, Colos. 1. 10. as proving your hearts and lives to him in every part and point of obedience. This the Lord in a mystery taught his people, Dem. 23. 13, 14. when commanding them to cover their excrements with a paddle, hee giveth this reason thereof. For the Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, &c. therefore shall thy camp be holy, that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee. They that stand in the presence of Princes, must be every way exact: and give them all due respect. Now a good man, like a good Angel, is ever in Gods presence: and must therefore walk worthy of the vocation wherewith he is called, with all lowlinesse and meeknesse, Ephes. 4. 1, 2. with all modesty, and demission of mind, and of demeanour, (as the word here signifieth) and especially, when he draweth nigh to God in holy duties. Then it must be his care to exercise a three-fold humility. First, precedens, before he sets upon Gods service, he must in heart devote, and dedicate all that he is, and hath, as a due debt to the Almighty, saying with David, It is of thine own, Lord, that I give thee: τὰ οὐκ ἑγὼ τῷ κυρίῳ, as that good Emperour said. The second is concomitant: when in the performance of good duties, he hath grace, (this lovely grace of humility especially) whereby hee may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear; which is nothing else but an awfull respect to the divine Majesty, with whom wee have to do, Heb. 4. 13. The third is subsequent; when after hee hath done his best, he is dejected in the sense of his many failings in the manner; and looking on his plumes, he looketh also on his black feet, and is abashed, and abased before the Lord. Lo, this is to humble himself to walk with his God. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

Verse 9. The Lords voice crieth unto the city ] Or, shall cry, viz. by his Prophets. οὐκ αὖ ὁ θεὸς προσημαίνειν, said the Heathen. God loves to fore-signifie, to warn before he woundeth, to foretell a judgement, before he inflicteth it. He had shewed his people people what was good, and what he required of them : but to little purpose, through their unteachablenesse, and stubbornnesse. He thereatneth therefore here to take another course with them.

And the man of wisdom shall see thy name ] Gualther rendreth it, And the man of Essence, &c. that is, qui revera vir est, non caudex aut truncus, hee that is a man indeed, or not a stock, or trunk (such an one as was that saplesse fellow Nabal, in whom all true reason was decayed and faded.) will easily see Gods name, that is, the divine majesty of the word, working powerfully upon his heart, as the Sun-beams beat upon Jonas his head, and disquieted him. Danens rendreth it, And wisdom seeth thy name, that is, wisdoms children, as Luke 7. 35. which will justifie her, when others are either so froward, that nothing can please them, (neither John fasting, nor Christ eating, Mat. 11. 16, &c.) or so dull, that nothing can affect them, as these here : the word of God was worse then spilt upon them. Sure it is, that wisdoms children are not many. Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? saith Hosea chap. 14. 9. the very question imports a paucity. See the Note there. Though a gunne be discharged at a whole flight of birds, there are but a few killed: though the net be spread over the whole pond, but a few fishes are taken. Rari sunt qui philosophantur, saith Ulpian. It is with our hearers, as it was with Jonathans signal arrows, two fell short, and but one beyond the mark: So where one shoots home to the mark of the high-calling in Christ Jesus, many fall short. Three sorts of four of those that heard our Saviour, were naught, Mat. 13. And of those that heard Paul at Athens, some derided, others doubted, and but a very few beleaved: as Dennis, and Damaris, and some others with them, Act. 17. 34.

Hear ye the rod ] Sith ye would not hear the word, and so redeem your own sorrows. All Gods rods are vocall, they are speaking as well as smiting: they are not mute, but mingled with instructions. They are his Free-school-master; curst, and crabbed, but such as whereby he openeth mens ears (till then, uncircumcised, and stoppt with the superfluity of naughtinesse) to discipline, and commandeth them to return from iniquity, Job 36. 8, 9. By chastening men, God teacheth them out of his Law, Psal. 64. 12. Hence Luther calleth Affliction, Theologiam Christianorum, the Christian mans Divinity: and Another saith, that Schola crucis est schola lucis. There shall be onely fear, to make you understand the hearing, Esay 28. 19. As God is said to hold his peace, when he punisheth not, Psal. 50. 21. Esay 41. 14. so, to preach and teach, when he doth. And look how Gideon, by threshing the men of Succoth with thorns and briars of the wildernesse, taught them, Judg. 8. 7, 16. so here. I have a message from God unto thee, O King, said Ehud, Judg. 3. 20. Lo, his ponyard was Gods message. Whence, One well observeth, that not onely the vocall admonitions, but the reall judgements of God, are his errands and instructions to the world. For when thy judgements are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness, Esay 26. 9. Smart makes wit; and Vexation giveth understanding.

and who hath appointed it ] God, who hath not onely a permissive, but an active hand in all our afflictions. Others render the text, Quis sit, qui accersat istud, who it is that hath procured it, or sent for it. Who, but your selves? according to Hof. 13. 9. See the Note there. Nemo leditur nisi a seipso. Men may thank themselves for all their sufferings: for God afflicteth not willingly, Lam. 3. 35. He cometh forth of his place to do it, Esay 16. 21. and counteth it his work, his strange work, Esay 28. 21. He doth justice, (when there is no other remedy) but hee loveth mercy, and so requireth us to do in the verse next afore-going.

Vers. 10. Are there yet the treasures of wickednesse ] What yet? for all that ever I can say or do to the contrary? Though I cry out unto you by my word (and have set it on with my rod, that it might stick the better) Oh do not this abominable thing! Is there yet unto every man an house of the wicked, and treasures of wickednesse? (so some read it) see chap. 2. 2. with the Note. The Vulgar reads it, (and Gualther disliketh it not) Is there yet fire in the house of the wicked? Sc. the fire of Gods wrath? and treasures of wickednesse, as fuell cast upon it, to consume all? See Jam. 5. 1, 2, 3. Treasures of wickednesse profit not, Prov. 10. 2. sith to heap up sinne, is to heap up wrath, Rom. 2. and to rake together ill-gotten goods, is to carry home a fardle of plaguy-clothes, and death with them. Ephraim said yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance Hof. 12. 8. But in so doing, Ephraim fed upon the wind ver. 1. yea upon pestilentiall ayre: he daily increased lies and desolation, that is, such lying vanities as bring delolation, and not consolation: as hale hell at the heeles of them, (as we see in the parable of that wretched rich man Luk. 16.) Animam ipsam incendio gehenna mancipant, the fire that is in them shall feed upon their soules, and flesh thoroughout all eternity. Out of dores therefore with these treasures of wickednesse, by restoring them to the right owners, as Zacheus did; and as Iustinian the Emperour, who would not put the vessels of the Temple taken by Titus, and recovered from Genfericus, into the treasury, but restored them.

and the scant measure that is abominable? ] Heb: the Ephah of leanness, (so called, both because it wante of its due proportion, and makes men leane) full of wrath: q. d. you scant it to those you trade with, but God fills it up with his fierce wrath and indignation. See Am. 8. 5. with the Note.

Verse 11. Shall I count them pure with the wicked ballances? ] Shall I cleare and acquit such? I that am the righteous Judge of heaven and earth, I abhor all injustice? I that have named my self a God that will by no means cleare the guilty, nor take the wicked by the hand? Doe they think to draw me in as a party? or that I will beare with their false and fraudulent dealings, which I have so oft declared against, and doomed both in the law, and by my servants Solomon, Amos, and others. No: assure your selves, your sins shall find you out, and I will curse you, smite you, plague you, and so set it on, as no creature shall be able to take it off. Let earthly Judges warp, as they will, and wink at sin, I neither can nor will: but as men have sowed, so they shall reape; as they have sowed in hardnesse of heart, so they shall reape in horror of conscience, & quorum oculos culpa clausit, poena aperiet, as they have lived unconscionably, so they shall die uncomfortably: at which times, their treasures of wickednesse shall leave them in the lurch: as the devill leaves witches, when they come to prison.

Verse 12. For the rich men thereof are full of violence ] After that they have once enriched themselves by fraud and false-dealing, they take the boldnesse openly to oppress, and to exercise regiment without righteousness, which is no better then robbery with authority: of which before chap. 2. and 3. Thus wicked men wax worse and worse 2 Tim. 3. 13: till wrath come upon them to the utmost 2 Thess. 2.

and the inhabitants thereof have spoken lies ] Not the rich men only are in fault: but as the Cretians, so these are alwayes liars, loud and lewd liars: their tongue is deceitfull in their mouth; so that they no sooner open their mouthes, but swarmes of lies issue out: they are mendaciorum loquacissimi, they have taught their tongues to speak lies Jer. 9. 5. they are now become artists at it: Yea they take fast hold of deceit Jer. 8. 5. so that they cannot be got off, without striving. This is lamentable, and yet common: especially in trading and trafficking. But oh when shall that golden age return, that the argument may againe proceed, Sacerdos est, non fallit: Christianus est, non mentitur. He is a minister, and will not deceive you: He is a Christian, and will not lie! See Esa. 63. 8.

Verse 13. Therefore also will I make thee sick in smiting thee ] This is one twig of that rod Vers. 9. that now they shall heare and feel too, that would not harken to Gods word. Bernard telleth us concerning a brother of his; that when he gave him many good instructions and he, being a souldier, minded them not: he put his finger to his sides and said, One day a speare shall make way to this heart of thine, for instructions and admonitions, to enter. God can (and, where he intendeth mercy will) make way for his word by his rod: and scale up instructions by chastening men with paine upon their beds, and the multitude of their bones with strong paine Iob 33. 16, 19. He can fasten them to their beds, as he did Abimelech, David, Hezekiah, and thereby tame them, and take them a link lower Iob 33. 17. He can smite them with sickness, and make them desolate, as it is here: with such sickness as shall make their best friends afraid of them, and that none dare look at them, but as through a grate: and all this with a sting too in the taile of it, Because of thy sins. Fooles, because of their transgression, and because of their iniquities are afflicted. Their soule abhorreth all manner of meate (so sick they are and stomackeleffe, that nothing will down with them, and they draw neare to the gates of death Psal. 107. 17, 18. This was the case of that rich and wretched Cardinall Henry Beauford Bish: of Winchester and Chancellour of England, in the raigne of Henry 6. who tossing upon his sick-bed, and perceiving he must die, mormured at sicknesse and death, that his riches could neither relieve him under the one, nor reprove him from the other. This was also the case of that great Emperour Charles 5. of whom Du-plessy reporteth, that when he was old and crazy, he cursed his honours, his victories, trophies, riches, saying, Abite hinc, abite longè, Away, be gone, miserable comforters are ye all. Mention is made before of a great man that wrot this a little before his death, Spes & fortuna Valet. And surely there are not a few rich Cormorants, who may well say to their wealth when they are sick, as Cornelius Agrippa did to his familiar spirit, Abi perditæ bestia, quæ me predidisti, Be gone thou wicked beast, that hast been mine undoing. &c. A promise contrary to this threatening in the text is that Esaï 33. 24. And the inhabitant shall not say I am sick: the people that dwell therein, shall be forgiven their iniquity.

Verse 14. Thou shalt eat, but not be satisfied Either as not having enough to satisfy; but prisoners pittance, so much only as will keep life and soule together: Or else, troubled with a bulimy, an appetitus caninus, a weakenesie of the digestive faculty, so that thy meate feeds thee not: the taste of it being also broken by God, the nutritive property of it being taken away. See the Note on Hag. 1. 6.

and thy casting down shall be in the midst of thee] Thou shalt be laid low enough by civill and intestine discords, which as a fire feedeth upon the people Esaï 9. 19. no man shall spare his brother. Or, like as an hungry man snatcheth on the right hand, and eateth on the left hand, and yet is not satisfied ver. 20. till thine unnaturall convulsions end in a deadly consumption.

and thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver] Thou shalt catch up thy children, thy jewels &c. and think to secure them from the enemy, but shalt not be able. Of this misery we had over-wofull experience in our late unnaturall garboiles.

and that which thou deliverest, will I give up to the sword] Other judgements forerun the sword: which, when they will not do, the sword will then contemne the rod Ezek. 21. 10 that is, it will set at naught whatever the rod hath done, and come furnished and sharpened for the slaughter.

Verse 15. Thou shalt sow, but thou shalt not reap] This had been long since threatened by Moses Deut. 28. 38, 39 40. and was now above 700. yeares after to receive its accomplishment in this people. There is an infallibility in all the menaces of Gods mouth. Men are apt to think that they were uttered in errorem only; and to put them off, as those in the Gospel did, with a God forbid, Who knows if the Lord will deale with us according to all his wondrous workes, that this evil may passe from us Ier. 2. 1. 2? But what saith the Prophet Zephany? The just Lord is in the midst thereof: he will not do iniquity: every morning doth he bring his judgement to light; he faileth not: but the unjust knoweth no shame: sin hath woaded such an impudency in his face, that he shuns no sin, dreads no danger.

Verse 16. For the statutes of Omri are kept Subest verbum hisce sarcasmi. Here the Prophet taunterh them for their Idolatry: and telleth them plainly what will be the issue of it. q. d. You think you deale wisely and take a safe course for your selves, that together with Ephraim you are joynd to idols, and have such great names as Omri and Ahab to countenance you therein. Omri's statutes can be observed, when mine lie neglected.

rites of the Church of Rome: they walk in the track of the Trent-conventicle, and hold it worfe to deface an Idoll, then to kill a man: to eate flesh or egges on a fasting day, then to commit incest: to work on a holy day, then to break the sabbath. Ther's no command of the morall law but they can dispense with it: but none of their ceremoniall lawes. Let God (say they, profanely) look to the breach of his own law; we will look to ours.

that I should make thee a desolation] Luther here observeth, that oppression and other violations of the second table, God usually punisheth with war, famine, and pestilence: but breaches of the first table, and especially idolatry, with utter desolation. This is a land-destroying sin Ier. 22. 7, 8, 9.

therefore ye shall beare the reproach of my people] that is, of such as had been my people, if you could have held you so; but you are now, leammis, dispriviledged. ## CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. WOe is me, for I am as when they have gathered the summer-fruits] Allai li Alasse for me. This last sermon of his, the Prophet begins with a patheticall quiritation: bewailing his own unhappinesse in the little good successe of his minitery. Mirificè autem nostris temporibus hic sermo convenit, saith Gualther: This discourse suites well with these times; wherein we may justly cry out with the Prophet Esay, Who hath beleev'd our report? And againe, O my leanenesse, my leanenesse! woe is me, for there is only as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done Eesai. 24. 13, 16. Though he had worne himself to a very skeleton in the Lords work; yet had he laboured in vaine, Israel was not gathered chap. 49. 4, 5. and hence his wofull complaint. The like we read of Elias 1 King. 19. 10. where he bitterly bewailes his alone-nesse: So did Abanasis in his age, and Basil in his. Fasciculus temporum Anno, 884. cries out, for the paucity of good people, Heu, heu, Domine Deus, Alasse, Lord, how few appeare to be on thy side.

And Gualther complains, that the Anabaptists in Germany urged this as a chief argument to draw people from communion with our churches, that there was so little good done by preaching, and so few soules converted. Hence some ministers despond, and are ready to kick up all. Latimer tells of one who gave this answer why he left off preaching, because he saw he did no good. This, saith Latimer, is a naughty, a very naughty answer. A grief it will be, and fit it should be: piety to God and pity to men calls for it. Christ wept over Ierusalem: Paul had great heaviness and continuall sorrow in his heart (not inferiour to that of a woman in travel) for his contumacious countrey-men: neither could he speak of those lewd losels at Philippi with dry eyes Philip 3. 18. But an utter discouragement it should not be, sith our reward is with God howsoever Esay 49. 5. and perhaps a larger, because we have wrought with so little encouragement; we have plowed when others have only trod out the corn: they trod and fed together, when as those that plow have no refreshing till the work be done. Certaine it is that God will reward his faithfull servants secundum laborem, non secundum proventum, according to their paines taken in the ministry, and not according to their peoples profiting.

Poet in an age, it is well. Christ wondred at one good Nathaniel, and tells us in the same chapter, that they are but few that receive him, and with him the adoption of sons Ioh. 1. 12. Clusters we must not look for: but if there be found two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough: four or five in the outmost fruitfull branches, it's well. Sufficit mihi auditor unus, sufficit nullus. Paul when he came first to Philippi had a poore audience; only a few women Act. 16. 13. and one convert: neither had he much better success at Athen; and no Church could be planted there Act. 17.

my soule desired the first ripe fruites] præcoccem fructum, the rash-ripe fruit, as a great dainty, a precious rarity. We highly prize nettle-buds, when they first bud: so doth God our young services. * Ier. 1. 11. he made choice of the almond tree because it blossometh first: so of Jeremy from his infancy. He called for first-fruits of trees, and of the earth, in the sheafe, in the threshing-floore, in the dough, in the loaves. He would have eares of corne, dried by the fire; and wheat beaten out of the green eares Lev. 2. 14. He would have the primrose of our child-hood. There were three sorts of first-fruits: 1. Of eares of corne offered about the Paschever. 2. Of the loaves, offered about Pentecost. 3. About the end of the yeare, in Autumne. Now of the two first God had a part, not of the last. He likes not of those Arbores autumnales Jude 13. that bud at later end of harvest. Conversion (as Divines observe) usually falleth out between eighteen yeares of age, and eight and twenty: Besides Abraham in the old Testament, and Nicodemus in the New, we have not many instances of men converted in old age. When people grow crooked and rooted in evill practises, they are hardly ever set straight againe. Remember therefore thy Creator in the daies of thy youth: his soule delighteth in the first ripe fruites. Remember that Iesus Christ shed his blood for thee, when he was but 8. dayes old: and took thee into his family by baptisme, when thou didst hang on thy mothers breast.

The good man is perished out of the earth] Heb: The Saint, or gracious man, that out of mercy obtained of God, can extend mercy to men. Rari quippe boni. Of such it may be said, as One doth of faithfull friends in this age, that they are all (for most part) gone on pilgrimage: and their return is uncertaine.

They all lie in wait for blood] A company of sanguinaries, blood-suckers, hunting for the precious lives of men; but especially of such as reprove them in the gate. If you touch them in their lusts, they will seek to touch you in your life, as Isaiah did Zachary, and as the Priests and people said of Jeremy This man is worthy to die. All malice is bloody, and wisheth him out of the world, whom it spitteth.

they hunt every man his brother with a net] They add fraud to their force, and craft to their cruelty: these seldome goe sundered; as some write of the asp, he never wanders alone without his companion with him; and as the scripture speaks of those birds of prey and desolation, none of them shall want their mate. Esa. 34. 16. The matter is made the worse, because it is a brother whom they hunt; whether he be so by race, place, or grace, a brother should be better dealt with.

Verse 3. That they may do evill with both hands earnestly] Heb: for good and all, or, for adoe: that they may speak and do evill as they can Ier. 3. 5. and seek to out-sin one another; like unhappy boyes that strive who shall go furthest in the dirt. Nolunt solita peccare, saith Seneca: Et pudet non esse impudentes, saith Austin. Luther testifieth of the Monkes in Germany, that they were so desperately wicked, wicked, ut nihil cogitent quod non idem patrare audent, that they could not devise that wickednesse, which they durst not do.

The Prince asketh ] A beggerly practise for a Prince, but so base they were grown, and so greedy of filthy lucre. The Prince asketh, and, by asking onely, compelleth: for who dare deny him? If some Naboth do, he shall die for it. There is a memorable story of a poor man in Spain, to whom when the Lords Inquisitors sent for some of his pears, which they had cast their eye upon; he for fear of offending, brought them his pears, tree and all by the roots.

and the Judge asketh for a reward ] Heb. The Judge for a reward, sc. will gratifie that sordidum Poscimummum, the Prince: who when he giveth him his Commissions hinteth to him haply, as Nero did to his publike Officers, Scis quid nobis opus est. Thou knowest what I want, and must have: see then that thou help me to it. Such trading there was likewise betwixt our Rich. 2. and Judge Belknap with his fellows. To this purpose, the Chaldee paraphrast here: The Prince, saith He, requireth supplies of the Judge, and this bespeaketh him, Fac pro me, & retribuam tibi; Negotiate for me, and I will be thy pay-master; favour me, help mee at my need, and I will requite thy curtesie, whensoever thou wilt. Thus multi munus scabunt, one hand claws another: and betwixt the oppressive Prince, and unconscionable Judge, the law is slacke, and judgement doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compasse about the righteous: therefore wrong judgement proceedeth, Hab. 1. 4.

and the great man, hee uttereth his mischievous desire ] Heb. he speaketh out the corruption of his soul. He doth it. Emphaticum est pronomen Ipse, saith Calvin. This same He hath a speciall Emphasis in it; q. d. This impudent man being now past all grace (for Illum ego perisse dico, cui perit pudor) boasteth of his villany: and thinks to bear it out bravely, because it is facinus majores abolla, the fact of a great One. But who is this He, this great man in the Text, that dares thus obtrude, and justifie to the world his most malapert misdemeanour? The rich Client, saith Calvin, that hath his money to plead for him: for in suits both of love and of law, money (mostly) maketh mastery: and Angels trouble the current of justice (saith One) at certain seasons. Others understand it of Counsellours, Pleaders, Advocates, Sollicitours, and other Officers of Justice: who when as they ought to reprove the iniquity of the Judges, do rather help it forward, by justifying the wicked for a reward, and taking away the righteousnesse of the righteous from him, Esay 5. 20. by making the law a nose of wax, and by quirks and devices, varnishing falshood and wrong-dealing.

so they wrap it up. ] Contorcuplicant: they wreath their wrong-dealings together, as a rope twisted of many threds, till their iniquity be found to be hatefull: till there wanteth but an hurdle, an horse, and a halter (as Belknap said of himself) to do them right. They make a league together, they joyn and strengthen their evil counsels, and frauds, &c, so Mr. Diodate. These men agree among themselves, and conspire with one consent to do evil: so the Genevists.

Verse 4. The best of them is as a brier ] which a man cannot handle without hurt. See 2 Sam. 23. 6. Psal. 55. 21. and 58. 10. Ezek. 2. 6. Mat. 7. 16. and 13. 7, 22. so, you cannot deal with them without danger: guilt, or grief you shall be sure of. Lot felt it so at Sodom, 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. and so did thoe that set up that bramble Abimelech, for their king, Judg. 9.

• The most upright is sharper then a thorn-hedge ] Ut ibi inveniat ur dolor, ubi sperabatur auxilium, saith Hierom here: so that a man shall have grief, where he hoped for help and succour: as a man that taking hold of a thorn-hedge to get over, hath his fingers prickt by it, and is glad to let go: Or, as a sheep, that flying to the bush for defence in weather, loseth part of her fleece. Now if the best, and most upright among them were no better: what can be imagined of the many? and what better can be hoped for by us (for one egge is not more like another, then these times are those here described: it is but the same fable acted over again, onely every thing is now worse then ever) then a day of visitation, a time of perplexity, as it followeth here? For while they be folden together as thorns, and while they bee drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry, Nah. 1. 10. as fear thorns under the pot, Eccles. 7. 6. I will go thorow these briers, saith God, I will

will burn them together, Esay 27. 4. they shall be utterly burnt with fire in the same place, 2 Sam. 23. 7. that is, in bell, as some interpret it.

The day of thy watch-men, and thy visitation cometh ] Where sinne is in the saddle, punishment will be upon the crupper. God will have a visitation-day: and that for his Watch-men, Prophets, and Governours, as well as for the common sort. Thy visitation cometh, Thou shalt share in punishment with them, as thou hast done in sinne: neither shall it help thee to say, Our Watch-men were in fault: for God will visit you all: and his Visitation-Articles will be very strict and criticall.

Now shall be their perplexity ] They shall be so intricated, and intangled; so ensnared and ensnarled, as that they shall not know which way to turn them. They shall be in as great a distresse as Israel was at the red-sea, Exod. 14. 3. or as the Jews at Shushan were, when the decree was gone out for their utter destruction, Esth. 3. 15. or as Manasseh was, when taken by the Affyrians among the thorns, he was bound with fetters, and carried to Babylon, 2 Chron. 33. 11.

Vers. 5. Trust ye not in a friend ] Friends (said Socrates) there is no friend: And a friend is a changeable creature, saith Another: all in changeable colours as the Peacock, as often changed as moved. Besides, many friends are not more fickle then false, like deep ponds, cleer at the top, and all muddy at the bottome. Fide ergo: sed cui vide. Try before you trust: and when you have tried your utmost, trust not over-farre, lest you cry out at length, as Queen Elizabeth did, In trust I have found treason: or as Julius Cesar, when stabb'd by Brutus among others, What thou my sonne Brutus? He was slain in the Senate-house, with 23. wounds, given (most part) by them whose lives he had preserved.

Put ye not confidence in a guide ] Potenti & pollenti consilio & auxilio. Be he never so potent, or politick, beyond thousand others, as the word importeth: and as the people said to David, But now thou art worth ten thousand of us, 2 Sam. 18. 3. thou art the light of Israel, thou art the breath of our nostrils: so that if thou miscary, we shall all breath out our last. All which notwithstanding, Princes are not to be trusted, Psal. 62. 7. and 118. 8, 9. and 146. 3. for either they may die, or their affections may die; all their golden thoughts may perish. Great mens words, saith One, are like dead mens shooes: hee may go bare-foot that waiteth for them.

Keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom ] from thy wife, thine uxoris, called the wife of thy bosome, because she should be as dear unto thee as the heart in thy bosom. Be not too open-hearted to her, lest she tell all, as Sampsons wife: or as Fulvia in Salust, who declared all the secrets of Cicero, a noble Roman, her foolish lover. A fool telleth all, saith Solomon, Prov. 29. 11. he is as little able to keep, as to give counsel. He is full of chinks, and leaks every way: the doors of his mouth are feldome kept shut: you may know him by his gaping: fools are called by Aristophanes, and Lucian, Καχιδότες, Gapers. But a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards, Prov. 29. 11. Tacitus he holds to be the best Historian: and keeps his mouth with a bridle as David did, Psal. 39. and as the Poets fain of Pegasus, that he had a golden bridle put upon him by Minerva, their goddesse of Wisdome. God and Nature have taught us by the site of the tongue in a mans mouth to take heed to it, and to keep the doors of it: and when all's done, to pray God to keep that door, Psal. 141. 3. The tongue is ever in udo, in a moisture: but yet tied by the roots, that it may not stirre out of place; It is also guarded with a percussis of teeth, and a two-leaved gate of lips, which we must carefully keep, and hold that for an Oracle,

Vers. 6. For the sonne dishonoureth the father ] Or, revileth the father, be Nabals Menabbel. him, beknaves him (of Nabal comes Nebulo) turpitudine afficit bespatles him, vilifieth him. This is monstrous wickednesse, Mal. 1. 6. and a sure signe the devil hath set his limbs in a man that is thus unnaturall, fierce, traiterous, heady, high-minded: which yet is foretold of these dregs of times, these last and worst dayes, both by our Saviour, Mat. 10. 21, 23, 36. and likewise by St. Paul, 2 Tim. 3. 3, 4.

Such a sonne was He, who when his father complained, that never father had so undutifull a child as he had : Yes, said his sonne, (with lesse grace then wit) my grandfather had. Such a sonne was Ham, and Abfalom, and Amida, son of Mu-leasses King of Tunes, who cast his father out of his Kingdom, and put out his eyes: and Henry, eldest sonne to our Henry 2. who rebelled against his father, and died before him of a fever, and a flux, with excoriation of the bowels: And lastly, Adolphus Egmondanus, who imprisoned his own father six yeers, for no other cause but for living so long; and keeping him from the Dukedome of Gelder-land.

Verse 7. Therefore will I look unto the Lord ] Therefore: inasmuch as there is no faith nor fair-dealing amongst men, I will look unto the Lord; look wisely and intently, as a watch-man in his watch-tower doth look as farre as ever he can see on every side. I also will lift up mine eyes unto those hills of heaven, from whence cometh my help, Psal. 121. 1. I will pray and look up, Psal. 5. 3. I will keep close communion with the Lord, and by faith commit the keeping of my soul to him in well-doing, as unto a faithfull Creatour, 1 Pet. 4. 19. This I will do: and yet more then this.

I will wait for the God of my salvation ] If he tarry, I will wait for him: because he will surely come, he will not tarry, Hab. 2. 3. This is the voice of faith: and here is the faith and patience of the Saints. God sometimes lies off and stayes long; even till our eyes even fail with looking for his salvation; and all to try what we will do: as Samuel tried Saul, who because he stayed not out his just time, lost his kingdom. David waited for for the kingdom; and had it not, till he had learned to quiet and behave himself as a child weaned of his mother, Psal. 131. 2. Those in Esther waited for deliverance: and had it not, till almost forsaken of their hopes. I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord, saith dying Jacob: and I will wait for the God of my salvation, saith our Prophet here, for a president to all the good souls of his time. Let us but consider our distance from God in worth and degree; together with our dependance upon him, our undone condition without him, how long he waited for us, how he hath hitherto helped us, as 1 Sam. 7. 12. and now seems to say unto us, as he did once to Peter, What I do, thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter; and we shall be content to wait, as here, and to say,

Jer. 30. 17.

My God will hear me ] According to my faith, and his own faithfulness. The whole force of faith consisteth in this, saith Luther, Ut quis bene applicet pronominam, that a man will apply pronounes: that he can fiducially say, My God: and, will hear me. Were it not for this word of possession, mine, the devil might say the Creed to as good purpose as we. He beleeveth there is a God, and a Christ, and such a Christ, as is there described: but that which torments him is, he can say my, to never an Article of the Faith. Time was, when Christ heard the devil begging that he might enter into the swine: but he could not say, My God hath heard me. Let us secure our interest in God: let us individuate Christ, and appropriate him to our selves, by a particular faith, and then all shall be well with us.

Verse 8. Rejoyce not against me, O mine enemy ] Here's the triumph of faith, in the fail of outward comforts, in the midst of the worlds insultations and irritations. Ne lateris de me. O daughter of Babylon that art to be destroyed, thou that art victrix gentium, captiva visiorum (as Austin said of Rome in her pride) thou that for present carriest the ball upon the foot, and none can come neer thee: Rejoyce not against me, as forlorn and hopelesse: say not, This is Zion the outcast, whom no man seeketh after. For assure thy self, The right hand of the Lord will change all this, and

When I fall, I shall arise] Because fall I never so low, I cannot fall below the supporting hand of God, which will help me up againe Psa. 37. 24. The wicked fall and never rise Am. 8. 14. they shall drink of the cup of Gods wrath, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more Jer. 25. 27. their carcasses shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handfull after the harvest-man, and none shall gather them Jer. 9. 22. This is fearfull. If Haman fall before Mordecai the Jew, he shall not easily stop, or step back. Esth. 6. 13. A Jew may fall before a Persian and get up and prevaile. But if a Persian or other persecutor begin to fall before a Jew, he can neither stay, nor rise. There is an invisable hand of Omnipotency that strikes in for his own, and confounds their opposites.

When I sit in darknesse, the Lord shall be a light unto me] He can lighten the greatest darknesse: as he did the dungeons to the Martyrs. From the delectable Orchard of the Leonine dungeon: to Algerius an Italian Martyr dated his heavenly Epistle. I am now in the Bishop of Londons Cole-house (saith Mr. Philpot) a dark and ugly prison as any is about London: but my dark body of sin hath well deserved the same: and the Lord now hath brought me into outer darknesse, that I might be the more lightened by him: as he is most present with his children in the midst of darknesse. And in his letter to the Lady Vane, I thank the Lord, saith He, I am not alone, but have six other faithfull companions, who in our darknesse do cheerfully sing hymnes and praises to God for his great goodnesse. We are so joyfull, that I wish you part of my joy &c. The poy of the city of Geneva stamped round about their money was formerly out of Iob, Post tenebras spero lucem, After darknesse I look for light. But, the Reformation once settled amongst them, they changed it into Post tenebras lux. Light after darknesse. Like as the Saxon Princes, before they became Christians, gave for their armes a black horse; but being once baptized, a white.

Verse 9. I will beare the Indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him] The Church had sinned, and God was angry with her. So Zech. 1. 12. Esay 57. 17. What meane then the Antinomians to tell us that God is never angry with his people, for their foule and flagitious practises, no nor with a fatherly anger? nor chastiseth them for the same, no nor, so much as with a fatherly chastisement? Is not this? contra Solem mingere? Godlinesse is on target against affliction. Blind Nature saw this.

Onely it helps to patient the heart under affliction by considering 1. That it is the Lord. 2. That, a man suffers for his sin; as the penitent thief also confessed Luk. 23. 41. 3. That the rod of the wicked shall not lie long upon the lot of the righteous. τὸ μῦθον μὲνεν. Say we then, every one with David, I know that thy judgments are right, and thou hast afflicted me justly, Psal. 119. 75. yea in very faithfulness hast thou done it, that thou mightest be true to my soule. And with that Noble Du-pleffy, who when he had lost his onely son, a gentleman of great hopes (which was the breaking of his mothers heart) quieted himself with these words of David, I was silent and said no word, because thou Lord diddest it. See my Love-tokens pag. 145. 146. &c. It shall be our wisdome in affliction to look to God, and to reflect upon our sins, taking his part against our selves: as a Physician observes which way nature workes, and helps it.

until he plead my cause] As a faithfull Patron, and powerfull Avenger: for though it be just in God that I suffer, yet it is unjust in mine enemies, who shall shortly be soundly paid for their insolencies, and cruelties.

he will bring me forth to the light] He will discloud these gloomy dayes, and in his light I shall see light.

I shall behold his righteousness] that is, his faithfulness in fulfilling his Promise of deliverance in due time. Meane-while I will live upon reverfions, live by faith and think to make a good living of it too. All the wayes of God to his people are mercy and truth Psa. 25. 10. this is a soul-satisfying place of scripture indeed. All the passages of his providence to them, are not onely mercy but truth and righteousness: they come to them in a way of a promise: and by vertue of the Covenant, wherein God hath made himself a voluntary debtor to them, 1 Joh. 1. 9.

Verse 10. Then she that is mine enemy shall see it &c. ] Not onely shall I behold his righteousness (as before) but mine enemy shall see it, and feel it too, to her small comfort. They shall see it when 'tis too late to remedy it: as they say, the Mole never opens her eyes, till pangs of death are upon her.

And shame shall cover her, ] when she shall see that thou hast shewed me a token for good; that thou hast holpen me, and comforted me, Psal. 86. 17.

Which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? ] So laying her religion in her dish, whereby God became interested in her cause, and concerned in point of honor, to appear for her. The Church is no lesse beholden to her enemies insolencies for help, then to her own devotions: for God will right himself, and her together. See Joel. 2. 17. with the Note.

Mine eyes shall behold her ] and feed upon her misery, not as mine enemy, but as Gods: nor out of private revenge, but out of zeal for his glory.

Now shall she be trodden down, as the myre of the streets ] Erit infra omnes infimos: she shall be as mean as may be. Nineveh that great city, is now a little town of small trade; Babylon is nothing else but a sepulture of her self. Those four Monarchies that so heavily oppressed the Church, are now laid in the dust, and live by fame onely: so shall the Romish Hierarchie, and Turkish Empire. All Christs enemies shall shortly be in that place that is fittest for them; sc. under his feet, as was before noted: he will dung his Church with the carcasses of all those wilde boars, and buls of Bashan, that have trod it down.

Verse 11. In the day that thy walls are to be built ] In the type, by Nehemiah, chap. 3. who did the work with all his might: and having a ready heart, made riddance, and good dispatch of it. In the truth, and spiritually, when the Gospel was to be preached to every creature, and a Church collected of Jews and Gentiles. The Church is in the Canticles said to be a garden enclosed: such as hath a wall about it, and a well within it, Cant. 4. 12. See the Note there. God will be favourable in his good pleasure unto Zion, and build the walls of Jerusalem. His spirit also will set up a standard, in his Saints, against strong corruptions and temptations: and make them more then conquerours, even Triumphers, Esa. 59. 19. Rom. 8. 37. 2 Cor. 2. 14.

In that day shall the decree be farre removed ] That decree of the Babylonians, forbidding the building of the Temple and City, shall be reversed: and those statutes that were not good, (given them by Gods permission, because they had despised his statutes, Ezek. 20. 24, 25.) shall be annulled, and removed farre away. Some read it, In that day shall the decree go farre abroad, and interpret it, by Psal. 2. 7, 8. of the doctrine of the Gospel.

Verse 12. In that day also he shall come even to thee from Assyria ] To thee, Jerusalem, in the Type, shall recourse be had from all parts, as if thou wert the chief city of the world. (Pliny saith, that in his time she was the most famous of all the cities of the East: and Titus himself is said to have wept at the last destruction of it by his souldiers, whom he could not restrain from firing the Temple) To the new Jerusalem, the Church of the New Testament, in the Antitype: from whence the Gospel was sent out to every creature which is under heaven, Col. 1. 23. and whereunto people of all sorts flowed, and many nations came, Mic. 4. 1, 2. with highest acclamations, most vigorous affections, and utmost indeavours bestowing themselves upon the Lord Christ, Act. 2. 9. &c. Jerusalem, in the Hebrew tongue, is of the dual number; in regard of the two parts of the city, the upper and the nether town. Or, (as the Cabalists give the reason) in regard of a twofold Jerusalem, the heavenly and the earthly: and the taking away of the earthly, they say, was signified, by the taking away of the letter jod out of Jerusalajim, 2 Sam. 5. 13. But Jerusalem which is above is free, firme, and full; the desolate (once so) having many more children then she that hath an husband, Gal. 4. 26, 27. whom the Lord of Hosts also doth blesse, saying, (as a Father to them all) Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance, Esa. 19. 23, 24, 25.

land, yea of the world (Psal. 89. 12. Tabor and Hermon are put for the East and West parts of the World) shall people come in to the New Jerusalem, which hath twelve gates: On the East three gates, on the North three gates, on the South three gates, and on the West three gates, Rev. 21. 12, 13. See the Note there.

Verse 13. Notwithstanding the land shall be desolate] Understand it, not of the land of Caldea, as A lapide doth; but of Judea, which must be desolated before the coming of Christ in the flesh. And this is here foretold. 1. Left the impenitent, by misapplying the former promises, should dream of impunity, (saeculi laritia est impunita nequitia) and 2. Left the godly, because of this desolation shortly to ensue, should despair of the former promises.

Because of them that dwell therein, for the fruit of their doings] What their doings were, and what the fruit thereof, see Ier. 9. 3, 4, 5, &c. & 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. This Prophet could not but tell them of both, though hee had small thank for his love and labour: even as little as Moses had of that perverse people in the wilderness. His service among the Jews was in some sense like that of Manlius Torquatus among the Romans: who gave it over, saying Neither can I bear their manners, nor they my government. Jeremy once thought to have done so, chap. 20. 9. but might not. He lived to see this prophecy of Micah fulfilled: and was afterwards carried down to Egypt by his ungratefull countrymen; where also (for a reward of his 41. years unceasing pains in the Ministry as a Prophet) they stoned him to death, who had been a brazen wall to his country, ejusque commodis adaugendis natus, and a common blessing.

Verse 14. Feed thy people with thy rod] Rule them with thy Scepter, or feed them with thy pedum pastorale, thy shepherds-rod, or staffe, Psal. 23. 4. This, say some, is the speech of God the Father, to God the Son. Or, (as others) of God to the Ministers and Pastours, charging them to take heed to his flock, and to feed his Church. But it seemeth rather to be a prayer of the Christian Church (seeing the ruine of the Jewish Synagogue) that Christ (the chief Shepherd) would do all good offices for his poor people, feeding them with his rod, that is, with his word and Spirit, guiding them with his eye, Psal. 32. 8. leading them in the way everlasting, Psal. 139. 24. left, seduced by their own lusts, or other mens evil lives, they should any way miscarry.

the flock of thine heritage] Those poor of the flock, Zach. 11. 7. that hear his voice and follow him, John 10. 3, 4, 5, 27. being holy, harmlesse, tractable, sociable, patient, profitable as sheep; which have wooll for raiment, skin for parchment, flesh for meat, guts for musick, &c. Such shall go in and out, and find pasture, Joh. 10. 9. pasture that will breed life, and life in more abundance, verse 10. See Psal. 23. 1, 2, 3, &c. Davids Pastorall: where he assureth himself, as a sheep of Christs heritage, that hee shall have all things needfull for life and godlinesse: And so may every poor Christian, grounding his faith upon the Covenant, Ezekiel 34. 25, 28.

Which dwelleth solitarily in the wood] Sleepeth in the woods, Ezek. 34. 25. where they meet with many a brush, yea many a bruise, verse 28. where they walk in dark and dangerous paths, even in the valley of the shadow of death, Psal. 23. 4. of the darkest side of death, of death in its most horrid and hideous representations. Feed them therefore; fence them with thine omnipotent arm, bear them in thy bosom, see to their safety.

Let them feed in Bashan and Gilead] Not bite upon the bare ground, but feed pleasantly, plentifully: feed among the lillies, frequent also the foddering places, turn to the under-shepherds, the Ministers, and so return to the Arch-shepherd and Bishop of their souls, following the Lamb wheresoever he goeth; who will teach them many things, and that out of deepest compassion, Mar. 6. 34. who will also shew them great and mighty things, that they knew not, Ier. 33. 3.

as in the dayes of old] As thou wast with the Church of the Old Testament, so be not wanting to that of the New: but feed them according to the integrity of thine heart, and guide them by the skilfulnesse of thine hands, Psal. 78. 72. Pull them out of the Lions mouth, seek them up when lost, tend them, handle them, heal them, wash them, drive them as they can go, beating the lambs in thy bosom, Esay 40. Do for them, as thou hast ever done for thy people in former ages. So we thy people, and sheep of thy pasture will give thee thanks for ever : we will shew forth thy praise to all generations Psa. 79. 13.

Verse 15. According to the dayes of thy coming out of the land of Egypt ] Here's a present and full answer to the churches prayer : so ready is the Lord to fulfill the desires of the righteous. It is but Ask and Have : and they are worthily miserable, that will not make themselves happy by asking. The summ of Christs answer is this : As I led Joseph like a flock out of Egypt thorough the wilderness ; and fed them there daily and daintily, with Angels food ( never was Prince so served in his greatest pomp ) so will I shew thee marvelous things at Babylon, and bring thee thence with a mighty hand Ezek. 20. 34. to make mee a glorious Name Esa. 63. 14. and both these deliverances shall be a most certaine type of thy spirituall redemption by Christ. Loe thus will I do for thee as in the dayes of old ver. 14. and so fit mine answer ad cardinem desiderij, give thee not only the desire of thine heart, but the request of thy lipps Psa. 21. 2. let it be to thee even as thou wilt Mat. 15. 29.

Verse 16. The nations shall see and be confounded ] Considering how I have defeated and befooled them ; how I have made all their might to melt, and moulder ; they shall stand amazed, and be made a common table-talk : as Belshazzar and the Babylonians were, when Cyrus ( Gods servant ) suddainly brake in upon them and surprized their city, which they held insuperable : and as the Heathen Emperours of Rome were, when the Christians, under the conduct of Constantine, carried it against them.

they shall lay their hand upon their mouth ] Be struck dumb, as if they had seen Medusa's head : they shall not be able to contradict the Gospell, or to hinder the progresse of it. Valens the Arrian Emperour coming upon Basil, while he was in holy duties, with an intent to do him hurt, was not only silenced, but so terrified, that he reeled and had fallen, had he not been upheld by those that were with him.

their eares shall be deaf ] With the sudden bursting forth of Gods wonderfull and terrible works, saith Mr. Diodate.

Verse 17. They shall lick the dust like a serpent ] that is, be reduced not only to extreme hunger and penury, but to utmost vility and baseness of condition, so as to lick the very dust. And whereas it is added like a serpent, he puts them in mind of that old malediction Gen. 3. and gives them to know, that as, like that old serpent, they have lifted themselves up against God, so will God cast them down again to the condition of serpents, and abase them to the very dust. See Psa. 22. 30 and 72. 9. Es. 49. 23.

they shall move out of their holes like wormes ( or creeping things ) of the earth ] They shall tumultuate, and be all on an huddle, as ants are when their molehill is thrown up with a spade. The Hebrew word imports great commotion and bustle.

they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall feare because of thee ] O God, or O Church, terrible as an army with banners, Impiety triumpheth in prosperity, trembleth in adversity : and contrarily, saith holy Greenham Since the fall, we tremble before God, Angels, and good men. What have I to do with thee, thou man of God ( said She ) Art thou come to call to mind my sin and to kill my son ? At the siege of Mountabove in France, the people of God within the wals, ever before a sally sang a Psalmé : with which holy practise of theirs, the enemy coming acquainted, when they heard them singing would so quake and tremble, crying they come, they come, as though the wrath of God had been breaking out upon them.

Verse 18. Who is a God like unto thee ? ] No God surely ( whether so reputed or deputed : whether heathen deities, heavenly Angels, or earthly Rulers ) can compare with our God, or come neare him, for pardoning of sin. Indeed none can do it at all but He ; as the blind Pharisees saw and could say. Men may pardon the trespass, but God alone the transgression. But say, they could do something that way : yet nothing like our God : who maketh his power appear to be great Num. 14. 17 in pardoning such offences as no God or man besides would pardon. See Ier. 3. 1. Neb. 9. 31. he forgiveth iniquity, transgression and sin Exod. 34. 6, 7, that is, all sorts of sins, to all sorts of sinners without exception, tion, Mat. 12. 31. This is the expresse letter of Gods covenant, which we ought not either to obliterate, or to interline; but to beleve it in the full latitude and extent. We are apt to cast Gods pardoning-grace into a mould of our own; and to measure it by our modell. But against this we are cautioned Isai. 55. 8. God must be magnified in our thoughts, his quarters there enlarged, high and honourable conceptions are to be had of him: or else we wrong him no lesse then we should do a King, by respecting and receiving him no otherwise then we would do another ordinary man. He is set forth here, as a God imparallell, and that not without an interrogation of admiration, O I who is a God like unto thee? Thy mercy is matchlesse, thy grace aboundeth even to an overflow. 1 Tim. 1. 14. it is more then exceeding, it hath a superpleonasm, saith the Apostle there. Surely as the Sea swallowes up hugest rocks, and as the Sun scattereth greatest mists: so doth He pardon enormities as well as infirmities, and blotteth out the thick cloud as well as the cloud Isa. 44. 22. His mercy rejoiceth against, or glorieth over judgment: and is ready to say of a great sinner indeed

Jam. 2:

— Iam dignus vindice nodus:

The more desperate the disease is, the greater glory redoundeth to him that cureth it. Our Saviour gat him a glorious name by curing incurable diseases: and gained greatest love by frankly forgiving Mary Magdalens and others sins, which were many and mighty, or bony as the Prophets word signifies Amos 5. 12. Adams Apostacie, Noahs drunkenesse, Lots incest, Dauids blood-guiltinesse, Manassehs idolatry and witch-craft, Peters thrice denying and abjuring his master, Pauls blasphemy and persecution: All these sins and blasphemies have been forgiven to the sons of men: neither can they commit more then he both can and will remie to the penitent. Note this against Novatus that proud heretick: and strive against that naturall Novatianisme, that is in the timorous conscience of convinced sinners, to doubt and question pardon for sins of Apostasie, and falling after repentance, and to say as those Unbelievers of old, Can the Lord prepare a table for us in the wilderness? So, Can he forgive such and such iniquities so oft reiterated? This is a question, no question: what cannot our God do in this kind, who pardoneth sin naturally Exod. 34. 6. ( and therefore freely as the Sun shineth, or as the Fountaine casteth out waters ) who doth it also abundantly Isai. 55. 7. multiplying pardons as fast as we multiply sins: and lastly, Constantly, Psal. 130. 4. Iob. 1. 27. Zach. 13. 1. It is his perpetuall act: and it should be as a perpetual picture in our hearts. We should go on our way toward heaven, as Sampson did toward his parents, feeding on this hony-comb.

Luk. 7. 42, 47:

[that pardoneth iniquity] Heb: that taketh away, sheere away, non ne sit, sed ne obfit, not sin it self, but the guilt of it; the damning and domineering power of it: this David calleth the iniquity of his sin: and saith that this God forgave him Psal. 32. 5. pronouncing himself and all such happy as are so dealt with verse 1. 2.

and passeth by the transgression] Heb: Passeth over it, taketh no notice of it, as a man in a deep muse, or as one that hath hast of businessse, seeth not things afore him: his mind being upon another matter, he neglects all else besides that. As David when he saw in Mephibosheth the feature of his friend Jonathan, took no notice of his lamenessse, or any other defect or deformity: so God beholding in his people the image of his son, winks at all faults, that he might soon find in them. That which Cicero said flatteringly of Caesar, is truly affirmed of God, Nihil obli-visci solet prater injurias, He forgetteth nothing but the wrongs that are daily done him by his; and as it is said of our Henry 6. that he was of that happy memory, that he never forgot any thing but injury &c. so here.

[of the remnant of his heritage] Not of all, but of those poor few that confesse and forsake their sins Pro. 28. 13. and in whose spirit there is no guile Psa. 32. 2. that are mortified persons Rom. 11. 26. with Esay 59. 20. It is a priviledge proper to the Communion of Saints.

he retaineth not his anger for ever] Angry he may be, and smite in his anger Esay 57. 17. yea he may take vengeance of the inventions of those whom he hath pardoned, Psal. 99. 8. temporall vengeance I mean: but it soon repenteth him concerning his servants; and a little punishment serveth turn for a great offence, Jer. 31. 19, 20, 21. David, no sooner said, I have sinned, but he heard, The Lord hath taken away thy sin, 2 Sam. 12.

because he delighteth in mercy] And hence he pardoneth iniquity of free-grace, ex mero motu, out of his pure and unexcited love, out of his Philanthropy, and undeserved favour, the sole impulsive cause of pardon. What a man delighteth to do, he will do howsoever. If the Sun delight to run his race, who shall stop him? If God so delight in mercy, that he will save for his Names sake, and come in with his Non obstante, as he doth, Psal. 106. 8. who, or what shall hinder him?

Verse 19. He will turne again, he will have compassion upon us] Here's the pith and power of faith, particularly applying promises to a mans self. Say that sin hath separated betwixt us and our God, Esay 59. 2. and made him send us farre away into captivity: yet he will turn again and yern toward us, he will turn again our captivity as the streams in the South. His compassions are more then fatherly, Psal. 103. 13. motherly, Esay 49. 15. brotherly, Heb. 2. 12. This the Church knows, and therefore cries after him, Make hast my beloved; and be thou like to a Roe, or to a young Hart, which when it fleeth, looketh behind it, saith the Chaldee Paraphrast there. And this that he will do, she is bold to beleieve. He will, he will, and that to us, saith the Prophet here. Lo this is that work of faith, to wrap it self in the promises, as made to us in particular, 1 Tim. 1. 15. and unlesse faith be on this sort actuated, it is, as to comfort, as good as no faith. Compare Mat. 8. 26. with Mark 4. 40.

He will subdue our iniquities] By force and violence (as the word signifieth) subjugabit, pessundabit, conculcabit. Sin is sturdy, and will rebell, where it cannot reigne. It hath a strong heart, and will not easily yeeld. But yeeld it shall, for God will subdue it. And this is a further favour, (as every former is a pledge of a future) To pardon of sinne, God will adde power against sinne: to justification by Christs merit, sanctification by his Spirit: he will let out the life-blood of sin, and lay it adying at our feet: he will tread Satan with all his black train under our feet shortly, Rom. 16. 20. He will not onely turn us againe, but turne his hand upon us, and purely purge away our drosse, and take away all our sinne, Esay 1. 25. In fine, hee will so mortifie the deeds of the body by his Spirit, that sinne shall not have dominion over us, Rom. 6. 14. shall not play Rex in us: the traveller shall not become the man of the house, as Nathans parable speaketh.

And thou wilt cast all their finnes into the bottom of the sea] Where-hence they shall never be boyed up again. This, the Prophet by an insinuating Apostrophe, turneth himself to God, and speaketh with much confidence. Such is the nature of true faith, sc. to grow upon God, and, as I may so say, to encroach: as Moses did, Exod. 33. 12, 13, &c. to chap. 34. 10. and as David did, 1 Chron. 17. 23. &c. See how he improves Gods promise, and works upon it, ver. 24, 25. he goes it over again, and yet still encroacheth: and the effect was good, chap. 18. We hinder our selves of much happinesse by a sinfull shamefacednesse. Let us come boldly to the throne of grace; so shall we see our sins, as Israel did the Egyptians dead on the shore.

Verse 20. Thou wilt performe the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham] Heb. Thou wilt give: for all is of free gift. His love moved God to promise, his truth binds him to performe, 2 Sam. 7. 18, 21. For thy words sake, and according to thine own heart hast thou done all these things. Having made himself a voluntary debter to his people, he will come off fairly with them: and not bee worse then his word, but better. Hence Rev. 10. 1. Christ is said to have a rainbowe upon his head: to shew that he is faithfull and constant in his promises, and that tempests should blow over, the skie be cleared. For this is as the waters of Noah unto mee, saith the Lord: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth: so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. For the mountains shall depart, &c. Esay 54. 9, 10. God hath hitherto kept promise promise with nights and dayes, Ier. 33. 20, 25. that one shall succeed the other: therefore much more will he keep promise with his people.

Cant. 8. 14.

Heb. 4. ult.

which thou hast sworn unto our fathers. And, in them, to us, by vertue of the covenant. So he spake with us, when he spake with Jacob at Bethel, Hos. 12. 4. and that the promises sworn to the Fathers of the old Testament, belong also to us of the New. See Luke 1. 55, 73, 74. Now, that God swore at any time to them, or us, hee did it for our sakes doubtlesse: that by two innumerable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation: who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us, Heb. 6. 17, 18. See the Note there.

Verſe I.

THE burden of Nineveh ] i. e. The burdenous propheſie. See the Note on Malac. 1.1. It is a burden to wicked men to be told of their finnes, and foretold of their puniſhments. To whom we may not unfitly apply that of the Civilian, Perquam durum eſt, ſed ita lex ſcripta eſt. If it be ſo tedious to hear of it, what will they do to bear it? Nineveh had fair warning before by Jonah; and for preſent, the unclean ſpirit ſeemed to be caſt out of her: but he returned ſoon after, with ſeven worſe, as appears by this Propheſie; and ſo their laſt ſtate was worſe then the former, Mat. 12. 45. Their bile half-healed, breaking out again, proved to be the plague of leproſie, Lev. 13. 18, 19, 20. ſuch as ſhut them out of heaven. God will do good to thoſe that are good, and continue ſo. But as for thoſe that turn aſide unto their crooked wayes, (as all Apoſtates do) the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity, (as cattle are led to the ſlaughter, or malefactours to execution) but peace ſhall be upon Israel, Pſal. 125. 5.

The book of the Viſion] Or the Epistle of the Viſion. Hence ſome collect, that Nahum went not to Nineveh as Jonah had done; but ſent this propheticall Epistle thither, to let them know what ſhould ſhortly befall them. So Jeremy ſent an Epistle to Babylon, chap. 29. and Elijah wrote a threatening letter to Iehoram king of Judah, 2 Chron. 21. 12. before his tranſlation to heaven; and left it to be ſent to him by Eliſha, or the other Prophets, who durſt not ſhew themſelves in his preſence; ſuch was his inſolent cruelty, as 'tis conceived.

of Nahum the Elkoshite] Elkoſh was a ſmall town in Galilee beyond Beſhabara, as ſay Hierom and Dorotheus. Here was our Prophet born, and named N. hum, non ſine numine, ſaith Gualther; for Nahum (as Noah) ſignifieth a Comforter: and ſo so he proved, by this Book of his, both to the ten Tribes now newly carried captive by the Assyrian Monarch; and also to the other two Tribes, who were shortly after besieged by the same Assyrian, in the reign of Hezekiah; under whom Nahum prophesied. See the Note on Exod. 3. 1.

and the Lord revengeth, the Lord revengeth ] As he is Pater miserationum, to his people, a father of mercies, and God of consolation: so to his and their enemies he is a most sure and severe revenger, Dens ultionum, as David calleth him, Psal. 94. 1. A God of recompenses, as Jeremy, chap. 51. 56. And when He comes against a people, he usually takes them to do, when they are at the strongest, and most confident: as Nineveh now was, in the dayes of proud Sennacherib.

and is furious ] Heb. and is Master of hot wrath: he is all on a light fire, as it were, with fierce indignation against the enemies of his Church: Yet not so, but that he is Master of his anger too; and doth nothing in it, but what is just and equall. Hence the vials of his wrath are said to be golden vials, Rev. 15. 7. his anger is holy, his fire is pure, and without smoak. And this is further declared in the following words.

The Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries ] Such as seek to thrust him beside his throne, that oppose his worship, contemn his word, persecute his people, send proud messages after him, saying, We will not have this man to reigne over us: Bring hither those mine enemies, saith He, and slay them before me, Luk. 19. 27. As for such as sin of infirmity, and return to him by repentance, they shall not find him furious, but gracious, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies ] Their preservation for a time, is but a reservation to that wrath to come. As hee precipitateth not his anger, but defers the execution of it, giving men space to repent, as he did Jezebel, Rev. 2. so they shall find that his forbearance is no quittance; and that

Vers. 3. The Lord is slow to anger ] Slack he is not, as some men count slacknesse, saith St. Peter, but long-suffering to us-ward, &c. 2 Epist. 3. 9. The devil stirred up the Heathen Poets, to perswade people, that God either knew not, or cared not what was done here below: that he was oft from home, feasting with the Ethiopi-ans, &c. The Epicures also taught the like doctrine: and the Sadduces among the Jews, the Manichees among the primitive Christians, the Libertines amongst us. But they shall one day find that God is slow, but sure; that the higher he lifteth his hand, the harder he will strike; the further he draweth his bowe, the deeper will be the wound.

and great in power ] Heb. Great of power, able to knock down sinners in the very act of their rebellion, and to send them packing to their place in hell. So that it is not for want of power that he is so patient. For the Lord our God is God of gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, Deut. 10. 17. But what need we go further then the Text, where he is called, the strong God, great in power, And that will not at all acquit the wicked. ] This is the last letter in his name (that roman majestativum, as Tertullian calleth it,) Exod. 34. 7. which he will in no wise forget: as neither must we. He will not take the wicked by the hand, saith Job, nor wink at the workers of iniquity, saith David, Psal. 50. 21. but will render a just recompence to every transgression and disobedience, saith Paul, Heb. 2. 2. A God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he, Deut. 32. 4.

Job 8. 20.

the Lord hath his way in the whirlwind, and in the storm ] The word Sophab here rendred whirlwind, begins with a small Samech, ad minnendum timorem piis, ne propterea terreantur, to take off the Saints from their inordinate fears, and to assure the wicked, that when the Lord cometh, imminet inde Soph finis & exitium: there shall be an end of them, and an utter destruction. As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more: but the righteous is an everlasting foundation, Prov. 10. 25. Or, as some read it, The righteous is the foundation of the world, as firm as the worlds foundation, sc. the earth, which is unmoveable.

and the clouds are the dust of his feet ] He walketh upon them as men do upon the dust of the earth: he maketh the clouds his charer, and rideth upon the wings of the wind, wind Psal. 104. 3. See Isa. 60. 8. and 19. 1. The wickeds happinesse shall take its end surely and swiftly, as Ezekiel tells them in his seventh chapter, An end is come, is come, is come.

TATHON.

Ver. 4. He rebuketh the sea and maketh it dry] He had shewed what wonders God can do in the ayre. Now he telleth, what he doeth in the water, and in the earth. And it is well observed by an Interpreter, that when the Prophets speak of God, they do for most part imitate the expressions of Moses that most severe law-giver, and allude to his history; to shew, that by the law is the knowledge of sin, Rom. 3. 20. without which the stony hearts of men melt not, that the promise of the gospell may relish sweetly with them Psal. 19. 10, 11. The word here rendreth He rebuketh importeth, that God rateth and rattleth the Sea verborum pedumque strepitum with such a voice and other noise, as causeth fright and flight. The Sea saw it and fled, Jordan was driven back, what ailed thee, O thou Sea that thou fleddest &c. Psal. 114. 3, 5. The waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee, they were afraid; the depths also were troubled Psal. 77. 16. See Exod. 14. 21. Psal. 78. 14. and 66. 6. and 136. 16. and 106. 9. This is not in the power of any man to do; though Xerxes vainely attempted something, when he waisted two millions of men over the Hellefont, and, for battering his bridge of boates, caused it to be beaten with 300. stripes, and cast a pair of fetters into it, to make it his prisoner. But to how small purpose all this, together with his digging through Isthmus, his drinking up rivers with his army and the like, it well appeared, when he was forced to fly back out of Greece in a poor fishers boat, which being overburdened had sunk all, if the Persians by the casting away themselves, had not saved the life of their king. The story of Canutus the Dane, (sometimes king of England) is well known. He was told by a Court-Parasite that all things in his dominions were at his beck and command. Canutus (to confute him) caused a chair to be set on the sea-shore; wherein being set, he said to the sea flowing fast toward him. Thou belongest to me, and the land upon which I now sit is mine own, neither is there any whosoever that obeyes me nor shall escape unpunished. I command thee therefore thou sea, that thou come up no higher into my land; nor presumest once to wet thy masters legs or garments. But the Sea, keeping his ordinary course, without duty or reverence waisted both his legs and gown. He then leaping back said, Let all the inhabitants of the world know, that the power of kings is frivolous and vaine; neither is there any mortall man worthy the name of a king, but he to whose beck heaven, earth and sea by his lawes, eternally are obedient. Neither did Canutus after this time weare a crown; but set it upon the Crucifix according to the superstition of those times; thereby acknowledging it to be a royalty proper to Christ alone to rebuke the surges of the sea, and to say unto them Peace, and be still, Luk. 4. 24. Mar. 4. 39.

Men: Hunting-

and drieth up all the rivers] As he did Jordan Ios. 4. 2 King. 2. Chereth 1 King. 17. 7. the great river Euphrates Rev. 16. 12. See the Note there. See also Plin. nat. hist. 1. 2. cap. 85. and 103.

Bashan languisheth and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth] all the beauty of those fertile and pleasant places fadeth. When the earth beareth fruit and flowers, she is said to yield her strength, to bring forth her increase: as when through drought or otherwise she doth not, she is said to languish and hang the head. See Isa. 1. 10. 12. If the Eclipse of the Sun cause a drooping in the whole frame of nature, how much more the wrath and vengeance of God?

Alsted. Chronol.

Ver. 5. The mountaines quake at him, and the hills melt] Though vallies and low places are also liable to earthquakes: as Antioch often, Ferrara in Italy An. Dom. 1514. and 1573. yet hill-countreys much more; because there are more holes and cavernes. See Psal. 29. 6. and 144. 4. Zach. 14. 4, 5. In the yeere 1618. Aug. 25. Pleurs a town in Rhetia was overwhelmed by a hill, which, with a most swift motion oppressed 1500. men. So that village aforementioned in the country of Bern, that was over-covered by a hill in an earthquake: to the destruction of 50. families. All this and that which followeth is alledged here, to shew how easily God can overturn the Assyrian greatnesse.

and the earth is burnt at his presence] Viz. by his fire from heaven, as Sodom, and

and by other his land-desolating judgments, such as Judea (that once fertile, now barren country) Greece, Asia (once so flourishing) Germany, Ireland &c. do at this day grone under. God turneth a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein. Psal. 107. 34.

yea the world and all that dwell therein Qua quidem sunt mira, sed tamen vera divina potentia effecta. Wicked men, besides what they here suffer, shall one day give an account of what they have done in the body, with the world all on a light fire about their ears: The trial of their workes shall be by fire 1 Cor. 3. 13. the tribunal of fire Ezek. 1. 27. the Judge a consuming fire Heb. 12. 29. His attendants Seraphims flaming creatures Isai. 6. 2. his pleading with sinners in flames of fire 2 Thess. 1. 7. the place of punishment, a lake of fire fed with tormenting temper Isai. 30. 33. Sodoms fire and brimstone was but a toy to it. And shall the Ninivites think to smother up themselves against this formidable fire: which the most solid parts of the world cannot avoid or abide?

Ver. 6. What can stand before his indignation? A glasse bottle may as well stand before a cannon-shot. There is no standing before a sin, much lesse before a devouring fire, least of all before an angry God. When our Saviour did but put forth a beame of his Deity, and said I am he, the stout souldiers fell to the ground Ioh. 18. 6. and there they had laine, if he had not licensed them to rise againe. Quid autem iudicaturus faciet, qui iudicandus hoc fecit? The wicked shall not stand in judgment, saith David Psal. 1. 7.

Who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? Heb. in the inflammation of his nostrils. Thus the Prophet describeth Gods terrible executions of justice on the Churches enemies, pulcherrimis metaphoris, hypotyposis evidentissimis, & distributionis artificio insignissimo by most elegant Metaphors, evident demonstrations, and artificial distributions.

his fury is poured out like fire A metaphor either from metalls melted, or from shewes of raine, such as God poured down upon Sodom (whereunto probably the Prophet here alludeth, as verse 8. to Noahs flood) flaming showers Jer. 7. 20. and 44. 6.

and the rocks are thrown down by him that is, by his fierce wrath, when it is at the full height: as the fire which at first burns a little within, upon a few boards and rafters; but when it prevaleth, bursteth out in a most terrible flame: as thunder which we heare at first, a little roaring noise afart off: but stay awhile, and it is a dreadfull crack, cleaving the very rocks. See Ier. 4. 23, 24. Mat. 27. 51.

Verse 7. The Lord is good To Israel (though terrible to the Assyrians as hath been plainly and plentifully set forth) to the pure in heart Psal. 73. 1. and he doth good Psal. 119. 68. to those that are good, that are upright in their hearts Psal. 125. 4. These shall tast and see that the Lord is good: these shall feelingly say, Oh blessed is the man that trusteth in him, Psal. 34. 8. Oh praise the Lord for he is good &c.

a strong hold in the day of trouble Prasidium, aut fortalitium, A strong fort or fortification, better then a tower of brasse, or town of warr: the righteous run thereunto and are safe. Hezekiah (for whose sake this is spoken) had the experience of it. He had a day of trouble and of rebuke, and of blasphemy: the children were come to the birth, and there was not strength to bring forth Esai. 37. 3. To God therefore he runs in this dolefull day of his, and had present help. And what though the Gods of the nations had not delivered them: yet Hezekiah's God in whom he trusted did not deceive him as Senacherib said he would ver. 10. 12. He is the champion of his church, and will be the strong hold of his people, when the heathens Tutelar Gods, and the Papists Patrone-saints will leave them in the lurch. England was sometime said to have a war-like George, but the Papists being offended with us (to do us, as they suppose, a mischief) have robbed us of our George, and left us God alone to be our Champion: for which honour and favour all true English hearts are bound to thank them, and can merrily sing as He did once, Contemno minutulos istos deos, modo Jovem propitium habeam, We care not for their He-saints, or She-saints to shelter us: so that the great God will be good to us, a strong-hold in the day of trouble.

the chickens do under the hens: for that's the force of the Hebrew word here used. Such as these God knoweth for his 2 Tim. 2. 19. he knoweth their foule in adversity Psal. 119. he knoweth how to deliver them, as he did the righteous Lot 2 Pet. 2. 9. then, when they knew not what to do, as Jehosaphat 2 Chron. 20. 12. yet if their eyes be toward him, their affiance in him, he will extricate and deliver them. So well pleased is he with those that trust in him, (for that's meant here by his knowing of them Psal. 1. 6. confer Iob 9. 29. 1 Thef. 5. 12.) he taketh such complacency and delight in them Psal. 147. 11. and 33. 18. and such continuall care of them, (as hath been proved by an universall experience, nor one instance can be given to the contrary) that they shall be sure to have whatsoever heart can wish, or need require 2 Sam. 22. 2, 3. even miraculous loving kindeesse from God in a strong city Psal. 17. 7. and 31. 21, so great as cannot be uttered Psal. 31. 19. This is for the comfort of Gods Israel. But lest the wicked (as they are apt) should meddle with childrens meat, which was never meant for them: lest Niniveh should please her self in a fond conceit of Gods goodnesse to her also, and so turn it into wantonnesse, the Prophet brings in a stinging But in the next words.

Ver. 8. But with an over-running flood he will make an end of the place thereof i. e. of Niniveh that great but bloody city chap. 3. 1. Her state shall be utterly ruined as the old world, by the generall deluge. But because the word here rendered flood is used of rivers that overflow the bankes 2 Chron. 32. 4. and the adjunct over-running also implies as much (See Esaï 8. 8. Dan. 11. 10, 40.) I suppose the Holy Ghost here forethreateneth that ruine of this city by the river Tigris, which at an inundation broke out upon the wall, and threw down twenty furlongs thereof. This was a sad foretoken to them of their ensuing desolation by the enemy (as that raine was that fell in Egypt) where it used not to raine (a little before Cambyfes with his Persians subdued it) for it fell out in the time of the Siege, as Diodorus testifieth, according to an oracle that the Ninivites had received by tradition from their progenitours, sc. that their city should then be taken by the enemy, when the river took part against them: and it fell out accordingly.

and darknesse shall pursue his enemies i. e. terrible and inextricable calamities shall overtake them: their ruine shall be irreparable. And indeed it may now be said of Niniveh, which once was of a great city in Strabo, Magna civitas, magna solitudo See Zeph. 2. 13, 14, 15. Drusus rendreth it thus, Hosfes suos persequi faciet tenebras, He shall cause darknesse to pursue his enemies, Or, He shall make his enemies to pursue darknesse, according to that noted saying of the Ancients, Deus quem destruit, dementat, whom God intends to destroy, him He first insatiateth. But the former sence is the better.

Ver. 9. What do ye imagine against the Lord? because against his people. So Psal. 62. 3. How long will ye imagine mischief against a man? ye shall be slaine all of you: as a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence. The blind and bloody Ninivites looked no further then the Jews whom they invaded: they considered not that God was engaged in the quarrel of his people. This made the Virgin daughter of Zion, confident of Gods help, shake her head in scorn and pitty at them, saying, Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the holy One of Israel. Isai. 37. 22, 23. She knew well (though her enemies knew not) that as an unskilfull archer in shooting at a beast hitteth a man sometimes: so the Churches adversaries, in troubling of her, trouble Almighty God, who will not faile to be even with them: for he that toucheth Gods people, toucheth the apple of his eye Zach. 2. 8. Saul, Saul. why persecutest thou me? Act. 9. 4. It was a simple question of Satan to our Saviour, what have I to do with thee? whilst he vexed a servant of his. Hath he his name from knowledge, and yet could he so mistake him whom he confessed to be the son of the living God? It is an idle misprision to sever the sence of an injury done to any of the members, from the head. Drusus reads the text thus, Quid cogitatis de Domino? what think ye of the Lord? what conceit or opinion have ye of him? Doe ye imagine that he cannot performe what he threateneth by his Prophets? or that he cannot, when

he will make an utter end] Not a consumption only, but a consummation: This he is even doing, as the Hebrew hath it: he is busy about it, and will not faile to finish it: for he useth not to do his work to the halves. Surely a short work will the Lord make in your land, now that he taketh you to do, certo, cito, penitus.

affliction shall not rise up the second time] God will dispatch you at one blow. See a like expression 1 Sam. 26. 8. Niniveh had many brushers before, by Phraortes king of Medes and his son Ciaxares, and afterwards by the Scythians, whereof See Ier. 49. 34. and by Astyages &c. Now Nebuchadnezzar was appointed by God to make an utter end of it &c. The wicked shall totally and finally be consumed at once. Not so the Saints: these he corrects with a rod, those with a grounded staffe Esa. 32. 32. These in mercy and in measure, in the bunches only, he stayeth himself wind in the day of the East-wind Esa. 27. 8. he stayeth such afflictions as would shake his plants too much, or quite blow them down. But to the wicked he hath no such tender respect: he smites them at the root, and, after many blowes, he resolves to have them down. For instance: compare Gods different dealing with Noah and the old world, with Lot and the Sodomites, Israel and the Canaanites, Moses and Pharaoh, David and Saul &c. Fret not therefore thyself because of evil-doers Psal. 37. 1. when the wicked spring as the grasse, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish: it is that they shall be destroyed for ever. Psal. 92. 7. Pharaoh had faire way made him till he came to the midst of the sea: not one wave may rise up against him to wet so much as the hoof of his horse. It was a faire Sun-shine-day when Lot went out of Sodom: but ere night there fell out a dismall change. It was in the Spring that the flood came, then when every thing was in its prime and pride: besides that, the world never more flourished in wealth, peace, arts, and all magnificence: yet sudden destruction came upon them, they were all at once buried in one universall grave of waters.

Ver. 10. For while they be folden together as thornes] And so can hardly be handled without hurt: God will burn them together in the same place 2 Sam. 23. 7. as a man puts thorns folden, and that cannot easily be sundred all together into the fire, where they make a sudden blaze and are extinct. So will God deale with the Ninivites, not withstanding their carnall combinations and confederacies.

and while they are drunken as drunkards] who are very quarrelsome, bragging and braving: but may be easily dealt with, and pusht down with one finger.

as stubble fully dry] that hath long laine a sunning, and so is very combustible. The wicked are oft compared to stubble, because good for nothing but the fire: and when fully dry, when ripe for ruine, they shall be fully devoured, as some read the words. Ecquem vero mihi dabis Rhetorem &c. as One saith of another text. But what gallant Rhetorick is here? well might God say Hos. 12. 10. I have spoken also by the Prophets and used similitudes &c. (See the Note there) here we have three in a breath; and all little enough to work on the hearts of the wicked, who are loth to beleve the truth and certainty of Gods threats: but rather blesse themselves when God curseth Deut. 29. 19.

Ver. 11. There is one come out of thee that imagineth evill against the Lord] Many there are, but one among and above the rest: sc. Sennacherib, that bold Briareus, that listerth up his hundred hands at once against heaven; and threateneth to cut off at a blow Gods people, as if they had all but one neck. See verse 9. He is come up over all his chanel, and gone over all his banks, Isa. 8. 7. but God shall soon put a stop to him: and with an over-running flood (that he may be even with him) make an utter end of his place, as it is here ver. 8.

a wicked Counsellour] Heb. a counsellour of Belial, or of the devill, wholeneth him his seven heades to plot, and his ten horns to pusht Gods people. What pernicious counsel he gave them see 2 King. 18. 2 Chron. 32. Esa. 36. sc. to cast off God as not able to deliver them out of his hands: and to make an agreement with him by a present &c. This pestilent counsell he gave them by Rabshakeh, who was, say the Rabbines, a Renegado-Jew. Every Vicer and Basha of Sate among the Turks useth to keep still a Jew of his private counsell: whose malice, wit, and experience of Christendome, with their continuall intelligence, is thought to advise most of that mischief, which the Turk at this day puts in execution against us (saith mine Authour) the Jews being found the most nimble and Mercuriall wits in the world, but counsellours of Belial. In all the shop of hell there is no anvil so well set, whereon to forge, no engine so apt, whereby to execute any choice piece of mischief, as that man, who is ingeniosus nequam, & publico malo facundus (as it is said of C. Curius the Roman) Wittily wicked, and pestilently eloquent. Such were Cardinall Pool to England, Cardinall Sadoletus to Geneva, and the Iesuites generally, great Politicians and factours for Rome: They say, Satan sent Luther, and God sent them to withstand him. They destroy many souls, as the Dragon doth the Elephant; by biting his ear, and sucking his blood; because he knows that to be the onely place which the Elephant cannot reach with his trunk to defend. They take crafty counsel against the Church.

Psal. 8. 33.

Verse 12. Thus saith the Lord ] To thee, O Jerusalem, and for thy comfort. The Lord will speake peace to his people: and Ministers are charged to speak to their hearts, Esay 40. 1.

Turca perpetuum silentium tenent ut muti. Cuspin. de Cesar. p. 475.

though they be quiet ] Or, still, well disciplined (as the Turkish Army is, to the wonder of all that passe thorow it:) there was no falling out, nor complaining in the Assyrian hosts: therefore, and by this means, did their king march on, peace thorow.

and likewise many ] How great an Army they were, may bee gathered from the many thousands of them that were slain by the Angel, Esay 37. 36. It is all one with God, whether it be done against a nation, or against a man onely, Job 34. 29. he stands not upon multitudes, who taketh up the Isles, as a very little thing, Esay 40. 15.

yet thus shall they be cut down ] Heb. shorn; with as little ado as one would shear a sheep, mow down a meddow, or shave off hair with a sharprasaer. The Prophet seemeth to allude to that Text in Esay (with whom, as his contemporary, he hath many things common) chap. 7. 20. and to threaten the Assyrian, that he shall bee paid home in his own coyn: and that as he had done to Israel, so should it bee done again to him. God loveth to retaliate.

when he shall passe thorow ] Heb. and he passeth, or away he goeth, &c. to his own countrey, after the losse of his Army, slain by the Angel, so Hierom. Others, they shall be cut down, &c. by the hand of a mighty One, as Esay 10. 34. or of an Angel, when he, that is Sennacherib, and every one of his Army hath passed thorow, &c. the land without restraint, or controul, and now maketh account that hee is master of all.

Though I have afflicted thee, yet I will afflict thee no more ] sc. by these Ninevites; no, nor by any other enemies, unless there be very great need, 1 Pet. 1. 6. The Church hath ever had her Halcyons, her interchanges of prosperity and adversity. God will not alwayes chide, Psal. 103. 9. he delighteth in the prosperity of his servants, Psal. 35. 27. and wisheth, Oh that this people were wise, &c. O that my people had hearkened, &c. Psal. 81. 13, 14, 15. There is another reading of the words, as may be seen in the margent. This is Iunius. The Chaldee paraphraeth thus; Although the Ninevites enjoy great peace, and by peace are so multiplied, that they are very numerous, yet shall they be shorn and cut down.

Verse 13. For now will I break his yoke from off thee ] Left the promised deliverance should be any whit doubted of; the time when, and the misery whence they should be delivered is here laid open. God hath set the time of his peoples sufferings, which shall be neither so little a while as they would; nor so long as the enemy would. Hold out faith and patience; deliverance is at next doore by.

and will burst thy bonds in sunder ] By yoke and bonds here, understand those Tributes which the Assyrians, called out by Abaz, imposed upon the kingdome of Judah, 2 King. 18. God promiseth them here their ancient liberty; which was, soon after this, recovered under Hezekiah, who trusting in God, and reforming religion, rebelled against the king of Assyria, and served him no longer. Shortly after also, the Persians destroyed Nineveh, dealt more gently with the captive Jews, and gave them good leave to return home again, as many as had a mind to it, Ezr. 1. 4. 2 Chron. 36.

Verse 14 And the Lord hath given a commandment ] sc. to his upper and lower forces (for he is Lord of Hosts, Commander in Chief of all creatures.)

against thee ] O Sennacherib devoted to destruction, for thine intolerable pride and cruelty. God resisteth the proud, Iam. 4. 6. he setteth himself in battell-array against him, as the word signifieth, commanding all his creatures to fall on: and no wonder. For whereas all other vices flee from God, pride alone fleeth in his face: casteth down the gauntlet of defiance, and maketh head against him. Hence his hatred of a proud person.

that no more of thy name be sown ] i. e. that no more children be born to thee; so Lyrā expounds it: that thy posterity perish, so Gualther. This must needs be grievous to proud and ambitious persons, who promise themselves a kind of immortality here in their posterity: and that there shall be a perpetuall succession of their name in this world. Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, they call their lands after their own names, Psal. 49. 11. But their lamp shall be put out in obscure darknesse, Prov. 20. 20. there shall be — Nullus, cui lampada tradant. Others sense the Text thus. Thou shalt no more be talked of; but the memory of thy name shall be utterly extinct. The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth, Psal. 34. 16. See Esay 10. 12, 13, &c. Ier. 49. 34. Sennacherib had done great exploits, till he lifted up his hand against heaven, he had been very victorious and famous; but now lies wrapt up in the sheet of shame, and is made an instance of divine vengeance, even among the Heathen: For so Herodotus telleth us, that in Egypt there was Sennacherib's statue erected, with this inscription; Let Whosoever looketh upon me, learn to fear God. He lifted up himself against his Creatour and Father: hee is therefore slain by his own children. He thought to overturn the true service of God; he is therefore slain at his idoll-worship. He went about to destroy the house of God; he is therefore destroyed in the house of his god, Esay 37. 38.

*Εὐὲ τίς ἐίσω-

Out of the house of thy gods will I cut off the graven image ] This, those superstitious Heathens held a great losse, a sore affliction. It is reported of the people of the East-Indies, in the Isle Zeylon, that having an Apes tooth got from them, which was a consecrated thing by them, they offered an incredible masse of treasure to recover it. What a noise made Micah after his Ephod and images, Judg. 18. 24? and Laban after his Teraphim? Gen. 31. and the men of Ophrah, for their altar and grove? And what a price set Papists on their pictures and trinkets.

I will make thy grave ] sc. Of thine idoll-temple, polluted by thy slaughter therein, and so converted into a sepulchre for thee. There is a story (but of no great authority) that Sennacherib, after his shamefull return out of Judea, demanding of some about him, what might be the reason that the irresistible God of heaven so favoured the Jewish nation, as he had found by sad experience? Answer was given him, that Abraham from whom they descended, sacrificed unto him his onely sonne, which purchased this protection to his progeny. If that will win him, saith he, I will spare him two of my sonnes, to procure him to be on my side. Which Sharezzer and Adrammelech his sonnes hearing of, prevented their own deaths by slaying him. It is more likely that they laid wicked hands upon their father, either out of ambition, or discontent for the losse of the Army. Howsoever, God made use of their cruelty, for the just punishment of Sennacherib: and is here therefore said to have commanded it. After this, cruell warre arose among Sennacherib's sonnes, which were the utter overthrow of that nation, and laid them open as a prey to the kings of Babylon, as Xenophon writeth.

for thou art vile ] Worthlesse, and weightlesse. All wicked men are so, be they never so great, Psal. 15. 4. Dan. 11. 21. In his estate shall stand up a vile person, that is, Antiochus Epiphaneus, the great king of Syria, whom the Samaritans in flattery stiled, The mighty god. 'Tis vertue onely that enobles. Them that honour God, he will honour: but they that despise him, shall be lightly esteemed, 1 Sam. 2. 30. Contempt shall be their portion, and with ignominy, reproach, Prov. 18. 3. Here then the Prophet threatneth the same that Joel had done, chap. 2. 20. His stink shall come up, and the ill savour shall come up, because he hath done great things, i. e. he hath attempted to do them, but was hindered from heaven. God put a hook in his nose, and a bridle in his lips, and turned him back to Nineveh; where, within lesse then fifty dayes after, he was slain by his two sonnes, Tob. 1. 23. and although his third sonne Asar-haddon reigned in his stead; yet hee soon after lost both his life and his kingdome, which was devolved to the Babylonians, and all the royall race of Assyria was rooted out.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. HE that dasheth in pieces is come up before thy face] Nebuchadnezzar the elder, that maul of the whole earth, Jer. 50. 23. that brake and disperfed the Nations, as a Maul or great Hammer doth the hardest stones. See how like a right Pyrgopolynicis he vaunteth of his valour, and victories, Esay 10. 8, 9, 10, 11, &c. So Demetrius was surnamed Poliorsetes, the Destroyer of cities; Attilas called himself Orbi flagellum, the scourge of the World. Julius Caesar was Fulmen belli, The thunderbolt of warre: he had taken in his time a thousand Towns, conquered three hundred Nations, took prisoner one million of men, and slain as many. These were Dissipatores indeed, and dashers in pieces, rods of Gods wrath; and this they took to be a main piece of their silly glory. How much more honour was it to Augustine, to be stiled Hareticorum malleus, the hammer of Heretikes? and to Mr. Hilderam, to be Schismaticorum malleus, the maul of Schismaticikes? and lastly, to Luther, that he could thus say of himself:

on Job. 4.

Pestis eram vivus, moriens ero mors tua Papa?
I living, stopt Romes breath,
And dead, will be Romes death?

Is come up before thy face] Nineveh lay high; and those that went thither, were said to go up, Hos. 8. 9. Nebuchadnezzar is said here, to be come up to it, long before he did, (which sets forth Gods omniscience: Known to him are all his works from the beginning of the world: and present to him are all things, both past and future) and to come up before Nineveh's face; who thought none durst have been so bold as to look her in the face. But though she had been a terrour, yet now shee is a scorn: as was likewise Ephraim, when he offended in Baal, Hos. 13. 1. See the Note there.

Keep the munition, watch the way, &c.] Ironice omnia, q. d. Do all this, if you think it will do any good. But 'tis all to no purpose; you are an undone people, your enemies are above fear, and you below hope; you have hitherto delighted in warre, you shall now have enough of it; you have troubled the world with your armes, and Armies; now you shall meet with your match, a people terrible from the beginning. Up therefore, and do your utmost: Neglect nothing that may serve for your necessary defence; but it will not be: for except the Lord keep the city, the watch-man waketh but in vain, Psal. 127. 1.

Verse 2. For the Lord hath turned away the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel Both the ten tribes (carried captive already) and the other two (vexed by Sennacheribs invasion) have taken their turnes, and have had their part of bitter affliction: and shalt thou O Niniveh altogether escape unpunished? Never think it. Especially sith thou hast exceeded thy commission, and exercised an unheard of cruelty upon Gods people: for he was but a little displeased; but ye have helped forward the affliction Zach. 1. 15. See the Note there.

and marred their vine-branches that is their sons and their daughters saith Lyra: their cities and villages, say others: like a malicious vinedresser, that not only cuts off the luxurions or barren branches, but pulls up the yong sprouts by the rootes, and so marres the vineyard. The Assyrians endeavoured utterly to destroy the whole seed of Abraham without any mercy or compassion: and this undid them. The jealous and just God cannot beare with such boares out of the wood, that wast his vine Psal. 80. 13.

Ver. 3. The shield of his mighty men is made red Panoplia terrorem aget. All was red (a colour much affected by the Medes, Persians and Caldees) to shew that they were a sanguinary nation, and not more gold-thirsty, Esaï. 13. then blood-thirsty.

the valiant men are in scarlet A colour affected by martiall men, that would seem to feare no colours. The Lacedemonians used it much, when they went to fight: that, if they should be wounded, their blood might not appeare upon their apparrell, for the discouragement of themselves, and encouragement of the enemy by such a sight. The Romish Cardinals are clothed in scarlet, and are created by a red hat which the Pope giveth them, in a token that they should be ready to shed their blood for the Catholike faith: which if they should do (as never any of them yet did) they would be no better then the Devils Martyrs: sith it is the cause, and not the punishment, that maketh a true martyr. A Tiburn-tipper; (as plain Mr. Latimer was wont to speake) would well become those scarlet-Fathers: who, like bells will be never well tuned, till well hanged; for their blood-guiltinesse, and soule-murther especially. In the kingdome of Naples there were two notable theeves (the one named Pater-noster, the other Ave-Maria) who at severall times had murdered one hundred and sixteen men, and were therefore deservedly put to a cruel death. But nothing so cruel as the Pope and his Conclave deserve, for their sending of so many soules daily to that great red dragon; red with the blood of soules which he hath swallowed, as St. Peter hath it, 1 Pet. 5. 8. Rev. 12. 3.

the charrets shall be with flaming torches Those currus falcati charrets armed with sithes and hookes, with, and in which, they were wont to fight: these shall be with flaming torches carried along in them, either to light them fighting by night, or else to fire the enemies houses, and to terrify their hearts.

and the firr trees shall be terribly shaken with the rattling of the charrets, and clattering of the armour. In a bloody fight between Amurath the third king of Turks and Lazarus Despot of Servia, the noise of warlike weapons, the neighing of horses and outcries of men were so terrible, and great, that the wild beasts in the woods stood astonied therewith, the trees seemed to be shaken, and the Turkish histories to expresse the terrour of the day, vainely say, that the Angels in heaven, amazed with that hideous noise, for that time forgot the heavenly hymnes &c. The word here rendred terribly shaken is rather Chaldee, then Hebrew: as spoken of the Chaldees, comming against Niniveh.

Verse 4. The charrets shall rage in the streets shall run so fast, as if they were mad that drove them.

they shall seem like torches Heb: their aspect is as of torches: fire sparkleth out of their eyes that are in them: they look upon the Assyrians, as if they would look through them.

Herodot:

they shall run like the lightnings] Heb. they shall break through as the lightning; that is, with incredible swiftnesse: as lightening in an instant commeth out of the East, and shineth even to the West Mat. 24. 27. Luc. 10. 18.

Verse 5. He shall recount his worthies Or Gallants, Magnificoes. These, Asar-baddon the king of Niniveh seeing himself straighted, shall muster up, and mind of their duties: bidding them now or never play the men, sith the empire was at stake.

they shall stumble in their walk] thorough fearefulnesse and faint-heartednesse: according to that of the Psalmist, The stone-hearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep: and none of the men of might have found their hands. At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep Psal. 76. 5, 6. God struck a terrour into the Ninivites upon the first comming of the Chaldees. See Deut. 11. 25. Therefore there is no great credit to be given to Diodorus Siculus, who saith, that the Chaldees were thrice overcome in fight by the Assyrians, when as they came in armes to besiege Niniveh.

Cap. 7. Lib. 3.

they shall make hast to the wall thereof] The Chaldees shall: taking advantage of the Ninivites feare, that cowardly passion, that disarmeth and disableth a man for his own defence, Or, the Assyrians shall hasten to the wall as fast as their fainting and failing legs will carry them; to try what they can do, to keep out the enemy. So the Emperour of Constantinople, certainly advertised of the Turks purpose for the generall assault shortly to be given, after that he had many times with teares requested to have borrowed mony of his covetous subjects, to have been employed for defence of their city; he first commended himself and them to the Almighty by generall fasting and prayer: and afterwards appointed every captaine and commander to some certaine place of the wall, for defence thereof &c. but all in vaine, as here at Niniveh.

and the defence shall be prepared] Heb. the covering or coverer, Tessudo militaris. Some military engine, or moveable defence.

Verse 6. The gates of the rivers shall be opened] Notwithstanding all fore-mentioned indeavours to save the city, the water-gates or those that stood neare the river Tigris, flew open either by meanes of that inundation above-mentioned, or by the enemies irruption; or the trechery of some that were within.

and the pallace shall be dissolved] Or melted, haply by that inundation: howsoever, by hostile impression: whether we understand it of the Palace Royall, or the Idol-temple or both (the word will beare either) for it was not unusual for Princes to have their houses neare to the temples, as the kings of Judah had Jer. 22. 14. The Trojans had their Palladium in the Tower: the Romans their Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus in the Capitoll: Constantine the great, built the Lateran Church in his Laterane palace; William Rufus, his Westminster-hall, neare the Minster.

Verse 7. And Huzza shall be led away captive] The Queen; so called, because she stood firm, and was best underlaid of any other, as was thought, Some render it, que firma stabat, ducta est in exilium. She that was wont to stand at the kings right hand (as Psal. 45.) which is a place both of dignity and of safety. As Christ is at Gods right hand Psal. 110. 1. so the Church is at his, Psal. 45. 10. and he hath led captivity captive Eph. 4. 8. spoiled Principalities and powers, made an open shew of them, triumphing over them in himself, Col. 2. 15. This is the saints happinesse: they are out of gun-shot, more then Conquerours, even Triumpbers, 2 Cor. 2. 14.

she shall be brought up] whither she would not, to take horse or coach to go into captivity, as Q. Zenobia was brought in triumph to Rome in golden fetters, by Aurelianus the Emperour.

and her maides shall lead her] Her maides of honour; The Gynecium or Seraglio shall fall into the hands of rude souldiers; and by them be hurried away into a far country. Neither is it without desert: for omne malum ferè ex Gynacio; Women are many times meanes of much mischief: and for their miscarriages, men fall by the sword, and the mighty in the warr: the gates also of the city lament and mourn, Esay. 3. 11. 25, 26. even for the Ladies gallantry, whereof we have here an inventory. What a deale of trouble bred Jezebel in Israel, Athaliah in as with the voice of doves] Mourning secretly to themselves, and groaning inwardly; as not suffered to bark at those that carry them captive, (as Hecuba Queen of Troy did, and is therefore fabled to be turned into a bitch) or to fill the air with complaints of their hard fortunes, as they call it, or to ease their grief by loud lamentations; but forced to smother it, and take it all to themselves, which is no small aggravation of it: For tabring upon their breasts] Not singing and playing on instruments after their Ladies, as once: but moaning, and groaning, and knocking their breasts, for the greatnesse of their grief, and heavinesse; whereof this is an excellent, and eloquent description.

Verse 8. But Nineveh is of old like a pool of water] Like a fish-pool of water, and therefore happy: The word here used for a pool, or pond, signifieth also a blessing. The Pope was wont to say of England, that it was puteus inexhaustus, his pit that could not be drawn dry. Such a pit, or pool was Nineveh. Populous, wealthy, potent, &c. Esay 8. 7. the Magazine of the whole East, a rich Cargazon, and not unlike the Island Cyprus, anciently called, Macaria, that is, blessed, for the plenty, prosperity, and pleasure there abounding. This invited the Romans to subdue it: as the pearls usually cast out at the flood, and gathered at the ebbe, drew Cæsars affection for the conquest of Britain: and as Nineveh's fish-pool did the Chaldean fishermen. The greater wealth, the greater spoil awaiteth a people, or person, Prov. 1. 19. As if a tree hath thick and large boughes, every man desires to be topping of it. Nineveh's antiquity is here also noted. Of old, or, of a long time she hath been Emperesse of the East; She was the seat of the first Monarchy, which she also held longest of any, even above thirteen hundred years. Howbeit this shall be now no protection to her, but an article, or an argument against her, that she is an old sinner, and hath been long time heaping up, and hoarding the mammon of unrighteousnesse.

yet they shall flee away] as waters do when the banks of a pond are broken down: and as fish do, when the water is drawn out, or dried up: then they friggle any way. So shall the Ninevites flee away, when their city is once broken: pugna oblii, pristinaque virtutis.

Stand, stand, shall they cry] Their own Commanders, desirous to rally them: or their enemies, desirous to ransack them, and make prize of them: Sed surdo fabulam.

but none shall look back] Or, cause them to turn. Nemo potest eos resupinare: their hearts are fallen into their heels, and they have much more mind to save themselves by flight, then by fight.

Verse 9. Take ye the spoil of silver, take ye the spoil of gold] This is the voice of God to the Caldeans; encouraging them to fall on, sith they are sure of good booty, plenty of plunder, which he here freely bestoweth upon them. In like sort Mahomet the great Turk, the better to encourage his souldiers to storm Constantinople, caused proclamation to be made thorow his Camp the day before, that hee would freely give all the spoil of the city for three dayes unto them, if they could win it. And for confirmation thereof, he solemnly swore the Turks great oath, &c. Now the love of money is Δηιδὸς καὶ πονηρία, saith a Father, daring and desperate.

For there is none end of the store] Fat plunder, as was at Constantinople: the wealth whereof, the Turks themselves wondered at; and were therewith so enriched, that 'tis a proverb amongst them at this day, if any grow suddenly rich, to say, He hath been at the sacking of Constantinople. Neither did they more wonder

Verse 10. She is empty, and void, and waste ] An elegant Agnomination in the Originall, beyond Englishing: whereby the utter destruction, and consternation of the City and Monarchy is graphically depainted, and set forth to the life. See a like elegancy, Jer. 16. 15. The last word rendred waste, signifieth burst up, or, void of all verdure; a place where nothing green groweth. Such an horrible devastation followeth upon Gods word of command to the Caldees, verse 9. like as when Christ cursed the barren fig-tree, it withered away immediately, though it be the most succulent of any tree, and beareth the brunt of winter-blasts unwithered. Now if for a temporall mischief, there is so great a consternation in wicked men, what shall we think there is in hell?

Verse 11. Where is the dwelling of the Lions, &c. ] Where is Nineveh, once so terrible, now so despicable? Leoni mortuo vel mus insultat. Once none durst look at it, or mute against it, now each passenger can insult over it, enquire where it stood, and not be afraid to take this Lion by the beard. God powreth contempt upon princes, and weakeneth the strength of the mighty, Job 12. 21. when once they turn tyrants, and exercise regiment without righteousnesse, as Mic. 3. 2, 3. Such a mighty hunter, or devourer of men and nations was Nimrod (the first founder of this Assyrian Monarchy) and became a proverb against all tyrants, and persecutours, Gen. 10. 9. Such a Lion was Nero, 2 Tim. 4. 17. Such a Tiger Tiberius, (of whom One saith, that he laid hold with his teeth on all the excellent spirits of his time) Domitian, (who not content with the blood of Christians, commanded all Jews that were of the stock of David, to be sought out, and put to death) Dioclesian, and the rest of the Primitive persecutours: As also that man of sinne, the whole pack of Popes, successours to Boniface the eighth (who came in like a fox, reigned like a lion, died like a dog) and to Benedict the twelfth, who when he died, had this Epitaph made of him:

The Assyrian young-princes were accustomed to rapine, and cruelty from the first: being no better then young Tiberius, whom his Tutor Theodorus Gadareus rightly characterized, when he said, he was Dirt kneed with blood: Or, then Nero the lion; of whom his father Domitian prophesied,

Where the lion, even the old lion walked ] The couragious, or hearty lion (named of Leo an heart) walked and stalked with his whelps, and none made them afraid. But now, his heart melteth, his knees knock together for fear, and faintnesse, as verse 10. his city Nineveh (that was not onely spoliarium latronum, but spelunca leonum) is now no where: it shall live by fame onely, time shall triumph over it. Verse 12. The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps ] i. e. that which might have been enough and spare, but that they were unsatiable. So covetous they were and ravenous, that their Possie might have been, Totus non sufficit orbis: their desire of more, was enlarged as hell; greedy lions they were, that could never have enough, Esay 56. 11. As a ship may be over-laden with gold and silver, even unto sinking, and yet have compasse and sides enough to hold ten times more: so the cormorants and covetous caities of this world, though they have enough to sink them; yet never have they enough to satisfie them.

and strangled for his lionesses ] i. e. for his wives and concubines, by whom they were commanded, being captivarum suarum captivi, as Plutarch saith of the Persian kings; slaves to their she-slaves, whom they enriched and adorned with the spoils of the subdued nations. Cicero in his fifth Action against Verres, saith, that the kings of Persia and Syria, (think the same of Assyria) as they had many wives, so they would bestow upon them whole cities for their maintenance. Antiochus king of Syria, gave two fair cities to his Concubine, 2 Maccab. 4. 30. Antony gave all Egypt to Cleopatra. Henry 2. of France, gave to Diana Valentina all the confiscation of goods made in the kingdom for cause of Herefie, Anno 1554. which caused the burning of many good people. Utinam hodie non essent leana, saith Calvin here. It were to be wished there were not now adays lionesses, that can of themselves strangle and devour: but we see that there are some women that exceed all men in impudency and cruelty. What else was the whole Assyrian Empire, but a great theivery? Alexander the Great was told to his teeth, that he was the greatest thief in the world. And was not Julius Caesar such another? who said, that for a kingdoms sake right might be violat? and who robbed his countrey of her liberty, for the satisfying of his unlawfull desire of ruledome? But for whom all this? surely for those that never thanked them for any thing, but fought for their spoil.

Such shall be the fire of the last day, as A Lapide here noteth out of Hierom: when all the lions, and lions whelps, that is, all tyrants and oppressours shall be burnt, together with all their charrets, pompes, and messengers, ac imprimis eorum dux & princeps Antichristus, and especially Antichrist their Captain, and Chieftain. As a Nettle stings betime, an Urchin is rough whiles young, and a Crab soon goes backward: so sanguinary dispositions will soon discover themselves.

And I will cut off thy prey from the earth ] Thou shalt be no further terrible, and troublesome to the nations, whom thou hast vexed and spoiled. Verse 1. WOe to the bloody city ] Nineveh, that delighteth in warre, which One well calleth, the slaughter-house of mankind, and Hell of this present world, Esa. 9. 5. the Greek word πολυαιμα, warre, signifieth much blood. Besides that, many murders were committed in her, and connived at, if not countenanced by a pretence of justice. Such a sanguinary city is Rome: not onely drunk with the blood of saints, but also of her own children. Brazinus, set on by Hildebrand, was the death of six Popes successively, within the space of thirteen yeers. Pope John the 22. (who sat Anno Dom. 1316.) slew a Bishop, who had some way offended him, and afterwards burned him. Pope Paul the third, poisoned two Cardinals, Fulgosus, and Contarenius, a Bishop also, and Johannes Baptista Vergerius, because he suspected them of Lutheranism. The Italians generally, as they blaspheme oftener then swear, so they murder more then revile or slander. Such another citie of bloods is Paris in France: witnesse that barbarous Massacre, wherein they poisoned the Queen of Navarre, murdered the most part of the peerlesse Nobility of France, with their wives and children, with a great part of the common people, an hundred thousand in one year, in divers parts of the Realm. Besides 6000. Gentlemen, slain there in private quarrels, within the space of ten years, as it appears by the kings pardons. Now if the blood of one Abel had so many tongues as drops, Gen. 4. 8. the voice of thy brothers bloods crieth unto me, what shall we think will be the woe of such bloody Cities and States? Luther rendereth this Text. Woe to the murderous State. Austin interpreteth it of all hainous offences, wherewith Nineveh was polluted. But surely if other sinnes have a woe hanging at their heels, according to that of Job, chap. 10. 15. If I be wicked, woe unto me; bloody men shall have a woe with a witnesse, as those that walk in the way of Cain, Jude 11. See Ezech. 24. 6. Hab. 3. 12. and remember that it was the ruin of that great city Nineveh.

It is all full of lies ] ὅλην ψευδῆς, so the Seventy render it, she is wholly made up of fraud and falshood, mendaciorum loquacissima; no truth in her private contracts, no trust in her publike transactions, and capitulations with other nations; be they never so strongly concluded, or never so solemnly confirmed, yet had they no longer force with them, then stood with their own profit. This was fides Niniuerica, as it was afterwards Punica, and is now Turcica: which will at length prove their downfall; as it befell Nineveh, and Carthage.

and robbery ] Or, ravage; such as lions exercise, Psal. 7. 3. Liars are commonly thieves: fraudulency is no better then robbery. If I have beguiled any man, saith Zachari, I restore him foure-fold, Luke 19. 9. as having wronged him no lesse, then if I had robbed him. Hence they go here coupled. Violence is seldom found from conning contrivance; in those especially that hunt after Monarchy, as Nimrod, Julius Caesar, Lyfander (whose counsell and practise was to eek out the lions hide, with the foxes skin, if need were) Jeroboam, Jehu, Herod, that fox, Julian, Cesar Borgia, whom Machiavel propounds for a pattern to Princes; telling them, that Justice it self should not be sought after, but onely the appearance: because the credit is a help, the use a cumber. That great Elixer, called Reason of State (though falsely so called, unless it be seasoned with Justice and Truth) hath so transmutative a faculty, as to make copper seem gold, right wrong, and wrong right: yea, when all pleas fail, it will stand for good, whiles there are forces to support it.

Laceratio.

assuere.*

The prey departeth not ] They fetch in booty continually, they spoil and prey upon others without end or measure. Once they seemed to repent of their luxury and cruelty, at the preaching of Jonas; but now they are as bad again, or worse then ever. They tear in pieces (our English seems to bee made of the Hebrew here) and greedily feed upon those murdering morsels of sin, which they must digest in hell, without better repentance, then they were ever yet acquainted with.

Vers. 2. The noise of a Whip, and the noise of the ratling of the wheels ] A most elegant and lively hypotyposis or description, of the Chaldees coming to take Nineveh, Tam pulchra, saith Hierom, & picture similis, ut omnis meus sermo sit vilior, so gallant and picture-like a representation of an advancing Army, that no words of mine can come neer it. Virgil is commended for his excellent expressions, suitable to the matter he treateth of. As when he sets forth the cutting down of trees, by ---Sonat illa securibus illex: the ferrimans trade, by ---fremit ilibus area puppis: the gliding of his boat, by ---Labitur uncta vadis abies, &c. But all this is but dull stuffe to the divine Rhetorike here to be read. Let those that refuse to hear Gods sweet words, fear lest they be forced to hear the noise of the whip, the ratling of the wheels, &c. Psal. 7. 12, 13. Luk. 19. 42, 44. Prov. 1. 24, &c. The enemy is sent to revenge the quarrell of Gods Covenant: the red horse is at the heels of the white, Rev. 6. 4.

Vers. 3. The horseman lifteth up both the bright sword ] Heb. the flame of the sword, brandished against the Sunne, which maketh it seem flaming. Such a sword is mans tongue, thin, broad, long, and of a red fiery colour. See Psal. 42. 10. and 54. 3. Prov. 12. 18. David cries out of this murdering-weapon in his bones, whereby they killed him alive, as with a tuck, or rapier; and buried him in their throats, those gaping graves, open sepulchres.

and the glittering spear ] Heb. the lightening of the spear, because of its bright and swift motion. Thus the Prophet perpetuis metaphoris & periphrasibus luxuriat (as One saith of Apulius) aboundeth with Rhetoricall expressions, and continued metaphors. Bajazet the Great Turk, for his valour and skill in handling his arms, was signamed Gilderum, or lightening.

Verse 4. Because of the multitude of the whoredomes of the well-favored harlot] Specious, and therefore gracious with her paramours: of a faire countenance; but foule condition: like Aurelia Orestilla, that had beauty, but no good property. Chrysippus called beauty the flower of vertue; but that is not generally true. Diogenes saw cause to say to some faire women in his time, O quam bona domus, sed malus hospes; Here's a faire house, but an ill inhabitant. Niniveh is the well-favored harlot here spoken of; her very name signifieth a faire habitation. Hierome and others interpret it, she was indeed Virbs formosa et famosa, faire and famous, but foolish and filthy, Meretrix meretricissima; she multiplied her whoredomes both corporall and spirituall; for these are seldom hundred: as we see in that once well-favored, but now withered whore of Rome, Rev. 17. 1. Roma inverted is Amor, preposterous love, unnaturall filthinesse is there as commonly practised, as idolatry. And as a common harlot paints and deckes her self to please her lovers; so did Niniveh, so doth Rome in her pompous and men-pleasing worships: I have read of a Lady in Paris, that when she saw the bravery of a Procellion to a Saint, she cried out, Oh how fine is our religion beyond that of the Huguenots. And Sir Walter Rawleigh was wont say, that were he to chuse a religion for fleshly liberty, and lasciviousnesse, he would chuse Popery: which is indeed an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion, none like it. the mistress of witch-crafts] Harlots are many of them enchantresses; and have their philtres, their love potions, wherewith to ensnare men, and to draw them on to lewdnesse, and to take away their hearts. Hof. 4. 11. Athenaus brings in Plato bewailing himself, that he was taken so much with a filthy harlot. And Eliau telles of a whore that boasted to Socrates, that she could easily get followers from him; not he from her. Of Sampson and Hercules (whom some think to have been the same) those two verses verified,

Quem fera non potuit vincere; viciit hera.*

Think the same of idolatry also; and if those forceries, whereby the purple whore hath deceived all nations, as St. John (in allusion to this place) saith of her Rev. 18. 23. For in that book of the Revelation the holy Ghost borrowes all the elegancies and flowers in the story of the old Testament: thereby to set out the story of the New in succeeding ages.

That selleth nations through her whoredoms] maketh prize of them, as those impostours did, 2 Tim. 3. 6. and then make sale of them as her slaves 2 Pet. 2. 3. or otherwise use them at her pleasure, as homely as the whore of Babylon now doth those her slaves, and soules of men Rev. 18. 13. whom she sits upon, even upon peoples, nations, multitudes and tongues, Rev. 17. 15. tyrannizing over their consciences, and appointing them to very meane offices: as that posture of hers, in sitting upon them, seemeth to import.

Verse 5. Behold I am against thee saith the Lord] And I need say no more; wert thou but sensible of thy misery herein. Be not thou a terrour to me O Lord, saith saith Jeremiah, and then let what will else befall me: I shall the better beare it. Doe not you fall upon me your selves, said Sampson to his country men, that came to bind him: and then for the Philistines I shall order them well enough: so saith the good soul, Let not God set against me &c. Tyrants and Oppressours shall be sure to have him their enemy: and this he telles them here againe and againe: to beat downe their vaine confidence in their greatnesse: whereby they think to beare down all before them.

And I will discover thy skirts upon thy face] i. e. I will turne up thy clothes about thy eares: and so shew all to, thine utter disgrace; a fit punishment for so filthy a harlot. Esa. 47. 3. Jer. 13, 22. Eze. 16. 37.

And I will shew the nations thy nakednesse] which nature teacheth to cover: therefore when a man hath committed a sinne, he blusheth: the blood as it were would cover the sinne, that mother of shame Rev. 3. 18. that the shame of thy nakednesse may not appeare. The whore of Babylon is, and more and more shall be served on this sort: Rev. 17. 16. Afore God, ye are all bare- you'd said Mr. Philpot Martyr to the Popish Synod; before whom he was convented. The kings of the earth shall make Rome desolate and naked. Luther and many other Protestant writers have done it already, by laying her open in her colours to the world: taking the same boldnesse and liberty to discover her lewdnesse, that she did to commit it.

And the kingdoms, thy shame] who shall therefore slight thee and hate thee, together with all thy policies and superstitions, whereby thou hast enslaved them.

Verse 6. And I will cast abominable filth upon thee] As they do chamber-pots and worse, upon harlots that are carted. I have read of a heathen people that put the adulterers and adulteresses heads into the paunch of a beast, where all the filth lieth; and so stifled them to death.

And make thee vile] Conspureabo, deturpabo te, I will bespattle thee and make thee stink above ground, as loathsome carrion doth; so the word signifieth. It was long since complained of by one of her own sonnes, that the stench of the Church of Rome was gone up to heaven. And by another, that of gold she was become silver, of silver iron, of iron earth, superesse ut in stercus abiret, and now there remained no more, but that she should be looked upon as dung. Accordingly it followeth.

And I will set thee as a gazing-stock] The Septuagint renders it for an example, others a looking-glasse, but Calvin (after R. Salomon and Aber-Ezra) ponam te quasi stercus, I will set thee as dung, which men gladly look beside. Luther rendereth it Ponam te in terculamentum, I will make thee a bug-beare. All this was done to Niniveh that great city: and all was done by God, not by Fate, or Fortune, or any necessity of Nature, that states and kingdoms must have their times and their turnes, their rise and their ruine, as Politicians dote.

Ver. 7. And it shall come to pass that all they that look upon thee shall flee from thee] Thou shalt be a very Magor-missabib a terrour to all that are round about thee: so that they shall decline thee and stand a loof off. Resilient à te, they shall leape back from thee (saith the Vulgar translation) as if they had trod upon a snake. Vbi simul hominum mores exprimit saith Gualther. This is the manner of most people: they measure friendship by profit, and shamefully forsake those in adversity, whom they were wont to follow and fawne upon in prosperity. David complains of such dealing, and Ovid, and many others.

And say, Niniveh is laid wast] which most men held impossible, and never looked to have seen such a day. So Rome was called Aurea, and Aeterna and the Romans once thought (as it is said Dionysius did) that the monarchy of the world had been tied unto them with chaines of adamant. But God confuted their golden dreames by breaking their Empire, and giving up their city six severall times in one hundred thirty nine yeares, into the hands of the Barbarians: who exercised therein all kind of cruelty. Besides that, it is observed that Rome since it became Papall was never besieged by any enemy, but it was taken. The finall ruine of it is daily expected, according to that prophecy of St. John, Babylon is fallen, is fallen: and that other of Sibylla afore recited,

Ver. 8. Art thou better then populous No?] Heb. No Amon a great corn-countrie, and therefore populous: for where victuall and good trading is to be had, thither people will repaire apace. No (that is Alexandria) was the nursing mother of Egypt: and Egypt was called the worlds barn or storehouse, horreum unde hauriatur Gen. 42. 1. It is called Ier. 46. 25. Amon de No, and Ezek. 30. 11. Hamon No, and Verse 14. 16. No, without any addition. This was the old name of this city, before it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar: to whom God had given Egypt as his pay for his paines in taking Tyre. It was reedified by Alexander the great, and he called it after his own name Alexandria. Amon it was called, for the reasons above-given. Though there be that fetch that name of it from Ham the son of Noah. Theodoret will have it so called from Iupiter Hammon, whose sonne, Alexander desired to be held: and from whom the Egyptian husbandmen were called Ammonii, and their arable Ammonia, as Herodotus writeth. Plutarch also telleth us, that the Africans worship an unknowne God by the name of Amon, that is (in their language) Hens, tu quis es? This city therefore is called No Amon, probably to distinguish it from other cities of the same name; as Alexandria Egypti, Cesarea Philippi, Augusta Vindelicorum, &c. Iosephus saith that it abounded in people, and wealth: being little lesse then Hierusalem in compasse. Thinkest thou now O Niniveh, (saith God here) that thou art in a better or safer condition, then this city once was? but

Verse 9. Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength] No was the Metropolis of Egypt, and knew no end of her power, as bearing rule over Ethiopia the strong, and Egypt the infinite (some read this text) and as having all the rest of the peoples inhabiting Africke and Lybia for her confederates. See Ier. 46. 9. where the Prophet speaketh of such People as brought aide to Egypt against the Caldees, but were foiled and worsted: Of the huge armies that Ethiopia was able to raise, see 2 Chron. 14. 9. and 16. 8. Egypt for her strength was called Rahab Psal. 87. 4. and 89. 11. that is mighty and proud.

Put and Lubim were thy helpers] By Put, Hierome understandeth Africa (which was over anent Alexandria, the sea between) a vast continent, thrice as big as Europe: and by Lubim Lybia a considerable part of that continent, sometimes put for the whole. These would have been helpers to No, but could not: because over-powred over-powered by Nebuchadnezzar, sent against them by God. Leagues entred into with wicked men, profit not those whom God will punish. The Grecian Churches Anno 1438. being afraid of the Turks, sent and subjected themselves to the Bishop of Rome; that they might have the help of the Latine Churches: but shortly after, they were destroyed, and their Empire subdued, and swallowed up in the Turkish greatnesse. It is gathered by some out of Revel. 16. 14, 15, 16. that the Pope and his adherents shall, towards the end of the world, for the restoring of his decayed authority, call in the help, not onely of Popish Princes, but of forraign States, out of Asia, Africa, and America, to suppress the heretikes (as they call us) and to root out Religion; but with evil successe: for they shall associate themselves onely to be broken in pieces, Esay 8. 9. these Auxiliaries shall speed no better then those subsidiarie Syrians did, 2 Sam. 10. 18, 19. they shall receive a famous foil at Armageddon; such as Sisera did, at the waters of Megiddo, Judg. 5. 19. and a voice from the throne shall say; It is done, vers. 16, 17.

Verse 10. Yet was she carried away, she went into captivity ] Whereof though there be no other record, yet we ought not to doubt of the truth, sith it is here alledged by the holy Ghost, as a thing either done before, or shortly after to bee done; as may be probably gathered from Jerem. 46. 25. Ezek. 30. 19, 21. compared with Jer. 20. 28. and 44. 49. To God (by reason of the vastnesse of his being) all things are present. See the like Sarcasme chap. 2. 1. In those Eastern countries there was great scarcity of water. Draw thee good store for the better holding out the siege: for if water fail thee, thou must needs yeeld.

make strong the brick-kilne ] Or, repair it, that all may be ready. And these things they did no doubt very diligently: neither were they for that to be blamed. But this was their fault; as it was also the fault of the Jews in like case, Esa. 22. that they looked not to the Maker of all, neither had respect unto him that fashioned it long ago. See verse 8, 9, 10, 11. This, if they had done seriously, though they had made lesse preparation, the enemy might have been daunted, and dismayed as much, as that Duke of Saxony was; who having proclaimed warre against the Bishop of Magdeburg, and understanding by his intelligencers, that the Bishop levied no army, made no preparation, but onely gave out, that he would commit his cause to God, who would not fail to take up arms for him; Insaniat alius, said the Duke, It were a mad prank in me to make warre upon such an one as trusteth in God to right and revenge him. the sword shall cut thee off ] Est hac vehemens planè comminatio, saith Gualther. This is truly a very vehement threat. See how thick it falls like hail-shot upon them, that they can hardly take breath: and all too little to work upon their hard hearts, which could not repent. These uncounsellable Ninevites were like the Smiths dog: whom neither the hammers above him, nor the sparks of fire falling round about him can awake. Like Leviathan, they esteemed iron as straw, and brasse as rotten wood. Darts were counted by them as stubble, they laughed at the shaking of the spear, Job 41. 27, 29. It is proper to Gods people to tremble at his word, to stand in awe of his judgements, whilst they yet hang in the threatnings. Wicked men fear, when they should fear; and say in their hearts when God threateneth them, as Frederick the second, Emperour of Germany was wont to say openly, in the greatest threatening of his enemies, Minarum strepitus, Asinorum crepitus.

make thy self many as the Locust ] Which hath its name in Hebrew from multitude: because, as that Legion in the Gospel, they are many: and here the Hebrew Verb is Feminine. Ministers must lay about them on all hands; and bee ready to turn themselves, as it were, into all shapes and fashions, both of speech and of spirit, to bring people to the knowledge of God, and his will, of themselves, and their duties.

Verse 16. Thou hast multiplied thy merchants above the starres of heaven ] And so thinkest to have a stake in store, howsoever the dice chance to turn. For these merchants were very rich, and could furnish her with money, which is the sinewes of warre. Besides, they traded farre and near; and so could give intelligence, and if need were, way-lay and intercept the enemies contributions that it came not to them. But would you know, saith the Prophet, how these merchants will serve you at your greatest need?

The canker-worm spoileth and fleeth away ] q. d. They will serve themselves upon you, and then leave you in the lurch, to make as good shift as you can. They are mere canker-worms, which first eat up all, and then hast away. These false friends, well they may be the causes, but companions they will not be of your calamity: like crows that flock to a dead carcasse, not to defend it, but to devour it:
and no sooner have they bared the bones but they are gone. Such false merchants as these hath this land been much pestered with from Rome, in former ages.
Matthæw Paris telleth us of one Florentinus, the Popes Legate here, in King Johns reigne, Ferentinus the wiser sort called him, for bearing away so much money. And of another named Otto (one of the Popes merchants, or rather mice-catchers, as he calleth them) who after three years raking together of money, by most detestable arts, at last departing hence, to avoid a storm, he left not so much money in the whole kingdom, as he either carried with him, or sent to Rome before him. In the year 1235. there were spread thorow England certain Roman canker-worms, called Caursim (quasi capientes ursi, devouring Bears quoth Paris) who had in-tangled the King, Nobles, and all others that had to deal with the Court of Rome, in their cunning snares, and usurious practises, under colour of supplying with money such as wanted present pay to the Pope. These were called the Popes merchants, faith Speed.

those Chiemarims, or Chimney-chaplains among the Jews, Hos. 10. 5. Zeph. 1. 4.

love; and the shaveling-Mendicants among the Papists. These locusts are, Rev. 9.
7. said to have on their heads, as it were crowns like gold.

and thy Captains as the great grasshoppers ] Heb. as the grasshoppers of grasshoppers, by an Hebraisme, like that, King of kings, song of songs, &c. The word ren-dred Captains, is foraigne; R. David and others render it, Imperator, Dux, Prin-ceps. It seemeth to be a name of dignity among the Assyrians, as Zaphnath-paaneah was among the Egyptians, Gen. 41. 45. These are called grasshoppers, and locusts, for their uselesnesse, and fearfulness.

Which camp in the hedges ] sc. Of the gardens or vineyards, And they are said to camp, in regard of their multitudes, as if they were an army of them. See Joel
2. The Prophet taxeth here Nineveh's vain confidence in her confederates, and such other hanger-on, as might truly say,

Nos numeri sumus, fruges consumere nati.

We are men of no great moment, such as Aristophanes in Plutarch prettily played upon, when he said, ταπεινα δαπεινα, i. e. Quasiores, but bones.

but when the Sun ariseth, they flee away ] So these trencher-flies, when they have served their own turns upon thee, and now see the tempest of warre growing on amain, they worship the rising Sun, keep themselves on the warm side of the hedge, leave thee to shift as thou canst, and seek out for themselves a better fortune.

Verse 18. Thy shepherds slumber, O King of Assyria ] This Apostrophe to the king is emphaticall. He is given to know, that his Nobles, and Officers, Mich. 5.
4, 5, 6. and 7, 14. his Councillours of State, and greatest Politicians, should be benighted, and not know what counsell to give, or course to take. Or, they slumber, that is, they are dead, as Psal. 76. 6. And this is more agreeable to that which followeth:

thy Nobles shall dwell in the dust ] The Vulgar hath it sepelientur, shall be buried.
Others, jacebunt, shall lie on the ground, like beasts, through fear and consternation of mind, 1 Sam. 28. 20. Then Saul fell straightway all along on the earth, and was sore afraid.

thy people is scattered upon the mountains ] Diffused and dispersed abundantly: as sheep without a shepherd, whereof none being wiser then other, no man gathereth them, into the sheep-coats of better order.

Verse 19. There is no healing of thy bruise ] Clades & strages tua irreparabilis est. Thy disease is desperate, thy condition comfortlesse: thou art utterly to be destroyed. When God smiteth his own people, it may well be asked as Esay 27.7. Hath he smitten him, as he smot those that smot him? Or, is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him? Surely no: there is a manifest difference. Hee hath torn, saith the Church, and he will heal us: hee hath smitten, and hee will bind us up, Hos. 6. 1. Hence that distinction of punishment, or pain, in condemnantem, & corrigentem, in pœnam vindictæ, & pœnam medelæ. Afflictions, and temporall evils are in the nature, to the wicked of a curse, to the godly of a cure; to the former, mortall; to the latter, medicinall, When the wicked spring as grasse, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is not for any good will that God beareth to them: but it is, that they shall be destroyed for ever, Psal. 92.7. See the Note on chap. 1.9.

thy wound is grievous ] Not onely incurable, but full of anguish intolerable. Thus, many sorrows shall be to the wicked, Psal. 32. 10. and yet all that they suffer here, is but as drops of wrath, fore-running the great storme in hell: or as a crack, preceding the fall of the whole house upon them: The leaves only fall on them here; there, the whole tree.

all that hear the bruit of thee shall clap the hands, &c. ] As rejoycing at thy ruine, and subscribing to Gods just judgement upon thee: they shall take up this taunting speech against thee, and say, How hath the oppressour ceased? the golden city ceased? The Lord hath broken the staffe of the wicked, and the scepter of the rulers, &c. Esay 14.4,5,6,7.

For upon whom hath not thy wickednesse passed continually? ] Thy wickednesse, that is, thy wicked counsels, edicts, enterprizes, have they not extended farre and near for mischief to many Nations? and this not for a little while, but jugiter, continually? It hath been thy constant trade from thy youth up (neque enim nova est aut nupera hac tua crudelitas) to wast and weary out other nations, with thine inrodes and hostilities. Thy destruction therefore is of thy self, O Nineveh: the insultations, and complosions of others at thy misery, is no more then thou hast merited. Os quod in sorte tua ceciderit, illud redas, as the Arabian proverb hath it. Bear the reward of thy wickednesse, which is now come home to thee; Thy wickednesse is the root of thy wretchednesse: this the Prophet here repeateth, and inculcath in the perclose; that he may leave it as a sting in the minds of his hearers, as Gualther well observeth.

which Habakkuk the Prophet did ſee] Amplexator ille, That Embracer, ( ſo ſome interpret his name ) yea, Optimus Amplexator ( as they gather from the laſt Radical emphatically doubled ) That beſt Embracer. Et certè omen habet nomen, He hath not his name for nought: for ( as Luther writeth ) in this Propheſie he loveth, and huggeth his afflicted countrey-men: he ſuccoureth and ſolaceth them, as the mother doth her crying babe, to ſtill it. Hierom and Others, make Habakkuk to ſignifie Luctatorem amplex ſtringentem, a Wraſtler, that by cloſing ſtrives to prevail; that by might, and ſlight ſeeks to get the better. Such a One was Jacob, whoſe wraſtling was by weeping, and his prevailing by praying. Such another was Habakkuk, who argueth earneſtly with God about the ſtate of his people, and prayeth ardently for them; not doubting but that the Lord would preſerve the faithfull, and plentifully reward the proud deer. A Prophet he is here ſtiled, and a Seer, and that's all is ſaid of him: nothing of his pedigree, or time of propheſying; that the Word ( and not the man ) might be glorified, Act. 13. 47. Regis epistolis acceptis, ſaith Gregory; When a kings letters are brought to his ſubjects, it is a ridiculous thing for them to enquire with what Pen they were written; 'tis the matter muſt be minded. So here. A Prophet, Habakkuk was; and is therefore to be received into our hearts, if we look for a Prophets reward. He received heavenly viſions, whereunto therefore we muſt not be diſobedient, Act. 26. 19. That memorable ſentence of his, The juſt ſhall live by faith, is more then once made uſe of. by St. Paul, in that weighty buſineſſe of Juſtification, Rom. 1. 17. Gal. 3. 11. which which proves the Canonically authority of this prophesie. The precise time when it was uttered, is not known. In the dayes of Manasseh, most think : but some are of opinion, in Josiah's time rather, or not long before : because he foretelleth the Babylonish captivity, and seemeth to agree with Jeremy in many things. Sure it is, that this Prophet lived not after the captivity (see verse 6. 7. of this chapter) as Epiphanius and Hierom would have it : grounding upon those Apoeryphal additions to Daniel, which either are false, or else there were two Habakkuks.

Verse 2. O Lord, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear ? | Lo, this is the confidence of a good conscience towards God, 1 Per. 3. 21. when it is parling with him by prayers, and bold intercessions, 1 Tim. 2. 1. it dare plead, as Jer. 12. 1. and interrogate, as Rom. 8. 33, 34, 35. Esay 63. 15. and expostulate, as David often : when God seems to be asleep, he wakes him : when to delay, he quickens him : when to have lost his wonted kindnesse, he finds it for him ; so doth Habakkuk here : for he knew he might do it. See his holy boldnesse beneath, verse 12. and learn to continue instant in prayer, Rom. 12. 12. crying, Quousque Domine ? How long Lord ? This was Mr. Calvins Motto ; ever in his mouth, as Deo gratias was, in Austins.

even cry out unto thee of violence ] i. e. Of all sorts of hainous sinnes, which I have long cryed out upon, and sought by preaching and prayer to redresse, but cannot ; so incorrigibly flagitious are they grown, that I have now no other way left, but to turn them over to thee, with a Non convertentur, They will not be converted. Shall they still escape by iniquity ? In thine anger cast down the people, O God : and let them feel the power of thy wrath, that will not submit to the scepter of thy kingdom. Thus the holy Prophet (Elias-like, Rom. 11. 2.) maketh intercession to God against Israel (when once incorrigible, incurable) for whose souls health he would have spent, and been spent.

Verse 3. Why dost thou shew me iniquity ? &c. ] These were Hazai's to Habakkuk's eyes, he could not see them with dry eyes, he could not but vex his righteous soul from day to day, as Lot did at Sodom, with their unlawfull deeds, 2 Per. 2. 8. privately committed, ( as here in their common commerce ) and publicly, as in the next words, in Courts and Consistories : for all was out of order.

and cause me to behold grievance ] Molestation and mischief done to those that would live peaceably in the land ( Confer Psal. 7. 14, 16. and 94. 20. and 55. 11. ) to the poor that are fallen into their nets, debts, bonds, and mortgages, Psal. 10. 9. It is as if the Prophet should say ; Why dost thou not punish these enormous practices, but suffer evil-doers to abuse thy long-sufferance, to thy dishonour ? Averroes the Philosopher, drew an argument from Gods patience to deny his providence. But what saith Austine ? Some wicked, God punisheth here, lest his providence ; and but some, lest his patience, and promise of judgement should be called in question.

for spoiling and violence are before me ] E regione mei vastatio & violentia, so that I cannot look besides them, I cannot but complain of them. Elias, and Jeremy were more passionate, 1 King. 19. 4, 10, 14. Jer. 15. 10. and 20. 14.

and there are that raise up strife and contention ] These are Satans seeds-men, and kindle-coals. He is an unquiet spirit, and strives to make others so ; loves to fish in troubled waters, doth all he can to set one man against another, that hee may prey upon both : as the Master of the pit supbeth upon the bodies of those cocks whom he hath set to kill one another. Be not make-bates, seeds-men of sedition.

Verse 4. Therefore the law is slacke ] Desluit lex. An elegant Metaphor from the pulse, which in a dying man beateh faintly. The law is the pulse of the Common-wealth. If it stirre not at all, the Common-wealth is dead. If it have but slow motion, the Common-wealth is weak. But if it keep an equall course, the Common-wealth is in good constitution. Lex lux, the law is a light, saith Solomon : but the deluge of sin had well-nigh put out this light in Israel ; who was now grown in a manner lawlesse, through long impunity.

and judgement doth never go forth ] Or, it goeth not forth to the utmost, to victory : it is not carried on to a right upshot, as the Septuagint, and Latine render it.

head :

head: He surroundeth and circumventeth him to his hurt. The children of this world are wiser in their generation &c. The Midianites outwitted the Israelites Num. 25. 18. The Pharisees hemmed in our Saviour to ensnare him: but were disappointed.

2<sup>η</sup> πρὸς

therefore wrong judgement proceedeth] Distorted judgement. So Ezek. 9. 9. the city was full of Muteh that is of (mishpat din mutteh, as Kimchi expoundeth it) judgement turned from the biasse: the ballance of justice was tilted on the one side 1 Tim. 5. 21. A judge is to retain the decency and gravity of the law: to do nothing of partiality or popularity; to proceed, not according to opinion or appearance; but as a just law is an heart without affection, an eye without lust, a minde without passion &c. so should he. Else wrong and wrested judgement will soon proceed, to the prejudice of the righteous.

Verse 5. Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvelously] Heb: Wonder, Wonder. This is Gods answer to the former expostulation, which he disliketh not, but encourageth the rest of his people to the like holy boldnesse. It containeth a promise to the Prophet and the rest that were like affected, that he would shortly vindicate his glory and be avenged of the wicked, though he bore long with them. This that he may the better assure, He proceedeth by an elegant Climax; wherein his speech getteth ground and ariseth higher and higher, that the Dispersers might be the more affected. Behold ye despisers So St. Paul after the Septuagint (whose translation, he here followeth as most received, and most making for his purpose) Act. 23. 41. the sense being one and the same.

for I will work a work in your dayes] This phrase noteth the strong intention of God upon it, as Ier. 18. 18. to devise devises noteth strong plotting to mischief the Prophet. So Christ is said to work a work Joh. 5. 36. many do rather play their works, then work them. This is not God-like. He is serious and through in his workes which ye will not beleve, though it be told you] But put off all, as those in the Gospel did, with a God-forbid: and so go on in sin, till wrath come upon you to the utmost. To this day, we cannot get men to beleve the truth of Gods judgments, whilst they hang in the threatenings: but one put-off or another they get, through self-delusion, or obstinacy of heart Lam. 3. 65. next unto which followeth, Thy curse upon them.

Gualth.

Verse 6. For loe, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter, and hasty nation] The Chaldeans were anciently the Philosophers of the Babylonians: Babylon was a Province of the Assyrian Empire; but not the same with Niniveh, (only walled about by Semiramis and by her called Babylon) as Suidas noteth. Niniveh was the Metropolis, Babylon ruled by Prefects. One of whom, viz. Merodach Bala-dan ) rebelling against Esar-baddon King of Niniveh, translated the whole kingdom to the Babylonians, using the help and counsell of the Chaldeans, famous for their wisdom and authority: which yet was not done without the Lord who then stirred them up, and now sent them against the Jewes, to avenge the quarrell of his covenant. In like manner God hath in these last times raised up the Turkes that bitter and hasty nation, bitter and bloody, hasty and headlong, ὑπερδυνασταμένον pursuing their victories and subduing in a short space many nations, and kingdoms to their Empire. Hence the Jews are in the former verse called upon to view among the heathen what haveock the Chaldeans had made; that is, should shortly make by overrunning Syria, the greater part of all Asia, and some part also of Africa. In the greatnesse of the Turkish Empire is swallowed up at this day both the name and Empire of the Saracenes, the most glorious Empire of the Greekes, the renowned kingdoms of Macedonia, Peloponnesus, Epirus, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, Armenia, Cyprus, Syria, Egypt, Tunisia, Tunes, Argeirs, Media, Chaldea, with a great part of Hungary; as also of the Persian kingdom, and all the Churches and places so much spoken of in scripture (the Roman only excepted, which yet he daily threateneth) and in brieve so much in Christendome, as far exceedeth that which is thereof at this day left. In fine, no part of the world is left untouched by the Othoman monarchy, but America only; not more happy in her rich mines, then in that she is so far from so great and dangerous an enemy. The King of Spaine, of all other Princes Mahometan

Verſe 8. Their horſes alſo are ſwifter then the leopards] Or Panthers, famous for their ſwiftnesse: whence the proverb Panthera velocior. The horſe is ſo ſwift in ſervice, that the Perſians (as Pauſanias hath it) dedicated him to their god the Sun; as the ſwifteſt creature to the ſwifteſt god. See Iob. 41. 20. Prov. 21. 31.

and are more fierce then the evening wolves] Heb: more ſharp ſet, after that they have been held hunger bit, and empty all the day long. See Virg. Aeneid. lib. 9. ver. 59. &c. Oppian: lib. 1. 3. Homo homini lupus, One man (left to himſelf) is a wolf, nay a devill to another. The Metaphor is here taken from ſharpeſt ſwords, which quickly cut.

and their horſemen ſhall ſpread themſelves] with incredible ſwiftnesse, which in war is moſt neceſſary and uſefull, as Julus Caſar experienced, and we in our late commotions.

and their horſemen ſhall come from far] The Jews were ſecure of the Chaldaans, as being far remote: but that ſhall be no hinderance.

they ſhall ſee as the Eagle that haſteth to eat] In ſingulis verbis pondus eſt, ſaith Drusi, Here each word hath its waight: for he that haſteth on his way is ſaid to ſie, and the Eagle is ſwifter of flight then any bird, and eſpecially when ſhe haſteth to eat. Lib. 2. c. 28.

and they ſhall gather the captivity as the ſand] So many ſhall be their captives, and ſo little accounted of, as the duſt or ſand they tread upon. Thus the Turks carry out of Hungary and other Chriſtian countries neer unto them, innumerable booties and captives, 15000. at a time. And ſo the Spaniards, when they had taken the Iſland Hiſpaniola in the Indies, within a few moneths they rid it cleane of the inhabitants and natives, whileſt they gathered unto themſelves captives and ſlaves.

Mal. 3. 7.

Verse 12. Art not thou from everlasting, O Lord my God? Art thou not Jehovah the unchangable, and shall we poor sons of Jacob be utterly consumed by these Chaldees? Art not thou my God, my Judex & Vindex, who hast hitherto judged and revenged my cause? and wilt thou now abandon me to the fury of such an enemy? Art not thou mine Holy One, whom I have hitherto sanctified in mine heart and life Esay. 5. 16. and whom I have avouched for mine Dent. 26. 17. denoting my self wholly to thy feare and service? Art thou not all this and more then this, saith the Prophet, in the name and behalf of the Church here? Well then:

we shall not die] I am confident, and dare be bold to say it. Loe here the triumph of faith, and the top-gallant of it, We shall not die, (saith she) abruptly but sweetly that's sure enough. She drinkest to the disconsolate soule in a cup of Nepenthes, and saith, Courage my heart; Why art thou cast down, O my soule!
and

and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God. If hee be everlasting to shalt thou, If he be thy God, and thine Holy One, thine in an inviolable covenant, in a league defensive, and offensive, shalt thou die? Lo tamuth, Thou shalt not die, (so some say, this text was anciently read) Lo Namuth, We will not die. So the Church promiseth her self upon the former promises: and such an answer shee receiveth in her own heart to her former prayers. And whereas it might be objected, that they were likely to be little better then dead in the Babylonish captivity (for Moris habet vices quæ trahitur vita gemitibus, an afflicted life, is a lifelesse life) the Prophet answereth; and, O mighty God, (Heb. O rock) thou hast established them for correction ] Heb. thou hast founded them, sc. thy people Israel: thou hast thereunto appointed them, 1 Thes. 3. 3. thou hast both founded and fitted them for thy fatherly chastisements, who are therefore chastened of the Lord, that they may not be condemned with the world. See here the different kinds, and ends of good and bad mens sufferings. It hath been noted before, that Almighty God as he is Piorum rupes, a rock of refuge to the truly religious, so he is Reorum scopulus, a rock of revenge, to dash in pieces the impenitent: as Valer. Max. saith of L. Cassius his tribunall.

Verse 13. Thou art of purer eyes then to behold evil ] sc. with patience, and without punishing it. This I am right sure of: and therefore cannot but conclude, that thou wilt take an order with our oppressours, thou wilt one day pay them home, for the new and the old, though for a time they ruffle, and revell in our ruines. God, as he is ὁλόφθαλμος, All-eye, neither can we be at any time from under his view: so ἔχει δὲς ἐνδύον ὀφθαλμῶν He hath an Holy eye, that cannot behold evil, and bear with it. Hence that of Joshuah to the people, chap. 24. 19. Ye cannot serve the Lord, sc. unlesse ye first throw all your lusts out of service: for hee is an holy God, he is a jealous God: he will not forgive your transgressions, nor your sinnes. Now therefore, if Cave, spectat Cato, was such a forcible watch-word among the Romans, and a Retentive from evil; Take heed, Cato seeth you, and will punish you; How much more should this prevail with Christians, Cave, videt Dominus, Take heed, the Lord beholdeth?

Surely, as they were wont to say at Rome concerning cowards, that they had nothing Roman in them: so may it be said of such as stand not in awe of Gods pure eyes, and dreadfull presence, that they have nothing Christian in them, what ever they pretend: sith it is every godly mans care, and comfort to be in the fear of the Lord all the day, to walk evermore in the sense of his presence, and light of his countenance.

and canst not look on iniquity ] Heb. And to look on iniquity thou canst not do it. Lo, this is one of those things that God cannot do: as he cannot lie: hee cannot die, he cannot deny himself: so here, he cannot look on iniquity, sc. with approbation, or delight. He cannot but hate it: and (as the next thing to hatred, is revenge) he cannot but punish it, such is the holinesse of his nature, Psal. 5. 4, 5, 6. He hateth sinne naturally, as we hate poison for it self: and therefore let it be in a toad, or in a Princes cabbin, we hate it still. Neverthelesse, it must be remembered for our comfort, that like as we hate poison in a toad, but pity it in a man, because in the one it is their nature, in the other their disease: So sinne, maketh wicked men the object of Gods hatred, but the saints, of his pity: and accordingly, he chastiseth the one, but plagueth the other.

Wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously ] And yet, such is thy tolerance, seemest to take no notice of their trespasses, and treacheries; which I am sure thou hatest with a perfect hatred. Here then the Prophet discepat potius secum, quam cum ipso Deo, saith Calvin, contesteth, rather with himself then with God, about the ordering of things here below. He doth not question the divine providence, because good men suffer, bad men prosper, as Aristotle did. Hee doth not say with Pompey, when discomfited by Cæsar, that there was a mist, at least, over the eye of providence : so blaming the Sun because of the soreness of his own bleare eyes. Hee doth not impatiently cry out with Brutus defeated, ἠτλημὸν ἀρετῆς O Wretched Vertue, or, O hard fortune. But he modestly expostulateth with the Lord about his proceedings, having before justified him : and now dareth not reprehend what he cannot yet so fully comprehend : but putting his mouth in the dust, concludeth with David, after some conflict with his own doubtings, I know, O Lord, that thy judgements are right, and that thou in faithfulness (non ad exitium, sed ad exercitium, and that thou mightest be true to my soul) hast afflicted me, Psal.

and holdest thy tongue ] And so, by silence, seemest to consent (as the Civilian rule is) but thou seemest so onely, Psal. 50. 21. Or, Art thou deaf? Nor so neither, Psal. 50. 3.

when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then hee ] i. e. The Chaldees destroy the Jewes, which were some of them better then they : and the rest were therefore the worse, because they ought to have been better. The truth is, none are so bad as they that either have been good and are not ; or that might have been better, but would not.

Verse 14. And makest men as the fishes of the sea ] that are easily drawn out with hook or net. So doth Nebuchadnezzar with little adoe, bring whole Nations under his power, and pleasure. Here therefore, saith Drusius, Nebuchadnezzar is the fisher, the world is the sea, men are the fishes, the armies and arts of the Chaldees, are called the net, drag, hook, to the which Nebuchadnezzar ascribed his victories, and not to God. Whereas he should have written upon them, as the Ancients did upon their greatest exploits, Θεός, Θεός, and have said, as Tisus did, when some cried him up for his sacking the city of Jerusalem ; I onely lent mine hand to God, who did the work by me.

as the creeping things ] Or, the lesser fishes : for in the sea also are creeping things innumerable, Psal. 104. 25. See Levit. 11. 46.

that have no ruler over them ] to right and revenge them : and are therefore devoured, the lesser by the greater, without remedy. And what will men imagine, but that thy people have no ruler over them, no God to take care of their comfort, or to protect them from their enemies ? How will they conclude them to be in as bad condition, as those of Brasile, who are said to be, Sine rege, sine lege, sine fide, &c. Or, the old Nomades, sub regno Cyclopico ?

Verse 15. They take up all of them with the angle ] No lesse then all will serve their turns, or satisfie their ambition : as we read of Alexander, who wept that there was but one world for him to conquer : Julius Cæsar, who would be ant Cæsar, ant nullus : this Nebuchadnezzar in the text, fitly compared to a greedy fisher-man, who could wish to enclose, and catch all the fishes in the river, Covetousnesse is boundlesse ; and ambition rideth without reins. The curse of unsatiablenesse, the disease of a spiritull dropfie, is upon all carnall hearts : so that though one man should ingrosse a Monopoly of all the wealth in the world, and heap up his hoards, and his honours to the starres : yet would his heart be as hungry after more, as if he had nothing.

therefore they rejoyce and are glad ] This is worse then all the rest, that they please and applaud themselves in their wickednesse, that they hug and stroke themselves on the head, as Doeg did, Psal. 52. 2. and those Sodomites, Esay 3. 9. This shews that men are arrived at that dead and dedolent disposition spoken of, Ephes. 4. 19. and are even stradling over hell-mouth, which gapeth for them.

Verse 16. Therefore they sacrifice to their net ] Thus wicked men grow worse and worse : their sinne is infinite, what marvail then, if their punishment bee also infinite in hell ? To all other their iniquities these Chaldeans adde this of abominable idolatry, they sacrifice to themselves, as Sejanus did, to their net, drag, &c, that is, to their weapons, as Ajax called his sword, his god ; and thanked it for all his brave atchievements. And as Mezentius (another Atheist) is brought in, saying ;

So Sesostris, king of Egypt (in Sampsons dayes) would needes be called κοσμοκράτωρ Lord of the whole world: and when he had conquered any countrey, he caused these words to be engraven there upon marble pillars, This countrey I gained by mine own strength &c. So Antiochus, (that little Antichrist) is said to worship his God Μανζιμ, that is, his forces and armies Dan. 11. 38. It was Nebuchadnezzar that was here pointed at: and how he deified himself and his own doings see Es. 10. 13. Dan. 4. 26.

and burn incense to their dragges] whiles they ascribe to the instrument, that which is due to God alone, the chief Agent. Hold out net, said they: well done dragge &c. Hoc ego primus vidi, said Zabarell, Hoc ego feci saith Another. But what saith Luther? By mens boasting in this sort, Hac ego feci, hac ego feci, they become nothing better then mere Faces, dreggs and lees.

because by them their portion is fat] By them, that is, by their net and dragge, they think that their condition is well mended; and their meat is fat, opimus & optimus. God (the giver of all this) is not in all their thoughts: but as the moon, the fuller it is of light, the further it gets from the Sun the fountain of her light: so deale men with God.

Verse 17. Shall they therefore empty their net? ] That they may fill it againe anew, and so draw to themselves as to a pond or pool, the wealth and power of the whole East? Interrogatio precatonis speciem habet, saith Gualther. This question is an effectual prayer: and it is as if the Prophet should thus say, If, as hitherto, thou go on to wink at their wickednesse, O God; will they not grow more audacious every day, and mischievous to mankind? Arise therefore O Lord of recompences to the help of thy people. Set up and shew thy self above the heathen; that they may know themselves to be but men.

and not spare continually to slay the nations? ] q. d. This cannot hold long: and that it may not, is mine earnest suite and supplication. Lord when thou makest inquisition for blood, remember their blood-guiltinesse, and forget not the cry of the humble. These cruell Chaldeans do not only subjugate, but slay, not a few, but whole nations and that continually, and that without mercy. Is it not high time for thee to set to thy hand, O preserver of men &c. Note the Prophets arden- cy in prayer: and learn of him to get upon the battlements, and look up, to see what comes of it, chap. 2. 1. This was also *David*s practise, Psal. 5. 3. where he useth the self-same military word atsappeh: importing that he would be as a Spy upon a tower, to see whether he prevailed with God, whether he got the day.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. I will stand upon my watch] To see what becomes of my prayer, and what will be the issue of my doubts and temptations about Gods providence, ruling the affaires of the world. See the Note on chap. 1. 17. There are spaces betwixt our prayers, and Gods answers. God harkens what Habacuc speakes: and Habacuc must harken another while what God speakes. This he had learned of David Psal. 85. 8. Prayer is a Christians angel, seed, dove, messenger: and must be looked after. Who shootes an arrow, or casts a boule, and takes not notice where it lights? They that observe not the answer of their prayers, do as scoffing Pilate, who asked in scorn of Christ what's truth? but staid not for an answer.

and set me upon the tower] Heb: set me firme and fast (as a Champion that will keep his ground) upon the tower or fortresse of divine meditation, upon Gods word, which alone hath virtutem pacativam a settling property to compose the soule when distempered, and to lodge a blessed calme, a sabbath of rest in it, far above all Philosophicall Consolations: whereunto when Cicero had ascribed very much, yet he is forced to conclude, that the disease was too hard for the medicine. And this well appeared both in Socrates who died doubtingly; and Cato, who desperately slew himself, after he had first read *Plato*s discourse concerning the the immortality of the soule. So foolish a thing it is, to flie in distresse of mind ad consolatiunculas creaturule, as Luther speaketh: and not to run to the Name of the Lord, that strong tower Pro. 18. 10. R. Kimchi reads the text thus, I have set me in a circle q. d. I will not out, till I have an answer, why thou deferrest to punish the wicked.

and will watch to see what he will say unto me] Or, in me, viz. by a Prophetick spirit by internall revelation. 2 Sam. 23. 1. Zach. 1. 9. and 2. 2. Preachers must still hearken what the Lord God saith unto them, and in them; speaking as the oracles of God 2 Pet. 4. 11. and able to say with St. Paul, I have received of the Lord that which also I deliver unto you 1 Cor. 11. 23. and what I shall answer, when I am reprov'd] Heb: upon my reproof or arguing. Increpationis nomine tentationes intelligit, saith Gualther. Under the name of reproof, he understandeth those temptations whereby his faith was assaulted, when he saw bad men prosper, good men suffer. Satan and the world do usually set upon Gods servants with this weapon to unsettle their faith, and to make them fall from their own stedfastnesse. Dost thou still retain thine integrity? said Jobs wife to him. Seest thou not how little good there is to be got by Gods service? that all things are in a huddle here below, that they run on wheelles, and have no certain course? Thus the devill and his imps suggest to the godly, and thereby greatly disquiet them: setting their thoughts all on an hurricomb. It was the case of David Psa. 73. of Jeremy chap. 12. 1. 5. Of Basil under the heat of the Arrian persecution, An Ecclesiam suas prorsus dereliquit Dominus? saith He; what? hath the Lord cast off all care of his churches? Is it now the last houre? &c. Of many good people in Salvians time, for whose satisfaction he was forced to write those eight excellent bookes De Gubernatione Dei; as likewise Austin (upon a like occasion) did those two and twenty elaborate bookes De Civitate Dei: and as the Prophet Habacuc here doth the following vision which he had for some time waited for, and now receiveth as a gracious answer to his prayer chap. 1. for his own and others settlement, in the doctrine of Divine Providence.

Verse 2. And the Lord answered me and said] Wisdom he had sought of God, who giveth liberally; and wisdom is granted him without hitting him in the teeth with his bold expostulations, and contestations about providence. Faithfull prayer never miscarrieth, but is sure of an answer, either before, as the prodigal; See Esa. 65. 24. Or in the act, as Dan. 10. 12. I am come for thy words, with an answer thereunto. Or soone after, as here. If it come not all out so soon as we would have it, know that ther's water enough in the spring, but the pipes are stopped or broken.

write the vision] that is, the following admonition: write it for the use of all posterity. Note this against those Opinionists, that say that the Word of God was not written by his command: Or that it was written only for the use of the present ages, and of those particular Churches, to whom it was directed or declared.

that he may run that readeth it] That though he be no great Clerk, or in never so great hast of businesse, yet he may read it, being written in great letters and very legible. See Deut. 27. 8. Esa. 8. 1. and 30. 8. Gal. 6. 11. you see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand, the Greek signifieth with what good great text-letters I have written &c. God hath written for us the great things of his law Hof. 8. 12. and with much perspicuity and plainnesse in things needfull to be known: he hath written them as it were with the beames of the Sun: that none may plead difficulty or obscurity: See Psa. 19. 9. & 119. 105. Pro. 6. 23. 2 Pet. 1. 19. Of the scripture it may be said, & latet & lucet; the knowledge thereof doth even bow down to us as trees do that are laden with fruits, so that a child may gather them.

Verse 3. For the vision is yet for an appointed time] This he is commanded to write write, that Gods people may learn to wait. He that beleeveth maketh not hast, he can both wait (as knowing that many of Gods promises beare a long date) and also want; go without the good he desireth: being well content that God is glorified, though himself be not gratified. And this is the work of effectual faith, which is herein like unto Christall, of which it is reported, that the very touching of it quickens other stones, and puts a lustre and lovelinesse upon them.

but at the end it shall speake] Effabitur, It shall speak confidently, boldly and freely, to the great comfort of those that antedate not Gods promises, but patiently abide the accomplishment thereof. If any ask when this shall be? it is answered, In the end, that is, in Gods good time. Shall he lose his right, because he hath it not by the day set down in our Kalender? Possibly the Kalender of heaven hath a post-date to ours. Sure it is, that as God seldome comes at our time: so he never failes at his own. Gods Expectants shall shortly clap their hands for joy: and cry out with that holy Martyr, Hee's come, Austin, Hee's come, Hee's come.

and not lie] that is, not disappoint: as the earth is said to lie when it yeelds not her expected increase. God is faithfull, and cannot lie. Christ hath a rainbow on his head Rev. 10. 1. to shew that he is faithfull and constant in his promises, and that tempests shall blow over the skie be cleared. He hath hitherto kept promise with nights and dayes, that the one shall succeed the other, Ier. 33. 20, 25. and shall he break with his people? How then should he be Amen, the faithfull and true witnesse Rev. 3. 14? &c. Every man is a liar either by imposture, and so in purpose, or by impotency and so in the event deceiving those that rely upon him Psal. 62. 9. But God is a God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he Deut. 32. 4.

though it tarry wait for it] This is the duty, wait: and because it is a very difficult duty (the Hebrews found it easier to beare evill, then to wait for the promised good Heb. 10. 36.) therefore is the promise heere not delivered only, but doubled, and trebled. It shall speake, it will come, it will surely come: nay doubled againe for more surety; It shall not lie, it will not tarry. It is as if God had said, Do but wait, and you shall be delivered, you shall be delivered, you shall be delivered, you shall, you shall. Oh the Rhetoricke of God! and oh the certaintie of the promises!

It will not tarry] sc. beyond the time appointed of God.

Gods help seemes long, because we are short. A short walk is a long journey to feeble knees. Behold his soule which is lifted up] Ebulat, protuberat, which swelleth like a bubble, and breaketh thorough its own weaknesse: he that by unbelieve or carnall security withdraweth from God, and confideth in the creature; seeking to shift and save himself some other way, as he is a proud presumptuous person, to let him know that, his soule is not upright in him] that is, it is very corrupt and crooked, stark naught: and Gods soule can take no pleasure in him; but he will punish him as a run-away, as one that hath fled from his colours, forsaken his captain, revolted to the enemy Heb. 10. 37, 38. Transfugas ubicunque inventi fuerint, quasi hostes interficere licet, was the old law of armes. but the just shall live by his faith] This is an answer to those that would ask what shall we do till the vision speake? how shall we hold out till it come? till the seventy yeeres of captivity be expired? The just shall live by faith faith He, and shall make a good living of it too: He shall live and be safe by the same faith, whereby he is just.
